thereon, and thus to transmit messages for all the public at a reasonable compensation. It may be at once admitted that the purpose is a public one, although for the private gain of a corporation; but the constitution provides that private property shall not be taken for public use without compensation to the owner. Where land is dedicated or taken for a public highway, the question is, What are the uses implied in such dedication or taking? Primarily, there can be no doubt that the use is for passage over the highway. The title to the fee of the highway generally remains in the adjoining owner and he retains the ownership of the land, subject only to the public easement. If this easement do not include the right of a telegraph company to permanently appropriate any portion of the highway, however small it may be, to its own special, continuous, and exclusive use, then the defendant herein has no defense to the plaintiff's claim. Although the purpose of a public highway is for the passage of the public, it may be conceded that the land forming such highway was not taken for the purpose of enabling the public to pass over it only in the then known vehicles, or for using it in the then known methods for the conveyance of property or the transmission of intelligence. Still the primary law of the highway is motion, and whatever vehicles are used, or whatever method of transmission of intelligence is adopted, the vehicle must move, and the intelligence be transmitted by some moving body, which must pass along the highway, either on or over or perhaps under it; but it cannot permanently appropriate any part of it. In the case at bar the fee in the highway at the point in controversy is in the plaintiff, but I do not regard that fact as controlling upon the question of the proper use of the highway. Of course, the plaintiff could not recover in this form of action unless he owned the fee in the highway at this particular point; but I do not think the proper use of the highway depends upon the question as to who owns the fee thereof. I think that the rights of the public in and to the highway remain the same wherever the fee thereof may be placed. 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 698a, etc. As the fee in this case is in the plaintiff, the discussion of the question must be had with reference to that fact. Where one owns to the center of a street in a city, it has been held that the laying of the rails for a horse railroad imposed an additional burden upon the land forming the street, for which the owner was entitled to compensation. Craig v. Rochester City & B. R. Co. 89 N. Y. 404. Although relief was denied a plaintiff who did not own the fee, and who desired to enjoin the use of the street by a horse-railroad company, it was denied upon the ground that there was no taking of the property of the plaintiff by the company, and that being authorized by the legislature the plaintiff could not complain. Kellinger v. Forty-Second Street & G. Street Ferry R. Co. 50 N. Y. 206. The plaintiff sought in that action to recover damages for inconvenience of access to his adjoining lands. In the Craig Case, supra, the case was decided upon the idea that there was an exclusive occupation of the street, which amounted to an additional burden upon the land. The cases upon the subject of railroads in streets are cited and commented upon in Fobes v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 121 N. Y. 505, 8 L. R. A. 458; Kane v. New York Elev. R. Co. 125 N. Y. 164, 11 L. R. A. 640; and Reining v. New York, L. & W. R. Co. 128 N. Y. 157, 14 L. R. A. 183; and they show that the primary or fundamental idea of a highway is that it is a place for uninterrupted passage by men, animals, or vehicles, and a place by which to afford light, air, and access to the property of abutting owners, who, in this respect, enjoy a greater interest in the street than the general public, even though their title to the land stops with the exterior line of the street. It is not a place which can be permanently and exclusively appropriated to the use of any person or corporation, no matter what the business or object of the latter might be. It was because the highway was permanently, and, to some extent, exclusively, appropriated by the elevated railroads, that it was held their erection, without the consent of the abutting owners, was illegal. Story v. New York Elev. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 122, 48 Am. Rep. 146.

We cannot agree that this permanent appropriation and exclusive possession of a small portion of the highway can properly be regarded as any newly discovered method of exercising the old public easement, for the very reason that this so-called "new method" is a permanent, continuous, and exclusive use and possession of some part of the public highway itself, and therefore cannot be simply a new method of exercising such old public easement. It is a totally distinct and different kind of use from any heretofore known. It is not a mere difference in the kind of vehicle, or in their number or capacity, or in the manner, method, or means of locomotion. All these might be varied, increased as to number, capacity, or form, altered as to means or rapidity of locomotion, or transformed in their nature and character, and still the use of the highway might be substantially the same,—a highway for passage and motion of some sort. Here, however, in the use of the highway by the defendant is the fact of permanent and exclusive appropriation and possession, a fact which is, as it seems to us, wholly at war with that of the legitimate public easement in a highway. The following are some of the many authorities which hold that the easement is one of passage only. Goodtitle v. Alker, 1 Burr. 183; Waterloo Presby. Soc. Trustees v. Auburn & R. R. Co. 8 Hill, 567, and cases cited; Van Brunt v. Flatbush, 128 N. Y. 50, 55. Defendant argues that the case in 8 Hill, supra, while announcing the principle above stated, yet did not in fact involve the question, and is not authority to be regarded, while the cases cited in the opinion in that case, the defendant claims, do not really support the principle. We think the case in Hill correctly states the law upon the subject, and that case has been very frequently cited with approval by this court to sustain the above proposition, and among the cases 25 L. R. A.

where such citations are to be found is that of Re Bloomfield & R. Nat. Gas-Light Co. v. Calkins, 62 N. Y. 886. That case is, as we think, substantially decisive of this one. It was there decided that plaintiff had no right to lay its gas pipes in a country highway without the consent of, or compensation to, the owner of the fee. It was also reiterated that the right of the public was a mere right of passage, and the fee of the land remained in the owner for all other purposes. As to whether there is a different or more comprehensive right in regard to streets in cities, the case does not decide, although it is intimated the right may be greater there than in a purely country highway. While concurring in the view that the easement in a public street in a city or village may well be greater as the actual necessities of the case are greater for sewers and gas and water pipes, yet in this case, as we have to deal only with the easement in a purely country highway, it is not important to discuss how the easement became greater in the one case than in the other, or as to the time when the right to the enlarged use of the highway or street attaches, or the method or means by which the right to such enlarged use was attained. Density of population creates public necessities for water, light, drainage, and other conveniences which do not exist in purely rural districts, and along a purely rural highway. Yet the same land might alter from a country highway to a city street, and it might be determined that there was an implied dedication of the country highway at the time the land was taken to the uses which the future village or city street might require. We do not decide as to that matter, nor do we intimate that the defendant would or would not have the right to place its poles in the city street without compensation to the owner, if he owned to the center of the street.

The argument is pressed upon us that the question to be decided in this case is new, and that it ought to be decided with reference to the wants and customs of the advancing civilization, which it is alleged is doing so much to render life more comfortable attractive, and beautiful. Courts are frequently addressed with such arguments, which are quite forcible, and have in this case been very eloquently, plausibly, and aptly advanced. The answer to be made is that, although this particular phase of the question, strictly speaking, may itself be new, yet the principle which governs our decision is as old almost as the common law itself; and in deciding this appeal favorably to the defendant herein we should be overturning and making nothing of cases which have been regarded as the law for generations past. A majority of the states whose courts have considered the question have decided it in accordance with our own views. The cases are collected in the brief of the learned counsel for the respondent herein. Let the defendant pay the owners for the value of the use it makes of the land outside and beyond the public easement in the highway, and the necessity of the broader decision is done away with. It has the power to take the land upon making compensation, and hence the refusal of an owner will not stop the proposed undertaking. The amount of the compensation is not now the question, but that in many cases it can be anything more than merely nominal would seem to be a proposition which would not require great elaboration of argument to make plain. The use would frequently be but a technical encroachment upon the rights of the adjoining owner, and there would be but little fear that anything more than nominal damages would be allowed. This cannot, however, alter the legal rights of the parties, and in regard to them we think the courts below have decided correctly, and the judgment appealed from should be affirmed, with cost.

All concur.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Howard S. JAFFRAY et al., Plffs. in Certiorari,

v.

Ward H. JENNINGS.

(.....Mich.....)

Individual property of an innocent partner is not subject to attachment for a partnership debt fraudulently contracted by his copartner under a general provision of the statute authorizing attachment for fraud of the debtor where another provision expressly says that in a case for attachment against partners or joint debtors the writ shall issue against the property and effects of those brought within the statute.

(September 25, 1894.)

CERTIORARI to the Circuit Court for Lapeer County to set aside an order quashing an attachment upon the property of NOTE.—Attachment of individual property of one partner for fraud of his copartner.

The attachment laws of the several states are so diverse that upon some phases of them it is difficult to find precedents for one state among the decisions of another.

The above question seems to be one which has not frequently arisen, but so far as the authorities go they seem to be in accord with JAFFRAY v. JENNINGS.

The individual property of one partner cannot be seized when the attachment is issued because of the acts of another partner. Williams v. Muthersbaugh, 20 Kan. 730.

In Hill v. Bell, 111 Mo. 35, the court in discussing the effect of an attachment upon one partner's share in the firm property said: The underlying principle of the attachment act is that an attachment can issue only against such defendants as have been guilty of some one or more of the matters therein specified as a ground of attachment; and the attachment when issued binds and holds only the property of the defendant against whom it is issued.

And in the analogous case of an arrest it is held that one partner cannot be arrested for the fraud of his copartner. McNelly v. Haynes, 76 N. C. 122.

So in an action against copartners to recover a debt fraudulently contracted by one of them, only the one guilty of the fraud is liable to arrest. National Bank of Commonwealth v. Temple, 30 How. Pr. 422, 2 Sweeny, 344; Hitchcock v. Peterson, 14 Hun. 390.

Some of the cases even go to the extent of refusing to permit an attachment of firm property because of the acts of one of the partners.

In Bogart v. Dart, 25 Hun. 365, the court refused to permit an attachment against the partnership property because of the fraud of one of the partners, holding that his interest only could be seized.

In Edwards v. Hughes, 20 Mich. 290, the court dissolved an attachment against partnership property which had been issued because of the fraud of one of the partners.

And in Wilson Obeur Grocery Co. v. Cole, 26 Mo. App. 5, in which the partnership was held liable for the fraud of one partner so as to sustain an attachment, it does not appear upon what property the attachment was levied, but the general language of the opinion would lead to the conclusion that it was upon the partnership property simply.

25 L. R. A.

In Wisconsin it has been held that the firm property may be attached if one of the partners is fraudulently using it to pay his individual creditors. Keith v. Armstrong, 65 Wis. 225.

So in case of an attachment because of the non-residence of one of the partners the courts of many of the states refuse to permit it to be levied on firm property.

There can be no attachment against firm property because one partner is a nonresident. Wiley v. Sledge, 5 Ga. 532; Taylor v. McDonald, 4 Ohio, 149; Cowdin v. Hurford, Id. 132; White's Case, 10 Watts, 217; Wallace v. Galloway, 5 Coldw. 510; Leach v. Cook, 10 Vt. 232.

In case the absconding of one partner is the ground for the attachment, it cannot be levied upon the partnership effects. It can reach only the interest of the absconding partner in such effects. Re Smith, 16 Johns. 102.

But there is authority upon the other side of that proposition holding that the property of a firm may be attached because of the nonresidence of one of the partners. Andrews v. Mundy, 36 W. Va. 22; Wilcox v. Carey, 9 Dana, 297; Conklin v. Harris, 5 Ala. 214.

In the states in which individual property is held to be attachable for firm debts the question does not seem to have been considered how far a debt fraudulently contracted by one partner is within the rule.

In Pearce v. Shorter, 30 Ala. 512, the property of an individual partner was held liable to be attached for the firm debt, but there is nothing to show what the ground of attachment against the firm was.

So in Massachusetts one partner is attachable for the debt of the firm. Stevens v. Perry, 113 Mass. 380.

And in Davis v. Werden, 18 Gray. 305, there was an attachment of the property of a nonresident partner for a debt of the firm, on the ground of his nonresidence.

While in Allen v. Wells, 22 Pick. 450, 33 Am. Dec. 757, in which the effect of an attachment of individual property is discussed, the question was one of priority between individual and firm creditors.

H. P. F.

one person for the alleged fraud of his partner in procuring goods. Order affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Fletcher & Wanty, for plaintiffs in certiorari:

The fraud was committed for all the members of the firm in the course of the partnership business and the firm reaped the benefit of the fraud by taking and keeping the goods which were its fruit.

In Smith v. Adrian, 1 Mich. 495, this court held that where two persons are engaged as partners in selling liquor without a license, a sale by one is the act of both and is sufficient to subject the partner who does not participate in the sale to the penalty provided by the law.

In Haney Mfg. Co. v. Perkins, 78 Mich. 1, it is also held that all the members of the firm are liable for slanderous statements made by one partner the purpose of which is to aid the partnership business.

In May v. Newman, 95 Mich. 501, the court sustained the attachment based upon an affidavit that the indebtedness was fraudulently contracted, although the fraudulent statements were made by an agent instead of the defendant personally.

The principles upon which partnerships are held responsible for the acts of one of the partners are analogous to, and in most cases identical with, those upon which employers are bound by the acts of their agents.

Griswold v. Haven, 25 N. Y. 595, 82 Am. Dec. 880; Chester v. Dickerson, 54 N. Y. 1, 13 Am. Rep. 550; Bradner v. Strang, 89 N. Y. 299; Strang v. Bradner, 114 U. S. 561, 29 L. ed. 250.

Such fraud is presumably committed for the benefit of the partnership and the individual partners are therefore liable for the wrong.

Wilson Obeur Grocery Co. v. Cole, 26 Mo. App. 5; Keith v. Armstrong, 65 Wis. 225.

Messrs. Geer & Williams, for defendants in certiorari:

The remedy by attachment being authorized alone by statute and in derogation of the common law, and moreover being summary in its effect and liable to be abused and used oppressively, its application will be carefully guarded by the courts and it will be confined strictly within the limits prescribed by the statute.

Delaplain v. Armstrong, 31 W. Va. 211.

Edwards v. Hughes, 30 Mich. 289, was a case where Reams, one of the partners, was disposing of partnership property to defraud his creditors, and in doing so was defrauding the creditors of the firm, and this court held that the firm property was not liable to attachment.

In Bogart v. Dart, 35 Hun, 897, Daniels, J., says: "The provisions of the Code as they have been enacted, have provided for the remedy by attachment only because of some specified delinquency on the part of the person or persons whose property is to be seized."

One party is not allowed to be arrested because of the fraud or misconduct of another, and from the terms made use of prescribing the cases in, and the circumstances under which attachments may be issued, it is evident that the legislature intended that a like policy should be observed.

Andrews v. Mundy, 36 W. Va. 22; Hill v. 25 L. R. A.

Ball, 111 Mo. 35; Hathaway v. Johnson, 55 N. Y. 93, 14 Am. Rep. 186; Hitchcock v. Peterson, 14 Hun, 390; National Bank of the Commonwealth v. Temple, 2 Sweeny, 344.

Hooker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiffs were copartners, residing in New York, and were jobbers, of whom the defendants (father and son, and also partners) purchased goods. The son, Ward L. Jennings, having purchased a quantity of goods for his firm from the plaintiffs, the latter commenced proceedings by attachment upon an affidavit which alleged that the defendants fraudulently contracted the debt upon which the action was brought, viz., that arising from the purchase mentioned. The writ was levied upon property belonging to the father, and upon his application the attachment was dissolved by the circuit judge. It was admitted that at the time of the levy the firm had sufficient personal property out of which the claim could have been satisfied. Defendants' contention is that the individual property of the innocent defendant was not subject to seizure by attachment. Counsel for the plaintiffs build a strong argument upon the doctrine that each partner is an agent of his fellows, citing May v. Newman, 95 Mich. 501, to the proposition that an attachment lies against a debtor whose agent fraudulently contracted the debt. But the statute upon which the remedy by attachment depends has relieved the innocent partner from the application of this rule. An examination of the statutes may aid in solving this question. We start with the proposition that "attachment is a harsh and extraordinary remedy, unknown to the common law; and the statutory provisions upon which the right depends, being in derogation of the common law, must be strictly construed, and cannot be extended beyond their terms." See cases cited in 1 Jac. & O. Dig. p. 96, § 1; Estlow v. Hanna, 75 Mich. 219. An action against joint debtors is like any other action. It is aimed at the individual debtors. A service on one is not a service upon the other; they may appear separately; their defenses may be different; the judgment is against each for the whole amount; the execution issues against the individuals, the officer being commanded to collect the debt from the goods and chattels, and, for want thereof, of the lands and tenements, of the individuals. And this is as true where the joint obligation is a partnership debt as in cases where the debtors are not copartners. The act authorizing proceedings in attachment permits any creditor to have an attachment against his debtor, upon conditions mentioned. The conditions are that he shall show that the defendant—i. e. the debtor—is believed to be guilty of certain acts, or to possess certain intentions regarding the debt or his property, fraudulent in character, the general tenor of which indicates danger that such debtor will put his property beyond the reach of the creditor. The law lays hold of the property of such debtor, to preserve it for the creditor. So long as there is a sole debtor, no difficulty is likely to arise, but when the debt is joint the question arises, how far should the fraudulent acts and intentions of one subject the property of another to seizure? The acts, if strictly construed, only provide for attachment against the debtor who is guilty of the fraud. An additional remedy, summary in its nature, is given against him. It is given, in terms, against no others. And where the act is done by one only, the law can only be made applicable to another by invoking the doctrine of agency.

No one will question the fact that one can, through an agent, subject his property to attachment; and this is as true where the agent is a partner as where he is not, and where the act complained of is the fraudulent purchase of goods by a partner, as in this case. There is much persuasiveness in the argument that, as the firm received the benefit and appropriated the fruit of the transaction (whether with knowledge upon the part of both or not), the rule that a partner is an agent of his copartners makes his act the act of both. It would not be so convincing if the cause for attachment were another of those named in the statute,—e. g. if one only was shown to have an intent to dispose of the firm property, or had actually done so without the knowledge of his partner, or where he absconded, or removed out of the state, or was about to do so, with intent to defraud the firm creditors. Still more hard would be the attachment against one where his copartner had merely resided out of the state for three months, which in itself is ground for attachment, regardless of the honesty of his intention. Can it be said that in all of these cases these acts are partnership acts, binding the partners under this application of the doctrine of agency? It is true that the creditors of a firm in Michigan, one of the members of which lives in Chicago, have the absolute right to commence all actions against the firm by attachment, and to levy not only on the firm property, but that of each resident member, as well as that of the nonresident? If not, it must be that this doctrine is improperly applied, or a distinction must be drawn between the different causes for attachment named in the statute, and the liability limited to those acts which, we may say, either as a conclusion of fact or law, are the acts of the firm, which would seem to limit the cases to those where the debt was fraudulently contracted, and where the property of the firm had been assigned, concealed, or disposed of with intent on the part of one to defraud the firm creditors. If plaintiffs' theory is correct, these would be the acts of all partners, and subject to seizure not only the partnership property, but the individual property of each partner, no matter how honest, and notwithstanding their solvency. There can be no doubt that partners are bound by the contracts, and many times by the torts, of one of their number, to the extent of liability. But is it as clear that the nature of the remedy is always subject to the same rule? As already stated this remedy is statutory, and the statutes must show the design to cover such cases as this, or they are not to be treated as within them. The attachment statute is borrowed from New York. It will be found in the Revised Statutes of 1883 and 1846 and the Compiled Laws of 1867. The section of which Howell (section 8015) is 25 L. R. A.

an amendment remained unchanged from the time of its adoption until 1861. It is section 19, chap. 1, title 4, pt. 8, p. 512, Rev. Stat. 1888. The same is found in Rev. Stat. 1846, § 80, p. 517, and Comp. Laws 1867, § 4771. It reads as follows, viz.: "When two or more persons are jointly indebted as joint obligors, partners, or otherwise, the attachment may be issued against the separate or joint estates or property of such joint debtors or any of them, and the same proceedings shall be had as hereinbefore prescribed." It goes without saying that under this act, where all of the joint debtors are shown to have participated in the statutory act, or where it appears that each has entertained the fraudulent intent, the writ should issue against all; and it is as plain that in such case the writ could be issued against the separate or joint estates of the debtors. So far it lays down a plain, consistent, and just rule. Shall we go further, and say that it was meant that the writ would be as far-reaching in cases of joint debtors, who are not partners, where one was innocent of wrong? That would probably not be claimed by any one. As to partners, the same claim might be made as is made here, viz. that in dealing with the partnership property the act of one is the act of all, and that the consequences are the same to all. But this act had received a construction before it became a law in Michigan. In Chipman's Case, an absconding debtor (14 Johns. 217), decided in 1817, it was held that the attachment might issue against the property of one of several partners who absconds, for a debt due by the firm, although his copartners are resident within the state, and subject to process. This is not conclusive of the question here, and is cited only to show that counsel in that case did not resort to the remedy by attachment against all of the partners. Two years later the same court held that an attachment might issue against the separate property of an absconding debtor upon a debt due from his copartnership. Here, again, the writ appears not to have been sought against the partners who remained. But the case went further, and held that the partnership property could not be seized; and the reason was that the other partner had a right to retain it to pay the partnership debts. Re Smith, 16 Johns. 102. It may still be said that in neither of these cases were all of the partners sued in attachment, and therefore there yet remains doubt if the right contended for does not exist under this statute, and it is probable that such doubts led to the Amendment of 1861, which reads as follows: "When two or more persons are jointly indebted as joint obligors, partners, or otherwise, and an affidavit shall be made, as provided in section two of this chapter, so as to bring one or more of such joint debtors within its provisions, and amenable to the process of attachment, then the writ of attachment shall issue against the property and effects of such as are so brought within the provisions of said section; and the officer shall be also directed in said writ to summon all such joint debtors as may be named in the affidavit attached thereto, to answer to the said action as in other cases of attachment." Before discussing the statute, let us review the situation. Under the previous statute, attachment lay against all joint debtors, whether partners or not, where it could be shown as matter of fact that all participated in the act constituting a cause. It was also plain that, where one joint debtor only committed such act, his property only was subject to the writ, unless there was a partnership. There was, then, no necessity for legislation to reach either of these cases, for joint debtors, where not partners, were fully protected where innocent of wrong, and the creditor had his remedy against both where both participated, and against the offender where only one was guilty. In this condition of affairs, the legislature passed section 8015, thereby giving immunity from attachment to joint debtors, including partners, who were not themselves participants in the wrongful act. Now, by a construction of this act, it is sought to say that partners are not within its terms, because the act of one is the act of all, and that, as a matter of law, they are, therefore, all participants in the fraudulent act. If that is so, the statute seems to have no office to perform. It has relieved nobody. Joint debtors, not partners, could not be attacked by attachment before unless guilty. But there may have been a doubt about partners. That doubt seems to have caused the enactment of a law whose only object must have been to reach and relieve the very class of cases which the construction contended for seeks to exclude from its protection.

As said at the outset, attachment is a harsh and extraordinary remedy. The law may well restrict its use, and deny it as against all honest persons, though they have the misfortune to be connected in business as partners with dishonest persons. Such persons have legal obligations to discharge in relation to the partnership affairs. They must see that obligations are discharged, and the law presumes that they will faithfully do so. No very good reason suggests itself why the private fortune of an honest partner should be seized because his partner has been detected in a fraudulent act in connection with partnership affairs. It is common knowledge that few men or firms can survive an attack by attachment. It is the almost certain precursor of insolvency, as in former days it was of bankruptcy, and we should hesitate before broadening the scope of the act in question. A case quite similar to the present was before the court, viz., Edwards v. Hughes, 20 Mich. 290. Mr. Justice Cooley wrote the opinion, and seems to have taken a similar view of these statutes to that expressed above. It is true that the facts in that case may permit it to be distinguished from the present, but the language used is broad, and it is hardly possible that the court could have overlooked the contingency of such cases as this. Since this decision we think the bar have understood that the liability was limited to such partners as personally participated in the fraudulent act. See Tiffany's Justice Guide, p. 60, note 1, where this doctrine is laid down; Shinn, Pl. & Pr. § 807. See also People v. Bay County Circuit Ct. Judge, 41 Mich. 826, where a writ issued against non-resident partners only.

We think the learned circuit judge correct in his conclusions, and that his order dissolving the attachment should be affirmed, with costs.

Ordered accordingly.

25 L. R. A.

Long and Grant, JJ., concur with Hooker, J.

Montgomery, J., dissenting:

Plaintiffs sued out an attachment against the defendants, alleging that the defendants, comprising a copartnership which consisted of Ward H. Jennings and Ward L. Jennings, fraudulently incurred the indebtedness for which suit was brought. The writ of attachment was levied upon the property of Ward H. Jennings, and he filed an application to dissolve the writ, which was allowed. The sole question is whether the allegation in the writ that the indebtedness was fraudulently contracted by the defendants was made out. The evidence is abundant that Ward L. Jennings made false and fraudulent representations as to the standing of the defendants and as a basis for the credit which was extended at the time the goods in question were sold. It is contended, however, that the defendant Ward H. Jennings' individual property cannot be made subject to attachment by the fraud of Ward L. Jennings. This question must be determined by ascertaining whether the institution of the proceedings was justified as against the two defendants. The affidavit very properly alleges that the defendants fraudulently contracted the debt, not that one of the defendants did so. Each partner was, in the matter of the contracting of the indebtedness, the agent of the partnership; and the fraud of the agent in contracting such indebtedness is the fraud of the principal, as was held in May v. Newman, 95 Mich. 501. The statute in terms provides the remedy by attachment against the defendant, when it is shown "that he fraudulently contracted the debt or incurred the obligation respecting which the suit is brought." Who is to be said to have fraudulently contracted the debt or incurred the obligation? Obviously, the purchasers of the goods; not Ward L. Jennings alone. Both members of the firm incurred the obligation simultaneously, and both contracted the indebtedness. Section 8015, in my judgment, has no application. That provides that "when two or more persons are jointly indebted, as joint obligors, partners or otherwise, and an affidavit shall be made, as provided in section two of this chapter, so as to bring one or more of such joint debtors within its provisions, and amenable to the process of attachment, then the writ of attachment shall issue against the property and effects of such as are so brought within the provisions of said section." This section gives no support for the suggestion that one partner may not, when representing the firm, fraudulently contract a firm indebtedness. Nor is the case of Edwards v. Hughes, 20 Mich. 290, relied upon by defendants, in point. In that case, it is true, it was said, construing the section just quoted: "It will be seen from this section that when the plaintiff is able to make a case against one of several debtors, whether they are indebted as partners or otherwise, he is not to allege a joint wrong by them all, but must set forth his case in the affidavit according to the facts. There is good reason and plain justice in this statute, since otherwise the party who has the misfortune to be joined in the same legal obligation with a dishonest person may himself be subjected, not only as to his property owned jointly with the other, but as to his individual property also, to all the inconveniences and rigorous treatment to which he could have been made liable if personally guilty of the like dishonesty." But the misfortune of the present defendant Ward H. Jennings does not arise from his having joined in the legal obligation of Ward L. Jennings, a "dishonest person." His liability grows out of the fact that the firm of which he was a member fraudulently incurred an obligation. In Edwards v. Hughes the fraudulent act of the copartner consisted of transferring his individual property in fraud of the creditors of the firm. It is perfectly apparent that he could not, by an act thus disconnected from the business of the firm, subject the property of his copartner to the extraordinary process of attachment. But in the case under consideration, the act of Ward L. Jennings was the act of the firm. Any other view of this statute results in this: that a partner having a nominal interest may incur indebtedness on behalf of the firm fraudulently, and no process can issue against either the copartnership property or the property of his copartners. The extent to which the creditor could go would be to issue his process against the interest of the nominal partner. This is plainly not the purpose of the statute, in my judgment. I think the case falls within the principle in May v. Newman, and the order dissolving the attachment should be reversed, with costs.

McGrath, C.A. J., concurs with Montgomery, J.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

Alexander M. BYERS, Plf. in Err.,

Samuel SCHLUPE et al.

(51 Ohio St. 300.)

- *1. In a civil action for the recovery of money, the plaintiff may, on the ground that the defendant is a non-resident of this state, have an attachment against the property of a defendant partnership of which all the members reside outside this state, which was formed for the purpose of carrying on business in this state, and which has a usual place of doing business in this state.
- *2. In an attachment against the property of such a nonresident partnership, it may be sued by its company name, and service may be had by leaving a copy of the summons with the indorsements thereon, at its usual place of doing business in this state.

(April 24, 1894.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Madison County to review a judgment refusing to recognize the validity of an attachment upon the property of Samuel R. Bullock & Company. Reversed.

Statement by Dickman, C.A. J.:

This petition is prosecuted by Alexander M. Byers, plaintiff in error, against Samuel Schlupé, assignee of the New Philadelphia Pipe Works Company, Ezra Nicholson, the Cleveland, Lorain & Wheeling Railroad Company, Timothy Fahey, Bryan and Prendergast Brothers, W. and J. F. Prendergast, H. T. Van Fleet, Samuel R. Bullock & Company, and numerous others, defendants in error, from the circuit court of Marion county, Ohio, upon a finding of facts and conclusions of law as made by that court. The parties plaintiff and defendant were the same in the circuit court as in this court.

*Headnotes by the COURT.

NOTE.—As to what is nonresidence for the purpose of attachment, see note to Munroe v. Williams (2. C.) 19 L. R. A. 655.
25 L. R. A.

The finding of facts and conclusions of law are as follows:

"This day came the parties and with their attorneys, and this cause came on to be heard upon the respective pleadings filed herein, and the evidence, upon consideration thereof and upon application of said plaintiff, the court do find from the evidence the following facts, viz.: that the funds now in the hands of the sheriff, to wit, $5,100, arose from the sale of the personal property of the partnership firm of Samuel R. Bullock & Company, upon an order of sale for that purpose duly issued herein by consent of all parties hereto; that on the 30th day of August, A. D. 1887, the New Philadelphia Pipe Works Company, a party herein, commenced an action in the court of common pleas of Marion county against the said Samuel R. Bullock & Company in their firm name, and none other, and for the purpose of procuring an order of attachment accompanied the filing of the petition with an affidavit, alleging in said affidavit the following facts and none other: "Ezra Nicholson being duly sworn says that he is the secretary and treasurer of the New Philadelphia Pipe Works Company, an incorporated company under the laws of the state of Ohio; that the claim sued upon in the action was upon a contract for an amount of water pipe sold and delivered to said Samuel R. Bullock & Company, a partnership formed for the purpose of doing business in Ohio, that said claim was just and that affiant believes the said New Philadelphia Pipe Works Company ought to recover $29,947.04 and interest from August 20, 1887; that the defendants are nonresidents of the state of Ohio." Upon said affidavit an order of attachment was issued to the sheriff of said county, which was received by him and was on the same day levied by him upon the personal property sold aforesaid.

"That afterwards on the same day Timothy Fahey commenced an action in said common pleas court against said Samuel R. Bullock & Company upon a claim which was not at that time due, accompanying the filing of his petition with an affidavit, alleging in said affidavit the following facts and none other:

'Timothy Fahey being sworn according to law, deposes and says that he has commenced an action against the said Samuel R. Bullock & Company in the court of common pleas of Marion county, Ohio, to recover on a certain bill of exchange, drawn by the said Samuel R. Bullock & Company; that said claim is just, and that the same will become due on the 11th day of September, A. D. 1887, and that there will then be due upon the same the sum of $2,500, and that the said Samuel R. Bullock & Company has sold and conveyed and disposed of its property with fraudulent intent of hindering and delaying its creditors in the collection of their debts, and that said Samuel R. Bullock & Company is about to move its property out of said county of Marion, to the effect of hindering and delaying its creditors in the collection of their debts; that at the same time an order of attachment was duly allowed in said action by the Honorable John A. Price, one of the judges of said court upon the said Timothy Fahey, giving bond in the sum of $5,000, to the satisfaction of the clerk of the court of common pleas of Marion county, Ohio, conditioned according to law; which order of allowance was duly entered upon the journal of said court; that at the same time the said Timothy Fahey executed his bond as provided in said order of allowance to the acceptance of said clerk; upon said affidavit, allowance as aforesaid, and giving bond aforesaid, an order of attachment was issued to the sheriff of said county, which was received by him and was on the same day by him levied upon the personal property sold as aforesaid.

"Afterwards, upon the same day an action was commenced by Bryan and Prendergast Bros. against Samuel R. Bullock and William S. Mercer, partners, as Samuel R. Bullock & Company, and accompanied the filing of the petition herein with an affidavit, alleging in said affidavit the following facts and none other: 'James F. Prendergast being duly sworn, says that he is one of the above-named plaintiffs who are partners doing business under the firm name of Bryan and Prendergast Bros. That the defendants are indebted to said plaintiffs on an account for goods sold and delivered to defendants at their request; that said claim is just; that the amount which said plaintiffs ought to recover from said defendants, as affiant believes, is one hundred and one dollars and ten cents, with interest from the 30th day of August, 1887, and that said defendants are non-residents of the state of Ohio.' Upon said affidavit an order of attachment was issued to the sheriff of said county, which was received by him, and was on the same day by him levied upon the personal property sold as aforesaid.

"Afterwards on the same day, W. and J. F. Prendergast commenced an action in said court against Samuel R. Bullock & Company, and accompanied the filing of the petition therein with an affidavit alleging in said affidavit the following facts, and none other: 'James F. Prendergast being duly sworn, says that he is one of the plaintiffs in the foregoing action; that the said plaintiffs are partners doing business under the firm name of W. & J. F. Prendergast; that the defendants are a partnership firm formed for the purpose of doing business and holding property in the state of Ohio, and the usual firm name which they have assumed is Samuel R. Bullock & Company; that the said defendants are indebted to the said plaintiffs on an account for goods sold and delivered to defendants at their request; that said claim is just; that the amount which plaintiffs ought to recover, as affiant believes, is one hundred and thirty-four and 67-100 dollars, with interest from the 29th day of August, 1887; and that defendants are nonresidents of the state of Ohio;' upon said affidavit an order of attachment was issued to the sheriff of said county, which was received by him, and was on the same day by him levied upon the personal property sold aforesaid.

"Afterwards on the 7th day of September, 1887, the New Philadelphia Pipe Works Company filed an amended petition in said case and accompanied the same with an affidavit, alleging in said affidavit the following facts and none other: "Ezra Nicholson being first duly sworn, says that he is the agent duly authorized for the plaintiff in this action, which is a corporation organized under the laws of Ohio: that the defendants who are a partnership organized for the purpose of doing business and holding property in Ohio, are indebted to plaintiff on a contract for the sale of certain personal property and goods, to wit, iron water pipe and special casting; that the amount of plaintiff's claim is twelve thousand one hundred and fifty-six dollars in addition to the amount now due to plaintiff; that said $12,156.00 will become due September 20, 1887; that said claim is just, and that said defendants are about to make a sale, conveyance, and disposition of their property with the fraudulent intent to cheat or defraud their creditors, and to hinder and delay them in the collection of their debts; that said defendants have purchased of plaintiffs and other parties large quantities of valuable property, the ownership of which they now disclaim, alleging and pretending that all said property or the greater part thereof is owned by a certain corporation called the Marion Water Works Company, organized at the instance of said defendants, and that said attempted transfer of title to such property is undertaken by defendants while they are still indebted to plaintiff in a very large sum for the greater part of the property so attempted to be disposed of and thereby placed beyond the reach of creditors."

"And thereupon another order of attachment was issued from said court and levied upon said property; and afterwards on the 11th day of November, 1889, a second amended petition was filed by the plaintiff in said cause, and with it there was filed an affidavit, alleging in said affidavit the following facts and none other: 'Thomas C. Willard being duly sworn, says that he is the secretary of the New Philadelphia Pipe Works Company, a corporation duly organized and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Ohio; that the defendants, Samuel R. Bullock and William S. Mercer were lately partners doing business under the firm name and style of Samuel R. Bullock & Co.; that said defendants are indebted to said plaintiff upon a contract for iron pipe and other castings; that said claim is just, and that plaintiff ought, affiant believes, to recover the sum of twenty-four thousand one hundred and three and 9-100 dollars, with interest at 6 per cent; eleven thousand nine hundred and forty-six and 70-100 dollars, from August 20, 1887; and on twelve thousand one hundred and fifty-five dollars from September 20, 1887; and that said defendants are nonresidents of the state of Ohio.' An order of attachment was issued thereon, which was also levied upon said property. That at the February term, A. D. 1889, of the court of common pleas aforesaid, the said the New Philadelphia Pipe Works Company obtained a judgment against the said Samuel R. Bullock & Co. upon the cause of action alleged in its petition and amended petition, in the sum of twenty-five thousand one hundred and eighty-seven dollars and ninety-five cents; that at the May term, A. D. 1888, the said Timothy Fahey obtained a judgment against the said Samuel R. Bullock & Company upon the cause of action alleged in his petition in the sum of two thousand six hundred and twenty-one dollars and twenty-five cents.

"That at the January term, 1888, the said Bryan and Prendergast Brothers obtained a judgment against the said Samuel R. Bullock and Company upon the cause of action alleged in their petition, in the sum of one hundred and three dollars and eighty-eight cents. That at the January term, A. D. 1888, the said W. and J. F. Prendergast obtained a judgment against the said Samuel R. Bullock & Company upon the cause of action alleged in their petition in the sum of one hundred and thirty-eight dollars and thirty-four cents.

"That prior to the October term, A. D. 1888, of the court of common pleas of Marion county, a large number of judgments were obtained by certain laborers against the said Samuel R. Bullock & Company and were each asserting liens upon the personal property sold as aforesaid, and in the case of the New Philadelphia Pipe Works Company against Samuel R. Bullock & Company by consent said laborers, represented by one H. T. Van Fleet, were made parties defendant, and between said parties such proceedings were had, that at the October term, 1888, of the said court, the court made the following order and decree:

"This day this cause came on to be heard upon the answer and cross-petition of the defendants, Jacob S. Brady and others (laborers represented by H. T. Van Fleet), and the evidence, and was submitted to the court; on consideration whereof, and the court being fully advised in the premises, find for said defendants, and that their claims are for labor performed for the defendants, Samuel R. Bullock & Company, and that they are valid liens upon the property taken in attachment in this action, and first in order of priority."

"That at the February term, 1889, of said court of common pleas, the court made the following decree: 'It was agreed by the parties, plaintiff, and said defendant, Alexander M. Byers, that the labor claims of the seventy-seven defendants heretofore found to be the first lien on the property attached in this case as against the said plaintiffs be and the same by agreement and confession made in open court, declared the first lien on said property so attached and in controversy in this cause, as against any claim, rights, demands, legal or equitable of said Alexander M. Byers;' that each of said orders and decrees remain in full force and effect; that on the 28th day of November, A. D. 1887, the said the New Philadelphia Pipe Works Company assigned the one undivided fourth-part of its claim against Samuel R. Bullock & Company to one Ezra Nicholson by a written transfer in the words and figures following, to-wit: 'The New Philadelphia Pipe Works Company hereby assign and transfer to Ezra Nicholson an undivided one-fourth part of all its claim against the late firm of Samuel R. Bullock & Company, which claim is now in suit in the court of common pleas of Marion county, Ohio, and also assign one-fourth part of all moneys that may be realized from or upon said claim or out of said suit, through proceedings in attachment, suit or otherwise.'

Afterwards it assigned a portion of its claim in said case to the Cleveland, Lorain & Wheeling Railroad Company; assignment was filed in the case of the New Philadelphia Pipe Works Company v. Samuel R. Bullock, but is now lost and was never recorded by the clerk. The amount so assigned was $2,848.43, with interest.

Afterwards on the 8d day of August, A. D. 1888, the said company assigned the balance of its claim to Alexander M. Byers by an instrument in writing, of which the following is a copy:

"For value received, we hereby sell, transfer, and assign to Alexander M. Byers, our claim against Samuel R. Bullock & Company for pipe delivered to them at Marion, Ohio, which claim is now in suit in the common pleas court at Marion, Ohio, in an action pending, the New Philadelphia Pipe Works Company are plaintiffs, and Samuel Bullock & Company et al. are defendants, except so much of said claim as we have heretofore assigned and transferred to E. Nicholson for $5,000, and to C. L. Cutter, treasurer of the Cleveland, Lorain & Wheeling Railroad Company for $2,848.43 with interest. And we hereby authorize and empower said Byers to be substituted in our place in said action, and to prosecute, adjust, and settle the same, and having paid himself the amount now due him from us, being the sum of $16,881.42, with interest; and having paid all costs and attorneys fees in the prosecution of said case, if there shall be any balance received by him over the amount due him as aforesaid, such balance shall be held subject to our order."

"That the said assignment to Ezra Nicholson and Alexander M. Byers were entered by the clerk of said court upon the execution docket of said court. Upon the facts there found, the court do find that the costs made in the case of the New Philadelphia Pipe Works Company against Samuel R. Bullock & Company et al. (No. 4939), is the first and best lien.

"That the costs made in this action is the second best lien.

"That the judgment and costs of Timothy Fahey with interest thereon to the date of the sheriff's sale, is the third best lien.

"That the judgment and costs of Bryan and Prendergast Bros., with interest thereon to the date of the sheriff's sale, is the fourth best lien.

"That the judgment and costs of the laborers, represented by H. T. Van Fleet, with interest thereon to the date of the sheriff's sale, is the fifth best lien.

"That the judgment of the New Philadelphia Pipe Works Company, with interest thereon to the date of the sheriff's sale, is the sixth best lien.

"It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said sheriff should out of said fund pay:

"First—All costs in the case of the New Philadelphia Pipe Works Company against Samuel R. Bullock & Co., to wit, $663.67;

"Second—All the costs of this action, to wit, $344.78.

"Third—To Timothy Fahey, the amount of his judgment and costs with interest, to wit, $2,933.58.

"Fourth—To Bryan and Prendergast Bros., the amount of their judgment and costs, with interest, to wit, $188.82.

"Fifth—To H. T. VanFleet, the amount of the laborers' judgment and interest, to wit, $3,596.29.

"Sixth—To the assignee of the New Philadelphia Pipe Works Company the amount of the judgment with interest, to wit, $——."

To all of which the said the New Philadelphia Pipe Works Company, Alexander M. Byers, Ezra Nicholson, and the Cleveland, Lorain & Wheeling Railroad Company, each then and there excepted.

Messrs. Marvin & Cook for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Charles C. Fisher for defendants in error Jacob S. Brady et al.

Dickman, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The main question that claims our consideration is, whether the court of common pleas, by virtue of the affidavit which accompanied the filing of the petition of the New Philadelphia Pipe Works Company, on August 30, 1887, acquired jurisdiction and was authorized by law to issue the order of attachment against the property of the partnership firm of Samuel Bullock & Company. The action was commenced on the last-named day against the defendants in their firm name and none other; and the affidavit in attachment alleged the following facts, and none other: "Ezra Nicholson, being duly sworn, says that he is the secretary and treasurer of the New Philadelphia Pipe Works Company, an incorporated company under the laws of the state of Ohio; that the claim sued upon in the action is upon a contract for an amount of water pipe sold and delivered to said Samuel R. Bullock & Company, a partnership formed for the purpose of doing business in Ohio; that said claim is just, and that affiant believes that the said New Philadelphia Pipe Works Company ought to recover $29,947.04, and interest from August 20, 1887; that the defendants are nonresidents of the state of Ohio." The record discloses that the partnership was composed of Samuel R. Bullock and William S. Mercer, and that neither of the individual members of the firm resided in Ohio at the time the order of attachment was issued.

Section 5011 of the Revised Statutes provides that: "A partnership formed for the purpose of carrying on a trade or business in this state, or holding property therein, may sue or be sued by the usual or ordinary name which it has assumed, or by which it is known; and in such case it shall not be necessary to allege or prove the names of the individual members thereof." By section 5042 of the Revised Statutes, regulating the manner of service and return of summons, it is provided that: "The service shall be by delivering, at any time before the return day, a copy of the summons, with the indorsements thereon, to the defendant personally, or by leaving a copy at his usual place of residence, or, if the defendant is a partnership sued by its company name, by leaving a copy at its usual place of doing business."

And under section 5521 of the Revised Statutes, among the grounds upon which an attachment may issue, the plaintiff, in a civil action for the recovery of money may, at or after the commencement thereof—if the claim is a debt or demand arising upon contract, judgment, or decree—have an attachment against the property of the defendant, "when the defendant, or one of several defendants, is a foreign corporation, or a nonresident of this state."

In view of these statutory provisions, the validity of the attachment called in question must evidently depend upon whether the partnership of Samuel R. Bullock & Company, sued by the firm name only—neither of its members then residing in Ohio—was a "defendant nonresident of this state" at the time the order of attachment was issued, within the meaning of the language of the statute.

The privilege extended by the statute to sue a partnership by the usual or ordinary name which it has assumed, or by which it is known, is not to be confined to such as may be formed within this state for the purpose of carrying on a trade or business, or holding property herein. Indeed, a partnership may be formed in another state for accomplishing the same purpose in this state; its component members may all reside in the state where it is formed, and if it does business in this state, it may be sued by its company name, and served by leaving a copy of the summons at its usual place of doing business in this state. It may be thus sued and thus served, irrespective of the residence of those who compose it.

The fact, however, that such partnership engages in business in this state, that it may be sued in the company name, and that it may be served by leaving a copy of the summons at a prescribed place, are not the sole factors for fixing and determining its residence when it is sought to reach its property by attachment for the benefit of its creditors. The members of a partnership do not form a collective whole, distinct from the individuals composing it; nor are they collectively endowed with any capacity of acquiring rights or incurring obligations. The rights and liabilities of a partnership are the rights and liabilities of the partners. 1 Lindley, Partn. 5. It is not a creation in which the identity of the individual members is merged and lost, in seeking to enforce against them the obligations of the firm.

A partnership is not, in our judgment, a legal entity, having, as such, a domicile or residence separate and distinct from that of the individuals who constitute it. To what extent residence may be affirmed of a partnership as such, was considered by the court in Fitzgerald v. Grinnell, 64 Iowa, 261. In the dissenting opinion there is much force, and we cite the same with our concurrence. "Residence," says Adams, J., "in my opinion, can be predicated only of a person natural or artificial. A partnership, as distinguished from the members composing it, is neither. Besides, it appears to me that, in any view, the mere fact that a partnership maintains for the transaction of its business an established agent in a county where neither partner resides, cannot constitute the partnership a resident of such county. There is no pretense that an individual would become a resident of a county by merely transacting business therein through an established agent, and I am not able to see that a different rule should be applied to a partnership."

A principal reason for authorizing a suit against a partnership by its company name, to wit, the inability often times to find out the names of constituent partners, is applicable alike to domestic and foreign partnerships. In view of such inability—more apt to arise where the partners all reside in another state—that statute specifically provides, that when a partnership is sued by its usual or ordinary name, "it shall not be necessary to allege or prove the names of the individual members" of the firm. Whether the partnership was formed in this state or in another state, the names of the individual members are not required to be alleged; and whether a defendant partnership should be deemed a nonresident of the state in an attachment of its property on the ground of nonresidence, should depend upon the fact of the nonresidence of the constituent members, and not upon the mere mention of names of those who constitute the firm. It being conceded that the first attachment in favor of the New Philadelphia Pipe Works Company would have been valid if the proceeding had been against Samuel R. Bullock and William S. Mercer, partners, as Samuel R. Bullock & Company, with an accompanying affidavit that the defendants were nonresidents of Ohio, the failure to allege the individual names of the partnership should not, we think, render the attachment invalid, when the affidavit states the fact that the defendants were nonresidents of the state, and the statute renders it unnecessary to set forth the names of the partners. As an attachment may issue on the ground that the defendant is a nonresident of the state, it would seem to be the policy of the law, when the defendants reside in a foreign jurisdiction, and their names are unknown to the plaintiff, and they are doing business in this state under a partnership name, that creditors might protect their rights by attachment proceedings against the defendants in the name by which they elect to hold themselves out to the public and obtain credit.

25 L. R. A.

It may perhaps be urged that although the individual partners composing a firm reside in another state the partnership is to be deemed resident in a state where it has a "usual place of doing business." But the statute, in prescribing the manner of service and return of summons, recognizes both a place of residence and a place of business, and the one is not to be regarded as identical with the other. A person or a number of persons may be domiciled or reside in one state, and have an agent and place of doing business in another, even as a corporation domiciled within the state by which it was created, may have its agent and a usual place of doing business in another state. The principal action may exist, and the partnership under the company name, may be brought into court through actual service by leaving a copy of the summons at its usual place of business, while an ancillary proceeding by attachment to secure the rights of creditors, may be sustained by reason of the fact of nonresidence; and when the attachment issues, it is not necessary that there should be constructive service on the defendants by publication, but there may be service of process at the usual place of business which they have established in this state. Smith v. Hoover, 39 Ohio St. 249.

It follows from the foregoing considerations, that the affidavit upon which the first attachment was issued in favor of the New Philadelphia Pipe Works Company was adequate to give the court jurisdiction to issue the attachment, and thereby acquire jurisdiction over the property.

Subject therefore to the liens for costs as adjudged by the circuit court, the claims of the laborers represented by H. T. Van Fleet, should be held valid liens and first in order of priority upon the property taken in attachment; but, subordinate to such claims, the judgment in favor of the New Philadelphia Pipe Works Company should be the next best lien upon the property attached, or upon the funds derived from its sale.

The first attachment by the New Philadelphia Pipe Works Company being deemed valid upon the facts set forth in the record, it becomes unnecessary to consider whether objections to the attachment that may be taken advantage of by the defendants Samuel R. Bullock & Company can also be available to other creditors of those defendants.

The judgment of the Circuit Court should be reversed, and judgment rendered for the creditors of Samuel R. Bullock & Company in accordance with the priorities of lien as stated in this opinion.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT (In Banc).

Victor MONTGOMERY, Resp't.,SANTA ANA & WESTMINSTER R.
CO., App't.

(.....Cal.....)

1. A railroad for transportation of passengers and freight on a street does not impose a new burden or servitude upon the owner of the soil, although he may be entitled to damages for injury to his right of access, or light and air.
2. An ouster which will sustain ejectment by the owner of the soil of a highway is not made by constructing a railroad thereon by permission of the municipal authorities.

(September 13, 1894.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Orange County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover possession of a portion of the street in front of plaintiff's premises, upon which defendant had constructed its tracks. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Victor Montgomery, respondent in propria persona:

If the city authorities have no power to construct and operate a steam railroad on a public street they cannot bestow such power upon any one else.

North Beach & M. R. Co's App. 32 Cal. 510; Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Reed, 41 Cal. 262.

In Milbau v. Sharp, 27 N. Y. 622, 84 Am. Dec. 814, the court said: "The resolution is therefore void, for the reason that it purports to create a franchise which the common council had no power to create; to vest in the defendants an exclusive interest in the streets, which the common council had no power to convey, etc."

By laying said track, appellant acquired an interest in the land.

Civil Code, §§ 14, 660.

To the extent that said track rested upon and was imbedded in said land, it was a "taking" within the constitutional provision.

As appellant had the exclusive right to run cars on said track, it was an "exclusion" of the respondent and the public from that portion of the highway covered by said railroad track.

Weyl v. Sonoma Valley R. Co. 69 Cal. 205; Williams v. New York Cent. R. Co. 16 N. Y. 100, 69 Am. Dec. 651; Mahon v. New York Cent. R. Co. 24 N. Y. 659; Wager v. Troy Union R. Co. 25 N. Y. 526; Waterloo Presby. Soc. Trustees v. Auburn & R. R. Co. 3 Hill, 569; Reichert v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 51 Ark. 491.

The abutter may also maintain ejectment against a railroad company which has placed its track upon his side of a street without paying or tendering damages therefor.

Elliott, Roads & Streets, 536; Angell, Highways, § 319; Dovaston v. Payne, 2 H. Bl. 527; 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 9th ed. p. 161; Mayhew v. Norton, 17 Pick. 357, 28 Am. Dec. 304; Terre Haute & S. R. Co. v. Rodel, 89 Ind. 123; Sedgwick & Walt, Trial of Title to Lands, §§ 182, 185; Carpenter v. Oswego & S. R. Co. 24 N. Y. 655; West Covington v. Freking, 8 Bush, 121; Read v. Leeds, 19 Conn. 188; Reichert v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. supra.

An abutting owner cannot be deprived of his rights, though for a public purpose, without compensation first being made.

Schaufele v. Doyle, 86 Cal. 107; Theobald v. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. 4 L. R. A. 735, 66 Miss. 279; Ford v. Santa Cruz R. Co. 59 Cal. 290, and cases there cited by respondent's counsel.

Municipal ordinance granting the right of way along a street is no defense.

Ketcher v. Auburn & S. R. Co. 25 Wend 462; East End Street R. Co. v. Doyle, 9 L. R. A. 100, 88 Tenn. 747; Denver Circle R. Co. v. Nestor, 10 Colo. 403; Story v. New York Elev. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 123, 43 Am. Rep. 146.

A steam railroad in the street was held to be an additional burden in the following cases:

East End Street R. Co. v. Doyle, supra; Pappenheim v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 13 L. R. A. 401, 128 N. Y. 436; Harmon v. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. 87 Tenn. 614; Ford v. Santa Cruz R. Co. supra; North Chicago City R. Co. v. Lake View, 105 Ill. 207, 44 Am. Rep. 788; Stanley v. Davenport, 54 Iowa, 463, 37 Am. Rep. 216; Starr v. Camden & A. R. Co. 24 N. J. L. 592; Jersey City & B. R. Co. v. Jersey City & H. Horae R. Co. 20 N. J. Eq. 61; Springfield v. Connecticut River R. Co. 4 Cush. 63; Stange v. Hill & W. D. Street R. Co. 54 Iowa, 669; Sears v. Marshalltown Street R. Co. 65 Iowa, 742; Fanning v. Osborne, 84 Hun, 121; Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Heisel, 47 Mich. 893; Burlington & M. R. Co. v. Reinhardt, 15 Neb. 379, 48 Am. Rep. 842; Story v. New York Elev. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 123, 43 Am. Rep. 146; Lahr v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 104 N. Y. 268; Denver Circle R. Co. v. Nestor, 10 Colo. 403; Cooley, Const. Lim. 676; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 680-683, also §§ 704-717; Mills, Em. Dom. §§ 202-207; Pierce, Railroads, §§ 242-246; Washb. Easements & Servitudes, 4th ed. § 253.

Ejectment is a proper remedy where the abutter has title to the center of the highway.

Uline v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 101 N. Y. 98, 53 Am. Rep. 123, 54 Am. Rep. 661; Wager v. Troy Union R. Co. 25 N. Y. 526; Heard v. Brooklyn, 60 N. Y. 242; Graham v. Columbus & I. Cent. R. Co. 27 Ind. 260, 89 Am. Dec. 498; Coz v. Louisville, N. A. & O. R. Co. 48 Ind. 178; Harrington v. St. Paul &

NOTE.—While the above case is in conflict with what a few years ago would have been the overwhelming weight of authority (see note to Western Railway of Alabama v. Alabama Grand Trunk R. Co. (Ala.) 17 L. R. A. 474), yet there is what seems to be a growing tendency on the part of some of the courts to depart from the old doctrine. In addition to the cases cited in the opinion attention is called to Ottawa, O. C. & G. G. R. Co. v. Larson (Kan.) 2 L. R. A. 59, and Nichols v. Ann Arbor & G. Street R. Co. (Mich.) 16 L. R. A. 371, in which the Michigan court was equally divided upon a similar question.

B. O. R. Co. 17 Minn. 215; Jersey City v. Fitzpatrick, 30 N. J. Eq. 97; Pittsburgh & L. E. R. Co. v. Bruce, 103 Pa. 23; Wood, Railway Law, 821; Mills, Em. Dom. 2d ed. § 856; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 647; 1 Redf. Railways, 6th ed. 883; Louisville, St. L. & T. R. Co. v. Liebfried, 92 Ky. 407; Syracuse Solar Salt Co. v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 67 Hun, 153; Western Railway of Alabama v. Alabama G. T. R. Co. 17 L. R. A. 474, 96 Ala. 272; Washb. Easements & Servitudes, 4th ed. § 292; Mahon v. San Rafael Turnp. Road Co. 49 Cal. 269; San Francisco City & County v. Sullivan, 50 Cal. 605; Coburn v. Ames, 52 Cal. 885, 28 Am. Rep. 634; Visalia v. Jacob, 65 Cal. 436, 52 Am. Rep. 303; Weyl v. Sonoma Valley R. Co. 69 Cal. 202; Finch v. Riverside & A. R. Co. 87 Cal. 598.

Per Curiam:

This is an action of ejectment to recover possession of a strip of land in the city of Santa Ana, county of Orange.

Plaintiff had judgment, from which, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

Defendant, by its answer, set up two separate defenses. In the second of these it set out (1) that it is a corporation with power to construct and operate a steam railroad for the transportation of freight and passengers from the city of Santa Ana to Westminster, across, along, and upon any street, avenue, or highway; (2) that a strip of land 80 feet in width off the entire north side of the land described in the complaint was and is a public street or highway in said city of Santa Ana, under the control of and in the possession of the board of trustees of said city; (3) that said board of trustees, by ordinance, authorized and licensed defendant to construct and operate a railroad through and over said street, for carrying freight and passengers in cars to be propelled by dummy or motor engines; (4) that it constructed its road on said street, and operated it as provided in said ordinance; (5) that it has not excluded plaintiff or others from the street, and has only used it for the purpose aforesaid, and in common with the public, and has not impaired said street, or curtailed the use thereof by others, etc. To this defense plaintiff demurred, upon the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense. The demurrer was sustained by the court, and defendant declined to amend as to this defense, and the action of the court in sustaining the demurrer is urged as error.

The whole proposition involved in this case may be put thus: Can the owner in fee of land abutting upon a public street in an incorporated town maintain an action of ejectment against a railroad company organized and existing for the transportation of freight and passengers from said town to a neighboring town, which company, under and by virtue of an ordinance of the trustees of the first-designated town empowering it to do so, has constructed and is using a railway track upon and over said public street and upon the side or half thereof adjoining the land of such abutting owner? The question is stated thus for the reason that, while the evidence in the case, consisting of the deed to respondent and the city map together, show that his land abutted upon the street in question, viz., Second street, in the city of Santa Ana, yet by section 1112 of the Civil Code "a transfer of land bounded by a highway passes the title of the person whose estate is transferred to the soil of the highway to the center thereof, unless a different intent appears from the grant." There is nothing in the evidence to indicate the contrary, and hence we must presume respondent owns to the center of the highway or street, subject only to the right of the public to an easement or right of way for street purposes therein and thereto. All streets are highways, but not all highways are streets. Indianapolis v. Oroas, 7 Ind. 9; Lafayette v. Jenners, 10 Ind. 74; Clark v. Com. 14 Bush, 166. In other words, there is a wide distinction between a highway in the country and a street in a city or village, as to the mode and extent of the enjoyment, and, as a sequence, in the extent of the servitude in the land upon which they are located. The country highway is needed only for the purpose of passing and repassing, and as a general rule, to which there are a few needed exceptions, the right of the public and of the authorities in charge is confined to the use of the surface, with such rights incidental thereto as are essential to such use. In the case of streets in a city there are other and further uses, such as the construction of sewers and drains, laying of gas and water pipes, erection of telegraph and telephone wires, and a variety of other improvements, beneath, upon, and above the surface, to which in modern times urban streets have been subjected. These urban servitudes are essential to the enjoyment of streets in cities, and to the comfort of citizens in their more densely populated limits. It has sometimes been suggested that a distinction is to be made between cases in which streets are laid out and opened upon property belonging to the corporation, and those in which streets become such by dedication, or by condemnation proceedings under the right of eminent domain upon compensation being made; but the consensus of modern opinion seems to be that no such distinction properly exists, and that "whether the corporation be the owner of the fee of the streets in trust for the public, or whether it be merely the trustee of the streets and highways as such, irrespective of any title to the soil, it has the power to authorize their appropriation to all such uses as are conducive to the public good, and do not interfere with their complete and unrestricted use as highways." People v. Kerr, 27 N. Y. 202; Cincinnati v. White, 81 U. S. 6 Pet. 432, 8 L. ed. 458; Thompson Highways, p. 7; Elliott, Roads & Streets, p. 305. It is said by Elliott, in his work on Roads and Streets, at page 299, that "it is doubtful whether, of all servitudes, there is one so broad and comprehensive as that of a city in its streets." It authorizes the use of the street for the track of a street-car company under license by the city authority, without compensation to the owner of the fee. Finch v. Riverside & A. R. Co. 87 Cal. 598.

A "street railway" has been defined as "a railway laid down upon roads or streets for the purpose of carrying passengers." Elliott, supra, 557. It is further said by the same author that "the distinctive and essential feature of a street railway, considered in relation to other railroads, is that it is a railway for the transportation of passengers, and not of freight." It is said to exclude the idea of the carriage of freight, and that a railroad over which heavily laden freight trains are drawn cannot be considered a street railway. Street-cars are little more than carriages for transportation of passengers, propelled over fixed tracks, to which their wheels are adapted, and as a convenient, comfortable, and economical mode of conveyance, their use has become well-nigh universal in cities, and as they add, when properly constructed, little or nothing to the burdens of the servient tenement, their use is upheld without the necessity of compensation to the abutting owner. The use of a public street, however, for an ordinary railway for the transportation of freight and passengers, it has been said by the highest authority, imposes a new burden upon the street, not contemplated in its dedication, and therefore the user cannot be indulged without compensation to the abutting owner of property upon such public street. We are at a loss for any good reason for this distinction, or to see why the transportation of freight by modern and improved methods is not equally entitled to encouragement with the transportation of passengers. The essential wants of the citizen demand the former equally with the latter. If there is any difference in the burden imposed upon the street, it is in degree and not in kind. The great highways of England were constructed, not so much for the convenience of passengers as for the transportation of freight. In the infancy of commerce, when trade and traffic by land was insignificant in volume, when the sumpter horse, which answered to our modern pack mule, answered all the purposes of transportation for goods, footpaths, bridlepaths, and lanes served all needed purposes; but with the growth of inland commerce, and the need of greater facilities for the interchange of commodities, the use of wheeled vehicles, and, as a means thereto, the highway, as we know it, became a necessity. The Appian Way, commenced 812 B. C., which has provoked the admiration of the world, was entitled to commendation for its roadway 16 feet in width, constructed for the transportation of burdens, while the paths of 8 feet on each side of it for foot passengers, and upon which the Roman legions were wont to march, were unpaved. In the construction of modern highways, urban and suburban, the great difficulty and the prominent object has been to build and adapt them, by grade, width, and structure of roadbed, to the carriage of freight. Yet we are told in effect that, so far as modern methods are concerned,—so far as ease, speed, and economy are involved,—improvements are to be limited to the transportation of passengers; that cars with wheels adjusted to move upon fixed tracks, when applied to the transportation of passengers, are within the contemplated objects in view in opening a road or street, and therefore add nothing material to the burden of the servitude of the abutting landowner, while a precisely similar structure, adapted to the transportation of freight, adds an additional burden, of a different character, to the servitude, and cannot be tolerated without compensation to the abutting owner. An interminable string of heavy drays may thunder through the street from early morning until set of sun, a menace to all who frequent the thoroughfare, and an inconvenience to all dwellers thereon; but the cars of a railway, which move usually but a few times a day, and with infinitely less annoyance to the public, upon tracks so adjusted to the surface as to occasion little or no inconvenience, cannot be tolerated. We fail to appreciate the philosophy of the distinction. On the contrary, we affirm that, when a public street in a city is dedicated to the general use of the public, it involves its use, subject to municipal control and limitations, for all the uses and purposes of the public as a street, including such methods for the transportation of passengers and freight as modern science and improvements may have rendered necessary, and that the application of these methods, and indeed of those yet to be discovered, must have been contemplated when the street was opened and the right of way obtained, whether by dedication, purchase, or condemnation proceedings, and hence that such a user imposes no new burden or servitude upon the owner of the abutting land. The object of the user being within the conceded rights of the public, the methods of its accomplishment are subject to legislative control, and subject, also, to an action for damages by any abutting owner, whether or not he may be vested with the fee to the center of the street, whose right of ingress and egress, or his right to light and air, shall be interfered with.

25 L. R. A.

The thirteenth subdivision of section 862 of the Municipal Government Act of this state authorizes the boards of trustees of municipalities of the sixth class, of which Santa Ana is one, "to permit, under such restrictions as they may deem proper, the laying of railroad tracks and the running of cars drawn by horses, steam or other power thereon . . . in the public streets." The world moves. Legislation in recent times has kept pace with the progress of the age. The trend of judicial opinion, except where overshadowed and incrustated with stare decisis, is to a broader and more comprehensive view of the rights of the public in and to the streets and highways of city and country; and, while carefully conserving the rights of individuals to their property, the courts have not hesitated to declare the shadowy title which the owner of the fee holds to the land in a public street or highway, during the duration of the easement of the public therein, as being subject to all the varied wants of the public, and essential to its health, enjoyment, and progress. In Paquet v. Mt. Tabor Street R. Co., 18 Or. 233, which was an action to enjoin a steam-motor railway company from constructing and operating its road upon a street in the city of Portland and upon a county road outside the city, abutting upon both of which the plaintiff owned land, with the fee in him vested to the center of the street and road, and where no compensation had been made to plaintiff, the court in its opinion, by Thayer, Ch. J., in deciding the cause against plaintiff, said: "The establishment of a public highway practically divests the owner of a fee to the land upon which it is laid out, of the entire present beneficial interest, of a private nature, which he has therein. It leaves him nothing but the possibility of a reinvestment of his former interest in case the highway should be discontinued as such. This view, I am aware, is contrary to the ancient doctrine that the owner of the fee owned the land subject only to such public uses, and that he had a right of action when the use was diverted to a different purpose. Such a doctrine may have been applicable where the ownership was merely subject to a right of way over the land; but where, as in modern cases, it is devoted exclusively to the purposes of a public thoroughfare, and the control thereof is committed to legally constituted authorities charged with the duty of maintaining it for such purpose, the doctrine becomes a vague theory, and should be laid away among the antiquities of the past age." McQuaid v. Portland & V. R. Co. 18 Or. 287, enunciates a like doctrine. In Henry Gaus & Sons Mfg. Co. v. St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co., 118 Mo. 308, 18 L. R. A. 389, the supreme court of Missouri held, in substance, that the construction and operation of an ordinary steam railroad at grade in a public street under municipal authority is not a new public use of the street, for which compensation may be demanded by abutting owners, as in the case of property "taken or damaged," within the meaning of the constitution. The court said: "When land is dedicated generally, and without restrictions, or condemned, for a public street, in a town or city, the owner of the abutting lots, who secures the benefit of the street, and persons also who purchase and improve property thereon, hold their property rights subject to all the uses to which the street can be lawfully subjected by the public. New uses in the improvement in the mode of travel and transportation are constantly arising. When there is no restriction on the public use, new modes of use may be adopted, which are consistent with the proper use of the street, without the consent of abutting owners, though such new uses may interfere somewhat with their own convenient use of the street. . . . For any damages that may be caused by an unlawful or negligent maintenance of the track in the street, or by negligent use of engines or movement of trains, defendant will be liable in an action for damages." This decision is in line with the decisions in that state. In Iowa a like doctrine prevails. In Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324, 24 L. ed. 224, which was ejectment in the United States court for the district of Iowa, to recover certain premises within a public street in Keokuk, occupied with railroad tracks, buildings, sheds, etc.,—upon error to the Supreme Court of the United States, that tribunal held that although no permanent obstruction, like a depot building, could be erected on the streets of a town, yet it is held in that state (Iowa) that they may, by public authority, be occupied by railway tracks without the consent of the adjacent proprietors, and without compensation, whether the fee of the streets, as in that case, be in him or in a third person. The court further held that there was no substantial difference between streets in which the legal title is in private individuals, and those in which it is in the public, as to the rights of the public therein. Kucheman v. C. C. & D. R. Co. 46 Iowa, 366. In New Jersey it is held: (1) That the legislature has power to authorize the use of a public highway for the purpose of a railway. (2) That the legislature must be the judges as to the benefit to the public, and to their authority the public and individuals must submit. (3) The authority to use a public highway for the purpose of a railroad, retaining the use of such highway for all ordinary purposes, is not such a taking of private property for public purposes as requires compensation to the owner of the fee of the adjacent lands, as is contemplated by their constitution. (4) That the easement of the highway is in the public, although the fee is practically in the adjacent owner. "It is the easement only which is appropriated, and no right or title of the owner is interfered with." Morris & E. R. Co. v. Newark, 10 N. J. Eq. 352. In Spencer v. Pt. Pleasant & O. R. Co., 23 W. Va. 408, which was a bill in equity to restrain defendant from constructing and operating an ordinary steam railroad over a public street, the fee of which was in plaintiff, under a license from the municipal authorities, the court used the following language: "Admitting she (the plaintiff) owns the fee to the middle of Seventh street opposite her lot, as she contends is the fact, she still owns the same, and neither her title nor possession is in any manner disturbed by the railroad company. It has always been subject to the easement of the public to pass and repass over it and to use it as a street; and, subject to this easement, she has as much the enjoyment and possession of the whole of Seventh street as she ever had. What the railroad company has taken it has taken from the town council of Point Pleasant,—a mere easement,—and it has taken nothing from the plaintiff, and therefore, under West Virginia authorities referred to, she is entitled to no injunction." In Edwardsville R. Co. v. Sawyer, 93 Ill. 877, the supreme court of Illinois held that the public authorities who have the superintendence and control of the public roads may authorize travel on them by the means of a railroad, and, where a railroad company has constructed its road upon and along a public road, such use and possession is a matter between the road authorities and the railroad company, and the right cannot be questioned in an action of ejectment by the owner of the land over which the public road has been established.

This being an action of ejectment to recover a specific piece or parcel of land, and it appearing from the stipulation of the parties that the alleged ouster consisted only in the entry by the defendant upon a public street, and the construction of a railroad track thereon, no question of damage to property, other than to such public street, within the purview of section 14 of article 1 of the Constitution of this state, can arise.

We may admit that the views herein expressed are in conflict with the doctrine enunciated in Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Reed, 41 Cal. 256, and Muller v. Southern Pac. Branch R. Co. 88 Cal. 240, and it does not necessarily follow that ejectment will lie, if the facts set out in the answer are true. The cases above quoted were to recover damages. The cases of Weyl v. Sonoma Valley R. Co. 69 Cal. 208, and Finch v. Riverside & A. R. Co. 87 Cal. 597, in which ejectments were upheld, were cases in which the defendants were mere intruders upon the public street, without valid license from any authorized body. The rule, as defined in Mahon v. San Rafael Turnp. Road Co. 49 Cal. 270, is regarded as the true one in cases of ejectment for injuries like the one complained of here. It was said in that case: "The exclusion of the plaintiff from entering on the land, except on the payment of a toll, and then only for the purpose of passing over the same, was a disseisin." In the present case the answer to which the demurrer was sustained averred: "That this defendant has not excluded the plaintiff, or any one else, from said street, or any part thereof, nor does it claim to hold said street, or any part thereof, exclusively from the plaintiff, or any one else whomsoever; but this defendant only claims the right to use the portion of said street actually occupied by said track in common with the public, under and by virtue of said ordinances of the said board of trustees of said city, and not otherwise." The action of ejectment is a possessory action, in which the plaintiff must show himself entitled to the present possession, and that he has been deprived thereof. Anything which deprives a plaintiff of his present right of possession will deprive him of the remedy of ejectment. The case of Redfield v. Utica & S. R. Co. 25 Barb. 54, is on all fours with the present case; and the court there held that the claim of an easement was not a claim of title, and that the mere user of such easement by license of the public, without excluding others from a like user, did not amount to an ouster for which ejectment would lie,—intimating, but without deciding, that trespass was in such a case the proper remedy. Edwardsville R. Co. v. Sawyer, supra, is to like effect. The municipal authorities, as trustees of the public, are in possession of the public streets, and hold them for the uses of the public as effectually as they do or may the public buildings of the municipality. A writ of restitution which should put the plaintiff in possession of the street, except as one of the public, would constitute him guilty as a trespasser, or of a nuisance, or of erecting a purpresture, as the facts might determine. It has been said that a writ which authorized A. to be placed in possession of real property, subject to the possession of B., is an absurdity. Where A. enters upon a public street and constructs a railroad without authority from the municipal authorities, ejectment will lie, as was held in Weyl v. Sonoma Valley R. Co. and in Finch v. Riverside & A. R. Co. This rule proceeds upon the theory that, as defendant does not justify under one having a right to possession, it matters not, as to him, that another than the plaintiff may have a better right than either of the parties to the action. A reversioner may maintain an action for an injury to his reversionary right, but cannot recover possession until the limited estate lapses. So the holder of the title to a public street, the possession of which is held for the public, may maintain an action for damages to his property therein, but, as against one who has taken no possession thereof, and is only in the exercise of an easement therein which is conferred by the municipal authorities in pursuance of their power, and which is valid as to the public, and which will expire with the easement of the public, of which it is a part, should not be permitted to maintain ejectment for a violation of his property rights, if any, but should be remitted to an injunction to restrain, or, if the injury is consummated, to an action for damages, or to proceedings to abate as a nuisance, as the case may be.

It follows that the court below erred in sustaining the demurrer to the answer of the defendant.

The judgment is reversed, and the court below directed to overrule the demurrer to defendant's second defense, set out in his answer.

Neither Beatty, Ch. J., nor De Haven, J., participated in the foregoing decision.

MAINE SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

Mathew O'DONNELL, Admr., etc., of Thomas Welch, Deceased,

MAINE CENTRAL R. CO.

(.....Me.....)

1. Employees of a contractor engaged in taking earth away from cars for a consignee, who, to facilitate the work, dump the earth from the car on request of the railroad crew, are not volunteers so as to preclude recovery from the railroad company for injury by the tipping over of a car due to defects therein and to improper loading.

2. One assisting the servants of another to facilitate his own business or that of his employer is not their fellow servant.

NOTE.—Upon the question of the master's liability for injuries to one assisting his servant, see note 25 L. R. A.

See also 28 L. R. A. 573.

to Evarts v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. (Minn.) 28 L. R. A. 663.

2. Eight thousand dollars is an excessive allowance for injuries resulting in the death six or seven months later of an unskilled laborer twenty-three years old, who, without any family to support, had saved nothing from his earnings, especially when $5,000 is the statutory limit of recovery for death resulting from injuries immediately.

(Peters, Ch. J., Libbey and Haskell, JJ., dissent.)

(August 17, 1894.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the Supreme Judicial Court for Cumberland County, made during the trial, and motion for new trial after verdict in favor of plaintiff, in an action to recover damages for personal injuries resulting in death, and alleged to have been caused by negligence for which defendant was responsible. Exceptions and motions overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. William L. Putnam and Drummond & Drummond, for defendant:

In Sherman v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 72 Mo. 62, a boy got upon a freight train under such circumstances that the court held him to be a passenger, the brakeman requested the boy to perform a certain service on the train, which was a dangerous one, especially to a person not accustomed to railroad service; the court held that, as the brakeman had no authority whatever from the defendant, it owed no duty whatever to him while he was performing the service and that he could not recover.

To the same effect is Eberhart v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. 78 Ind. 292, 41 Am. Rep. 567.

The request of one not authorized to make the request imposes no duty upon the railroad company towards the one acting upon the request.

Conversely, a man who, without pay, assists as a brakeman in making up a train, by the direction or with the express permission of a yard master, who has authority to employ necessary assistants in his department, is not a trespasser on the train, but a servant of the company, to whom it will be liable for an injury resulting from the use of a defective brake.

Central Trust Co. of New York v. Texas & St. L. R. Co. 32 Fed. Rep. 448; Wischam v. Richards, 10 L. R. A. 97, 136 Pa. 109.

The court says: A servant cannot make a request, or give a permission, that shall affect the master's rights without his authority or permission.

McKinney, Fellow Servants, p. 49.

Messrs. Harry R. Virgin and A. A. Strout, for plaintiff:

Defendant was obliged to see that whatever appliances they used or provided for their servants to use in their business should be constructed in a reasonably safe manner, and should be kept in a reasonably safe state of repair.

Shanny v. Androscoggin Mills, 66 Me. 424; Buzzell v. Laconia Mfg. Co. 48 Me. 113, 77 Am. Dec. 212; Beach, Contrib. Neg. §§ 124, 125, and cases there cited.

If a car becomes defective, so that it creates more danger to those required to move or handle it, or in other words, if it is rendered less safe, then it is negligence on the part of the railroad to continue to use that car without first repairing it.

Sweeney v. Old Colony & N. R. Co. 10 Allen, 363, 87 Am. Dec. 644; Heaven v. Pender, L. R. 11 Q. B. Div. 507; Coombs v. New Bedford Cordage Co. 102 Mass. 595, 3 Am. Rep. 506; Indermaur v. Dames, L. R. 1 C. P. 285; Thomp. Neg. 970, and cases cited; Guthrie v. Maine Cent. R. Co. 81 Me. 582; Shanny v. Androscoggin Mills and Buzzell v. Laconia Mfg. Co. supra; Gilman v. Eastern R. Co. 18 Allen, 433, 90 Am. Dec. 210; Snow v. Housatonic R. Co. 8 Allen, 441, 65 Am. Dec. 720; Ford v. Fitchburg R. Co. 110 Mass. 240, 14 Am. Rep. 598; Coombs v. New Bedford Cordage Co. 102 Mass. 583, 3 Am. Rep. 506; Cayzer v. Taylor, 10 Gray, 280, 69 Am. Dec. 817; Muirhead v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 19 Mo. App. 634; Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 124; Keegan v. Western R. Corp. 8 N. Y. 175, 59 Am. Dec. 476; Mad River & L. E. R. Co. v. Barber, 5 Ohio St. 541, 67 Am. Dec. 812; Clarke v. Holmes, 7 Hurlst. & N. 937; Fuller v. Jewett, 80 N. Y. 46, 36 Am. Rep. 575.

The corporation must act by its agents or servants, and Dolan being the servant who had full charge of the train, including the loading and supervision as to setting aside defective cars, Dolan's knowledge of the defect was in law the knowledge of the defendant, as to fellow servants, and a fortiori as to the plaintiff, who was not a fellow servant.

Laning v. New York Cent. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 521, 10 Am. Rep. 417; Wilton v. Middlesex R. Co. 107 Mass. 110, 9 Am. Rep. 11; Snow v. Housatonic R. Co. 8 Allen, 447, 65 Am. Dec. 720.

The law defines a volunteer, in general, to be one who voluntarily assists the servant of another.

2 Thomp. Neg. p. 1045; Beach, Cont. Neg. § 120; Whart. Neg. § 201.

The injured person was not a volunteer, but engaged at the request or with the permission of the railway's agents in a transaction of interest as well to himself or his master as to the railroad company, and this entitles him to the same protection against the negligence of the company's servants as if he were at the time attending to his own private affairs.

Eason v. S. & E. T. R. Co. 65 Tex. 577, 57 Am. Rep. 606, citing and approving the principles of law laid down in Holmes v. Northeastern R. Co. L. R. 4 Exch. 254, L. R. 6 Exch. 123; Wright v. London & N. W. R. Co. L. R. 10 Q. B. 298; McIntire Street R. Co. v. Bolton, 84 Ohio St. 224, 54 Am. Rep. 808; Indermaur v. Dames, L. R. 1 C. P. 74, L. R. 2 C. P. 312.

Was the plaintiff in the exercise of reasonable prudence at the time of the accident?

This question was peculiarly a matter of fact for the determination of the jury.

Nugent v. Boston C. & M. Railroad, 80 Me. 62; Plummer v. Eastern R. Co. 73 Me. 591; Leson v. Maine Cent. R. Co. 77 Me. 85; Hobbs v. Eastern R. Co. 66 Me. 575; O'Brien v. McElinchy, 68 Me. 555, and many others; also, Thomas v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 100 Mass. 156; Chaffee v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 104 Mass.

108; Gaynor v. Old Colony & N. R. Co. 100 Mass. 208, 97 Am. Dec. 96; Lund v. Tyngsboro, 11 Cush. 563; Mahoney v. Metropolitan R. Co. 104 Mass. 75; Clarke v. Holmes, 7 Hurlst. & N. 987; Laning v. New York Cent. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 521, 10 Am. Rep. 417.

Is a verdict of $8,000 excessive as a compensation for the suffering of mind and body, caused by a leg broken so that the bones protruded through the flesh, which never healed, but which grew worse, so that the bruised places on his leg sloughed off and made sores; and by a broken back and bruised places thereon that sloughed off and made sores of enormous size, finally exposing the back bone and the cartilages binding it together, and that became so offensive from the odor arising therefrom that it was well nigh impossible to stay in the room long enough to dress his wounds, the dressing of his back being so painful that it seemed to the nurse that the man would be dead when he turned him back; for such suffering, is $8,000 too much?

"The law presumes a verdict to be correct."

Hilliard, New Trials, 16.

And until it is proved to be incorrect, the verdict will not be set aside.

Hobbs v. Eastern R. Co. 66 Me. 579; Thompson v. Mussey, 3 Me. 805, and cases cited; Bruce v. Rawlins, 3 Wils. 61; Hanson v. European & N. A. R. Co. 62 Me. 90, 16 Am. Rep. 404; Coleman v. Southwick, 9 Johns. 50, 6 Am. Dec. 358, citing many cases.

In Secord v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co., 18 Fed. Rep. 221, a verdict for $7,000 for broken collar bone and arm (the fractured bones having united) was sustained.

For contusion of scalp and chest, verdicts for $5,000.—Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Boshm, 57 Tex. 152; $10,000.—Porter v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 71 Mo. 66, 86 Am. Rep. 454; $15,000.—Collins v. Council Bluffs, 33 Iowa, 824, 7 Am. Rep. 200.

Walton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It appears that the Maine Central Railroad Company, while engaged in transporting earth for its own use, undertook to deliver some earth for the use of Mr. H. N. Jose; and the evidence tends to show that the crew in charge of the gravel train requested the men employed by Mr. Jose to assist in dumping the earth out of the cars, and that, while so engaged, a broken car, unevenly loaded, tipped over, and fell upon one of Mr. Jose's men (Thomas Welch), and inflicted injuries of which he afterwards died. For these injuries, the administrator of Welch has recovered a verdict against the railroad company for $8,000 damages. The case is before the law court on exceptions and motion for a new trial. We will first examine the exceptions.

1. It is insisted in defense that it was the duty of the servants of the railroad company to dump Jose's earth out of the cars; and that they had no authority to employ Jose's men to assist them; and that Jose's men were trespassers in attempting to do so; and that, being trespassers, the railroad company owed them no duty, and was under no obligation to protect them against the carelessness of its servants.

It is undoubtedly true that, if one who has no interest in the work to be performed, a mere bystander, voluntarily assists the servants of another, either with or without the latter's request, he must do so at his own risk; and the jury were so instructed in this case. But it is equally well settled that one who has an interest in the work to be performed, and for his own convenience, or to facilitate or expedite his own work, assists the servants of another, at their request or with their consent, is not thereby deprived of his right to be protected against the carelessness of the other's servants. In the former class of cases, the master will not be responsible; in the latter, he will be. This distinction is sustained by every text-book to which our attention has been called, and is well sustained by adjudged cases.

Thus, in Degg v. Midland R. Co., 1 Hurlst. & N. 778, where a mere bystander, without any request from the servants of the railway company, volunteered to assist them in working a turntable, and was carelessly injured by the servants of the company, the court held that he had no remedy against the company; and this case is approvingly cited in Osborne v. Knox & L. Railroad, 68 Me. 49, 28 Am. Rep. 16.

But in Wright v. London & N. W. R. Co., L. R. 10 Q. B. 298, where the consignee of a heifer assisted in moving the car in which she had been brought, in order to hasten her delivery, and was carelessly run against and hurt, the court held that he had a remedy against the company; that the rule established in the Degg case did not apply. To the same effect is Holmes v. North-Eastern R. Co., L. R. 4 Exch. 254. L. R. 6 Exch. 123.

So, in this country, in McIntire Street R. Co. v. Bolton, 48 Ohio St. 224, 54 Am. Rep. 808, where a passenger on a street-railway car assisted in backing the car onto the track at a turnout, and was carelessly run against and hurt, the court held that the railway company was responsible, because the assistance rendered tended to expedite the passenger's journey, and prevented his being regarded as a mere volunteer.

So, in Eason v. S. & E. T. R. Co., 65 Tex. 577, 57 Am. Rep. 606, where, to facilitate the loading of lumber, it became necessary to move a car, and the shipper's servant, at the request of the conductor of the freight train, undertook to make the coupling, and was injured by the carelessness of the company's servants, the court held that the railway company was responsible, that the servant was not a mere volunteer, because the assistance which he undertook to render was to facilitate his own work, and thus promote the interests of his employer. The rule of exemption and its limitations are very clearly stated in this case.

The distinction running through all the cases is this: that, where a mere volunteer—that is, one who has no interest in the work—undertakes to assist the servants of another, he does so at his own risk. In such a case the maxim of respondet superior does not apply. But where one has an interest in the work, either as consignee or the servant of a consignee or in any other capacity, and, at the request or with the consent of another's servants, undertakes to assist them, he does not do so at his own risk, and, if injured by their carelessness, their master is responsible. In such a case the maxim of respondere superior does apply. The hinge on which the cases turn is the presence or absence of self-interest. In the one case, the person injured is a mere intruder or officious intermeddler; in the other, he is a person in the regular pursuit of his own business, and entitled to the same protection as any one whose business relations with the master exposes him to injury from the carelessness of the master's servants.

This distinction is sustained by the cases cited, and by every modern text-book to which our attention has been called; and we are not aware of a single authority which holds the contrary. The recent case of Wissham v. Rickards, 186 Pa. 109, 10 L. R. A. 97, cited by defendant's counsel, is not opposed to it. It sustains it. In that case the plaintiff was hurt while assisting the defendant's servants in unloading a heavy fly wheel from a wagon. The court found, as a matter of fact, that the plaintiff was a mere volunteer, having no interest in the work which he undertook to assist the defendant's servants in performing, and, consequently, that he had no remedy against their master. The court says that the plaintiff had no interest in the delivery of the wheel; that the delivery was not completed, but was going on when the accident occurred, and the delivery was the act of the defendant; that the participation of the plaintiff was not that of an owner receiving his own goods, but was that of a servant assisting the servants of the defendant; and that this circumstance brought the plaintiff's case within the rule of non-liability. "The distinction," said the court, "is refined, but it seems to be substantial, and we feel constrained to recognize it and enforce it." The fact that the plaintiff was a mere volunteer, having no interest in the work which he undertook to assist the defendant's servants in performing, was the hinge on which the case turned, and defeated his right to recover. If the plaintiff had been sent to obtain the wheel, and, at their request or with their consent, had assisted the defendant's servants in unloading it, in order to hasten or facilitate his own work, and had been injured by their negligence, his right to recover would undoubtedly have been sustained. As already stated, the hinge on which the cases turn is the presence or absence of self-interest, or a self-serving purpose. In the one case, he is a mere volunteer; in the other, he is a person in the regular pursuit of his own business,—a distinction very obvious and substantial.

Mr. Beach, in his work on Contributory Negligence (sec. 120), says that where one assists the servants of another, at their request, for the purpose of expediting his own business or that of his master, and he is injured by the servants' negligence, the master is liable; that in such a case the relation of fellow servant does not exist, and in case of injury the rule of "respondere superior" applies.

Mr. Thompson, in his work on Negligence (vol. 2, p. 1045), says that care must be taken to distinguish the case of a mere volunteer from that of one assisting the servants of another, at their request, for the purpose of expediting his own business or that of his master; for in such a case he will not stand in the relation of fellow servant to them, and, if he is injured by their negligence, the doctrine of "respondere superior" will apply, and their master will be responsible.

But in the present case it is urged by the learned counsel for the railroad company that the crew in charge of a gravel train have no authority to make such a request or give such consent as will authorize the servants of the consignee to remove, or assist in the removal of, earth from the cars.

We do not think that such a want of authority exists. It seems to us that the persons having the charge of freight are the very ones to give such consent or to make such a request; and it has been so held, both in England and in this country.

In Wright's Case, L. R. 10 Q. B. 298, it was so held. In that case Mr. Justice Field said that the agent to deliver freight is the proper person to give consent for the consignee to assist in its delivery. That was the helper case already referred to.

And in Lewis v. Western R. Corp., 11 Met. 509, it was so held. In that case a truckman was permitted by one McCoy to assist in the removal of a block of marble from a car. The truckman was allowed to take the car to the depot of another railroad company, and there, by the use of the latter's derrick, to make the attempt to lift the block of marble from the car, and place it directly on his truck. But the attempt failed. The derrick gave way, and the block of marble fell, and was broken. This brought into litigation, directly and sharply, the authority of these two servants—one a servant of the railroad company, and the other a servant of the consignee—thus to change the place and manner of delivering freight. And precisely the same argument was urged against the authority in that case as is urged against the authority in this case. It was said that McCoy was in no sense a general agent of the railroad company; that his only authority was to receive and deliver freight; that, his authority being thus special and limited, his consent to change the place and manner of delivering the freight was not binding upon the company. But the court held otherwise. The court held that the place and manner of delivering freight may always be changed by the servants of the carrier and the servants of the consignee; that their authority to make such changes is included in their authority to receive and deliver freight; that if the consignee of a bale of goods steps into a car, and asks for a delivery there, and it is passed over to him, the delivery is complete. The rule established by the authorities seems to be this; that the persons having authority to deliver freight and the persons having authority to receive it may always agree upon the place and manner of its delivery.

In the present case, the evidence tended to show that the railroad company, while engaged in grading a portion of its track in or near Portland, undertook to leave some earth at a point on the line of its road for Mr. Jose. Mr. Jose employed a contractor, by the name of Shannahan, to take the earth away. It appeared in evidence that, at the request of the railroad crew in charge of the gravel train, Shannahan's men had assisted in dumping the earth left for Mr. Jose out of the cars; and on the day of the accident, when Shannahan's men came for more earth, the earth had been left in the cars, and the railroad men had gone on to where they were delivering earth for the use of the railroad. Consequently, Shannahan's men were obliged to dump the earth out of the cars themselves, or wait for an indefinite length of time for the return of the railroad men. It was a cold day in December, and to wait would be neither comfortable for themselves nor profitable for their employer; and so, for their own convenience and to facilitate their own work, Shannahan's men undertook to dump the earth out of the cars themselves. The decedent was one of them. The evidence shows that he was an experienced man at that kind of work. But one of the cars was defective, and had been improperly loaded, and it tipped over, and fell upon him, and inflicted the injuries of which, at the end of about seven months, he died.

The presiding justice instructed the jury that one who voluntarily assists the servants of another cannot recover from the master for an injury caused by the negligence or misconduct of such servants; that one cannot by his officious conduct impose upon the master a greater duty than that which he owes to his own hired servants; that care must be taken, however, to distinguish a mere volunteer from one who assists the servants of another, at their request, for the purpose of expediting his own business or that of his master, for in such a case he will not stand in the relation of a fellow servant to them, and, if injured by their negligence, their master will be responsible; that if the plaintiff (Thomas Welch) consented to assist in dumping the cars, at the request of the railroad crew in charge of the train, to expedite or facilitate the work which he was engaged in performing for Mr. Jose, he could not be regarded as such an intermeddler or volunteer as to preclude him from a recovery on that ground, provided the alleged negligence and injury were made out in other respects; nor could he be regarded as a fellow servant with the employees of the railroad so as to preclude him from a recovery on that ground.

These instructions were several times repeated, and not always in precisely the same words; but such were the substance and effect of the instructions.

Counsel for the railroad company profess to be greatly alarmed at the consequences of such a doctrine. What, they ask, will be the limit of such a power? Where will the line be drawn? And they profess to believe that, if such a power is conceded to the persons in charge of a gravel train, then the engineers of freight and passenger trains may turn over their engines to inexperienced persons and the property and lives of the whole community be put in jeopardy. To thus enlarge and magnify the consequences of a ruling may be an ingenious mode of argument, but we do not think it is sound. It does not follow that, because the crew in charge of a gravel train may allow the servants of a consignee to assist in removing earth from the cars, therefore the engineers of freight and passenger trains may turn over their engines to inexperienced hands. We give no countenance to such a doctrine. Our decision goes no further than to hold that the persons having the charge of freight may allow the servants of the consignee to remove it from the cars, and that the latter, while so engaged, have a right to be protected against the negligence of the former; in other words, that in such cases the rule of "respondent superior" applies. Such a doctrine seems to be well sustained by authority, and we believe it to be sound.

2. We will now consider the motion. It is the opinion of the court that the jury were properly instructed, and that the evidence was sufficient to justify a verdict for the plaintiff; but we think that the damages assessed by the jury ($8,000) were clearly excessive. When one is negligently injured, and he dies immediately, the largest amount recoverable is $5,000. The amount may be less, but never more. If the person injured survives for a considerable length of time, this limitation does not apply, or, rather, did not when this action was tried. What the rule may be under the recent statute (Act 1891, chap. 124) will not now be considered. But we think this statutory limitation, whether applicable to the particular case under consideration or not, is entitled to consideration in determining whether or not a verdict is excessive. The damages recoverable for negligently causing the death of a person must in every case depend largely upon what would probably have been the earnings of the deceased if he had not been killed. Other elements enter into the calculation, but the earning capacity of the deceased is always an important factor. The death of one capable of earning a large income is necessarily a greater loss to his estate than the death of one capable of earning only a small income. The earning capacity of the deceased in this case must have been small. He was not a skilled workman. His only employment had been working in sewers and shoveling gravel. This appears from his own deposition, taken before his death. And notwithstanding he was an unmarried man, and had no one dependent upon him for support, and twenty-three years of age, he had not saved a dollar of his earnings. We feel justified, therefore, in assuming that his earning capacity was small. Possibly, if he had lived, he might, later in life, have developed a capacity for more lucrative employments. Probably not. And, in estimating the loss to his estate caused by his death we must be governed by probabilities, not possibilities. Probably if the deceased had not been injured, and had lived to the common age of men, he would have left but little, if anything, to his surviving relatives. It seems to us that in such a case the damages recoverable for the benefit of surviving relatives ought to be comparatively moderate: that if, under our law, no more than $5,000 is recoverable for the negligent killing of a skilled workman, capable of earning a large income, when his death is immediate, a verdict of $8,000 for the death of an unskilled workman, capable of earning only a small income, must be regarded as clearly excessive, though, as in this case, he survives his injuries some six or seven months. Influenced by these considerations, we think a new trial must be granted, unless the administrator remits all over $5,000. If such a remittitur is entered upon the clerk's docket, the entry will be, motion and exceptions overruled.

Peters, Ch. J., Libbey and Haskell, JJ., dissent.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

John E. WALLACE, Admr., etc., of Mary Bodalla, Deceased, Respt.,
v.

CITY & SUBURBAN R. CO., Appt.

(.....Or.....)

1. On a motion for a nonsuit every intentment and every fair and legitimate inference

NOTE.—Duty imposed on street railroad companies to avoid injuring children on the track.

I. Care required of employes.

a. Lookout.

b. Speed.

II. Negligence defined.

a. Lookout.

b. Speed.

III. Negligence a question for jury.

a. Lookout.

b. Speed.

L. Care required of employes.

a. Lookout.

A general rule in regard to the duty of a street railroad company in the operation of its road is, that it is required to exercise ordinary and reasonable care as to lookout ahead, speed of cars, and appliances for controlling same, so as to prevent injuring children on the track or attempting to cross the same. (Age seven years) Stanley v. Union Depot R. Co. 114 Mo. 606; (age two years) Roller v. Sutter Street R. Co. 66 Cal. 230; (age five years) Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, 30 Md. 47.

There are some cases in considering the question of care imposed, which require greater vigilance on the part of the driver to anticipate injuring small children likely to be on the track. Affirming the doctrine announced in WALLACE v. CITY & SUBURBAN R. Co. (Age four years) Collins v. South Boston R. Co. 143 Mass. 301, 56 Am. Rep. 676; (tender age) Scherhold v. North Beach & M. R. Co. 40 Cal. 447; (age eight years) Mitchell v. Tacoma R. & Motor Co. (Wash.) June 11, 1894.

So the degree of care required of street-car drivers by law is enhanced by a city ordinance requiring a driver and conductor of a street-car to keep a vigilant watch especially for children. (Age seven years) Fath v. Tower Grove & L. R. Co. 13 L. R. A. 74, 105 Mo. 537.

An instruction that the highest degree of care is required to prevent injury to a helpless child on the track, by a car moving slowly up hill, is error without prejudice, where the driver did not see the child until after accident, although by-standers shouted to him. (Helpless) Giraldo v. Coney Island & B. R. Co. 42 N. Y. S. R. 915.

As to the degree of watchfulness required on the part of the driver some cases require that the driver should be vigilant. Mitchell v. Tacoma R. 35 L. R. A.

which can arise from the evidence must be made in favor of the plaintiff, and the court must assume those facts as true which the jury could properly find under the evidence.

2. The law demands greater vigilance and care in running an electric street-car over a public street crossing which is much frequented by children going to and returning from school at a time when they may reasonably

& Motor Co. and Fath v. Tower G. & L. R. Co. supra; (age four years) Mangam v. Brooklyn R. Co. 38 N. Y. 455, 98 Am. Dec. 66.

Others that he should be watchful. Humbird v. Union Street R. Co. 110 Mo. 78.

That he should be alert. (Age seven years) Block v. Harlem Bridge, M. & F. R. Co. 23 N. Y. S. R. 495.

That he should exercise constant watchfulness. (Age two years) Baltimore City Pass. R. Co. v. McDonnell, 48 Md. 584; (age six years) Schnur v. Citizens Traction Co. 158 Pa. 50.

That he should exercise a reasonable outlook. (Age two years) Onaszewski v. Benton-Bellefontaine R. Co. (Mo.) March 24, 1894; (age three years) Winter v. Kansas City Cable R. Co. 6 L. R. A. 556, 99 Mo. 509.

But in Falotto v. Broadway & S. A. R. Co. 9 Daly, 243, it was held that it was error to charge that a street-car driver is bound to exercise the greatest care in the management of the car, and that he must be vigilant in observing the track and in a position to speedily apply the brake, and that no more care was required than of drivers of other vehicles.

As to "Lookout" see also other subheads.

In Sheets v. Connolly Street R. Co., 54 N. J. L. 518, it was held that in an action for injury to a child ten years old from a street-car, the jury have no right to consider the duty of a driver to collect fares as bearing on the question of negligence when there were no passengers from whom to collect fares.

In Etherington v. Prospect Park & C. L. R. Co., 88 N. Y. 641, it was held that the failure to specifically except to the use of the word "extraordinary" vigilance that ought to be used by car drivers, will be a waiver of error.

Where a child suddenly runs in front of a car it is generally held that the driver is required to use ordinary care to prevent injury. Mt. Adams & E. P. R. Co. v. Cavagna, 6 Ohio C. Ct. Rep. 606; (age seventeen months) Chicago West. Div. R. Co. v. Ryan, 181 Ill. 474; (age six years) Welsh v. Jackson County Horse R. Co. 61 Me. 466.

In such a case in Collins v. South Boston R. Co. 142 Mass. 301, 56 Am. Rep. 675; and in Humbird v. Union Street R. Co., 110 Mo. 78 (age eight years), it was held that he should handle his car in anticipation of accident liable to children. But see further, Paducah Street R. Co. v. Adkins, infra.

be expected to be using the crossing than is demanded at other places.

3. It is for the jury to judge whether the failure of a school child to look or listen before attempting to cross a street-car track shows a want of that degree of care which could reasonably have been expected of such a child.

4. The presumption that a person seen on a street-car track will leave it before a street-car reaches him cannot be indulged in, when a child of tender years is seen on the track.

(July 30, 1894.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Multnomah County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries resulting

b. Speed.

As to the speed required, some cases hold that the team or car should always be under control. Schlerhold v. North Beach & M. R. Co. 40 Cal. 447; Humbird v. Union Street R. Co. supra; (age five years) Pendrill v. Second Ave. R. Co. 2 Jones & S. 431.

See further, as to speed, other subheads.

II. Negligence defined.

a. Lookout.

The failure on the part of the driver or motorman of a street-car to exercise a reasonable degree of care in keeping a vigilant outlook on the track ahead, whereby he might have discovered an infant on the track, or attempting to cross the track, and avoided injuring him, will be held to be negligence. (Age sixteen months) Chicago West. Div. R. Co. v. Ryan, 31 Ill. App. 621; (age nine years) Thurber v. Harlem Bridge, M. & F. R. Co. 60 N. Y. 326; (age six years) Strutzel v. St. Paul City R. Co. 47 Minn. 543; (age three years, eight months) Bahrenburgh v. Brooklyn City, H. P. & F. P. R. Co. 56 N. Y. 653; (age two years) Citizens Pass. R. Co. v. Costigan (Pa.) 5 Cent. Rep. 525; (age eleven years) Lynch v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 112 Mo. 420.

And same was held where driver or motorman was careless and looking in another direction. (Age two years) Com. v. Metropolitan R. Co. 107 Mass. 286; (age six years) Mason v. Atlantic Ave. R. Co. 4 Misc. 291, affirmed, 140 N. Y. 637; (age eight years) Dowd v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. 9 Misc. 279; Stone v. Dry Dock, E. R. & B. R. Co. 115 N. Y. 104, reversing 46 Hun, 184.

The same was held where an ordinance required a vigilant lookout. (Age six years) Senn v. Southern R. Co. 103 Mo. 142; (age eleven years) Hays v. Gainesville Street R. Co. 70 Tex. 602.

But some cases hold that there is no negligence on the part of the employees of a street railroad company where there is a reasonable outlook ahead, and an ordinary rate of speed, and a child appears suddenly in front of the car or runs on the track. This question has been determined in passing upon instructions, or motions for a nonsuit, or motions for a new trial where the evidence did not justify the verdict. (Age five years) Pandueah Street R. Co. v. Adkins, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 425; (age three and a half years) Schlenk v. Central Pass. R. Co. 15 Ky. L. Rep. 409; (age three years) Gallaher v. Crescent City R. Co. 37 La. Ann. 283; (age nine years) Dunn v. Cam Ave. & F. G. R. Co. 21 Mo. App. 183; (age ten years) Kennedy v. St. Louis R. Co. 43 Mo. App. 1; (age twelve years) Manahan v. Steinway & H. P. R. Co. 35 N. Y. S. R. 513; (age ten years) Fenton v. Second Ave. R. Co. 126 N. Y. 625, reversing 56 Hun, 99; Cords v. Third 35 L. R. A.

in death and alleged to have been caused by negligence for which defendant was responsible. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. R. Mallory for appellant.

Messrs. McGinn, Sears & Simon, for respondent:

Booth on Street Railways, section 310, says: "As we have seen, a greater degree of vigilance and caution must be observed in controlling the movements of the car to prevent injuries to children and persons who are known, or appear, to be infirm than is required for the protection of adults not laboring under such disabilities.

An infant, to avoid the imputation of negligence, is bound only to exercise that degree of care which can reasonably be expected of one of its age.

Ave. R. Co. 24 Jones & S. 319; (age two and a half years) Citizens Street R. Co. of Ft. Wayne v. Carey, 56 Ind. 396; (age five years) Trumbo v. City Street-Car Co. 39 Va. 780; (age five and a half years) Chilton v. Central Traction Co. 152 Pa. 425; (age two years) Bulger v. The Albany Railway, 42 N. Y. 459.

And in Baker v. Eighth Ave. R. Co. 63 Hun, 39, it was held that the fact that a driver of a horse-car turns his head away from the horses or the front of the car, in the middle of a block where there is no crosswalk, and a child coming from behind a passing car is struck by the horses, is not of itself negligence. See also Moore v. Metropolitan R. Co. infra; Mt. Adams & E. P. R. Co. v. Cavagna, supra.

The mere fact of injury to a child does not create a presumption of negligence. (Age eight years) Squire v. Central Park, N. & E. R. Co. 4 Jones & S. 436; (age three years) Mascheck v. St. Louis R. Co. 3 Mo. App. 600; (age four years) Jaquinto v. Broadway & S. A. R. Co. 2 Misc. 174; and in Philadelphia City Pass. R. Co. v. Henrice, 92 Pa. 431, 37 Am. Rep. 609, it was stated that as a matter of law it is not negligence for a driver not to stop the car if he saw a child sixteen months old in such close proximity that it might reach the track before the car passed; the question is one for the jury, and negligence cannot be inferred from the number of hours work per day required of car employees.

And in Boland v. Missouri R. Co., 36 Mo. 484, it was held that there is no negligence on the part of a street-car driver where a two-year-old child was killed where the driver's attention was directed in another direction anticipating danger, driving slowly and cautiously, with his knee on the dashboard and hand on the brake, and having no reason to expect the proximity of the child, and stopping as soon as possible when its danger was discovered.

And in Hearn v. St. Charles Street R. Co., 34 La. Ann. 160, it was held that a driver of a street-car is not negligent where he stops the car and in pursuance of a city ordinance drives away boys attempting to hang on the car, and returning to his post starts the car, and runs over a child twenty-two months old which had walked under the mule's neck and against the foreleg and which could not be discovered by ordinary diligence.

In Texas in 1884 by statute, a street railroad company was only liable for gross negligence in causing injury to a child by the cars. (Age fourteen months) San Antonio Street R. Co. v. Calloutta, 79 Tex. 341; Dallas City R. Co. v. Beeman, 74 Tex. 291.

In Mack v. Lombard & S. Street P. R. W. Co., 18 Wash. L. Rep. 807, it was held that the striking of a boy by a driver of a street-car causing him to jump in front of a passing car, was not the proximate cause of the injury, and the ques-

Byrne v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 83 N. Y. 620.

In a boy of ten years of age the question as to contributory negligence by crossing the track was a question to be submitted to the jury.

Barry v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 92 N. Y. 290; McGovern v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 67 N. Y. 418.

In Stons v. Dry Dock, E. B. & B. R. Co., 115 N. Y. 104, it was held that a nonsuit was improperly granted; that the question of contributory negligence should have been submitted to the jury.

See also Washington & G. R. Co. v. Gladmon, 83 U. S. 15 Wall. 405, 21 L. ed. 114; Mattley v. Whittier Mach. Co. 140 Mass. 387.

In Strutzel v. St. Paul City R. Co., 47 Minn.

543, the court says: "The duty of watchfulness rests upon the driver of a street-car approaching a street crossing where he has reason to suppose that young children may be engaged in coasting or sliding down a neighboring hill, and across the car track, although such conduct on the part of the children is unlawful."

When the situation at the crossing, and the manner of running the train, the number and duties of the employes in charge, the rate of speed, the extent of travel upon the street, and the opportunity for observation, were shown, it was peculiarly for the jury to determine whether the rate of speed was reasonable, and the defendant's management of the train otherwise reasonably prudent.

Bolinger v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 86 Minn. 418.

tion of proximate cause is for the court as to undisputed facts.

As to other cases of lookout, see other subheads.

b. Speed.

Negligence on the part of the driver or motor-man is shown by undue rate of speed and the failure to keep the car well under control, or that the brakes were not in good order, especially at crossings or where a car on an adjoining track is discharging passengers. Quincy Horse R. & C. Co. v. Gnuse, 38 Ill. App. 212, reversed on another point 137 Ill. 264; Hedin v. City & Suburban R. Co. (Or.) July 30, 1894; (age eight years) Silberstein v. Houston, W. Street & P. F. R. Co. 23 N. Y. S. R. 452; (age two years) Farris v. Cass Ave. & F. G. R. Co. 8 Mo. App. 583, 30 Mo. 322; (age five years) Barksdull v. New Orleans & C. R. Co. 23 La. Ann. 180; Reed v. Minneapolis Street R. Co. 34 Minn. 537; (age six years) Chicago City R. Co. v. Robinson, 37 Ill. App. 25, affirmed, 4 L. R. A. 126, 127 Ill. 9; Warner v. Railroad Co. 6 Phila. 537.

As to speed, see also other subheads.

III. Negligence a question for the jury.

a. Lookout.

The question of negligence is one for the jury if the employes in charge of a street-car fail to use ordinary care to see a small child near the track ahead, or, seeing him, fail to exercise due care to control the car and stop in time to prevent injury. (Age three years) Shennars v. West Side Street R. Co. 73 Wis. 323; (age five years) Mason v. Minneapolis Street R. Co. 64 Minn. 216; (between nine and ten years) Mallard v. Ninth Ave. R. Co. 27 N. Y. S. R. 301; (age five years) Huerseier v. Central Cross Town R. Co. 139 N. Y. 490; (age four years) Dahl v. Milwaukee City R. Co. 62 Wis. 652.

And in Galveston City R. Co. v. Hewitt, 67 Tex. 473, 60 Am. Rep. 33, it was held that the question of negligence is one for a jury if a street-car driver used all the diligence possible to avoid injury after a child nineteen months old was seen, or ought to have been seen, in front of the car. The driver of a street-car should exercise the highest degree of care, and is not to assume that a child of this age will see the danger and avoid it.

And so the question of proper outlook becomes very material, and where it is shown that this was not kept and a child was thereby injured, the question of negligence is one for a jury. (Age four years) Mrie City Pass. R. Co. v. Schuster, 113 Pa. 412, 37 Am. Rep. 471; (age two years eight months) O'Flaherty v. Union R. Co. 45 Mo. 70, 100 Am. Dec. 843; (age seven years) Oldfield v. New York & H. R. Co. 14 N. Y. 510; see 3 R. D. Smith, 103; (age three years two months) Ihl v. Forty-Second Street & G. Street Ferry R. Co. 47 N. Y. 317, 7 Am. Rep. 450; 25 L. R. A.

(age three and one half years) Government Street R. Co. v. Hanlon, 53 Ala. 70; (age seven years) Moore v. Metropolitan R. Co. 2 Mackey, 437.

So, if the employe in charge is careless, inattentive, or looking in wrong direction. (Age three years) Anderson v. Minneapolis Street R. Co. 43 Minn. 490; Weissner v. St. Paul City R. Co. 47 Minn. 408; (age five years) Fallon v. Central Park. N. & H. R. Co. 64 N. Y. 13; (age three and one half years) Ehrman v. Brooklyn City R. Co. 38 N. Y. S. R. 990; (age four years) Citizens' Pass. R. Co. v. Foxley, 107 Pa. 537; (age two years) Well v. Dry Dock, E. B. & B. R. Co. 119 N. Y. 147; (age two and one half years) Hyland v. Yonkers R. Co. 22 N. Y. S. R. 100; (age six years) Keenan v. Brooklyn City R. Co. 3 Misc. 601; (age four years) Levy v. Dry Dock, E. B. & B. R. Co. 35 N. Y. S. R. 769; (age four years) Rosenkrans v. Lindell R. Co. 108 Mo. 2.

And in Johnson v. Reading City Pass. Railway, 160 Pa. 647, it was held that it is a question for the jury whether or not a driver could have seen a child twenty months old on the track in time to avoid injuring. In the discharge of his duty to drive with care and look out, he may for an instant turn his head to the sidewalk to look for passengers.

And in McMahon v. Northern Cent. R. Co., 39 Md. 438, it was held that the question of negligence is one for the jury if a freight train in a city, nearly a square long, standing for four hours, is moved by horses without signal or warning or brakeman in his place, and a boy about six years old is injured in crossing.

As to other cases of lookout, see other subheads.

b. Speed.

The question of negligence is also one for the jury where the injury to a child results from undue speed of the street-car, or failure of brakes to be in proper order. O'Flaherty v. Union R. Co. 45 Mo. 70, 100 Am. Dec. 843; Oldfield v. New York & H. R. Co. 14 N. Y. 510; see R. D. Smith, 103; Government Street R. Co. v. Hanlon, 53 Ala. 70; Fallon v. Central Park. N. & H. R. Co. 64 N. Y. 13; Ehrman v. Brooklyn City R. Co. 38 N. Y. S. R. 990; Citizens' Pass. R. Co. v. Foxley, 107 Pa. 537; Well v. Dry Dock, E. B. & B. R. Co. 119 N. Y. 147; (age six years) Jetter v. New York & Harlem R. Co. 2 Keyes, 154.

As to other cases of speed, see other subheads.

The cases of injuries received in jumping on or off street-cars, and cases where children on the track were injured but the decision turned solely on contributory or imputed negligence are not included in this note.

Inasmuch as the degree of care required depends largely on the age or helplessness of the child, the age has been given as the cases were cited. I. T.

Bean, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate, caused by the alleged negligence of the defendant corporation in the management and operation of one of its electric street-cars on Savier street, in the city of Portland. The negligence charged in the complaint is that a car, while being run and operated recklessly, negligently, and carelessly, and without the exercise of any care and attention, and at an excessive and dangerous rate of speed, ran over and killed the plaintiff's intestate, a child about six years of age, while she was lawfully crossing the track at a public street crossing.

At the close of plaintiff's testimony the defendant submitted a motion for a nonsuit, which being overruled, the trial resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of plaintiff, from which defendant appeals, and now insists that the court erred in overruling its motion for a nonsuit. The refusal to nonsuit was proper, unless the evidence for the plaintiff taken in its most favorable light, would not authorize the jury to find a verdict in his favor. On a motion for a nonsuit, every intendment and every fair and legitimate inference which can arise from the evidence must be made in favor of the plaintiff, and the court must assume those facts as true which a jury could properly find under the evidence. "Before a court is authorized to grant a nonsuit for insufficiency of evidence," says Lord, Ch. J., "it must appear that, admitting the testimony of plaintiff to be true, and giving him the benefit of every inference that is fairly deducible from it, the plaintiff has still failed to support his action. In fact, it is enough if the evidence offered tends to show facts sufficient to sustain the action, though remotely." Herbert v. Dufur, 28 Or. 462. The only question we have to determine, then, is whether there was any evidence offered by plaintiff, from which the jury could lawfully find that the death of plaintiff's intestate was caused by the negligence of the defendant in operating its cars at an excessive and dangerous rate of speed.

The main facts may be briefly stated as follows: The defendant's cars run east and west on Savier street, and at or near the intersection of that street with Nineteenth street there is a parish school, which at the time of the accident was attended by the deceased and a number of other children, who were accustomed, as was known to the persons in charge of the car, to use the crossing at which plaintiff's intestate was killed, in going to and from school. A few moments after the school had adjourned for lunch, and while the children were on the street,—some engaged in playing near the track, and others on their way home,—the defendant's car came down Savier street, running, as the evidence for plaintiff tended to show, at the rate of ten miles an hour, and, without slowing down, attempted to pass the crossing; and in doing so the plaintiff's intestate was knocked down by the car, and killed. The particular incidents attending the accident are not fully disclosed, the only eyewitnesses being two boys, aged nine and thirteen years, respectively. The elder boy first stated that he was playing marbles in the street, about ten feet from the track, and saw the car strike the deceased, and two wheels pass over her body, and afterwards testified that she was standing on the crossing, about three feet from the track, while the car was coming down from Twentieth street, and he did not see the car strike her, but saw her fall on the track. The other boy, who is brother of the deceased, says that he and his sister were on their way home from school, and that he had hold of her hand, and while they were crossing the track his sister was struck by the car, and that neither of them saw it, nor did they look to see if a car was coming, and knew nothing of its approach until it struck the girl, when he jumped back.

The contention for the defendant is that this evidence does not in any way tend to show that the excessive or dangerous speed of the car was the proximate cause of the injury, or that it would not have occurred if the car had been running at a rate of speed perfectly safe and legal. If we assume, as does the argument for the defendant, that the child, without the fault or negligence of the defendant, suddenly and unexpectedly appeared on the track immediately in front of the car, we might conclude that her death was an unavoidable accident, and that the rate of speed would be immaterial, for upon such an appearance on the track no precaution could have prevented the accident. But because these facts are not fixed and certain the case had to go to the jury, and the rate of speed properly became an element in the case. The evidence does not show how far in advance of the car the child attempted to cross the track, but it does tend to show that she was on or within three feet of the track, within plain view of the persons in charge of the car, while it was moving from Twentieth street down to the place of the accident, and, notwithstanding such fact, no attempt was made to avoid a collision. It is a well-settled principle that a wrongdoer is responsible for such consequences as might reasonably have been anticipated as likely to occur as the natural and probable result of his misconduct, and it is ordinarily the province of the jury to ascertain whether the injury in a particular case was such natural and proximate result of the wrong complained of. Hartwig v. N. P. Lumber Co. 19 Or. 522; Ransier v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 83 Minn. 831. Now, in this case, the accident occurred at a public street crossing, much frequented by children going to and returning from school, at a time when the children might reasonably be expected to be using the crossing, and therefore the law demanded the greater vigilance and care on the part of those in charge of the car. They saw, or could, by the exercise of reasonable care, have seen, the children on or near the track a sufficient length of time before reaching the crossing to have slowed down and had the car under control, but, in place of doing so, were running at a dangerous rate of speed, as we must assume. In view of the rule that what is ordinary care and what negligence are inquiries to be answered, in most cases, by the jury, we think it cannot be declared, as a matter of law, that it is not negligence in those in charge of an electric street-car, who see, or can, by the exercise of ordinary care, see, a company of small children on or near the track at a public street crossing, and who they have reason to suppose are crossing the street, to attempt to pass them at the rate of eight or ten miles an hour. It was therefore clearly the province of the jury to ascertain the position of the child while the car was coming down the street, and whether a slower rate of speed would not have enabled the persons in charge of the car to have observed the child on the track in time to avert the accident. There was, then, sufficient evidence for the consideration of the jury, tending to show that the excessive speed of the car was negligence, and the proximate cause of the injury, unless the deceased was guilty of such contributory negligence as would prevent a recovery by her administrator. As a general rule, it is undoubtedly the duty of a pedestrian to look and listen before attempting to cross a street-car track, and a failure to do so will bar a recovery; but this rule is not to be applied inflexibly in all cases, without regard to age or circumstances. If we assume that it can be asserted, as a proposition of law, that a child of the age of the deceased is sui juris, so as to be chargeable with negligence, the law is not so unreasonable or unjust as to require of it the same degree of reason and consideration in avoiding the consequences of the negligence of others that is required of persons of full age and capacity; and it should be left to the jury to determine whether the child, in attempting to pass in front of the car, acted with that degree of care and prudence which might reasonably be expected, under the circumstances, of a child of her age and capacity. She was lawfully in the street, and was as much entitled to use the crossing as the defendant corporation. In attempting to do so, she was run over and killed by the car of defendant, running at an excessive and dangerous rate of speed. The negligence of the defendant must therefore be assumed, and it was for the jury to judge whether the child's conduct, in attempting to cross the track in front of the approaching car without looking or listening, was characterized by any want of that degree of care which could reasonably have been expected of a child of her age. Ussida v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 14 Or. 551; Washington & G. R. Co. v. Gladmon, 83 U. S. 15 Wall. 401, 21 L. ed. 114;

Stons v. Dry Dock, E. B. & B. R. Co. 115 N. Y. 104; Byrne v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 88 N. Y. 630; Matley v. Whittier Mach. Co. 140 Mass. 837; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Long, 75 Pa. 257; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Kelly, 81 Pa. 872; Barry v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 92 N. Y. 289, 44 Am. Rep. 877.

Viewing, then, the case from the standpoint of plaintiff's testimony alone the motion for a nonsuit was properly overruled. Nor do we find any error in the instructions complained of. The statement that the case should receive the same consideration as if the child were living, and had brought an action herself for injuries, is in the opening paragraph of the charge, and, in view of what follows, could not have been intended or understood by the jury as asserting that the same rule for the measure of damages should be applied as if the child had lived, and brought an action for her own injuries. By paragraph 6 the court simply asserts the doctrine that, although the child may have been guilty of negligence in going on the track, yet, if the servants of defendant in charge of the car saw the dangerous position in which she had placed herself, it was their duty to have exercised all the diligence then possible to avoid injuring her. The terms "more than ordinary diligence," and "extraordinary diligence," as used by the court, were intended to define what would constitute ordinary care under the exigencies of the situation. The term "ordinary care" is a relative term, always dependent on circumstances. What would be ordinary care in one case would be the grossest neglect in another. Thus, if an adult should be seen on a street-car track, it might be assumed that he would leave the track before the car reached him, but no such presumption can be indulged in as to the conduct of an infant of tender years; and hence, when the court said that, if the servants of defendant saw this child on the track, they were required to use more than ordinary diligence to prevent injury, it was only in effect saying that the age of the child required the highest degree of care on the part of the servants of the defendant, and nothing short of that would be ordinary care, under the circumstances.

We think, therefore, the judgment must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

Henry J. NEGUS, Resp't.,

v.
Louis W. BECKER et al., Appts.

(128 N. Y. 303.)

1. Carrying up a party wall for a three-story building, as contemplated by the contract under which it was built, although the other party has erected a building only two stories high, does not make the owner of the new building an insurer against injuries which may result to his neighbor's property, or render him liable for a falling of the wall without any negligence on his part.

2. The work of raising a party wall is neither dangerous nor extraordinary in itself so as to make the person for whom it is done liable for negligence of an independent contractor in doing the work.

(October 2, 1894.)

NOTE.—As to the right of one co-owner to carry up a party wall, see note to Harber v. Evans (Mo.) 10 L. R. A. 41.

As to the exceptions to the rule that an employer 25 L. R. A.

is not liable for the acts of an independent contractor, see note to Hawver v. Whalen (Ohio) 14 L. R. A. 323.

See also 33 L. R. A. 294, 564; 36 L. R. A. 332; 37 L. R. A. 146; 40 L. R. A. 345; 44 L. R. A. 482.

APPPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, Fifth Department, affirming a judgment of the Cattaraugus County Circuit in favor of plaintiff, in an action brought to recover damages for injuries caused by the fall of a party wall to which defendants were attempting to make an addition. Reversed.

Statement by Gray, J.:

This action was brought by the plaintiff to recover damages of the defendants for the injury occasioned to him by the falling of a brick wall, which was being erected, or carried up, upon a party wall between their premises. The plaintiff and one Krieger, being owners of adjoining lots of land, made a contract by which the former agreed to erect upon their boundary line a brick party wall with stone foundation, "of suitable size and dimensions to support a three-story brick building." When completed, Krieger was to pay to plaintiff one half of the cost of the wall, and thereafter the said wall was to be owned jointly by the parties as a party wall. The plaintiff erected a two-story building, and built the party wall of corresponding height. Krieger made payment as required by the contract. Afterwards, Krieger conveyed his lot and his interest in the wall to these defendants, who made a written contract with one Robinson to erect a brick building upon their lot of three stories in height. Under this contract, Robinson was to make use of the party wall, and, to meet the requirements of the new building, was to lengthen it so as to cover a portion of the rear end of the boundary line which plaintiff had failed to build upon, and was also to carry it up to a further height, for the accommodation of the third story. During the process of its construction, that part of the wall which was being carried up fell over upon the roof of plaintiff's building, causing the damage complained of. The complaint alleged that the defendants, in extending the party wall in the rear, and in carrying it up another story, acted "without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiff." It charged no negligence to defendants or to the contractor, and the latter was not made a party to the action. The demand was for a judgment in the amount of the damage sustained by reason of the falling of the wall. Upon the trial there was no dispute about the facts. The defendants were not connected with the work of building, other than through the contract with Robinson, and there was no evidence that the falling of the wall was due to negligence in construction, or that it was not a wall suitably built, and in all respects proper for the purpose. The trial judge denied defendants' motion for a dismissal of the complaint, and granted the plaintiff's motion for the direction of a verdict for the amount of the damages proved. To these rulings defendants excepted, and subsequently appealed to the general term, where the judgment recovered by the plaintiff was affirmed. The defendants then appealed to this court, and the only question argued in their behalf relates to the correctness of the rulings referred to.

Messrs. Henderson & Wentworth, for appellants:
25 L. R. A.

If there was any negligence which resulted in the falling of the wall so built by the contractor in carrying up the party wall, it was the negligence of the contractor Robinson only, and not the negligence of the defendants.

Engel v. Eureka Club, 187 N. Y. 100; Moak's Underhill, Torta, p. 89; King v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 86 N. Y. 181, 23 Am. Rep. 87; Hexamer v. Webb, 101 N. Y. 377, 54 Am. Rep. 708; Blake v. Ferris, 5 N. Y. 48, 55 Am. Dec. 804.

The wall was quite as much the defendant's wall as the plaintiff's. It was built at the joint expense of the adjacent lot owners. It was built for a party wall, and the defendants had the same right to build it higher in the construction of the building on their lot of which this party wall was to be a part, that they would have had if the wall had stood wholly upon their lot.

Brooks v. Curtis, 50 N. Y. 639, 10 Am. Rep. 545.

An injury arising from inevitable accident is but the misfortune of the sufferer, and lays no foundation for legal responsibility.

Harcey v. Dunlop, Hill & D. Supp. 194; Booth v. Rome, W. & O. T. R. Co. 24 L. R. A. 105, 140 N. Y. 267.

Defendants cannot be made liable to the plaintiff for the damages sued for unless it be shown that the defendants were themselves negligent, or unless it be shown that the work of building the party wall higher which Robinson contracted to do was intrinsically dangerous, or that the same could not be safely done by the contractor in the exercise of due care.

Engel v. Eureka Club, supra.

If the falling of the wall complained of was by the act of God,—an inevitable accident—then no foundation exists for legal responsibility to the plaintiff by any one whatever.

Harcey v. Dunlop, Hill & D. Supp. 193; Center v. Finney, 17 Barb. 84; Bullock v. Bulcock, 8 Wend. 891; Booth v. Rome, W. & O. T. R. Co. supra.

A person in doing that which he has the legal right to do incurs no liability to any one except for negligence.

Bellinger v. New York Central Railroad, 23 N. Y. 42; Reed v. State, 108 N. Y. 407; Blake v. Ferris, supra; Smith v. Wagner, 15 N. Y. Week. Dig. 264; Brooks v. Curtis, supra; Schile v. Brokhahus, 80 N. Y. 614.

Mr. Hudson Ansley, for respondent:

It was the appellant's act by or under Robinson increasing the height of this wall which caused the damage. They had contracted for it and caused it to be built, providing, "when the wall reaches the height of the Negus building, the same is to be built on top thereof to the height required," and the action was properly brought against the defendants.

Booth v. Rome, W. & O. T. R. Co. 44 N. Y. 8, R. 2.

A party wall when built and standing becomes the joint property of the owners, and when once destroyed the easement or right is gone, and there is no easement or right in the wall until built, and all lands not used by the party wall revert to the owner.

Hearts v. Kruger, 9 L. R. A. 135, 131 N. Y. 386.

Either proprietor of a party wall may increase the height provided such increase can be made without detriment to the strength of the wall, or to the property of the adjacent owners. "But he does it at his peril."

Brooks v. Curtis, 50 N. Y. 639, 10 Am. Rep. 545; Mugraves v. Sherwood, 23 Hun, 669; McAdam, Land. & T. Supp. 2d ed. 166.

Where one proprietor of a party wall tears it down, he is a trespasser, and liable for all damage.

Schile v. Brokhahus, 80 N. Y. 614.

Gray, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The direction of a verdict for the plaintiff proceeded upon the theory that in undertaking to have the party wall carried up, in order to provide for a third story of their building, the defendants assumed an unqualified liability to the plaintiff for an occurrence, in the course of construction, resulting in injury to him. There is no charge in the complaint, and there was no evidence to show, that the erection of this wall was something intrinsically dangerous, and therefore a matter which imposed upon the defendants a responsibility, in case of resulting damage to their neighbor, from which they could not escape by any plea. The gravamen of the complaint seems to be in the proposition that, because the defendants extended the party wall to the full depth of the boundary line, and carried it higher up, without the plaintiff's knowledge or consent, they did so at their peril, and became absolutely liable, or insurers, for all possible injurious results. In the opinion of the general term upon the authority of Brooks v. Curtis, 50 N. Y. 639, 10 Am. Rep. 545; and of Schile v. Brokhahus, 80 N. Y. 619, it was held that it was unnecessary for the claim in the complaint to be based upon negligence; that, while the defendants had the right to use the wall as they did, they "insured the safety of the operation." "The party making the change." It is said, "is absolutely responsible for any damage which it occasions." We cannot agree with the court below in their view of the question, or that it is controlled by the authorities cited. Schile v. Brokhahus was an action for trespass in tearing down a portion of a partition wall; and it was tried upon the theory, as Chief Judge Church stated, "that the defendant, in disregard of the plaintiff's rights, commenced to tear down the old wall, claiming that it stood entirely upon his own land, and intending to erect a new wall for himself, without giving the plaintiff's property any benefit from it as a party wall; and that this was a trespass which caused the injury complained of." It was upon that theory that the jury found for the plaintiff, and the judgment was affirmed. Brooks v. Curtis was an action to compel the defendants to remove certain alleged encroachments, which consisted in making additions to the party wall. The plaintiff was held not to be entitled to relief, so far as the carrying up of the wall was concerned; but because, as the roof of the new building was constructed, it caused water, snow, and ice to fall upon the plaintiff's building, the defendants were held to have been properly restrained from maintaining it in that condition. Judge Rapallo made the following observation: "We think that the right of either of the adjacent owners to increase the height of a party wall, when it can be done without injury to the adjoining building, and the wall is clearly of sufficient strength to safely bear the addition, is necessarily included in the easement. The party making the addition does it at his peril; and, if injury results, he is liable for all damages. He must insure the safety of the operation; but when safe it should be allowed. The wall is devoted to the purpose of being used for the common benefit of both tenants." The argument is that this language formulated the rule of liability for this case. The respondent in his brief, says: "Under the principle there enunciated, the appellants had a legal right to increase the height of the wall. But this was a conditional, and not an absolute, right. The condition is that he insures the safety of the operation." We think the opinion in Brooks v. Curtis has been quite misapprehended in deducing from it any such rule of absolute liability, and that the language quoted, which is relied upon as furnishing the rule, should receive no such reading. In connection with the facts, it was appropriate. The "safety" there alluded to, which the building party insures, has reference to the strength of the wall to support the addition, or to the manner of its construction, as furnishing thereafter a possible source of danger or of nuisance to the adjoining owner. It did not mean safety against uncontrollable accidents or the results of some third party's negligence. This is clear from the reading of the balance of the opinion, as well as from a fair consideration of the question.

A party wall is for the mutual convenience and benefit of adjoining property owners, and the only restriction upon its use by either is that that use shall not be detrimental to the other. In this case the wall was the joint property of the parties. It was built for the purposes of a building of three stories in height, and, if the plaintiff did not avail himself of his right to erect a building of such a size, that fact was no obstacle to the defendants building it up, as it had been intended and agreed upon, in order that it might furnish a wall for their own three-story building. They were within the exercise of their legal right in what they did, and it is impossible to see that they assumed any risk in building a wall of the height originally contemplated, so long as they contracted for one of suitable strength, and so adapted as to serve, when built, the purposes of the defendants' new building, without detriment to the enjoyment by the plaintiff of his premises. The plaintiff's agreement bound him to construct a party wall foundation sufficient for the purposes of a three-story building, and he may not complain if the wall is carried up to subserve such a purpose. Had the defendants exceeded the height of three stories, it can then be seen that they might have become insurers of the safety of the wall, for they would have been without the protection of the party-wall agreement, and they would have been undertaking to do a thing which would possibly, if not probably, be hazardous, in view of the limitation as to strength under which the foundation wall was built.

The peculiarity of this case is that there is no question of negligence involved, and for his recovery the plaintiff insists upon the application of the principle that, where one of two persons has sustained damage, the one that has caused it or contributed to it must make it good; or that where an act is done for the benefit of one party, which damages another, the person to be benefited by the act insures the safety of the work, and becomes answerable as an insurer. These principles are inapplicable, and the difficulty with the position is that there is no restriction upon the lawful use by a party of his property, if he proceeds with due care in improving it. The defendants had the conceded right to carry up this wall, of which they were joint owners, for the use of their building, and they provided for its erection in a lawful, proper, and usual way. If there was negligence in the construction of the wall, and its fall could be attributed in any wise to some negligent act of commission or of omission in the process of construction, it is very clear that the party liable for the resulting damage would be the contractor. By the contract between him and these defendants, he undertook to construct the wall. It was not a matter which the defendants were competent to engage in, and in contracting with Robinson they placed themselves in a position which exonerated them from any responsibility for a negligent performance of the work. The performance of the work contracted for was neither dangerous nor extraordinary in itself, and hence the rule would apply that, for an injury resulting to another by reason of a negligent performance, the remedy would be solely against the contractor. The owners were innocent of any act contributing to the injury. We have lately discussed this doctrine in Engel v. Eureka Club, 187 N. Y. 100, but as it has been already observed, no negligence is charged and the case was left to stand upon the sole proposition that, however innocent the defendants of causing the occurrence, and however lawful their undertaking to build up the party wall, they must nevertheless be responsible for what happened. This cannot be, and is not correct doctrine. If the fall of the wall was through some negligence in its construction, or in securing it, the liability was the contractor's, and not the property owners'. If there was no such negligence, and the fall was occasioned through some accident,—as, for instance, by the extraordinary force of the storm, which is mentioned,—the defendants were not responsible. If, in the lawful use of one's property, injury is occasioned to an adjacent owner, which the exercise of due care could not have prevented, there is no remedy. An illustration of this rule is presented by cases of the excavation of land which deprives adjoining premises of lateral support, Lasala v. Holbrook, 4 Paige, 170, 8 L. ed. 891, or, more recently, by the case of Booth v. Rome, W. & O. T. R. Co. 140 N. Y. 367, 24 L. R. A. 106, where the damage was caused by blasting. Here there was damage, admittedly; but there was no wrong. As the complaint was framed, and as the case was tried, the fall of the wall was not laid to the fault of the defendants or of their contractor, and upon such a case plaintiff should have been nonsuited.

25 L. R. A.

It is our judgment that the judgments below should be reversed, and that a judgment should be entered in favor of the defendants, dismissing the complaint with costs in all the courts to the appellants.

All concur, except Andrews, Ch. J., not sitting.

Locadie A. V. CASSAGNE

9.

James M. MARVIN et al., Trustees of the United States Hotel at Saratoga Springs.

(143 N. Y. 202.)

1. Certificates representing a pro rata interest in trust property, whether the trust is a technical statutory one or not, on which there is a blank form for transfer and a provision for issuing a new certificate to an assignee, are not, on a bona fide sale thereof, subject to any lien for expenses of litigation, beyond taxable costs, incurred by the trustees in successfully defending a suit by the owner who has paid the judgment for costs before making the transfer.

2. Proceeding upon some erroneous legal theory applied to the facts will not, under Code Civ. Proc., § 1307, defeat plaintiff's right to such relief as the facts may warrant, if it is consistent with the complaint and embraced within the issue.

(October 9, 1894.)

CROSS-APPEALS from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, Third Department, affirming a judgment of a special term for Saratoga County dismissing the complaint in an action brought to compel the transfer of certain trust certificates; the plaintiff appealing from so much of the judgment as dismissed the complaint, and the defendants appealing from so much of the judgment as failed to establish the right of the defendants to recover certain disbursements made by them in defending suits regarding such certificates. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Matthew Hale and Edgar T. Brackett, for plaintiff:

The plaintiff wrote to the defendant Marvin a letter. He was then called upon to speak and did speak, recognizing in the broadest manner plaintiff's right to a new certificate, and the plaintiff, in reliance on the promise, paid her money.

An estoppel may arise, although there was no designed fraud on the part of the person sought to be estopped.

Thompson v. Simpson, 123 N. Y. 270.

The whole scheme by which a trust was attempted to be formed by the subscribers to the

NOTE.—The facts of the above case are such that others of the same class are not likely to be of frequent occurrence, but in so far as the attempt was made to hold stock liable for the expenses of an unsuccessful suit by its owner the case is likely to be a valuable authority.

so-called subscription agreement, is void and the several certificate holders take title to the property as tenants in common.

If it be a trust to sell, the duty to sell should, in order to be valid, be made imperative. If left discretionary, as it is here, it is not a valid trust under our statute.

The power to rent was merely pending the sale, and as an incident thereto and not as a principal object of the trust, and hence it was void as a trust.

Cooke v. Platt, 98 N. Y. 85; Heermans v. Robertson, 3 Hun, 464, 64 N. Y. 833.

The statute does not authorize a trust to be created for the mere purpose of the sale or the partition of real estate.

Cooke v. Platt, supra; Heermans v. Robertson, 64 N. Y. 840, 3 Hun, 464; Heermans v. Burt, 78 N. Y. 259; Re Hall, 24 Hun, 158.

On the purchase the bondholders thereby became owners and tenants in common of the property so purchased, and were, in respect to it, no longer creditors of anybody.

Selden v. Vermilya, 3 N. Y. 525; Purdy v. Wright, 26 N. Y. Week. Dig. 883.

The trust attempted to be created by the deed to the trustees having failed because not authorized by the statute, the deed to them became thereby valid as a power in trust and the title to the property thereupon vested directly in the beneficiaries as the owners thereof under the statute.

1 Rev. Stat. at L. p. 678m, §§ 58, 59; Fellows v. Heermans, 4 Lans. 280; Cooke v. Platt, 98 N. Y. 85; Heermans v. Robertson, 64 N. Y. 833, 3 Hun, 464; Heermans v. Burt, 78 N. Y. 259; Holly v. Hirsch, 185 N. Y. 590.

They, so far as related to their own shares in the said property, took an absolute title thereto, as they could not be their own trustees in such a case.

Garvey v. McDevitt, 72 N. Y. 556; Hetzel v. Barber, 69 N. Y. 1.

The attempted express trust being void, there is no ground for saying that the defendants held title under "a trust arising or resulting by implication of law."

McArthur v. Gordon, 12 L. R. A. 667, 126 N. Y. 597; Hutchins v. Van Vechten, 140 N. Y. 115.

If the claim for those extra costs and expenses would ever constitute a claim against Mrs. Roche, still such claim had not matured when this action was brought as Mrs. Roche had appealed to the general term from the judgment against her, and that appeal was still pending and undetermined when this action was tried. Hence, the defendants then had no lien or claim against Mrs. Roche herself, for said costs or expenses, and, of course, could have had none against the plaintiff as Mrs. Roche's assignee therefor.

De Figaniers v. Young, 2 Robt. 670; Code Civ. Proc. § 502, subd. 1; Canaday v. Stiger, 55 N. Y. 452; Myers v. Davis, 22 N. Y. 489; Constock v. Buchanan, 57 Barb. 127; Cummings v. Morris, 25 N. Y. 625.

Mr. Charles S. Lester, for defendants:
No express trust such as can be enforced specifically in equity was created, because no person having authority to dispose of the estate attempted to create such a trust.

Selden v. Vermilya, 3 N. Y. 526; Dempsey 25 L. R. A.

v. Tylee, 3 Duer, 97; 1 Rev. Stat. 782 m, p, § 74.

The plaintiff having made the existence of an express valid trust the foundation of her claim for relief, and having demanded judgment for a specific performance of the alleged trust, cannot have judgment for a different cause of action, and the plaintiff cannot be permitted to deny the title of the trustees.

Hudson v. Swan, 88 N. Y. 532; Paige v. Willet, 88 N. Y. 28; Tell v. Beyer, 88 N. Y. 161; Hall v. United States Reflector Co. 80 Hun, 876; Getty v. Hamlin, 46 Hun, 1; Orosbie v. Leary, 6 Bosw. 812; Platt v. Stout, 14 Abb. Pr. 178; Bruce v. Kelly, 7 Jones & S. 27. See note to New York v. Fay, 23 Abb. N. C. 897; Arnold v. Angell, 62 N. Y. 508; Williams v. Mechanics & T. F. Ins. Co. 54 N. Y. 577; Joslyn v. Joslyn, 9 Hun, 888; Hurst v. Harper, 14 Hun, 280; Van Cott v. Prentice, 104 N. Y. 45.

The defendants by the purchase at the foreclosure sale and the conveyance by the referee acquired an absolute title to the premises.

If there is any doubt about the proper construction of the conveyance, the acts of the parties under it may be considered, and if they all agree upon the construction such construction will control.

Nicoll v. Sands, 181 N. Y. 24; Stokes v. Recknagel, 6 Jones & S. 368; Woolsey v. Funks, 121 N. Y. 92; Reading v. Gray, 5 Jones & S. 79.

The acceptance of the certificate operated as an estoppel upon the grantee, and the plaintiff who claims under it cannot deny the truth of the recital that the legal title is in defendants.

Atlantic Dock Co. v. Leavitt, 54 N. Y. 85, 13 Am. Rep. 556; Torrey v. Bank of Orleans, 9 Paige, 649, 4 L. ed. 858.

The words "trustees under a certain subscription agreement dated April 15, 1875, executed by certain persons interested in the United States Hotel bonds," added to the names of the grantees were simply words of description.

Towar v. Hale, 46 Barb. 861, approved in King v. Townshend, 141 N. Y. 864; Peck v. Mallams, 10 N. Y. 509; Moss v. Livingston, 4 N. Y. 208; Buffalo Catholic Inst. v. Bitter, 87 N. Y. 250.

Section 51 of the Statute of Uses and Trusts, which provides that "where a grant for a valuable consideration is made to one person and the consideration therefor shall be paid by another, no use or trust shall result in favor of the person by whom such payment shall be made; but the title shall vest in the person named as the assignee,"—makes the title in the defendants absolute.

Garfield v. Hatmaker, 15 N. Y. 475; Sturtevant v. Sturtevant, 20 N. Y. 89, 75 Am. Dec. 871; McCartney v. Bostwick, 32 N. Y. 58; Everett v. Everett, 43 N. Y. 218; Hurst v. Harper, 14 Hun, 280; Robertson v. Sayre, 53 Hun, 490.

Sections 58 and 59 apply only to the case of an owner who by deed or will endeavors to create an unlawful trust, and are a declaration of the common-law rule, that property devised to executors upon a void trust does not pass by the devise, but being undistributed of, descends to the heir-at-law.

Digby v. Legard, 8 P. Wms. 22, note 1; Pilkington v. Boughey, 12 Sim. 98; Jones v. Mitchell, 1 Sim. & Stu. 290; Carrick v. Errington, 2 P. Wms. 361.

Assuming that Marvin and Hall held the absolute title to the premises, it was competent for them to recognize any equitable rights of plaintiff and secure them by a lawful declaration of trust.

Foots v. Bryant, 47 N. Y. 544.

But where the owner of land attempts to create an illegal trust and the claim is that this trust is illegal in that the term is not made to depend upon the duration of the life of the beneficiary (Rice v. Barrett, 102 N. Y. 161; Beekman v. Benson, 23 N. Y. 816, 80 Am. Dec. 269), then sections 58 and 59 of the Statute of Uses and Trusts apply and the trust not being one of the express trusts enumerated in the statute fails and no title or interest passes to the person in whose favor the trust is attempted to be created.

Underwood v. Curtis, 127 N. Y. 538.

The defendant Marvin is not estopped by his letter of November 26, 1883, from refusing to issue a new certificate to the plaintiff.

Bush v. Lathrop, 22 N. Y. 535; Union College Trustees v. Wheeler, 61 N. Y. 88; Ingalls v. Morgan, 10 N. Y. 178.

Assuming, then, that out of the facts of this case equity will apply a trust in favor of the plaintiff to the extent of the amount stated in the certificate and that the defendants hold the legal title in trust for her and others, including themselves, then the usual rights and liabilities arise out of this relation.

Locke v. Farmers Loan & T. Co. 140 N. Y. 135; Hutchins v. Van Vechten, 140 N. Y. 115; McArthur v. Gordon, 12 L. R. A. 667, 126 N. Y. 597.

The interest of the plaintiff is not a joint interest with others but a several interest.

The defendants are entitled to be reimbursed the expenditures they have made and incurred out of that specific interest, and not out of their own pockets or the interests of other persons.

Young v. Brush, 28 N. Y. 673; Downing v. Marshall, 37 N. Y. 380; Davis v. Storer, 53 N. Y. 478; Woodruff v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 129 N. Y. 27.

O'Brien, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In the year 1875, a mortgage of half a million dollars upon the United States Hotel at Saratoga, given to secure negotiable bonds to that amount then held by various parties, was in process of foreclosure. Judgment was entered in the action, and the property was advertised for sale by a referee for the 1st day of May, 1875. On the 15th day of April, preceding the day appointed for the sale, certain holders of the bonds, in order to prevent a sacrifice of the property, and for the purpose of protecting each other, entered into an agreement in writing with the defendants, who also held bonds, whereby the bondholders signing the instrument constituted the defendants trustees for the protection of their interest in the property. The defendants were thereby authorized as such trustees to purchase the property under the decree, and to hold the legal title thereto as absolute owners, and to sell and convey and incur the same by mortgage, lease, or otherwise. In case the property was purchased by the trustees, the bondholders subscribing the instrument promised and agreed with the trustees and each other that they would accept and receive the property so purchased, subject to certain chattel mortgages on the personality, in payment and satisfaction of their shares of the purchase price, and they released the trustees and the referee from all other and further payment. The subscribers also agreed to advance to the trustees sufficient funds to pay off and discharge certain liens upon the property, not extinguished by the judgment, and the interest in the proceeds of the sale of such bondholders as refused to become parties to the agreement. The trustees themselves were holders of bonds, and they were permitted by the agreement, which was not to take effect till holders of bonds to the amount of $400,000 had executed it, to have all the rights in the property, in proportion to their interests, as the others. In pursuance of the agreement, the defendants purchased the property at the referee's sale, and took a conveyance of the same. Afterwards, and on the 10th of May, 1875, the persons who had executed the above-described instrument, including the trustees, signed another paper, ratifying and confirming the trust expressed in the former writing, expressly admitting the validity of the trust, and waiving all matters and things that could impeach or invalidate the same. By virtue of these instruments, the defendants entered upon the care and management of said property, and have ever since continued to act in that capacity. The trustees, under an arrangement with the persons interested in the property held by them, adopted the practice of issuing to each of them a certificate, transferable in form, which, upon its face expressed the interest which the person to whom it was delivered had in the property. In November, 1875, the defendants issued to one Eugenia Roche a certificate, No. 55 of the series, in which it was stated that she was entitled to a beneficial interest in the United States Hotel property at Saratoga, the legal title of which was held by them, amounting to $997, upon the basis that the interest of all the beneficiaries amounted to $454,505, subject to a mortgage lien of $260,000, and that she was entitled to share pro rata, with the other beneficiaries in the net rents and profits, and entitled to her proportionate share of the proceeds in case of a sale. There was a printed form on the back of this certificate for the purpose of enabling the holder to transfer the same in the manner in common use with respect to certificates of stock, and a note appended to the effect that a purchaser might receive a new certificate upon the return of this to the trustees, properly assigned. Mrs. Roche was one of the subscribers to the agreement under which the defendants entered into the control and management of the property, and similar certificates were issued by the defendants to the other parties to these agreements for the purpose of showing their respective interests in the property. On November 24, 1888, Eugenia Roche assigned in due form this certificate to the plaintiff, using for that purpose the printed blank above described, and the plaintiff thereupon requested the defendants to transfer the same upon their books, and to issue to the plaintiff a new certificate upon its surrender, and the defendants, after some correspondence, refused to comply with this request. The plaintiff agreed to pay a valuable and full consideration for the certificate and more than the face value stated thereon, believing that the defendants would transfer the same on the books and issue a new certificate therefor. Some time in the year 1888, Eugenia Roche commenced an action against the trustees defendants to recover a dividend of $79.76, payable on the certificate held by her, as her share of the rents and profits of the property for the previous year. On a trial it was found that defendants had paid the dividend to her agent, and judgment was entered on the action for the defendants, with costs, which were taxed and adjusted at $69.73, January 17, 1884. These costs were paid by the unsuccessful plaintiff in the action. An appeal was taken from this judgment to the general term, and it was there affirmed, with $81.63 costs, May 27, 1885. It has been found by the trial court that the defendants incurred expenses in defending this action, over and above the costs taxed in their favor, in the sum of $254.48, and for defending the appeal, over and above costs, in the sum of $209.60; and they insist that the certificate or interest held by the plaintiff and involved in the litigation is chargeable with such expense. The purpose of this action was to compel the defendants to transfer the interest represented by certificate No. 55, standing on defendants' books in the name of Eugenia Roche, to the plaintiff, who succeeded to her title by the transfer of the certificate on November 24, 1888, and to issue a new certificate in the name of the plaintiff.

The defense, as I understand it, rests upon two propositions: (1) That the trust attempted to be created by the instruments referred to is inoperative and invalid; (2) that the expenses of the litigation between the original owners of the certificate and the defendants, over and above the cost paid, together with the costs of the appeal which are unpaid, are in equity a lien or charge upon the interest represented by the certificate which the defendants are entitled to have paid before transferring the interest on the books or issuing a new certificate. There is no finding that the transfer to the plaintiff of November 24, 1888, was in fraud of any claim which the defendants then had against the original holders of the certificate, or which was in process of ripening into a judgment; and we must therefore assume that on that day the plaintiff, by the execution of the assignment of the certificate, and by the acknowledgment and delivery to her of the same, became vested with the title to that share of the property represented thereby. The certificate was the evidence of the interest which the holder had in the property, and its transfer and delivery by the holder to the plaintiff in the manner prescribed by the trustees transferred the interest in the property. For the purpose of collecting the dividends, and to facilitate the sale of the several interests in the market, a transfer upon the books and a new certificate might be necessary. In the absence of some sufficient reason or excuse, it was the duty of the defendants to sanction the transfer by recording the same on the books and issuing a new certificate to the party to whom the interest had been transferred. This was a duty and obligation which the defendants owed to the bondholders or persons who became severally the beneficial owners of the property which the defendants had in their charge. It was necessarily involved in the relations between the trustees and owners created by the written instruments and the course of business adopted and acted upon by all. The plaintiff agreed to purchase the certificate from the original owner on condition that she could procure a new one in her own name. The correspondence with the defendants was such as to induce her to believe that there would be no difficulty on that point, and then she paid for the certificate a sum considerably larger than its face value. Subsequently the trustees concluded to refuse to make the transfer unless the expenses of the litigation were paid. We do not think that the demand of the plaintiff can be successfully defended upon this ground. When Mrs. Roche paid the judgment for costs awarded against her, she discharged all legal obligations which the defendants had against her, or which they could enforce in any way against her property. In the absence of fraud, she had the right to transfer her interest to the plaintiff on the 24th of November. After that date the defendants' duty to make the transfer and issue the new certificate was to the plaintiff. Concededly, they had no claim of any kind against her, and, whatever their claim against Mrs. Roche might be in law or equity, it did not attach to or pass with the certificate. While it may not be necessary now to decide the question, it seems to me that the expenses of the litigation beyond the costs which the defeated party was adjudged to pay were chargeable to the fund or property in the defendants' hands, and not to the share of the person who instituted the unsuccessful suit. If a stockholder brings an action against the corporation and fails, the payment by him of the judgment for costs puts him in the same relations to it that he had occupied before. The directors could not resist his application to transfer his stock by setting up a claim that the corporation, by reason of the suit, was obliged to pay out large sums for counsel fees and expenses in the litigation which were not covered by the taxable costs.

Nor do we think that it is necessary in this case to determine the nature or character of the trust. It may or may not be a technical statutory trust, but that question does not concern the defendants in the discharge of the obligations and duties which they owe to the certificate holders. It is not material to inquire where the legal title to the property is, whether in the trustees or the bondholders. The defendants are in possession of the property, and in receipt of the rents and profits, concededly for the benefit of the parties holding the certificates. They occupy towards them fiduciary relations. One of the obligations which they have voluntarily assumed is that they will do certain things to facilitate the transfer from one to another of the certificates which they issued in order to show what interest the holders had respectively in the property, and in order to enable themselves to properly perform the duty of management and care, which includes the distribution and payment to the parties in interest of the rents and profits in the form of dividends. This duty and obligation the defendants do not deny. They admit in the broadest terms that they hold the property and are administering it for the benefit of such bondholders as signed the agreement, and to whom the original certificates were issued, or their assignees. This was the view taken of the case by the court below. So that, whatever view may be taken in regard to the precise legal relations that the defendants bear to the purchased property now held by them, it cannot be denied that by their written agreement, and the practical construction given to it by their own acts, and the course of business adopted by them in the performance of the duties which they assumed, they were under an equitable duty and obligation to furnish to the beneficiaries the certificate containing the evidence of their right. The trustees in the care and management of the property had for many years regularly paid to the original holders of the bonds, or their assignees, dividends from the net rents and profits, and thus their several interests had become the subject of purchase and sale in the market, and the duties of the defendants, from the course of business that had been established under the written instruments, could not well be performed, in the sense that they were understood by all parties, without instituting methods for the transfer of these interests on the defendants' books and to such parties as became the owners of the shares from time to time. This manner of transacting the business, if not fairly to be implied from the agreement, was adopted immediately after the defendants entered into the possession and management of the property, and adhered to for many years; so that now it can fairly be said to be a duty imposed upon the defendants under the written instruments. In short, the relations, duties, and obligations existing between the trustees and beneficiaries at the time of the commencement of this action were analogous to those that exist between the stockholders of a corporation and its directors and officers. The learned trial judge, in his disposition of the case, felt constrained to follow the general term on a former appeal (Cassagne v. Marvin, 1 N. Y. Supp. 590); but at the same time he recognized the fact that the plaintiff in November, 1888, became the owner in good faith, and for a valuable consideration, of the share of Mrs. Roche, and that she purchased it in reliance, not only upon the established course of business adopted by the defendants themselves, but also upon what was understood as a promise on the part of one of the trustees to make the transfer in the manner required. Finally, the learned counsel for the defendants insists that the complaint in this action is so framed as to give the action the form of one against trustees of an express trust to enforce the specific performance of a duty enjoined upon them as such, and, the trust being void under the statute, the action must fail. This result, we think, does not follow from the premises assumed. Whether the legal title is now in the trustees or the holders of the certificates, the defendants owe certain duties of a fiduciary nature to them, which a court of equity may properly enforce. It may be true that the plaintiff brought this action upon the theory that the trust was valid; but all the facts are alleged and found; and, if they entitle the plaintiff to any relief, the fact that she proceeded upon some erroneous legal theory applied to the facts will not defeat her right to such relief as the facts may warrant, if it is consistent with the complaint and embraced within the issue. Code, § 1207. The defendants do not deny or repudiate any of their obligations as expressed in the writings or created by the course of business. They simply claim that this particular certificate holder, on account of what had occurred before she purchased it and subsequently is not entitled to have the transfer made upon the books as to a new certificate.

35 L. R. A.

As we think that this position is untenable, for the reasons stated, the judgment must be reversed, and a new trial granted; costs to abide the event.

All concur, except Andrews, Ch. J., not sitting, and Finch, J., not voting.

Ernest St. George LOUGH et al., Appls.

A. Emilius OUTERBRIDGE et al., Repts.

(143 N. Y. 271.)

1. Special freight rates for transportation by ship which are too low to be profitable and are offered by the carrier only at particular periods when a rival vessel is loading and on the single condition of the shipper's stipulation not to ship by the rival vessel cannot be claimed by a shipper who refuses to make such stipulation, but he may be lawfully charged the ordinary reasonable rates for shipment during the same period in which the lower rates are given to those who complied with the condition.
2. The purpose of a carrier to suppress competition does not make it unlawful to offer low rates when a rival vessel is loading to those only who will not ship anything by the latter.

(October 2, 1894.)

APPEAL by complainants from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming a judgment of a special term for New York County in favor of defendants, in an action brought to enjoin defendants from charging plaintiffs a higher rate for carrying freight than was charged to other shippers. Affirmed.

NOTE.—As to common-law right of carrier to discriminate between passengers or shippers, see note to Louisville, R. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Wilson (Ind.) 18 L. R. A. 105.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Henry W. Hardon and Treadwell Cleveland, with Messrs. Ewart, Choate & Beaman, for appellants:

The defendants as common carriers are bound to treat the plaintiffs and all other shippers upon substantially similar terms for similar services.

Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Raym. 909; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 145 U. S. 376, 36 L. ed. 703, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 92; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Denver & N. O. R. Co. 110 U. S. 674, 28 L. ed. 294; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Goodridge, 149 U. S. 680, 37 L. ed. 902; Messenger v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 86 N. J. L. 407, 18 Am. Rep. 457, reaffirmed in 87 N. J. L. 581; McDuffee v. Portland & R. Railroad, 52 N. H. 480, 13 Am. Rep. 72; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Adams Exp. Co. 22 Fed. Rep. 404; Menacho v. Ward, 27 Fed. Rep. 529; Samuels v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 81 Fed. Rep. 57; Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. v. Northwestern Fuel Co. 81 Fed. Rep. 652; Kinsley v. Buffalo, N. Y. & P. R. Co. 87 Fed. Rep. 181; State v. Nebraska Teleph. Co. 17 Neb. 126, 52 Am. Rep. 404; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. People, 67 Ill. 11, 16 Am. Rep. 599; Indianapolis, D. & S. R. Co. v. Ervin, 118 Ill. 255; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. People, 121 Ill. 318; Sanford v. Catawissa, W. & E. R. Co. 24 Pa. 378, 64 Am. Dec. 667; Audenreid v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 68 Pa. 378, 8 Am. Rep. 195; Stewart v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 88 N. J. L. 505; State v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 48 N. J. L. 55, 57 Am. Rep. 548; New England Exp. Co. v. Maine Cent. R. Co. 57 Me. 188, 2 Am. Rep. 31; Scotfield v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 43 Ohio St. 571, 54 Am. Rep. 846; State v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 7 L. R. A. 319, 47 Ohio St. 130; Fitzgerald v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 13 L. R. A. 70, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 638, 68 Vt. 169; Cook v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 9 L. R. A. 764, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 383, 81 Iowa, 551; Louisville, E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Wilson, 18 L. R. A. 105, 182 Ind. 517.

The English statutes expressly provide against discrimination in rates for the same service.

The English statutes are not new legislation, but are merely declaratory of the common law.

Messenger v. Pennsylvania R. Co., Scotfield v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. and McDuffee v. Portland & R. Railroad, supra; 1 Wood, Railway Law, ed. 1894, § 195, p. 639.

In Dinhny Casson Slate Co. v. Festiniog R. Co., 2 Nev. & Macn. Eng. Ry. Cas. 73, it was held that an agreement to give exclusive patronage was not a sufficient ground for discrimination.

The rates charged to different shippers may not be the same and yet be lawful—there may be a difference which is not an unlawful discrimination, not unjust because the expense of carriage may be greater in one case than another. But the expense of carriage furnishes the final test. And so it is held that if it costs no more proportionately to carry a small quantity of goods than a large quantity, any discrimination in the freight rate in favor of the larger shipper is unlawful.

Hays v. Pennsylvania Co. 12 Fed. Rep. 309; Kinsley v. Buffalo, N. Y. & P. R. Co. 87 Fed. Rep. 181; Louisville, E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Wilson, 18 L. R. A. 105, 182 Ind. 517; Baxendale v. Great Western R. Co. 1 Nev. & Macn. Eng. Ry. Cas. 200; Harrie v. C. W. R. Co. 1 Nev. & Macn. Eng. Ry. Cas. 97, note.

It is for the court to determine the reasonableness of any regulation.

1 Wood, Railway Law, § 297.

Mr. Wilhelmus Mynderse, with Messrs. Butler, Stillman & Hubbard, for respondents:

A carrier has a right to reduce its usual rates in favor of particular consignors, provided it exacts from no shipper more than a reasonable rate.

Wood, Railway Law, p. 566; Fitchburg R. Co. v. Gage, 12 Gray, 393; Sargent v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 115 Mass. 422; Eclipses Tugboat Co. v. Pontchartrain R. Co. 24 La. Ann. 1.

In declaring the obligations of the carriers the courts either base their decisions specifically upon the fact that the carrier owes a public duty through the franchises and powers acquired by him under the railway acts, or when not referring specifically to such fact they cite as the authority for their opinions those cases in which such decision was made.

Hays v. Pennsylvania Co. 12 Fed. Rep. 309; Dinsmore v. Louisville, C. & L. R. Co. 2 Fed. Rep. 465.

Even under the law applicable to carriers upon railroads and canals the plaintiffs have no foundation for their case.

Wood, Railway Law, 566; Fitchburg R. Co. v. Gage, supra.

Without raising the rates against any one, the defendant company made a concession to those giving their business to its company on that particular sailing in preference to the El Callao. The concession was made at a loss. It was a gift or a legitimate inducement, not in any way violating the rules of public policy.

Mogul S. S. Co. v. McGregor, L. R. 21 Q. B. Div. 544, affirmed L. R. 23 Q. B. Div. 598, and affirmed by House of Lords [1892] App. Cas. 25.

A common carrier may justly make a reduction from its customary rates in favor of the public, at stated times and subject to stated conditions, provided it does not exact unreasonable rates from any shipper.

Envershed v. London & N. W. R. Co. L. R. 8 Q. B. Div. 135.

O'Brien, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question presented by this appeal is one of very great importance. It touches commerce, and, more especially, the duties and obligations of common carriers to the public at many points. There was no dispute at the trial, and there is none now, with respect to the facts upon which it arises. In order to present the question clearly, a brief statement of these facts becomes necessary. The plaintiffs are the surviving members of a firm that, for many years prior to the transaction upon which the action was based, had been engaged in business as commission merchants in the city of New York, transacting their business mainly with the Windward and Leeward Islands. The defendant the Quebec Steamship Company is a Canadian corporation, organized and existing under the laws of Canada; and the other defendants are the agents of the corporation in New York, doing business as partners. The business of the corporation is that of a common carrier, transporting passengers and freight for hire upon the sea and adjacent waters. For nearly twenty years prior to the transaction in question, a part of its business was the transportation of cargoes between New York and the Barbadoes and the Windward Islands, the other defendants acting as agents in respect to this business. During some years prior to the commencement of this action, the company had in its service a fleet of five or six of the highest class iron steamers, sailing at intervals of about ten days from New York to the islands, each steamer requiring about six weeks to make the trip. The steamers were kept constantly engaged in this service and sailed regularly upon schedule days without reference to the amount of cargo then received. The regular and standard rate charged for freight up to December, 1891, from New York to Barbadoes, one of the Windward Islands, was 50 cents per dry barrel of five cubic feet, which was taken as the unit of measurement, and the tariff of charges was adjusted accordingly for goods shipped in other forms and packages. In December, 1891, the regular rate was reduced from 50 to 40 cents per dry barrel. About this time the British steamer El Callao, which had for some years before sailed between New York and Ciudad Bolivar, in South America, transporting passenger and freight between these points, began to take cargo at New York for Barbadoes, and sometimes to other points in the Windward Islands which she passed on her regular trips to Ciudad Bolivar, sailing from New York at intervals of five or six weeks. Her trade with South America was the principal feature of her business, but such space as was not required for the cargo destined for the end of the route was filled with cargo for the islands which lay in her regular course. The defendants evidently regarded this vessel as a somewhat dangerous competitor for a part of the business, the benefits of which they had up to this time enjoyed; and, for the purpose of retaining it, they adopted the plan of offering special reduced rates of 25 cents per dry barrel to all merchants and business men in New York who would agree to ship by their line exclusively during the week that the El Callao was engaged in obtaining freight and taking on cargo. The plaintiffs' firm had business arrangements with and were shipping by that vessel; and in February, 1892, they demanded of the defendants that they receive 3,000 barrels of freight from New York to Barbadoes, and transport the same at the special rate of 25 cents per barrel upon one of its steamers. The defendants then informed the plaintiffs that the rate of 25 cents was allowed by them only to such shippers as stipulated to give all their business exclusively to the defendants' line, in preference to the El Callao, and that to all other shippers the standard rate of 40 cents per dry barrel was maintained; but they further informed the plaintiffs that, if they would agree to give their shipments for that week exclusively to the defendants' line, the goods would be received at the 25 cents rate. The plaintiffs, however, were shipping by the other vessel, and declined this offer. Again, in the month of May, 1892, the El Callao was in the port of New York taking on cargo, as was also the defendants' steamer Trinidad. The plaintiffs then demanded of the defendants that they receive and carry from New York to Barbadoes about 1,760 dry barrels of freight at the rate of 25 cents. The defendants notified the plaintiffs that a general offer had that day been made by them to the trade to take cargo for Barbadoes on the Trinidad, to sail on June 4th, at 25 cents per dry barrel, under an agreement that shippers accepting that rate should bind themselves not to ship to that point by steamers of any other line between that date and the sailing of the Trinidad. The defendants offered these terms to the plaintiffs, but, as they were shipping by the rival vessel, the offer was declined. Except during the week when the El Callao was engaged in taking on cargo, the defendants have maintained the regular rate of 40 cents to all shippers between these points; and, when it reduced the rate as above described, exactly the same rates, terms, and conditions were offered to all shippers, including the plaintiffs, and carried freight for other parties at the reduced rates only upon their entering into a stipulation not to ship by the rival vessel. After the plaintiffs' demand last mentioned had been refused, they obtained an order from one of the judges of the court in this action requiring the defendants to carry the 1,760 barrels, and the defendants did receive and transport them, in obedience to the order, at the rate of 25 cents; but this order was reversed at general term. The plaintiffs demand equitable relief in the action to the effect, substantially, that the defendants be required and compelled by the judgment of the court to receive and transport for the plaintiffs their freight at the special reduced rates, when allowed to all other shippers, without imposing the condition that the plaintiffs stipulate to ship during the times specified by the defendants' line exclusively.

25 L. R. A.

Whether the regular rate of 40 cents, for which it is conceded that the defendants offered to carry for the plaintiffs at all times without conditions, was or was not reasonable, was a question of fact to be determined upon the evidence at the trial; and the learned trial judge has found as matter of fact that it was reasonable, and that the reduced rate of 25 cents granted to shippers on special occasions, and upon the conditions and requirements mentioned, was not profitable. This finding, which stands unquestioned upon the record, seems to me to be an element of great importance in the case, which must be recognized at every stage of the investigation. A common carrier is subject to an action at law for damages in case of refusal to perform its duties to the public for a reasonable com-penation, or to recover back the money paid when the charge is excessive. This right to maintain an action at law upon the facts alleged, it is urged by the learned counsel for the defendants, precludes the plaintiffs from maintaining a suit for equitable relief such as is demanded in the complaint. There is authority in other jurisdictions to sustain the practice adopted by the plaintiffs (Watson v. Sutherland, 72 U. S. 5 Wall. 74, 18 L. ed. 580; Monacho v. Ward, 27 Fed. Rep. 529; Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co. 54 Fed. Rep. 741, 19 L. R. A. 395; Coe v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 8 Fed. Rep. 775; Vincent v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 49 Ill. 83; Scotfield v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 43 Ohio St. 571, 54 Am. Rep. 846), though I am not aware of any in this state that would bring a case based upon such facts within the usual or ordinary jurisdiction of equity. So far as this case is concerned, it is sufficient to observe that it is now settled by a very general concurrence of authority that a defendant cannot, when sued in equity, avail himself of the defense that an adequate remedy at law exists, unless he pleads that defense in his answer. Cognell v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 105 N. Y. 319; Mente v. Cook, 108 N. Y. 504; Ostrander v. Weber, 114 N. Y. 95; Dudley v. Third Order of St. Francis Cong. 138 N. Y. 400; Truscott v. King, 6 N. Y. 147.

When the facts alleged are sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to relief in some form of action, and no objection has been made by the defendant to the form of the action in his answer or at the trial, it is too late to raise the point after judgment or upon appeal. So that, whatever objections might have been urged originally against the action in its present form, the defendants must now be deemed to have waived them. This court will not now stop to examine a minor question that does not touch the merits, but relates wholly to the form in which the plaintiffs have presented the facts and demanded relief, or to the practice and procedure. The time and place to raise and discuss these questions was at or before the trial, and, as they were not then raised, the case must be examined and disposed of upon the merits. The defendants were engaged in a business in which the public were interested, and the duties and obligations growing out of it may be enforced through the courts and the legislative power. Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 118, 24 L. ed. 77; People v. Budd, 117 N. Y. 1, 5 L. R. A. 559. In England these duties are, to a great extent, regulated by the Railway and Canal Traffic Act (17 & 18 Vict. chap. 31), and by statute in some of the states, and in this country, so far as they enter into the business of interstate commerce, by act of congress. The solution of the question now presented depends upon the general principles of the common law, as there is no statute in this state that affects the question, and the legislation referred to is important only for the purpose of indicating the extent to which business of this character has been subjected to public regulation for the general good. There can be no doubt that at common law a common carrier undertook generally, and not as a casual occupation, to convey and deliver goods for a reasonable compensation as a business, with or without a special agreement, and for all people indifferently; and, in the absence of a special agreement, he was bound to treat all alike in the sense that he was not permitted to charge any one an excessive price for the services. He has no right in any case while engaged in this public employment to exact from any one anything beyond what under the circumstances is reasonable and just. 2 Kent, Com. 13th ed. 598; Story, Bailm. §§ 495, 508; 2 Parsons, Cont. 175; Killmer v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. 100 N. Y. 395, 53 Am. Rep. 194; Root v. Long Island R. Co. 114 N. Y. 300, 4 L. R. A. 381, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 576. It may also be conceded that the carrier cannot unreasonably or unjustly discriminate in favor of one or against another where the circumstances and conditions are the same. The question in this case is whether the defendants, upon the undisputed facts contained in the record, have discharged these obligations to the plaintiffs. There was no refusal to carry for a reasonable compensation. On the contrary the defendants offered to transport the goods for the 40 cents rate, and we are concluded by the finding as to the reasonable nature of that charge. The defendants even offered to carry them at the unprofitable rate of 35 cents, providing the plaintiffs would comply with the same conditions upon which the goods of any other person were carried at that rate. What is reasonable and just in a common carrier in a given case is a complex question, into which enter many elements for consideration. The questions of time, place, distance, facilities, quantity, and character of the goods, and many other matters must be considered. The carrier can afford to carry 10,000 tons of coal and other property to a given place for less compensation per ton than he could carry 50; and, where the business is of great magnitude, a rebate from the standard rate might be just and reasonable, while it could not fairly be granted to another who desired to have a trifling amount of goods carried to the same point. So long as the regular standard rates maintained by the carrier and offered to all are reasonable, one shipper cannot complain because his neighbor, by reason of special circumstances and conditions, can make it an object for the carrier to give him reduced rates. In this case the finding implies that the defendants at certain times carried goods at a loss, upon the condition that the shippers gave them all of their business. Whatever effect may be given to the legislation referred to, in its application to railroads and other corporations deriving their powers and franchises from the state there can be no doubt that the carrier could at common law make a discount from its reasonable general rates in favor of a particular customer or class of customers in isolated cases, for special reasons, and upon special conditions, without violating any of the duties or obligations to the public inherent in the employment. If the general rates are reasonable, a deviation from the standard by the carrier in favor of particular customers, for special reasons not applicable to the whole public, does not furnish to parties not similarly situated any just ground for complaint. When the conditions and circumstances are identical, the charges to all shippers for the same service must be equal. These principles are well settled, and whatever may be found to the contrary in the cases cited by the learned counsel for the plaintiff originated in the application of statutory regulations in other states and countries. Pitchburg R. Co. v. Gage, 13 Gray, 398; Sargent v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 115 Mass. 423; Mogul S. S. Co. v. McGregor, L. R. 21 Q. B. Div. 544, affirmed L. R. 28 Q. B. Div. 598, and by House of Lords [1892] App. Cas. 25; Evershed v. London & N. W. R. Co. L. R. 8 Q. B. Div. 185; Barendse v. Eastern Counties R. Co. 4 C. B. N. S. 78; Branley v. South Eastern R. Co. 12 C. B. N. S. 74.

Special favors in the form of reduced rates to particular customers may form an element in the inquiry whether, as matter of fact, the standard rates are reasonable or otherwise. If they are extended to such persons at the expense of the general public, the fact must be taken into account in ascertaining whether a given tariff of general prices is or is not reasonable. But, as in this case the reasonable nature of the price for which the defendants offered to carry the plaintiffs' goods has been settled by the findings of the trial court, it will not be profitable to consider further the propriety or effect of such discrimination. The rule of the common law was thus broadly stated by the supreme court of Massachusetts in the case of Pitchburg R. Co. v. Gage, supra. Upon that point the court said: "The recent English cases, cited by the counsel for the defendants, are chiefly commentaries upon the special legislation of parliament regulating the transportation of freight on railroads constructed under the authority of the government there, and consequently throw very little light upon questions concerning the general rights and duties of common carriers, and are for that reason not to be regarded as authoritative expositions of the common law upon these subjects. The principle derived from that source is very simple. It requires equal justice to all. But the equality which is to be observed consists in the restricted right to charge a reasonable compensation, and no more. If the carrier confines himself to this, no wrong can be done. If, for special reasons in isolated cases, the carrier sees fit to stipulate for the carriage of goods of any class for individuals, for a certain time, or in certain quantities, for a less compensation than what is the usual, necessary, and reasonable rate, he may undoubtedly do so without entitling all parties to the same advantage." In Evershed v. London & N. W. R. Co., supra, Lord Bramwell remarked: "I am not going to lay down a precise rule, but, speaking generally, and subject to qualification, it is open to a railway company to make a bargain with a person, provided they are willing to make the same bargain with any other, though that other may not be in a situation to make it. An obvious illustration may be found in season tickets." The authorities cited seem to me to remove all doubt as to the right of a carrier, by special agreement, to give reduced rates to customers who stipulate to give them all their business, and to refuse these rates to others who are not able or willing to so stipulate, providing, always, that the charge exacted from such parties for the service is not excessive or unreasonable. The principle of equality to all, so earnestly contended for by the learned counsel for the plaintiffs, was not, therefore, violated by the defendants, since they were willing and offered to carry the plaintiffs' goods at the reduced rate, upon the same terms and conditions that these rates were granted to others; and, if the plaintiffs were unable to get the benefit of such rate, it was because, for some reason, they were unable or unwilling to comply with the conditions upon which it was given to their neighbors, and not because the carrier disregarded his duties or obligations to the public. The case of Menacho v. Ward, 27 Fed. Rep. 539, does not apply, because the facts were radically different. That action was to restrain the carrier from exacting unreasonable charges habitually for services, the charges having been advanced as to the parties complaining, for the reason that they had at times employed another line. It decides nothing contrary to the general views here stated. On the contrary, the court expressly recognized the general rule of the common law with respect to the obligations and duties of the carrier substantially as it is herein expressed, as will be seen from the following paragraph in the opinion of Judge Wallace: "Unquestionably, a common carrier is always entitled to a reasonable compensation for his services. Hence it follows that he is not required to treat all those who patronize him with absolute equality. It is his privilege to charge less than a fair compensation to one person, or to a class of persons, and others cannot justly complain so long as he carries on reasonable terms for them. Respecting preference in rates of compensation, his obligation is to charge no more than a fair return in each particular transaction, and, except as thus restricted, he is free to discriminate at pleasure. This is the equal justice to all which the law exacts from the common carrier in his relations with the public."

But it is urged that the plaintiffs were in fact the only shippers of goods from New York to Barbadoes by the El Callao, and therefore the condition imposed that the reduced rate should be granted only to such merchants as stipulated to give the defendants their entire business, while in terms imposed upon the public generally, was in fact aimed at the plaintiffs alone. The trial court refused to find this fact, but, assuming that it appeared from the undisputed evidence, I am unable to see how it could affect the result. The significance which the learned counsel for the plaintiffs seems to give to it in his argument is that it conclusively shows the purpose of the defendants to compel the plaintiffs to withdraw their patronage from the other line, to suppress competition in the business, and to retain a monopoly for their own benefit. Conceding that such was the purpose, it is not apparent how any obligation that the defendants owed to the public was disregarded. We have seen that the defendants might lawfully give reduced rates in special cases, and refuse them in others, where the conditions are different, or to the general public, where the regular rates are reasonable. The purpose of an act which in itself is perfectly lawful, or, under all the circumstances, reasonable, is seldom, if ever, material. Phelps v. Nowlen, 72 N. Y. 89, 28 Am. Rep. 98; Kiff v. Youmans, 86 N. Y. 324, 40 Am. Rep. 548. The mere fact that the transportation business between the two points in question was in the hands of the defendants did not necessarily create a monopoly, if the general rates maintained were reasonable and just. It is not pretended that the owners of the El Callao proposed to give regular service to the general public for any less. When the service is performed for a reasonable and just hire, the public have no interest in the question whether one or many are engaged in it. The monopoly which the law views with disfavor is the manipulation of a business in which the public are interested in such a way as to enable one or a few to control and regulate it in their own interest, and to the detriment of the public, by exacting unreasonable charges. But when an individual or a corporation has established a business of a special and limited character, such as the defendants in this case had, they have a right to retain it by the use of all lawful means. That was what the defendants attempted to do against a competitor that engaged in it, not regularly or permanently, but incidentally and occasionally. The means adopted for this purpose was to offer the service to the public at a loss to themselves whenever the competition was to be met, and, when it disappeared, to resume the standard rates, which, upon the record, did not at any time exceed a reasonable and fair charge. I cannot perceive anything unlawful or against the public good in seeking by such means to retain a business which it does not appear was of sufficient magnitude to furnish employment for both lines. On this branch of the argument the remarks of Lord Coleridge in the case of Mogul S. S. Co.

v. McGregor, supra, are applicable: "The defendants are traders, with enormous sums of money embarked in their adventure, and naturally and allowably desire to reap a profit from their trade. They have a right to push their lawful trades by all lawful means. They have a right to endeavor, by lawful means, to keep their trade in their own hands, and by the same means to exclude others from its benefits, if they can. Amongst lawful means is certainly included the inducing, by profitable offers, customers to deal with them, rather than with their rivals. It follows that they may, if they see fit, endeavor to induce customers to deal with them exclusively by giving notice that only to exclusive customers will they give the advantage of their profitable offers. I do not think it matters that the withdrawal of the advantages is out of all proportion to the injury inflicted by those who withdraw them on the customers who decline to deal exclusively with them dealing with other traders." The courts, I admit, should do nothing to lessen or weaken the restraints which the law imposes upon the carrier, or in any degree to impair his obligation to serve all persons indifferently in his calling, in the absence of a reasonable excuse, and for a reasonable compensation only; but to hold, as we are asked to in this case, that the plaintiffs were entitled to have their goods carried by the defendants at an unprofitable rate, without compliance with the conditions upon which it was granted to all others, and which constituted the motive and inducement for the offer, would be extending these obligations beyond the scope of any established precedent based upon the doctrine of the common law, and would, I think, be contrary to reason and justice.

The judgment of the court below dismissing the complaint was right, and should be affirmed, with costs.

Finch, Gray, and Bartlett, JJ., concur; Peckham, J., dissents; Andrews, Ch. J., not sitting.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

PHENIX INSURANCE COMPANY, of Brooklyn, Plff. in Err.,

v.

OMAHA LOAN & TRUST CO.

(.....Neb.....)

*1. One Crew borrowed of a trust company $4,000, agreeing to repay it in *Headnotes by RAGAN, C.

NOTE.—Rights given by the attachment of a mortgage slip to an insurance policy.

So much uncertainty existed in regard to the rights of the parties when insurance was written upon mortgaged property that in many cases the attempt has been made to provide for such cases by means of a special clause attached to or written in the policy.

25 L. R. A.

five years, with semiannual interest. To secure the payment of this debt, Crew executed to the trust company a mortgage upon his real estate. This mortgage provided that Crew should insure the mortgaged property against loss by fire for five years, for the benefit of the trust company. About the date of the mortgage an insurance company issued to Crew a policy insuring the property against loss by fire for five years. This policy contained the following provisions: (a) "If the property be sold or transferred in whole or in part without written

In some of the states the insurance department has provided a standard form for such clause in the same way that a standard form has been fixed for the policy itself.

In New York the standard mortgage clause is as follows:

"Loss or damage, if any, under this policy, shall be payable to ———, as mortgagee (or trust-

permission in this policy, then, and in every such case, this policy, is void." (b) "When the property shall be sold or incumbered, or otherwise disposed of, written notice shall be given the company of such sale or incumbrance or disposal; otherwise, this insurance on said property shall immediately terminate." Attached to this policy, and made part thereof, was a "mortgage slip," as follows: "It is hereby agreed that this insurance, as to the interest of the mortgagee only therein, shall not be invalidated by any act or neglect of the mortgagor or owner of the property insured, nor by the occupation of the premises for purposes more hazardous than are permitted by this policy. It is further agreed that the mortgagee shall notify said company of any change of ownership or increase of hazard which shall come to the knowledge of the said mortgagee, and that every increase of hazard not permitted by this policy to the mortgagor or owner shall be paid for by the mortgagee on reasonable demand, according to the established scale of rates, for the whole term of use of such increased hazard. It is also agreed that whenever, the company shall pay the mortgagee any sum for loss under this policy, and shall claim that, as to the mortgagor or owner, no liability therefor existed, it shall at once be legally subrogated to all the rights of the mortgagee under all the securities held as collateral to the mortgage debt, to the extent of such payment, or, at its option, may pay to the mortgagee the whole principal due or to grow due on the mortgage, with interest, and shall thereupon receive a full assignment and transfer of the mortgage and all other securities held as collateral to the mortgage debt; but no such subrogation shall impair the right of the mortgagee to recover the full amount of its claim." The policy, on its issuance, was delivered to the trust company, which retained the possession and title thereof. Crew sold and conveyed the mortgaged property without the written permission of the insurance company, and of which sale the latter had no notice of any kind until after the insured property was destroyed by fire. The trust company learned of the conveyance of the property soon after it occurred, but neglected to notify the in-tee), as interest may appear, and this insurance as to the interest of the mortgagee (or trustee) only therein, shall not be invalidated by any act or neglect of the mortgagor or of the within described property, nor by any foreclosure or other proceedings or notice of sale relating to the property, nor by any change in the title or ownership of the property, nor by any occupation of the premises for purposes more hazardous than are permitted by this policy: Provided, that in case the mortgagor or owner shall neglect to pay any premium due under this policy, the mortgagee (or trustee) shall, on demand, pay the same.

"Provided also, that the mortgagee (or trustee), shall notify this association of any change of ownership or occupancy or increase of hazard which shall come to the knowledge of such mortgagee (or trustee) and, unless permitted by this policy, it shall be noted thereon and the mortgagee (or trustee) shall, on demand, pay the premium for such increased hazard for the term of the use thereof; otherwise this policy shall be null and void.

"This association reserves the right to cancel this policy at any time as provided by its terms, but in such case this policy shall continue in force for the benefit only of the mortgagee (or trustee) for ten days after notice to the mortgagee (or trustee) of such cancellation and shall then cease, and this association shall have the right, on like notice, to cancel this agreement.

"Whenever this association shall pay the mortgagee (or trustee) any sum for loss or damage under this policy and shall claim that as to the mortgagor or owner, no liability therefor existed, this association shall to the extent of such payment, be thereupon legally subrogated to all the rights of the party to whom such payment shall be made, under all securities held as collateral to the mortgage debt, or may, at its option, pay to the mortgagee (or trustee) the whole principal due or to grow due on the mortgage with interest, and shall thereupon receive a full assignment and transfer of the mortgage and of all such other securities; but no subrogation shall impair the right of the mortgagee (or trustee) to recover the full amount of his claim."

An additional clause has been inserted in the mortgage clause which is now used by some companies. It is known as the full contribution clause and is as follows:

"In case of any other insurance upon the within described property this company shall not be liable under this policy for a greater proportion of any loss or damage sustained than the sum hereby insured bears to the whole amount of insurance on 25 L. R. A.

said property, issued to or held by any party or parties having an insurable interest therein, whether as owner, mortgagee, or otherwise."

In EDDY v. LONDON ASSUR. CO., post. 688, some of the policies contained the full contribution clause while others did not.

Most of the mortgage clauses in use conform quite closely to those given above.

The mortgage clause is legal. Westchester F. Ins. Co. v. Coverdale, 48 Kan. 444.

Rights of mortgagees.

The construction of this clause has been quite uniformly favorable to the mortgagee.

It seems to have settled the question that the mortgagee may maintain an action in his own name for the loss sustained by him. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Olcott, 97 Ill. 442.

And the mortgagor cannot maintain an action on the policy unless the mortgage debt has been paid, or he has authority from the mortgagee to do so. Westchester F. Ins. Co. v. Coverdale, supra.

So in a case in which a bank had an agreement with the insurance company as to all policies assigned to it which was practically the same as the New York mortgage clause, the court held that under such contract the mortgagee was entitled to maintain an action on the policy in its own name. Meriden Sav. Bank v. Home Mut. F. Ins. Co. 60 Conn. 386.

The legal effect of the mortgage clause is that the insurer agrees that in case of loss it will pay the money directly to the mortgagee, and recognizes him as a distinct party in interest. It creates a new contract with the mortgagee. Hastings v. Westchester F. Ins. Co. 78 N. Y. 141.

The acts of the mortgagor will not affect the rights of the mortgagee. Eliot Five Cents Sav. Bank v. Commercial U. Assur. Co. 143 Mass. 142.

The mortgagee is not to be affected by additional insurance taken by the mortgagor. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Olcott, supra.

The mortgagee is not affected by the mortgagor's obtaining more insurance than the amount permitted, even though the policies are in his possession, or though the insurance is taken out by him at the mortgagor's request. Mutual F. Ins. Co. of New York v. Alvord, 61 Fed. Rep. 764.

The fact that the mortgagee proceeds to make the repairs will not prevent its recovering on the policy, if the insurer never gives notice of its intention to do so. Eliot Five Cents Sav. Bank v. Commercial U. Assur. Co. supra.

The policy as to the mortgagee is not avoided by the sale of the property by the mortgagor to a insurance company thereof until after the fire. Prior to the destruction of the insured property by fire the trust company sold and assigned the mortgage debt, guaranteeing the collection and payment thereof, but did not assign the insurance policy, or part with its possession. The mortgage debt was unpaid and not due at the time of the destruction of the insured property. The trust company brought suit against the insurance company to recover the amount of the loss. While this action was pending the mortgage debt matured, and the trust company, in pursuance of its contract of guaranty, paid it off. Held: (1) That neither the sale and conveyance of the mortgaged property by Crew without the permission of the insurance company, nor his failure to give the insurance company notice thereof, voided the policy as to the trust company. (2) That the status of the trust company was not that of a mere assignee of the insurance policy issued to

Crew, nor that of a person appointed to collect the loss for him; that the policy contained a contract between the insurance company and the trust company separate and independent from the contract between Crew and the insurance company; and that the rights of the trust company could not be made to depend upon Crew's observance of his agreements with the insurance company. (3) That the neglect of the trust company to notify the insurance company of the sale of the mortgaged property did not void the policy as to the trust company.

2. That as by the terms of the insurance policy the loss was made payable to the trust company, and as it owned and held possession of the policy, and had guaranteed the payment of the mortgage debt, the suit was properly brought in its name, although the assignee of the mortgage debt was also a proper party plaintiff.

third person, nor by the latter's taking out additional insurance; nor is the mortgagee bound to pro rata with the latter policy. City Five Cents Sav. Bank v. Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. 122 Mass. 165.

The mortgagee may furnish the proofs of loss. Graham v. Firemen's Ins. Co. 8 Daly, 421.

But it has been held that the attachment of the mortgage clause to the policy after it has become void because of the acts of the mortgagor and after the mortgagee has entered for breach of condition, will give the mortgagee no rights under the policy. Davis v. German American Ins. Co. 135 Mass. 251.

The clause has no application to the case of a misrepresentation by an agent of a mortgagee as to the owner of the property. And his interest will not be protected in case of such misrepresentation. Graham v. Firemen's Ins. Co. 87 N. Y. 60, 41 Am. Rep. 348.

So if the mortgagee fails to notify the insurer of increase of hazard or change of ownership which came to his attention, the mortgage clause ceases to protect him. Ormsby v. Phoenix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn (S. Dak.) March 8, 1894.

So if the mortgagee applies for a renewal of the policy and fails to disclose increased hazard which has arisen since the original policy was issued and which is known to him, he is not protected by the mortgage clause. Cold v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 99 N. Y. 58.

And in National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co. v. Union Ins. Co. of San Francisco, 88 Cal. 497, although the question was not directly passed upon, it seems to be intimated that failure by the mortgagee to notify the insurer of increase of risk would take away its rights under the mortgage clause.

While the time for redemption has not elapsed, the fact that the mortgagee has bid in the property at foreclosure sale, and credited the amounts of the bid on its debt will not reduce the amount of its debt so as to reduce the amount which the insurer will be compelled to pay under the policy. National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co. v. Union Ins. Co. of San Francisco, supra.

Rights of the mortgagor and his grantees.

The mortgagor, after the policy has become void as to him, cannot compel the application of the amount recovered on it in satisfaction of the mortgage. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Allen, 43 N. Y. 389, 3 Am. Rep. 711.

After the policy has become void as to the mortgagor, he cannot acquire any interest under it by making an assignment from the mortgagee. Lett v. Guardian F. Ins. Co. 62 Hun, 570, 125 N. Y. 82.
35 L. R. A.

If the mortgagor's vendee procures additional insurance with an agreement between both companies as to prorating in case of loss, the mortgagor has no interest in the original policy, because of his liability on the bond, to compel the first insurers to pay the mortgagee the face of their policy free from deduction because of the additional insurance. Phoenix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn v. Floyd, 19 Hun, 237.

After the mortgagor has conveyed the property in violation of the terms of the policy neither he nor his vendee can compel an application of the proceeds of the policy to the satisfaction of the mortgage. Sterling F. Ins. Co. v. Beffrey, 48 Minn. 9.

If the policy is avoided by the act of the owner, a second mortgagee cannot have an interest in the insurance if the insurer has paid the mortgagee's claim and taken an assignment of the mortgage in accordance with the terms of the policy. Allen v. Watertown F. Ins. Co. 133 Mass. 433.

The subrogation clause.

To entitle the insurer to subrogation under the terms of the clause the facts must be such that as against the mortgagor there would be by the terms of the policy an actual exemption from liability. Traders' Ins. Co. v. Rhee, 142 Ill. 388.

To entitle the insurer to the benefit of the subrogation clause upon tender of the amount of the mortgagee's loss so as to put the mortgagee in default for refusing to assign the mortgage to it, it must make the tender within a reasonable time and before it has compelled the mortgagee to bring suit on the policy. Eliot Five Cents Sav. Bank v. Commercial U. Assur. Co. 142 Mass. 142.

If the clause simply provides that no sale of the property shall affect the right of the mortgagee to recover in case of loss under this policy, without any provision as to the right of subrogation, there can be no subrogation in favor of the insurance company. Graves v. Hampden F. Ins. Co. 10 Allen, 231.

The prorating clause.

A stipulation that in case of other insurance the insurer shall not be liable for a greater proportion of any loss than the sum hereby insured bears on the whole amount of insurance upon the property issued to or held by any person having an insurable interest therein, whether as owner, mortgagee, or otherwise, does not apply in case the same company issues two policies on the same day, one with the mortgage clause, and the other directly to the mortgagor without such clause. Crow v. Greenwich Ins. Co. 66 Hun, 54.
H. P. F.

permission in this policy, then, and in every such case, this policy, is void." (b) "When the property shall be sold or incumbered, or otherwise disposed of, written notice shall be given the company of such sale or incumbrance or disposal; otherwise, this insurance on said property shall immediately terminate." Attached to this policy, and made part thereof, was a "mortgage slip," as follows: "It is hereby agreed that this insurance, as to the interest of the mortgagee only therein, shall not be invalidated by any act or neglect of the mortgagor or owner of the property insured, nor by the occupation of the premises for purposes more hazardous than are permitted by this policy. It is further agreed that the mortgagee shall notify said company of any change of ownership or increase of hazard which shall come to the knowledge of the said mortgagee, and that every increase of hazard not permitted by this policy to the mortgagor or owner shall be paid for by the mortgagee on reasonable demand, according to the established scale of rates, for the whole term of use of such increased hazard. It is also agreed that whenever, the company shall pay the mortgagee any sum for loss under this policy, and shall claim that, as to the mortgagor or owner, no liability therefor existed, it shall at once be legally subrogated to all the rights of the mortgagee under all the securities held as collateral to the mortgage debt, to the extent of such payment, or, at its option, may pay to the mortgagee the whole principal due or to grow due on the mortgage, with interest, and shall thereupon receive a full assignment and transfer of the mortgage and all other securities held as collateral to the mortgage debt; but no such subrogation shall impair the right of the mortgagee to recover the full amount of its claim." The policy, on its issuance, was delivered to the trust company, which retained the possession and title thereof. Crew sold and conveyed the mortgaged property without the written permission of the insurance company, and of which sale the latter had no notice of any kind until after the insured property was destroyed by fire. The trust company learned of the conveyance of the property soon after it occurred, but neglected to notify the in-tee), as interest may appear, and this insurance as to the interest of the mortgagee (or trustee) only therein, shall not be invalidated by any act or neglect of the mortgagor or of the within described property, nor by any foreclosure or other proceedings or notice of sale relating to the property, nor by any change in the title or ownership of the property, nor by any occupation of the premises for purposes more hazardous than are permitted by this policy: Provided, that in case the mortgagor or owner shall neglect to pay any premium due under this policy, the mortgagee (or trustee) shall, on demand, pay the same.

"Provided also, that the mortgagee (or trustee), shall notify this association of any change of ownership or occupancy or increase of hazard which shall come to the knowledge of such mortgagee (or trustee) and, unless permitted by this policy, it shall be noted thereon and the mortgagee (or trustee) shall, on demand, pay the premium for such increased hazard for the term of the use thereof; otherwise this policy shall be null and void.

"This association reserves the right to cancel this policy at any time as provided by its terms, but in such case this policy shall continue in force for the benefit only of the mortgagee (or trustee) for ten days after notice to the mortgagee (or trustee) of such cancellation and shall then cease, and this association shall have the right, on like notice, to cancel this agreement.

"Whenever this association shall pay the mortgagee (or trustee) any sum for loss or damage under this policy and shall claim that as to the mortgagor or owner, no liability therefor existed, this association shall to the extent of such payment, be thereupon legally subrogated to all the rights of the party to whom such payment shall be made, under all securities held as collateral to the mortgage debt, or may, at its option, pay to the mortgagee (or trustee) the whole principal due or to grow due on the mortgage with interest, and shall thereupon receive a full assignment and transfer of the mortgage and of all such other securities; but no subrogation shall impair the right of the mortgagee (or trustee) to recover the full amount of his claim."

An additional clause has been inserted in the mortgage clause which is now used by some companies. It is known as the full contribution clause and is as follows:

"In case of any other insurance upon the within described property this company shall not be liable under this policy for a greater proportion of any loss or damage sustained than the sum hereby insured bears to the whole amount of insurance on 25 L. R. A.

said property, issued to or held by any party or parties having an insurable interest therein, whether as owner, mortgagee, or otherwise."

In EDDY v. LONDON ASSUR. CO., post, 685, some of the policies contained the full contribution clause while others did not.

Most of the mortgage clauses in use conform quite closely to those given above.

The mortgage clause is legal. Westchester F. Ins. Co. v. Coverdale, 48 Kan. 448.

Rights of mortgagees.

The construction of this clause has been quite uniformly favorable to the mortgagee.

It seems to have settled the question that the mortgagee may maintain an action in his own name for the loss sustained by him. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Olcott, 97 Ill. 448.

And the mortgagor cannot maintain an action on the policy unless the mortgage debt has been paid, or he has authority from the mortgagee to do so. Westchester F. Ins. Co. v. Coverdale, supra.

So in a case in which a bank had an agreement with the insurance company as to all policies assigned to it which was practically the same as the New York mortgage clause, the court held that under such contract the mortgagee was entitled to maintain an action on the policy in its own name. Meriden Sav. Bank v. Home Mut. F. Ins. Co., 50 Conn. 306.

The legal effect of the mortgage clause is that the insurer agrees that in case of loss it will pay the money directly to the mortgagee, and recognizes him as a distinct party in interest. It creates a new contract with the mortgagee. Hastings v. Westchester F. Ins. Co., 73 N. Y. 141.

The acts of the mortgagor will not affect the rights of the mortgagee. Eliot Five Cents Sav. Bank v. Commercial U. Assur. Co., 143 Mass. 142.

The mortgagee is not to be affected by additional insurance taken by the mortgagor. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Olcott, supra.

The mortgagee is not affected by the mortgagor's obtaining more insurance than the amount permitted, even though the policies are in his possession, or though the insurance is taken out by him at the mortgagor's request. Mutual F. Ins. Co. of New York v. Alvord, 61 Fed. Rep. 754.

The fact that the mortgagee proceeds to make the repairs will not prevent its recovering on the policy, if the insurer never gives notice of its intention to do so. Eliot Five Cents Sav. Bank v. Commercial U. Assur. Co., supra.

The policy as to the mortgagee is not avoided by the sale of the property by the mortgagor to a

insurance company thereof until after the fire. Prior to the destruction of the insured property by fire the trust company sold and assigned the mortgage debt, guaranteeing the collection and payment thereof, but did not assign the insurance policy, or part with its possession. The mortgage debt was unpaid and not due at the time of the destruction of the insured property. The trust company brought suit against the insurance company to recover the amount of the loss. While this action was pending the mortgage debt matured, and the trust company, in pursuance of its contract of guaranty, paid it off. Held: (1) That neither the sale and conveyance of the mortgaged property by Crew without the permission of the insurance company, nor his failure to give the insurance company notice thereof, voided the policy as to the trust company. (2) That the status of the trust company was not that of a mere assignee of the insurance policy issued to

Crew, nor that of a person appointed to collect the loss for him; that the policy contained a contract between the insurance company and the trust company separate and independent from the contract between Crew and the insurance company; and that the rights of the trust company could not be made to depend upon Crew's observance of his agreements with the insurance company. (3) That the neglect of the trust company to notify the insurance company of the sale of the mortgaged property did not void the policy as to the trust company.

2. That as by the terms of the insurance policy the loss was made payable to the trust company, and as it owned and held possession of the policy, and had guaranteed the payment of the mortgage debt, the suit was properly brought in its name, although the assignee of the mortgage debt was also a proper party plaintiff.

third person, nor by the latter's taking out additional insurance; nor is the mortgagee bound to pro rate with the latter policy. City Five Cents Sav. Bank v. Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. 122 Mass. 165.

The mortgagee may furnish the proofs of loss. Graham v. Firemen's Ins. Co. 8 Daly, 421.

But it has been held that the attachment of the mortgage clause to the policy after it has become void because of the acts of the mortgagor and after the mortgagee has entered for breach of condition, will give the mortgagee no rights under the policy. Davis v. German American Ins. Co. 135 Mass. 251.

The clause has no application to the case of a misrepresentation by an agent of a mortgagee as to the owner of the property. And his interest will not be protected in case of such misrepresentation. Graham v. Firemen's Ins. Co. 87 N. Y. 69, 41 Am. Rep. 848.

So if the mortgagee fails to notify the insurer of increase of hazard or change of ownership which came to his attention, the mortgage clause ceases to protect him. Ormsby v. Phoenix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn (S. Dak.) March 8, 1894.

So if the mortgagee applies for a renewal of the policy and fails to disclose increased hazard which has arisen since the original policy was issued and which is known to him, he is not protected by the mortgage clause. Cold v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 99 N. Y. 36.

And in National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co. v. Union Ins. Co. of San Francisco, 88 Cal. 497, although the question was not directly passed upon, it seems to be intimated that failure by the mortgagee to notify the insurer of increase of risk would take away its rights under the mortgage clause.

While the time for redemption has not elapsed, the fact that the mortgagee has bid in the property at foreclosure sale, and credited the amounts of the bid on its debt will not reduce the amount of its debt so as to reduce the amount which the insurer will be compelled to pay under the policy. National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co. v. Union Ins. Co. of San Francisco, supra.

Rights of the mortgagor and his grantees.

The mortgagor, after the policy has become void as to him, cannot compel the application of the amount recovered on it in satisfaction of the mortgage. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Allen, 43 N. Y. 889, 3 Am. Rep. 711.

After the policy has become void as to the mortgagor, he cannot acquire any interest under it by making an assignment from the mortgagee. Lett v. Guardian F. Ins. Co. 53 Hun, 570, 125 N. Y. 62, 25 L. R. A.

If the mortgagor's vendee procures additional insurance with an agreement between both companies as to prorating in case of loss, the mortgagor has no interest in the original policy, because of his liability on the bond, to compel the first insurers to pay the mortgagee the face of their policy free from deduction because of the additional insurance. Phoenix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn v. Floyd, 19 Hun, 287.

After the mortgagor has conveyed the property in violation of the terms of the policy neither he nor his vendee can compel an application of the proceeds of the policy to the satisfaction of the mortgage. Sterling F. Ins. Co. v. Beffrey, 48 Minn. 2.

If the policy is avoided by the act of the owner, a second mortgagee cannot have an interest in the insurance if the insurer has paid the mortgagee's claim and taken an assignment of the mortgage in accordance with the terms of the policy. Allen v. Watertown F. Ins. Co. 138 Mass. 433.

The subrogation clause.

To entitle the insurer to subrogation under the terms of the clause the facts must be such that as against the mortgagor there would be by the terms of the policy an actual exemption from liability. Traders' Ins. Co. v. Race, 142 Ill. 388.

To entitle the insurer to the benefit of the subrogation clause upon tender of the amount of the mortgagee's loss so as to put the mortgagee in default for refusing to assign the mortgage to it, it must make the tender within a reasonable time and before it has compelled the mortgagee to bring suit on the policy. Eliot Five Cents Sav. Bank v. Commercial U. Assur. Co. 142 Mass. 142.

If the clause simply provides that no sale of the property shall affect the right of the mortgagee to recover in case of loss under this policy, without any provision as to the right of subrogation, there can be no subrogation in favor of the insurance company. Graves v. Hampden F. Ins. Co. 10 Allen, 231.

The prorating clause.

A stipulation that in case of other insurance the insurer shall not be liable for a greater proportion of any loss than the sum hereby insured bears on the whole amount of insurance upon the property issued to or held by any person having an insurable interest therein, whether as owner, mortgagee, or otherwise, does not apply in case the same company issues two policies on the same day, one with the mortgage clause, and the other directly to the mortgagor without such clause. Crow v. Greenwich Ins. Co. 66 Hun, 54.

H. P. F.

an insurance of the interest of the owner of the property solely; that such owner was the assured, and the defendant only agreed to make good the loss of such owner, and inasmuch as another policy existed at the time in favor of such owner, although entirely unknown to both the plaintiffs and the defendant, the latter was entitled to the benefit of the condition contained in this policy, which declares that in case of any other insurance . . . the assured is entitled to recover no greater proportion of the loss sustained than the sum insured bears to the whole amount insured thereon. This position cannot, I think, be maintained. Prior to the time when the mortgage clause was entered upon the policy, the word 'assured' referred to the owner, and it is hardly to be assumed that the mortgagees would have accepted such a provision if there was any reason to suppose that they would be affected by any prior insurance. They would, no doubt, have demanded a separate policy as mortgagees, instead of trusting to the hazard and uncertainty of pursuing a remedy upon a policy of which they had no knowledge, and against a company to which they were strangers, and in regard to whose responsibility they had no information whatever. The legal effect of the mortgage clause was that the defendant agreed that in case of loss it would pay the money directly to the mortgagees, and they were thus recognized as a distinct party in interest. It created a new contract from that time with the mortgagees, the terms of which most clearly indicate that it had no relation to the application of the condition referred to. The insurance had been to the owner, and the additional provisions, which were incorporated in the policy by the mortgage clause, created a distinct contract with the mortgagees. It was an independent agreement, partaking in no sense of the character of an assignment of a policy of insurance, but one in which the mortgagees were recognized as a separate party, having distinct rights, and entitled to receive the full amount of insurance money, without any regard whatever to the owner of the property. The meaning of the word 'assured' has not been changed by the addition of the mortgage clause, the object of which evidently was to protect the mortgagees against the effect of the provision in which the word is employed. The interest of the latter was distinct and separate when this change in the policy was made, and the intention of the parties was, beyond question, to insure the plaintiffs under a new contract. Any different interpretation would lead to great injustice, and place the mortgagees under the control and at the mercy of the owner, by changing the character of the defendant's liability, which might operate to prevent the indemnity which the defendant intended to provide. If the condition referred to was in force either before or after the arrangement, the owner might effect other insurance, and thus jeopard the rights, if not entirely control the security, of the plaintiffs." All that is said by Miller, J., in the Westchester Case, is applicable to the case at bar. In this case the insurance company, by the mortgage slip, stipulated that the rights of the trust company should not be invalidated by any act or neglect of the mortgagee or owner of the insured property. Reading the entire policy together, the only reasonable construction that can be placed upon it is that it was never the intention of the insurance company or of the trust company that the rights of the latter should be made in any manner to depend upon any act or omission of Crew, the mortgagee and original owner of the insured property.

In Westchester F. Ins. Co. v. Coverdale, 48 Kan. 446, a policy substantially like the one in controversy here was considered by the supreme court of Kansas; and in deciding the rights of a mortgagee to whom, by a mortgage slip attached to the policy, the loss was made payable, that court said: "The mortgage clause [slip] created an independent and a new contract, which removes the mortgagees beyond the control of the effect of any act or neglect of the owner of the property, and renders such mortgagees parties who have a distinct interest, separate from the owner, embraced in another and a different contract. The tendency of the recent cases is to recognize these distinctions and thus protect the rights of the mortgagee, when named in the policy, and the interests of the owner and of the mortgagee are regarded as distinct subjects of insurance." In City Fire Cents Sav. Bank v. Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co., 123 Mass. 165, the supreme court of Massachusetts had under consideration a policy substantially like the one in suit, and, in discussing the rights of a mortgagee to recover on the policy notwithstanding the violation of its terms by the owner, said: "But the [insurance] company has made a special contract with the plaintiff, by the fair construction of which we think it is entitled to recover the whole loss proved in this case, it being less than its debt. The [insurance] company has agreed that 'no sale or transfer of the property hereby insured shall vitiate the right of the mortgagee to recover in case of loss.' A necessary consequence of a sale and transfer of the property is that the purchaser has a right to insure his interest. Such right is an incident of his ownership. The object of the special stipulation which the mortgagee took care to procure was to secure the insurance of its interest as mortgagee, and to avoid its defeat by any sale or transfer of the property; and, by a fair interpretation of the contract, it means that its right to recover shall not be vitiated by any of the natural consequences or incidents of a sale or transfer. Otherwise, the stipulation is of very slight value to the mortgagee." In Harford F. Ins. Co. v. Olcott, 97 Ill. 439, the facts were: The owner of property procured a policy of insurance on the buildings thereof in his own name, for his own benefit, and for the benefit of a bank to which he owed a debt secured by a mortgage on the insured property. This mortgage required the owner to insure the property for the benefit of the bank. The policy provided that in case of loss the insurance company should pay the amount of it to a trustee named in the mortgage, for the benefit of the bank or the holder of the note. The policy also provided that the owner might procure additional insurance, but that in case he did so, and loss occurred, he should not be entitled to recover of the Hartford Insurance Company any greater proportion of the loss than the amount insured by its policy bore to the whole sum insured. The policy also provided that in case of loss, and a failure of the insurance company and the insured to agree upon the amount thereof, the controversy should be submitted to arbitration. There was a mortgage clause or mortgage slip attached to the policy, containing substantially the provisions of the mortgage slip made a part of the policy in controversy here. The owner of the property procured additional insurance thereon. A loss occurred, and the owner and the insurance company arbitrated the amount thereof. The insurance company having refused to pay the amount of loss to Olcott, the trustee in the mortgage held by the bank, this suit resulted. The supreme court of Illinois decided that the owner and the bank held distinct interests under the policy, it being in substance two contracts; that the owner, in a suit on the policy for a loss, would be limited to a recovery of a pro rata share of the company, when prorated with the amounts of the subsequent policies, and would be bound by his act of submitting the amount of damages to appraisal, but the bank, in a suit by it or its trustees, would not be limited to a recovery of the insurance company's prorated share, with the other companies issuing the subsequent policies, nor would it be bound by the selection of appraisers in which it did not join, and that it had no control over the acts of the mortgagor, and was not bound by his acts or neglect.

In the case at bar, if the trust company was suing simply as the assignee of Crew, then its right to recover would depend upon whether Crew could recover, or if, by the insurance policy, the trust company had been named as a party to whom the loss should be paid, as the agent or trustee of Crew, then its right to recover would depend upon whether Crew could enforce the policy. But the trust company does not stand in either of these relations in this case. It had an interest in the assured property, in that it had a lien upon it, and stands here to enforce rights of its own under the contract between it and the insurance company.

2. As already stated, one of the terms of the policy, or the mortgage slip made a part thereof, was that the trust company would notify the insurance company of any change of ownership of the insured property, or increase of hazard thereto, which should come to the knowledge of the trust company. The trust company learned of the conveyance of the property by Crew to Platter soon after it occurred, but neglected to notify the insurance company thereof. The second argument of counsel for the insurance company is that, because of the failure of the trust company to notify the insurance company of the change of ownership of the insured property, the trust company has lost its right to enforce the policy. It is not claimed that the transfer of the property in any manner increased the hazard of the risk. So we have the question as to whether the neglect of the trust company to notify the insurance company that Crew had conveyed the property worked a forfeiture of the rights of the trust company to enforce the policy. The policy does not provide when the mortgagee shall give this notice, nor is there any provision in the policy or mortgage slip to the effect that in case the mortgagee comes into possession of knowledge that the hazard of the risk has been increased, or that the property has been conveyed, and neglects to notify the insurance company thereof, the policy shall therefore be void. We are not prepared to say that such a provision could be enforced if it was contained in the policy. There is no claim here on the part of the insurance company that it has suffered any injury or damage by reason of the neglect of the trust company in this respect. The insurance company has received a premium for carrying this risk for five years, and we do not think that it should be allowed to escape compliance with its contract because the trust company has neglected to perform an immaterial promise on its part, and which neglect of the trust company has worked no injury whatever to the insurance company. Hastings v. Westchester F. Ins. Co. 73 N. Y. 141.

3. The third point relied upon by counsel for the insurance company for reversing this case is that this suit was not brought in the name of the real party in interest. We have already seen that the policy contained a separate and independent contract between the insurance company and the trust company, and that the trust company had an interest in the insured property. By the terms of this contract the policy, when issued, was delivered to the trust company, and it has never parted with its possession or the title to it since. "Where, by a policy of fire insurance, the loss is made payable to a third person as his interest may appear, the language imparts an interest in the property in such third person to the extent of his interest. The insurance is for his benefit, and he or his assignee may maintain an action upon the policy in case of loss." Pitney v. Glens Falls Ins. Co. 65 N. Y. 6. In this case Crew, had he never conveyed the insured property, could not have maintained an action against the insurance company to recover this loss, at least without showing that he had paid and discharged the mortgage debt. Westchester F. Ins. Co. v. Overdale, 48 Kan. 446. At the time the suit was brought, Huey, the owner of the mortgage debt, may have been a proper party plaintiff, but that question was not raised in the court below, and is not raised here. Furthermore, Huey, by assigning the mortgage debt to the trust company during the pendency of the action, parted with all his interest, if he had any, in the subject-matter of this action and disqualified himself from being a party thereto. The trust company, by assigning the mortgage debt to Huey, did not thereby assign him the insurance policy, nor part with its interest in it, nor its right to enforce it. As the trust company guaranteed the collection and payment of the mortgage debt, it still had such an interest in the insured property as entitled it, in case of a loss, to sue for a recovery, and at the time the judgment was rendered the only party that could have maintained this action was the trust company. Blackwell v. Miami Valley Ins. Co.

48 Ohio St. 533, 14 L. R. A. 481; Oene v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 60 N. Y. 619; Weed v. Hamburg-Bremen F. Ins. Co. 133 N. Y. 394; Westchester F. Ins. Co. v. Coverdale, supra. There is no error in the record, and the judgment of the district court is affirmed.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

Fred C. EDDY, Receiver of the Syracuse Screw Company,

v.
LONDON ASSURANCE CORPORATION,
Appt.,

and
Giles EVERSON, Resp't.
(And Six Other Cases.)

(143 N. Y. 311.)

1. A mortgagee may properly proceed to judgment and sale in a foreclosure suit which was pending when a loss by fire occurred, unless payment of his mortgage debt is made, under a policy stipulating that his interest in the insurance shall not be invalidated by foreclosure, although it also provides for subrogation of the insurer to his rights under the mortgage with a proviso that it shall not impair his right to recover the full amount of his claim.

2. A provision that a mortgagee's interest in a policy of insurance shall not be "invalidated" by any act of the owner means that it shall not be injuriously "impaired or affected" thereby, and prevents the reduction of his recovery on account of other insurance taken without his knowledge by reason of a provision that the insurer shall be liable only in proportion that the sum insured by the policy bears to the whole amount of insurance issued to or held by any party or parties having an insurable interest.

3. Invalid insurance taken by the owner of property in violation of a policy cannot be reckoned in determining the recovery of a mortgagee, where the policy provides that his interest shall not be invalidated by any act of the owner, although it provides generally that the insurer shall be liable only for its proportion of the loss according to the whole amount of insurance on the property.

(October 9, 1894.)

A PPEAL by the defendant insurance company from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, Fourth Department, modifying and affirming as modified a judgment entered in the office of the clerk of Onondaga county, in favor of defendant Everson, in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on certain policies of fire insurance upon property in which Everson had an interest as mortgagee. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. A. H. Sawyer, for appellants;

The defendant insurance companies upon

NOTE.—For construction of the mortgage clause, see note to the case immediately preceding this one.

25 L. R. A.

payment to the defendant Everson of the amount due under their policies of insurance were entitled to be subrogated, to the extent of such payment, to all the rights of Everson, as mortgagee, under all securities held by him as collateral to the mortgage debt, as such securities existed on the day when the loss occurred.

Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Allen, 48 N. Y. 389, 3 Am. Rep. 711; Ulster County Sav. Inst. v. Leake, 78 N. Y. 161, 29 Am. Rep. 115; Foster v. Van Reed, 70 N. Y. 19, 26 Am. Rep. 544; Excelsior F. Ins. Co. v. Royal Ins. Co. of Liverpool, 55 N. Y. 343, 14 Am. Rep. 271; Kip v. Mutual F. Ins. Co. 4 Edw. Ch. 86, 6 L. ed. 807; Connecticut F. Ins. Co. v. Erie R. Co. 73 N. Y. 399, 29 Am. Rep. 171; Dick v. Franklin F. Ins. Co. of Philadelphia, 81 Mo. 108.

The agreement on the part of the insurance company to pay in case of loss is concurrent with the agreement upon the part of the mortgagee to subrogate the company, on such payment, to the extent thereof, to all his rights under securities held by him for the payment of the mortgage debt, and the defendant Everson the mortgagee, having by foreclosure of the mortgages and the sale of the property subsequent to the fire, put it out of his power to subrogate the insurance companies to the rights which he had under such securities at the time of the fire, he cannot recover in this action against the defendants, the insurance companies.

Lett v. Guardian F. Ins. Co. 52 Hun, 570, affirmed, 125 N. Y. 82; Fayerweather v. Phenix Ins. Co. 6 L. R. A. 805, 118 N. Y. 324; Dilling v. Draemel, 80 N. Y. S. R. 485, 16 Daly, 104; Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. Fidelity Title & Trust Co. 123 Pa. 516; Carstairs v. Mechanic's & Traders' Ins. Co. of New York, 18 Fed. Rep. 478; Sussex County Mut. Ins. Co. v. Woodruff, 26 N. J. L. 541; May, Ins. 2d ed. § 458; Thomas v. Montauk F. Ins. Co. 43 Hun, 218.

The contract of insurance being one of indemnity merely where the interest of a mortgagee is specially insured as such, the insurer would on payment of the loss to the mortgagee, be entitled by law, irrespective of any agreement, to be subrogated to that extent to all securities held by the mortgagee for the payment of the debt.

Sussex County Mut. Ins. Co. v. Woodruff, supra; Anna F. Ins. Co. v. Tyler, 18 Wend. 397, 30 Am. Dec. 90.

Where the language of a contract is susceptible of two interpretations, that interpretation must be adopted that will give force and validity to the contract.

Archibald v. Thomas, 3 Cow 384.

The language employed in a contract of in-insurance must be taken in the ordinary, popular sense unless it appears to have been used in a technical sense or custom or usage has impressed a different meaning upon it.

Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Allen, 48 N. Y. 394, 8 Am. Rep. 711.

Mr. Watson M. Rogers, with Messrs. Waters, McLennon & Waters, for respondent:

The mortgage clause provides for the payment of the loss to Everson as his interest may appear, "and this insurance as to the interest of the mortgagee (or trustee), only, thereon shall not be invalidated by any act or neglect of the mortgagor or owner of the within described property." This furnishes a complete answer by him to the defense mentioned.

City Five Cents Sav. Bank v. Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. 122 Mass. 165.

The "other insurance" with which the mortgagee must share is such as runs to and is upon the insurable interest held by him; not insurance upon other interests and in favor of other parties.

Adams v. Greenwich Ins. Co. 9 Hun, 45; Crow v. Greenwich Ins. Co. 66 Hun, 54; Titus v. Glens Falls Ins. Co. 81 N. Y. 410; Lowell Mfg. Co. v. Safeguard F. Ins. Co. 88 N. Y. 591.

The mortgagee clause constitutes an independent contract between the insurance company and the mortgagee, and enables him to recover, notwithstanding a violation of the conditions of the policy by the owner.

Hastings v. Westchester F. Ins. Co. 73 N. Y. 141; Eddy v. London Assur. Corp. 65 Hun, 807.

The mortgagee may make any contract with the insurer for the protection of his interests so far as they do not impair the rights of the mortgagor.

Ulster County Sav. Inst. v. Leake, 73 N. Y. 161, 29 Am. Rep. 115; Forster v. Van Reed, 70 N. Y. 19, 26 Am. Rep. 544.

He may collect the amount due on the policy, notwithstanding the property undestroyed is sufficient to pay the mortgage debt.

Essex F. Ins. Co. v. Royal Ins. Co. of Liverpool, 55 N. Y. 844, 14 Am. Rep. 271.

Under the subrogation clause the company is only entitled to subrogation when it "shall pay the mortgagee."

The mortgagee must in any event be paid "the full amount of his claim."

Independently of the contract, the insurer has only an equitable right to be subrogated pro tanto to such rights as the insured himself has in respect to the mortgagee after receiving payment of the loss.

Kernochan v. New York F. Ins. Co. 17 N. Y. 428.

There must first be complete compensation. Beach, Mod. Eq. Jur. § 818; Wood, Ins. § 496, p. 1073, and cases cited.

If the insurance companies desire the benefit of subrogation, either upon the principles of the common law or upon the agreement contained in the policy, they must first pay the mortgagee's debt, assert their right of subrogation, and themselves enforce the judgments which they have thus paid and as to the mortgagee, extinguished.

First Nat. Bank of Buffalo v. Wood, 71 N. Y. 35 L. R. A.

Y. 405, 27 Am. Rep. 66; Platt v. Brick, 85 Hun, 121, and cases cited at p. 124.

Cases where the mortgagee has merely pursued the prescribed remedy to collect, and has obtained only part of his debt, come within the rule that neither omission of an act not specially enjoined by law, nor the commission of an act expressly authorized by law, is a discharge.

§ Wait, Act. & Def. 227; Lamden v. Leonard, 55 Ga. 374; Brandt, Suretyship, § 200.

Peckham, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff commenced the above action against the corporation defendant upon a policy of fire insurance issued by the company by which plaintiff, as receiver, was insured against loss or damage by fire on certain property situated in Syracuse, and formerly owned by the screw company, of that city. The defendant Everson was insured in the same policy as mortgagee, as his mortgage interest might appear. He was joined as defendant, in order that the whole controversy might, as between all the parties, be settled at once. Actions were also commenced against several other insurance companies by the plaintiff, as receiver, at the same time, and to recover upon policies covering substantially the same premises. The questions arising affect generally all the insurance companies, although one or two of such questions are not raised in all the policies. The plaintiff failed to recover, and his complaint was dismissed in the courts below because of the violation of provisions in the policies in regard to procuring other insurance without the companies' consent, and also because of the plaintiff's permitting foreclosure proceedings to be commenced to foreclose certain mortgages upon the insured premises. The plaintiff has not appealed. The defendant Everson and the corporations defendant served cross-answers upon each other, Everson contending that he should be allowed to recover from the companies to the extent of his policies upon his mortgage interest in the premises, while the companies set up several defenses to such claim, which will be noticed hereafter. The cases were referred for trial, and the referee reported in favor of Everson as against the insurance companies, and the judgments were affirmed at the general term of the supreme court after a slight modification as to the amounts of the recovery, and the insurance companies have appealed to this court.

The only questions to be determined arise between defendant Everson and the companies. By the judgment entered upon the report of the referee it is provided in all cases that the insurance companies on making payment of the loss are entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee, but such subrogation is not to impair the mortgagee's right to enforce the collection of his claim in full against the principal debtor, nor by means of any collateral security he may hold. This was placed in the judgments in accordance with the reports of the referee.

1. The companies urge that defendant

Everson, the mortgagee, having foreclosed the mortgages upon the premises, and sold the same under his judgment of foreclosure and sale subsequent to the time of the fire, has thereby put it out of his power to subrogate them to the rights which he had under the securities held by him at the time of the fire, and he therefore cannot recover in this action against them. It appears that the Syracuse Screw Company was the original owner of the premises, and it had given three several mortgages thereon,—one dated August 18, 1881, for $4,500; one dated November 3, 1883, for $14,000; another dated June 30, 1885, for $10,000. The defendant Everson, on the 9th day of June, 1888, was the owner of all of these mortgages, and on that day commenced one action against the screw company to foreclose them. On the 23d of June, 1888, the screw company was dissolved, and Eddy was appointed the receiver. The company was wholly insolvent, and had no property other than the mortgaged premises. In July, 1888, Eddy, as receiver, duly appeared in the foreclosure action, and served an answer setting up a defense to the $10,000 mortgage. On the 4th of December, 1888, a fire occurred by which the property covered by the policies was damaged, and appraisers were appointed on the 18th of December, and on the 21st of December, 1888, they made their award by which they determined the damage resulting to the property from the fire to have been $10,102.90. The companies refused to pay Eddy on the grounds already stated. Everson severed his foreclosure action after Eddy put in his answer setting up a defense as to one of the mortgages, and on the 17th of December, 1888, obtained judgment by default for the foreclosure of the $4,500 and $14,000 mortgages, and decreeing a sale of the premises in satisfaction thereof. Subsequent to the fire, and on the 9th of January, 1889, the property was sold under the foreclosure judgment for the sum of $15,400, leaving a deficiency on those two mortgages, including interest and costs, $4,921.86.

Each of the policies of insurance had a provision therein known as the "New York Standard Mortgage Clause," and under it the loss, if any, was made payable to defendant Everson, as his mortgage interest might appear. The clause contained a provision that the insurance of Everson's interest should not be invalidated by any act or neglect of the mortgagor or owner of the property, nor by any foreclosure or other proceedings or notice of sale relating to the property. The clause also contained the further provision that "whenever this company shall pay the mortgagee (or trustee) any sum for loss or damage under this policy, and shall claim that, as to the mortgagor or owner, no liability therefor existed, this company shall, to the extent of such payment, be thereupon legally subrogated to all the rights of the party to whom such payment shall be made under all securities held as collateral to the mortgage debt, or may, at its option, pay to the mortgagee (or trustee) the whole principal due or to grow due on the mortgage, with interest, and shall thereupon receive a full assignment and transfer of the mortgage and of all such other securities; but no subrogation shall impair the right of the mortgagee (or trustee) to recover the full amount of his claim." The companies did claim that, as to the owner of the premises, no liability existed. They never in any manner consented to the institution of foreclosure proceedings. At the time when they were commenced—June, 1888—no fire had occurred, and the defendant Everson was acting strictly within his legal rights when he commenced them. It must be assumed that the commencement of the foreclosure proceedings terminated any interest which Eddy might have had in the policies up to that time. There was, however, a separate and wholly distinct insurance of the interest of Everson in the property, and by the terms of that contract of insurance it was not to be affected by any act or neglect of the mortgagor or owner of the property, or by any foreclosure or other proceedings, or notice of sale relating to the property. The act which forfeited the interest of the owner in a policy was not to affect the interest of the mortgagee. Consequently the mortgagee violated no contract on his part when he commenced the proceedings to foreclose his mortgage, and thus endeavored to collect his debt. Before he had proceeded so far as a judgment of foreclosure, a fire occurred. What was he to do? Was he bound to stay further proceedings, and accept payment of the amount of his insurance, and then assign to the extent of such payment his rights in the mortgages to the companies? We think not. Such is not the meaning of the clause when read as a whole. Foreclosure proceedings were not to affect his rights. This was expressly provided for and agreed to. Although there was an agreement to subrogate, yet that agreement was also upon the condition that subrogation should not impair the mortgagee's right to recover the full amount of his claim. The two rights must be considered together, and, though subrogation, under certain circumstances, may, under the agreement, be insisted upon, yet, unless payment of his mortgage debt is made, the mortgagee must have the right to proceed with the foreclosure and to a sale of the premises, for otherwise it could not be seen whether a subrogation prior to a sale would not impair his right to recover the full amount of the claim of the mortgagee.

If the insurers desired an immediate subrogation, then they had a right, by the terms of their contract, to pay the whole debt, and take an assignment of the bond and mortgage and whatever other securities the mortgagee might have for the payment of his whole claim, otherwise the insurers must wait if the mortgagee desire to continue the foreclosure. The right of the mortgagee to recover his full claim might be pretty easily impaired if he had to subrogate at once, or, in other words, permit the insurers to collect out of his securities the very amount which they had paid him upon the policies issued to increase his security. It is not the mere right to prosecute which is not to be impaired, but the right to payment in full of his claim. This is not to be impaired by any claim of subrogation. Here is a very apt case in which to illustrate the point. The mortgagee sustains a loss upon the sale under the foreclosure decree of the two mortgages of nearly $5,000. There is the third mortgage, upon which judgment of foreclosure was obtained, and the amount found due thereon was $12,474, and interest runs on that sum from January 15, 1890. The argument of the companies, if allowed, would lead to their sharing in the amount realized upon the foreclosure sale to the extent of the payments made by them on their policies, some $10,000, and the balance, some $5,000, only would be realized by the mortgagee. In other words, he would receive no benefit whatever from the insurance, for the companies would take out of the proceeds of the foreclosure sale precisely the amount they paid him upon the policies of insurance. What meaning is given to the words in the mortgage clause that no subrogation shall impair the right of the mortgagee to recover the full amount of his claim, if subrogation can be insisted upon under such circumstances? Insurance is taken for the purpose of increasing the security of the mortgages. By the construction contended for by the companies there is really no such insurance. If the sale under foreclosure amounts only to the total of the insurance, but does not reach the full sum of the mortgagee's claim, the latter recovers nothing but the insurance money, while the companies are reimbursed their outlay from the proceeds of the foreclosure sale. They lose nothing, and only the mortgagee loses. This consequence is avoided, and, I think, was intended to be avoided, by the provision in question, which makes the right of subrogation dependent upon the fact that its exercise shall not in any manner impair the right of the mortgagee to full payment of his claim. Where the contract provided that it should not impair the mortgagee's right to recover the full amount of his debt, the right to recover meant the right to demand and to receive full payment of his debt or claim. If that right is not impaired by the insurers' right of subrogation, as claimed by them, it is impossible to say under what circumstances it would be impaired. We cannot recognize the correctness of this claim on the part of the insurers.

2. Another question arises in regard to the so-called "contribution." It seems that the plaintiff, Eddy, without the consent of these defendant insurers, procured other insurance upon the property. This additional insurance thus procured rendered the policies of these insurers invalid as to the plaintiff. They contend, nevertheless, that in arriving at the proportion of the loss payable by each of them to the mortgagee, this other insurance should be reckoned as part of the insurance on the property. It was procured by plaintiff without the consent or knowledge of the mortgagee, and was not made payable in any event to him, and did not insure his interest in the property. If the claim of these defendant insurers be allowed, the effect is to reduce the amount which each is liable to pay to the mortgagee, and thereby to lessen his total recovery, as he has no claim under the other and additional policies. The clause under which this claim is made provides in the body of the policy that the insurer "shall not be liable for a greater proportion of any loss on the described premises than the amount thereby insured shall bear to the whole insurance, whether valid or not." I think the courts below were right in rejecting this claim of the insurers. Taken in connection with the language in the mortgage clause, the contract is quite plain. The provision in the latter clause that the insurance of the mortgagee should not be invalidated by any act or neglect of the owner of the property applies, among others, to a case of other insurance of his own interest by the owner without the knowledge or consent of the mortgagee. The effect of the mortgage clause hereinbefore set forth is to make an entirely separate insurance of the mortgagee's interest, and he takes the same benefit from his insurance as if he had received a separate policy from the company, free from the conditions imposed upon the owners. Where the company agreed that the mortgagee's insurance should not be "invalidated" by any act or neglect of the owner of the property, it was not intended to limit the application of that word to a case where the whole policy would otherwise be rendered invalid. The plain and obvious meaning of the language is that the insurance of the mortgagee should not be affected or in any wise impaired or lessened by any act or neglect of the owner. Although contained in the same policy issued to the owner, yet the insurer and the mortgagee were nevertheless entering into a perfectly separate contract of insurance, by which the mortgagee's interest alone was to be insured, and it would be most natural to provide that no act or neglect of the owner should invalidate—that is, impair—any portion of the insurance thus separately secured. Can it for a moment be supposed that a mortgagee would otherwise ever consent to such a contract? His desire is to obtain security, and to that end he insures his interest in the property. Would he knowingly consent that this security should be liable to be wholly frittered away and made valueless by the action of the owner, unknown to him, in procuring insurance upon the owner's interest in the property? Would any sane man agree to hazard his security in such a way? Would he agree that the value of his security should depend upon the acts of a third party over whom he had no control, and of whose acts he might be wholly ignorant? The statement of the proposition is its best refutation. These views are supported by both of the opinions in the case of Hastings v. Westchester F. Ins. Co. 73 N. Y. 141. There is some difference in the verbiage of the clause in the reported case and that to be found in the clause under examination here. In the Hastings Case the clause as to contribution contained the proviso that, in case of other insurance, the assured should recover only a proportionate sum from defendant company. The owner of the property had mortgaged it to plain-tiff's testator, and had subsequently obtained an insurance upon his own interest as owner, and subsequent to that time the indorsement in favor of the mortgagee was made, and it was in the body of the policy issued to the owner that the language was used as to the assured. In the clause here under consideration it is seen that the word "assured" is not there, and the condition is that in case of other insurance the company shall not be liable under the policy, etc. The court in the Hastings Case thought the word "assured" referred to the person who was first insured when the policy was issued, and was not transferred to the mortgagee when he subsequently, by a minute placed in the policy, was made an assured also. This is very true, but a perusal of the whole case shows that the controlling idea was a separate insurance of the mortgagee, freed from the conditions attached to the insurance of the owner, and not to be impaired or weakened by any act or neglect of such owner. Force must be given to this positive language of the contract, and no act or neglect of the owner can be permitted to invalidate—i. e. impair or weaken (78 N. Y. 149)—the validity of the agreement for the full amount named in the policy. By taking the insurance in the manner the mortgagee herein did, instead of taking out a separate policy, all the provisions in the policy which from their nature would properly apply to the case of an insurance of the mortgagee's interest would be regarded as forming part of the contract with him, while those provisions which antagonize or impair the force of the particular and specific provisions contained in the clause providing for the insurance of the mortgagee must be regarded as ineffective and inapplicable to the case of the mortgagee. So when the agreement in regard to contribution, contained in the body of the policy issued to the owner, is compared with the specific statement in the mortgage clause that his insurance shall not be invalidated by any act or neglect of the owner, we can only give the latter due force by holding that the insurance of the mortgagee is not, in effect or substance, to be even partially invalidated,—i. e. reduced in amount,—and to that extent impaired and weakened by any act of the owner unknown to the mortgagee. In such case the general agreement in the body of the policy as to contribution does not, and was not intended to, apply. If it did, then the special and particular contract in the mortgage clause would be of no effect. If the two are inconsistent, the special contract, particularly relating to the mortgagee's insurance, must take precedence over the general language used in the policy issued to the owner. For these reasons the claims of the insurers for a deduction in the amount of their liability cannot be allowed.

8. As to three of the policies, the mortgage clause itself contained the provision that the company was only to be liable in the proportion which the sum it insured should bear to the whole amount of insurance on the property, issued to or held by any party or parties having an insurable interest therein, whether as owner, mortgagee, or otherwise. What meaning is to be attached to this provision after taking into consideration the language heretofore quoted that the insurance of the mortgagee will not be invalidated by any act or neglect of the owner of the property? The act of obtaining this additional insurance was the act of the owner, and it was unknown to the mortgagee, and of course not consented to by him. The additional insurance could by no possibility benefit him, as it was not upon any interest of his in the property. He could not, therefore, resort to any of these additional policies for his indemnity. It is not a case of contribution in any sense, but simply one, on the insurers' theory, of diminution of their liability, caused by the act of the owner and unknown, and with no possible corresponding benefit to the mortgagee. As a general principle, it is settled that, before this apportionment of the loss between different companies can be demanded, the different policies must have been upon the same interest in the same property or some part thereof. Lowell Mfg. Co. v. Safeguard F. Ins. Co. 88 N. Y. 592. Has this principle been changed by this contract? Can it be that the mortgagee would knowingly consent to a diminution of this liability to an extent which might leave it of no value, consequent upon a secret act of a third party, and where by no possibility could he protect his security from such danger? All the reasoning given under the head last above discussed applies with equal force here, at least so far as the probabilities of entering into such a contract by the mortgagee are concerned. It is clear that the only object of the mortgagee is to obtain a security upon which he can rely, and this object is, of course, also plain and clear to the insurer. Both parties proceed to enter into a contract with that one end in view. In order to make it plain beyond question, the statement is made that no act or neglect of the owner with regard to the property shall invalidate the insurance of the mortgagee. When, in the face of such an agreement, entered into for the purpose stated, there is also placed in the instrument a provision as to the proportionate payment of a loss, we think the true meaning to be extracted from the whole instrument is that the insurance which shall diminish or impair the right of the mortgagee to recover for his loss is one which shall have been issued upon his interest in the property, or when he shall have consented to the other insurance upon the owner's interest. This may not, perhaps, give full effect to the strict language of the apportionment clause, but, if full effect be given to that clause, and it should be held to call for the consequent reduction of the liability of the insurers in such a case as this, then full effect is denied to the important and material, if not the controlling, clause in the contract, which provides that the insurance of the mortgagee shall not be injuriously "impaired or affected" by the act or neglect of the owner. As used in these mortgage clauses, this is the meaning of the word "invalidate." Hastings v. Westchester F. Ins. Co. 78 N. Y. 149. We must strive to give effect to all the provisions of the contract, and to enforce the actual meaning of the parties to it, as evidenced by all the language used within the four corners of the instrument. We are also at liberty to consider the purpose for which the contract was executed, where that purpose plainly and necessarily appears from a perusal of the whole paper. That construction will be adopted in the case of somewhat inconsistent provisions which, while giving some effect to all of them, will at the same time plainly tend to carry out the clear purpose of the agreement; that purpose which it is obvious all the parties thereto were cognizant of and intended by the agreement to further and to consummate. There is no equity in this claim on the part of the insurers, and we think, from a perusal of the whole clause in the policy, that it was not intended to, and that it does not, cover such claim.

The judgment of the Supreme Court must be affirmed, with costs in each case.

All concur, except Andrews, Ch. J., not sitting.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COURT OF APPEALS

James Leo McGRAW, Admr., etc., of Harry Leo McGraw, Deceased, Appt.,

v.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

(3 App. D. C. 405.)

1. A municipality, upon which a statutory duty has been imposed of establishing and maintaining a bathing beach, is not responsible for its safety, and the safe use of it by those likely to have recourse to it in the same manner as streets and highways, or even as parks and grounds kept for entertainment and amusement, without profit, are to be rendered safe.
2. A municipality, required by statute to establish and maintain a free bathing beach upon the margin of a river is not bound to warn the public against change in the bed of the stream, or to mark in any way the depth, or relative depth, of the water so as to guard the ignorant bather from venturing too far.
3. If a municipality, required by statute to establish and maintain a free bathing beach, is liable for its unsafe condition after the beach is opened, the detail of a policeman to preserve the peace and good order at such beach before the work of construction is completed, where boys and young men are in the habit of congregating and have for many years, is not an opening of the beach to the public and invitation to the public to use it.
4. A municipal corporation, required by statute to establish and maintain a free bathing beach, if liable for the condition of such beach, cannot be held responsible until it has completed the work of construction and thrown the beach open to the public for the uses contemplated.

(June 4, 1891.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of a Special Term of the Supreme Court for the District of Columbia in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate, which was alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

NOTE.—The above decision seems to be without any direct precedent. As to the liability of a private proprietor of a bathing resort, see Boyce v. Union Pac. R. Co. (Utah) 18 L. R. A. 508, 25 L. R. A.

See also 33 L. R. A. 598.

Mr. J. H. Ralston for appellant.

Messrs. S. T. Thomas and A. B. Duvall, for appellee:

In the absence of statutory provision no action can be maintained against a municipality for neglect of a public duty imposed upon it as the agent of the public, for the benefit of the public, and for the performance of which the corporation receives no profit or special advantage.

Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. §§ 965a, 975; Benton v. Boston City Hospital Trustees, 140 Mass. 18, 54 Am. Rep. 436; McDonald v. Massachusetts Gen. Hospital, 120 Mass. 432, 21 Am. Rep. 529; Murtaugh v. St. Louis, 44 Mo. 480; Richmond v. Long, 17 Gratt. 378.

The free bathing beach did not originate with the commissioners of the District of Columbia, and the act of congress providing for it imposed no duties upon the municipality.

Where a municipality elects or appoints an officer in obedience to a statute, to perform a public service, in which the corporation has no private interests, and from which it derives no special interest or advantage in its corporate capacity, such an officer cannot be regarded as an agent or servant of the municipality for whose negligence or want of skill it can be held.

Marmilian v. New York, 62 N. Y. 160, 20 Am. Rep. 468; Ogg v. Lansing, 35 Iowa, 495, 14 Am. Rep. 499; Hayes v. Oshkosh, 83 Wis. 814, 14 Am. Rep. 760.

A municipal corporation is not answerable for damages for the negligence of its officers in the execution of such powers as are conferred upon the corporation or its officers, for the public good.

Kiley v. Kansas, 87 Mo. 108, 56 Am. Rep. 448; Calwell v. Boone, 51 Iowa, 687, 33 Am. Rep. 154; Elliot v. Philadelphia, 75 Pa. 847, 15 Am. Rep. 591; McKay v. Buffalo, 74 N. Y. 619; Curran v. Boston, 8 L. R. A. 243, 151 Mass. 505.

Morris, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

By an act of congress approved September 26, 1890, entitled "An act establishing a free public bathing beach on the Potomac river, near Washington Monument," it was provided as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That the commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and permitted to construct a beach and dressing houses upon the east shore of the tidal reservoir, against the Washington Monument grounds, and to maintain the same for the purpose of free public bathing, under such regulations as they shall deem to be for the public welfare; and the secretary of war is requested to permit such use of the public domain as may be required to accomplish the object above set forth.

"Sec. 2. That the sum of three thousand dollars is hereby appropriated from the revenues of the District of Columbia, to be immediately available for the purposes of this act." 26 Stat. 490.

The commissioners of the District had given their approval to the measure in advance upon reference of the bill to them by congress; and the beach and bath houses were thereupon constructed, under the superintendence of William X. Stevens, the enthusiastic person who had procured the enactment of the law, and were thrown open to the public on the 7th day of September, 1891. Four days before this last-mentioned day, namely, on the 3d of September, 1891, Harry Leo McGraw, a boy of the age of thirteen years and five months, together with a number of other boys, stated to have been about seventy-five in all, went in to swim at the beach. McGraw went in about 11 o'clock in the morning, and remained in the water until about 1 o'clock in the afternoon, when he was drowned. It is testified that he was unable to swim, although he went in near where there was a springing board for diving, which indicated deep water; and the body was found on the next day in deep water not far from the end of the springing board, where he seems to have gone down. There was a policeman on duty at the beach; but it does not appear that he saw McGraw go into the water, or had observed his movements at all. But few, if any, of the bath houses were open; and McGraw, as well as some of the other boys, undressed in the woods. One of the witnesses testified that he himself asked the policeman whether it was permitted to go in that morning, and that the officer replied that those who had bathing suits might go in. It does not appear whether young McGraw had a bathing suit or not.

The immediate cause of the drowning was that there was a deep gully at the place, where the ground under the water shelved very suddenly, and there was a steep and dangerous descent. There were no lines at that time to mark the limits of the beach.

This suit was thereupon instituted by James Leo McGraw, the father of the unfortunate boy, as administrator of the deceased, to recover damages from the District of Columbia for the loss of the services of his son, for the funeral expenses of the latter, and for expenses incurred in curing the boy's mother, the wife of the plaintiff, of ill health resulting from the drowning of her son. At the trial, the plaintiff adduced testimony to prove the facts hereinbefore stated, and others not deemed important to be here specified. Besides this, there was proof that the boy had earned some money, which he gave to his mother for the support of the family; that he was a strong and healthy boy at the time of his death; and that his funeral expenses amounted to something upwards of $100. There was no proof offered of any expenses incurred, as alleged, in consequence of the ill health of the plaintiff's wife resulting, as claimed, from the death of the son, and it would have scarcely served any useful purpose to adduce such proof, notwithstanding the allegation of the fact in the declaration.

No proof was offered on behalf of the defendant. But defendant's counsel, upon the close of the plaintiff's case, prayed the court to instruct the jury to return a verdict for the defendant, on the twofold ground that the district was not liable in the case as matter of law, and that the ill-fated boy, on account of whom the suit had been instituted, had been himself chargeable with contributory negligence. The court gave the instruction, over the plaintiff's objection; and the jury rendered their verdict in accordance therewith, upon which there was judgment for the defendant. From this judgment the plaintiff appealed.

Two questions are suggested by the bill of exceptions, and the assignments of error: (1) Whether there was any liability in this case on the part of the District of Columbia to the plaintiff; and (2) whether there was contributory negligence on the part of the deceased.

1. It may well be doubted whether the act of congress that has been cited in this case was intended to impose any duty upon the District of Columbia, such as is sought to be enforced in the present suit. The act is permissive in its character, and not mandatory. It is not mandatory either upon the secretary of war to permit the use of the public grounds for the purpose in question, or for the commissioners of the District of Columbia to carry the purpose into effect. And even if it should be assumed that there was a duty imposed by it, from which a liability might accrue, it is not at all clear that the District of Columbia is chargeable with that duty, which was laid by express terms, not on the district as a municipality, but upon the commissioners of the district as a superadded obligation.

But however this may be—and we desire not to be understood as distinctly deciding this point—we cannot accept the theory that the municipality, even if the duty has been imposed upon it of establishing and maintaining this beach, can be held responsible for its safety, and the safe use of it by those who are likely to have recourse to it in the same manner as streets and highways are to be rendered safe, or even as parks and grounds kept for entertainment and amusement, without direct profit or advantage to the municipality, might have to be maintained in a condition of safety. Land covered by water is necessarily more or less beyond the ordinary control of man; and the margins of streams, rivers, and lakes, as well as of the ocean, are subject to a power which the ordinary operations of man may neither determine nor direct. To hold that the margin of a great river, with the mighty volume of water that constantly comes down to disturb its configuration, should be kept level and smooth, free from holes and depressions, and equally safe for the use of adult man and the child of tender years, would be to demand the impossible. It is common experience that the bed of a river is in course of constant change; and that in places the sand and earth are accumulated, in other places excavated or depressed and holes and ravines formed even in a single night. It cannot be that there is any duty imposed upon the municipality that charges it with knowledge of these mutations and requires it to warn the public against them. Neither do we understand that, in the establishment of a free bathing beach, there is any duty imposed upon it to mark in any way the depth or relative depth of the water, so as to guard the ignorant bather from venturing too far. This is a case in which the bather must rely upon his own senses and his own caution; and he has no right to have the municipal authority substituted for the exercise of his own judgment.

If there was a duty imposed in this instance upon the municipal authorities of the District of Columbia, it was: (1) "To construct a beach and dressing houses;" and (2) "To maintain the same." These are the terms used in the statute. Now, towards individuals certainly no liability could accrue under the statute until the municipality had completed the work of construction, and thrown the beach open to the public for the uses contemplated. No one was entitled to use this beach as a bathing beach, so as to hold the municipality liable for any negligence in its construction, if any such there was, until in some manner the municipality made known to the public that the work was completed and invited them to the use of it. By the testimony uncontroverted and undisputed of the plaintiff's own witness, the beach was not thrown open to the public until the 7th day of September, 1891; and the misfortune that deprived this boy of his life occurred on the 8d day of September, 1891. The boy was there furtively, as a trespasser, without invitation and without right, so far as the municipality was concerned; and it would be the grossest injustice to hold the latter responsible for an injury which it did not occasion and against which, in the nature of things, it could not have guarded. This circumstance we regard as decisive of the case, and conclusive against the plaintiff's right to recover.

But it is argued in the face of this direct and positive testimony given by the plaintiff's own witness, that there are other circumstances from which the jury might properly have inferred a license from the municipality to the public to use the bathing beach even before the 8d of September, 1891, such as the presence of a policeman there, the fact that many of the boys were permitted to go in without objection, the statement of the policeman that those boys might go in who had bathing suits, and the statement of the boy's father, the plaintiff in this case, that "he had not made any personal examination of the beach to see if it was safe, and only knew about it from the fact of reading in the Star that it was open; they advertised that it was open." But we cannot regard the detail of a policeman to be present to preserve the peace and good order at a place where it was known that boys and young men were in the habit of congregating and had probably congregated for half a century and upwards, as any evidence whatever that the municipality had complied with the provisions of an act of congress, and was prepared to incur liability to the amount of $10,000 to every individual that thought proper to go into the Potomac river at that point. And of course the statement of the plaintiff as to what he saw in the Star, or thought he saw there, cannot be accepted for a moment as testimony in this case. There is absolutely no testimony whatever and nothing to go to the jury, with reference to the time at which this beach was opened to the public, and the liability of the district for its safe condition began, if it ever began, other than the statement of the plaintiff's witness, Stevens, who had the best opportunity possible to know, as he was the originator of the scheme and the superintendent of the work, that it was not thrown open to the public until the 7th of September. And as we have said, this statement is, in our opinion, conclusive of the plaintiff's case.

2. We do not consider that the question of contributory negligence arises in this case inasmuch as we find no evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant. The accident was the result wholly either of the boy's own recklessness, or was his misfortune—most probably the latter.

3. It seems important to us that we should not fail to notice another question that is involved in this case, although no point was made of it in the court below, and none was made in argument before us. This suit is instituted under the provisions of the Act of Congress of February 17, 1885 (23 Stat. 307), entitled "An act to authorize suits for damages where death results from the wrongful act or neglect of any person or corporation in the District of Columbia," which is one of the numerous statutes, now believed to be quite general in this country, based upon what is known as Lord Campbell's Act in England. We greatly doubt whether this statute authorizes such a suit as that which we have before us here. The statute evidently contemplates actions for the benefit of those who have been deprived of the protection and support of husbands, parents, and others standing in analogous relations; and was scarcely intended to include administration upon the estates of children and suits by such administrators. The earnings, present and prospective, of the boy in this case belonged in law to his father, as such, and not to any administrator, and the expenditure for his funeral was an expenditure incumbent on the parent for which that parent might sue the wrongdoer who caused the death, if such there was. It is unnecessary for us to decide this question here; and we do not decide it. But we do not wish it to be passed in silence, in such manner that the case may hereafter be cited as a precedent on that point.

From what we have said, it results that the judgment of the court below must be affirmed with costs; and it is accordingly so ordered

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

Albert M. WOOSTER, Appt.,Frederick C. MULLINS et al.

(.....Conn.....)

A tie vote on which the mayor may give a casting vote for each of two official newspapers to be chosen is presented by a vote of twelve aldermen, in which three newspapers received four votes each, where the charter provides that two shall be chosen, but that each alderman shall vote for one only, and a general charter provision gives the mayor a casting vote in case of a tie. (Andrews, Ch. J., and Hamersley, J., dissent.)

(May 29, 1894.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Fairfield County in favor of defendants in an action brought to enjoin the payment of the contract price for publishing city notices for the city of Bridgeport on the ground that the contract was illegal. Affirmed.

A clause of the city provided that:

"In all cases wherein matter is by the charter of the city of Bridgeport required to be published in newspapers published in said city, such publication shall be in two daily newspapers published in said city, to be designated by the common council of said city, and in making such designation no member of either branch of said common council shall vote for more than one of said newspapers."

The board of councilmen of the city of Bridgeport designated the Bridgeport Evening Farmer and the Bridgeport Evening Post as their choice of newspapers to publish the proceedings. The resolution was then transmitted to the board of aldermen for action. This board consisted of twelve members. A vote was taken which resulted in four votes each being given in favor of the Bridgeport Evening Farmer, the Bridgeport Evening Post, and the Bridgeport Evening News. Thereupon the mayor declared the vote to be a tie and cast a vote for each of the two papers which had been designated by the board of councilmen.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Messrs. A. B. Beers and Stiles Judson, Jr., for appellant:

The proceeding for the selection of official newspapers is not within the operation of section 7 of the charter, which provides as follows: "The common council of said city shall consist of two separate bodies, namely: the board of aldermen, composed of all the aldermen, and the board of councilmen, composed of all the councilmen, which bodies shall meet separately, except as hereinafter provided. The mayor shall preside at the meetings of the board of aldermen, and shall have a casting vote only in case of a tie."

The "casting vote," at common law, "signifies sometimes the single vote of a person who ordinarily does not vote, and in case of an equality of votes, sometimes the double vote of a person who first votes with the others and upon an equality creates a majority by giving a second vote."

Anderson's Law Dict.

That condition only is contemplated which can be determined by a vote on the part of the mayor; not such condition as would require a succession of votes, upon the subject-matter before the board, in order to dissolve the tie.

It was the plain duty of the mayor to require the members of the board to continue to vote upon the subject-matter before the board, until such result was accomplished by any one ballot as lawfully designated two different newspapers.

Can the doctrine of election by plurality be applied in any conceivable manner to the proceedings prescribed by the charter for the designation of the official newspapers?

It cannot when the vote on which the tie was disclosed is treated as one subject-matter, and as one vote thereon.

By what process of reasoning can it be demonstrated that while the members were confined to one effective vote on the subject, the mayor shall have two votes, and which, if true, must be predicated upon the theory that there have been two different matters before the board for their action.

The designation of these papers is in its nature, not an election of a person to an office or position within the gift of the common council, but is merely a certain prescribed method of contracting with said newspapers.

Designations of this character have always been treated as mere contracts with the newspapers thus selected.

Re Phillips, 60 N. Y. 25; Re Astor's Petition, 50 N. Y. 868.

The charter plainly prescribes a certain procedure as a condition precedent to the power to make these contracts.

Peterson v. New York, 17 N. Y. 449; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 449, 468; Sloughton Third School Dist. v. Atherton, 12 Met. 118; Francis v. Troy, 74 N. Y. 840; Weiss v. Des Moines Independent Dist. 79 Iowa, 428; Russell v. Gilson, 36 Minn. 687; 2 Beach, Pub. Corp. §§ 252, 321; Crutchfield v. Warrensburg, 80 Mo. App. 456.

An unauthorized act can be ratified by a municipal corporation only where such act could have been authorized in the first instance, and even then the subsequent approval will not have the effect of making good the original defect where the mode of contracting operates as a limitation upon the power to contract.

1 Beach, Pub. Corp. §§ 251, 696, p. 696, and cases cited in note 1, 718; Hodges v. Buffalo, 2 Denio, 110; Halstead v. New York, 8 N. Y. 437; Logansport v. Dykeman, 116 Ind. 17; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 463.

The rights, powers, and duties of the mayor

NOTE.—A novel extension of the rule as to casting votes by presiding officers is made by the above decision. As to what constitutes a majority which will carry a measure voted on including the case of 25 L. R. A.

a casting vote, see note to Lawrence v. Ingersoll (Tenn.) 6 L. R. A. 303. See also Magenau v. Fremont (Neb.) 9 L. R. A. 786; State v. Vanosdal (Ind.) 15 L. R. A. 682.

of the city are plainly prescribed by law, and every person entering into business relations with him is presumed to know the scope of his authority upon any given subject.

Dibble v. New Haven, 56 Conn. 201; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 447, 459, 528, 542; Francis v. Troy, supra.

The law will not permit of a recovery for services rendered on a quantum meruit.

Stidger v. Red Oak, 64 Iowa, 486; People v. Flagg, 17 N. Y. 584; Crutchfield v. Warrensburg, supra; 1 Beach, Pub. Corp. § 692.

Baldwin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The main question in this case is whether the vote of the aldermen was a tie vote, within the meaning of the city charter. The word "tie," as applied to an appointment by election, signifies a state of equality between two or more competitors for the same position. Cent. Dict. in verb. The provision that two newspapers shall be designated by a vote in which no member of either branch of the common council shall vote for more than one evidently contemplates the selection of one, and permits the selection of both, by the action of less than a majority of each board. "In elections in which the principle of plurality is adopted, the candidate who has the highest number of votes is elected, although he may have received but a small part of the whole; and, where several persons are voted for at the same time for the same office, those (not exceeding the number to be chosen) who have respectively the highest number of votes are elected. But where two or more persons have equal numbers of votes there is no election, and a new trial must take place, unless some other mode of determining the question is provided by law. In some of the states where the votes are thus divided, the returning officers are authorized to decide between them, and to return which they please; but, unless thus expressly authorized by law, the returning officers have no casting vote." Cushing, Law & Practice of Legislative Assemblies, § 118. "By a 'casting vote' is meant one which is given when the assembly is equally divided, and when the question pending is in such a situation that a vote more on either side will cast the preponderance on that side, and decide the question accordingly; and not merely a vote which, if given on one side, will produce an equal division of the assembly, and thereby prevent the other side from prevailing. This principle extends to cases of election by ballot. In these cases the speaker does not vote by ballot, but waits until the votes are reported, and then votes orally, not for whom he pleases, but for one, or for the requisite number, of the candidates voted for, who have received an equal number of votes. This principle applies equally in those cases where a less number than a majority is permitted, or a greater is required, to decide a question in the affirmative. Thus, if one third only is permitted or required, and the assembly, on a division, stands exactly one third to two thirds, there is then occasion for the giving of a casting vote, because the presiding officer can then, by giving his vote, decide the question either way." Id. § 806. An apt illustration of this method of procedure, as applied to cases of more than two contestants for the same position, is afforded by the practice of balloting for select committees in the British house of commons. "The majority necessary to an election is not an absolute majority of all the persons voting, but only a plurality; and if there are several persons, who all have the same number of votes, and the whole would make more than the number fixed for the committee, the speaker gives a casting vote for the election of the requisite number." Id. § 1882. A tie is that which is tied. It is a knot. And when provision is made, in regulating legislative procedure, for a casting vote by the presiding officer in case of a tie, the object is to allow him to untie this knot. The charter of Bridgeport evidently looks to the designation of the two official newspapers by one and the same vote, each member of the respective boards voting for one alone. The mayor is a component part of the common council, but he is not a member of either of the two branches or boards, which, with him, constitute that body. He is therefore not forbidden, in the selection of the official newspapers, to vote for more than one of these. The ballot taken by the aldermen, resulting in four votes for each of three different newspapers, presented the case of a tie, and to dissolve it the mayor's casting vote was properly and necessarily given for two of them, for the charter required the simultaneous designation of two. It follows that the demurrer to the complaint was properly sustained.

There is no error in the judgment appealed from.

Torrance and Fenn, JJ., concurred; Andrews, Ch. J., and Hamersley, J., dissented.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS

RE ESTATE OF Cornelius V. S. ROOSEVELT, Deceased.

(.....N. Y.....)

1. The statute in force at a person's death governs the decision as to a collateral inheritance tax on his estate.

2. Life annuities contingent on survivorship are not subject to a collateral inheritance tax until they vest by the termination of the life on which they are contingent.

3. A contingency affecting the value of a vested remainder under a will so long as it continues will prevent the charge of a collateral inheritance tax upon the remainder.

NOTE.—For a collection of authorities upon the construction of the statute imposing a tax upon 26 L. R. A.

successions or collateral inheritances, see note to Re Romaine (N. Y.) 13 L. R. A. 401.

(October 9, 1894)

A PPEAL by the Comptroller of the City of New York from an order of the General Term of the Supreme Court, First Department, reversing an order of the New York County Surrogate's Court, which fixed the amount of the collateral inheritance tax to be paid by the estate of Cornelius V. S. Roosevelt, deceased. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Edward Hassett, for appellant:

The remainders devised to the nephews and nieces are "vested remainders" and are now subject to the payment of the tax.

4 Rev. Stat. p. 2516; Cook v. Lowry, 95 N. Y. 108; Beardsley v. Hotchkiss, 96 N. Y. 201; 4 Kent, Com. 202, Comstock's 11th ed. p. 228; Delafield v. Shipman, 18 Abb. N. C. 297, 303; Weed v. Aldrich, 2 Hun, 581; Williamson v. Field, 2 Sandf. Ch. 535, 7 L. ed. 698; Kelso v. Lorillard, 85 N. Y. 177; Blanchard v. Blanchard, 1 Allen, 227; Sheridan v. House, 4 Abb. App. Dec. 218; Eberitt v. Eberitt, 29 N. Y. 39; Teed v. Morton, 60 N. Y. 502; Campbell v. Stokes, 143 N. Y. 23.

A valuation most favorable to the remaindermen has been fixed, and as such valuation is based upon proper evidence it is equivalent to a finding of fact by a court or a verdict by a jury and will not be disturbed on appeal.

Re Knoedler's Will, 140 N. Y. 379.

The tax upon vested remainders is due and payable immediately upon decedent's death.

Laws 1887, chap. 713, § 2; Dos Passos, Collateral Inheritance Tax, p. 168, citing Re Vinot's Estate, 26 N. Y. S. R. 610; Van Benschelaer's Estate, N. Y. L. J. May 28, 1889; Re Cogswell, 4 Dem. 248; Re Lefever, 5 Dem. 184; Re Higgins, N. Y. Daily Reg. Dec. 7, 1889.

Where the interest of the life beneficiary is not taxable and that of the remaindermen is, it has been held that the amount of the remaindermen's tax is lawfully payable out of the principal, notwithstanding the tax on the remainder will reduce the capital, and so affect the income of the life tenant.

Re Johnson, 6 Dem. 146; Re Leavitt's Estate, 4 N. Y. Supp. 179; Re Peck, note, 24 Abb. N. C. 865; Re Woolsey, note, 19 Abb. N. C. 234; Re Enston, 118 N. Y. 185; Re Stewart's Estate, 14 L. R. A. 836, 181 N. Y. 274.

The annuitants are beneficially entitled in expectancy to an interest in or income from the property of the testator transferred by his will, and the tax thereon is immediately due and payable.

Each of said annuities is an interest in property or income therefrom within the meaning and intent of the statute.

Dos Passos, Collateral Inheritance Tax, p. 164; Biapham's Estate, 24 W. N. C. 79; Thompson's Estate, 5 W. N. C. 19.

The right to the collateral inheritance tax accrues at the date of the death of the testator or intestate, and not at that of its actual imposition, and is not affected by intervening legislation.

Re Prime's Estate, 18 L. R. A. 718, 186 N. Y. 347.

Meurs. George H. Yeaman, John E. Roosevelt, and George C. Kobbe for respondents.

25 L. R. A.

Bartlett, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question presented on this appeal is whether the interests of annuitants and remaindermen under the will of the late Cornelius V. S. Roosevelt are liable to pay presently the collateral inheritance tax. The surrogate's court for the county of New York determined this question in the affirmative, and its order to that effect was reversed by the general term of the first department. The comptroller of the city of New York appeals to this court.

The testator died September 30, 1887, and his will was admitted to probate in the county of New York March 17, 1888. After certain specific legacies to his wife, the testator disposes of his residuary estate as follows, viz.: The entire amount to be held by the executor and the executrix in trust, to pay the income thereof to his wife during her life. At her death seven life annuities are given,—to two persons, $1,000 each; to two persons, $500 each; and to three persons, $5,000 each, with interests in these latter in the nature of cross-remainders, contingent upon survival inter se, the will providing as follows: "In case any one of the three last-named annuitants . . . shall die either before or after the death of my said wife, I direct my executors to pay, and I bequeath, to each of the two survivors of them, an annuity of $7,500; and, in case any two of them shall die either before or after the decease of my said wife, I direct my executors to pay, and I bequeath, to the last survivor of them, an annuity of $15,000." On the decease of the wife the estate is given, subject to the payments of the annuities, to twelve nephews and nieces. Two of these remaindermen died before the testator, and the appraiser, upon the theory that there was no lapse, and that the survivors would take the whole remainder, has made his estimate accordingly. The appraiser reported in the first instance as follows: "The persons who will become entitled to the annuities mentioned in the will cannot now be determined, until the death of the wife; and for that reason also the value of decedent's estate, which is devised at her death to his nephews and nieces, and subject to such annuities, cannot now be ascertained." The surrogate sustained objections to this report, and the matter was sent back to the appraiser. The surrogate requested the superintendent of insurance to ascertain the value of the annuities, and, acting upon his information, the appraiser reported the values of the annuities and the estates in remainder. The matter was then duly sent back to the appraiser for the third time, to enable the superintendent of insurance "to correct manifest errors." The third report of the appraiser increased the value of the compound survivorship annuities, and considerably diminished the value of the estates in remainder, as contained in his second report. This report was confirmed, and was followed in due course of procedure by the order now here for review. We are of opinion that this case must be decided under the Law of 1887, in force at the time of testator's death.

Two questions are presented for our determination, viz.: First. Are the annuities created by the will such property, in a legal sense, as to be presently taxable, and can their fair and clear market value at the time of the death of the testator be ascertained? Second. Is the fair and clear market value at the time of testator's death, of the estates in remainder, ascertainable, and is the tax thereon due at once? In deciding both of these questions, we are to reasonably construe the statute, and give effect, if possible, to all its provisions. As to the annuitants, the appellant's counsel contends that they are entitled to an interest in or an income from the property of the testator, and the statute requires the tax to be paid immediately. He goes on to say, in his printed argument: "It may, of course, be considered as a hardship to compel the annuitants to pay a tax upon an interest that they may never receive; but that is the fault of the statute, and under its wording the payment of the tax can only be postponed by giving a bond." This concession admits away the entire case of the state. It is not to be assumed that the legislature intended to compel the citizen to pay a tax upon an interest he may never receive, and the reasonable construction of this statute leads to no such unjust result. It does not follow, because the legislature taxes persons beneficially entitled to property or income, in possession or expectancy, that a tax was thereby imposed upon an interest that may never vest. Until that time arrives the power to tax does not exist. The testator has created seven life annuities, if the annuitants survive his wife, and there can be no vested interest in any of them until the happening of that event. All may survive; a portion may be living; every one may be dead. To hold such a possibility presently taxable, and its value capable of immediate computation, shocks the sense of justice.

This brings us to the remaining question, as to the taxation of the estates in remainder. The testator has, on the death of his wife, given his entire estate to twelve nephews and nieces, subject to the payment of the annuities. Two of these remaindermen, as already stated, died before the testator. It is contended by the respondents that it is impossible to ascertain the fair and clear market value of these remainders at the time of the death of the testator, for the reason that the annuitants represent estates or interests un-vested and contingent, which, taken in connection with the life estate of the widow, renders the present value of the ultimate remainders unascertainable. The amount that will ultimately be paid to the remaindermen is contingent, depending on future events. Whenever the tax on the annuities is payable, the estate must pay it. What the amount of that tax will be depends upon the survivorship of annuitants, and the number of life annuities, if any, that shall vest on the death of the widow. This court has recently decided that it is not the vesting of remainders that renders them contingent taxable interests under the law. Re Curtis, 142 N. Y. 219. In the case cited it was held that the nominal fee might never become a taxable estate, for the reason that, if the nephews and nieces in whom it was claimed to have vested died without issue before the termination of certain trusts, the fee would pass to lineals not taxable. This was the uncertainty which postponed the payment of the tax. In the case at bar there is a contingency affecting the value of the estate, as already indicated, which brings it strictly within the principle of the Curtis Case.

The learned counsel for the respondents has pointed out questions that they may present on the death of the widow. One involves the legal effect of the death of two remaindermen in the lifetime of the testator, and the other the correctness of the mode adopted by the superintendent of insurance in ascertaining the value of the compound survivorship annuities. These questions will become important on the falling in of the life estate, but we express no opinion in regard to them at this time.

In affirming the order of the general term, we not only give to the Act of 1897 a reasonable construction, but carry out the obvious intent of the testator that his widow should enjoy, during her life, the entire income of his estate. The legislature, in the Act of 1892, has given a practical construction to its previous legislation on this subject, when it provides that, where the fair market value of the property or interest cannot be ascertained at the time of the transfer, the tax shall become due and payable when the beneficiary shall come into actual possession or enjoyment. Laws 1892, chap. 899, § 8.

The order should be affirmed, with costs.

All concur, except Andrews, Ch. J., not sitting.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

Samuel HARDIE

v.

Lydia B. HARDIE, Appt.

(102 Pa. 227.)

1. Willful and malicious desertion, as cause for divorce, is not shown by the fact that the wife, in a passion roused by a single blow by her husband, leaves the house without intending to remain away permanently, and on reflection returns to find the home barred against her and then seeks by violence to enter, for which she is prosecuted by the husband, and thereafter does not return.

NOTE.—As to divorce for desertion, see also Herald v. Herald (N. J.) 9 L. R. A. 698, and note; also Williams v. Williams (N. Y.) 14 L. R. A. 220; Jones v. Jones (Ala.) 18 L. R. A. 96.

For refusal of marital intercourse as desertion, see Fritts v. Fritts (Ill.) 14 L. R. A. 686, and note. 25 L. R. A.

See also 47 L. R. A. 750.

2. A single blow given in anger by husband to wife is not necessarily cruel and barbarous treatment constituting cause for divorce.

(July 11, 1894.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Chester County in favor of plaintiff in an action for divorce on the ground of desertion. Reversed.

The court gave a binding instruction in favor of plaintiff on the ground that willful desertion was proved, and refused to grant defendant's request that if the jury believed that plaintiff struck his wife, or was guilty of cruel or barbarous conduct toward her, she was justified in leaving and your verdict must be for the defendant. To that request the following answer was given:

"That point is a little ambiguous in our estimation, and, as I have already suggested to you, there might be an occasion when if the husband struck the wife once it would justify her in leaving. But, as we have said to you, the evidence in this case does not show such an act. We cannot say, therefore, that if the jury believe that the plaintiff struck his wife, it was a justification of her leaving, but we can say, or would say, that if he was guilty of cruel or barbarous conduct towards her, she would be justified in leaving the plaintiff, and your verdict would be such as to justify her in that case. Such is the law, if the conduct is of such a cruel and barbarous character as I have already suggested, such as to endanger her life. As you will see I can scarcely affirm or disaffirm the point, but I pass it with the suggestions which I have already made."

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Mr. Charles H. Pennypacker for appellant.

Mr. Thomas W. Pierce for appellee.

Dean, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff and defendant are libellant and respondent in a suit by the husband for divorce from the bonds of matrimony. The issue was tried before a jury, who, under peremptory instructions from the court, gave a verdict for the husband. From the judgment on the verdict the wife brings this appeal.

The ground for divorce averred in the libel is willful and malicious desertion by the wife. She admitted absence from his house, and separation; but that there was willful and malicious desertion she denied. She further set up the counter averment that her husband, by his cruel and barbarous treatment, had driven her from his home. The parties were married in August, 1867, and lived together as husband and wife until the 12th of November, 1890, the day of separation. They were childless. Both were caterers and cooks, and by their joint industry during more than twenty years of married life had accumulated some property, real and personal. The legal title to the real estate was in the husband, though the wife had contributed from her earnings a considerable part of the purchase money. Some time before the separation, disputes and quarrels arose between them. He suspected she was not as strong a prohibitionist as he was, or professed to be. She suspected his fidelity in the marriage relation. The suspicions of both were apparently groundless, but they were sufficient to arouse a sort of domestic animosity on part of each towards the other, which culminated in his striking her, and she, smarting under the indignity, left his house. That this was the immediate cause of her leaving is hardly disputed. The learned judge of the court below assumed that this single blow was the only instance of cruel and barbarous treatment; and this, under the law, not being sufficient to justify or excuse her desertion, the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict. If this had been the only question in the case, the instruction was correct. But there is another view of the evidence applicable to the pleadings which the jury had a right to consider. Both agree she left the house on the 12th of November. She testifies she left "to go to work." Although they had a quarrel on that day, and probably the day before, she says she did not intend, by leaving it, to give up her home; that she went back the next day, and "put away her things,"—did not take them away; then went back on the third day, when she found the locks had been changed, and she gained an entrance only by breaking the window. She declares she never had left the house intending to remain away; that she could not get in, unless by a forcible entrance, afterwards, and for breaking this window the husband had instituted a prosecution against her. This is the substance of her testimony. The charge on which the husband based his right to divorce was willful and malicious desertion. If the wife, in a passion, aroused by the single unmanly blow of the husband, leaves his house, in a mere spirit of resentment, not intending to permanently desert him, then, on reflection, returns, and finds her home barred against her, then by violence seeks to enter, then is prosecuted by the husband, and thereafter does not return, this in no legal sense of the words is a "willful and malicious desertion." Such desertion is a departure without adequate cause, but not a willful absence, regardless of her marital duty. Such a blow as she testifies he gave her, some wives, of physical courage and strength, would have resented by giving the husband another, and there probably the quarrel would have ended. This wife resented it by leaving his presence, going out of the house. She was probably too weak or too timid to retaliate in any other way; but she testifies that in so doing she did not intend to "give up her home." Then, when she did return, his conduct enforced upon her further absence. Such desertion as this is not willful and malicious, even if he struck her but a single blow before she left. If her testimony be believed, his conduct, after she left, indicates an intention to prevent her return. The instruction that it was not the duty of the husband to persuade the wife to return was correct; but the jury should also have been told that, if she left the house, under the provocation of a blow, and soon after returned, it was his duty to receive her; and that if he, in anticipation of her return, locked the doors against her, he cannot be heard to say that her absence thereafter was willful and malicious desertion. In Grove's App., 87 Pa. 448, we held that the wholly inexcusable departure of the wife from her husband's house did not justify him in refusing to receive her when she returned; that such conduct on his part was a virtual turning her out of doors.

The evidence tending to show cruel and barbarous treatment, such as would justify her in leaving the husband, is mainly that of the wife. She testifies to repeated assaults and indignities; but, with the exception of the personal violence immediately before the separation, no dates are given. Most of this conduct appears to have been afterwards. Her testimony is disconnected, and in some material particulars, such as dates, or even approximate dates, vague; and, although it covers more than a dozen printed pages of the paper book, the examination does not seem to have been aimed at eliciting a specific statement of facts. It is therefore impossible to attempt a satisfactory review of the alleged error of the court in the refusal to affirm defendant's first point. The law applicable to the facts as the court assumed them to be proven is correctly stated. The court says: "I can scarcely affirm or disaffirm the point, but I pass it with the suggestions already made." The suggestions already made were, in substance, that the evidence of a single blow would have been insufficient to warrant, on her application, a divorce of the wife from her husband on the ground of cruel and barbarous treatment, and therefore was insufficient to justify her desertion of him. If there was a willful desertion,—that is, a departure with the intention not to return,—it was malicious, unless justified by such cruel and barbarous treatment as endangered life or health and rendered cohabitation unsafe. Cruel and barbarous treatment is not established by a single blow of the character of this one, given in anger. If the several acts of violence and threats alleged occurred before the separation, the burden was on defendant to prove that fact; if they were after she left him, clearly they did not prompt her to that act, whatever bearing they might have on the question as to whether a desertion at first causeless, afterwards, by reason of his conduct, ceased to be willful. We can very well discern how, on the character of the evidence on this point, it was as difficult for the court to affirm or disaffirm it as for us to say he erred in not affirming it. The evidence was not specific enough to warrant a specific answer. But we think the court, in not submitting the evidence on the first question to the jury, erred, for, even although it would not have entitled her to a divorce from her husband on the ground of cruel and barbarous treatment, yet, if believed by the jury, there was not willful and malicious desertion.

The judgment is reversed, and a venire facias de novo awarded.

John E. PRICE et al.

William L. SCHAEFFER, Appt.

(161 Pa. 530.)

Absence of service of process in the original suit may be shown in defense of a suit upon a judgment procured in another state, although service is recited as a fact in the record upon which the judgment is based.

NOTE.—As to impeachment of foreign judgment, see notes to Dunstan v. Higgins (N. Y.) 20 L. R. A. 688.

25 L. R. A.

(May 21, 1894.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, No. 1, for Philadelphia County in favor of plaintiffs, in an action brought to enforce payment of a judgment recovered against the defendant in the state of Maryland. Reversed.

In his affidavit of defense, defendant alleged that at the time the suit was brought he was not a resident of the county in which the suit was brought, but of another county; and that he had never been a resident of the county where the suit was brought; that he was never served with any summons or paper of any kind in the suit; that the other defendants in the original suit were residents of the county where the suit was brought and were actually summoned; that the summons ran to all the defendants in that suit, and the sheriff made a simple return "summoned" to the writ; that defendant filed a bill in equity in Maryland to have the judgment canceled and set aside, but the court refused to interfere, upon the ground that defendant had a good defense to the action in Pennsylvania, provided he was not actually served with summons in Maryland.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Mr. A. E. Stockwell, for appellants:

Neither the constitutional provision that full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state, nor the acts of congress passed in pursuance thereof, prevents an inquiry into the jurisdiction of the court by which the judgment offered in evidence was rendered.

Thompson v. Whitman, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 457, 21 L. ed. 897.

The record of a judgment rendered in another state may be contradicted as to the facts necessary to give the court jurisdiction, and if it be shown that such facts did not exist, the record will be a nullity, notwithstanding it may recite that they did exist.

Knowles v. Logansport Gas Light & Coke Co. 86 U. S. 19 Wall. 53, 23 L. ed. 70; Hall v. Lanning, 91 U. S. 160, 23 L. ed. 271; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565; Weaver v. Boggs, 88 Md. 255; Grover & B. Sewing Mach. Co. v. Radcliffe, 66 Md. 511; Fairfax Forrest Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Chambers, 75 Md. 614; McDermott v. Clary, 107 Mass. 501; Gilman v. Gilman, 126 Mass. 26, 30 Am. Rep. 646; Guthrie v. Lowry, 84 Pa. 538; Motter v. Welty, 2 Pa. Dist. Rep. 39; Whart. Conf. L. § 811; Story, Conf. L. § 609.

The question of jurisdiction may be inquired into although the judgment is binding and conclusive in the state in which it was rendered.

Steel v. Smith, 7 Watts & S. 448; Guthrie v. Lowry, Thompson v. Whitman, and Weaver v. Boggs, supra; Grover & B. Sewing Mach. Co. v. Radcliffe, 66 Md. 517; Bazley v. Linah, 16 Pa. 241, 55 Am. Dec. 494; Veils v. McFadden, 8 W. N. C. 63.

The Maryland courts enforce the just prin-eiple that, when a judgment is carried from a sister state into the state of Maryland for enforcement, the state of Maryland has a right to question the jurisdiction of the court where judgment was obtained.

Weaver v. Boggs, 38 Md. 255; Hanley v. Donoghue, 59 Md. 245, 43 Am. Rep. 554; Grover & B. Sewing Mach. Co. v. Radcliffe, 66 Md. 517; Fairfax Forrest Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Chambers, 75 Md. 614.

Messrs. William C. Duror and Horace M. Rumsey, for appellees:

The record shows the appellant was summoned and appeared. The judgment is therefore conclusive.

Wetherill v. Stillman, 65 Pa. 105; Reber v. Wright, 68 Pa. 471; Guthrie v. Lowry, 84 Pa. 537; Mink v. Shaffer, 124 Pa. 280.

It will be presumed in the absence of an averment to the contrary, that the courts of a sister state have the authority they assume to exercise, and that the mode of procedure pursued by them, though different from that established by this state, was in accordance with the law and practice of such state.

Freem. Judgm. 8d ed. § 565; Mills v. Duryee, 11 U. S. 7 Cranch, 481, 8 L. ed. 411, 2 Am. Lead. Cas. 647.

If the record of a judgment of a sister state shows on its face that the court had jurisdiction of the appellant through a service of its process, its judgment must be taken by the courts of this state as juris et de jure and an affidavit of defense setting forth that deponent was not served or notified by the process in the original suit will not prevent the courts of this state from entering judgment.

Lance v. Dugan, 23 W. N. C. 182; Wetherill v. Stillman, supra.

Mitchell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

How far section 1 of article 4 of the Constitution of the United States, and the Act of Congress of May 26, 1790, passed to carry it into effect, operate to preclude a defendant from offering evidence against the judgment of one state when sued upon it in another, has been the subject of much discussion and difference of opinion. A distinction has always been made, however, between facts going to the jurisdiction of the court and those relating to the merits, and the tendency has been strong to open the door to evidence upon the former. The earlier view was that the mere presumption in favor of jurisdiction might be contradicted, but that evidence could not be received against the affirmative recitals of jurisdictional facts in the record. In Hampton v. M'Connel, 16 U. S. 8 Wheat. 234, 4 L. ed. 878, Chief Justice Marshall said: "Whatever pleas would be good to a suit thereon in such state, and none others, could be pleaded in any other court in the United States." And a similar view is indicated by the decisions in Mills v. Duryee, 11 U. S. 7 Cranch, 481, 8 L. ed. 411 (as to which see the remarks of Bradley, J., in Thompson v. Whitman, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 462, 21 L. ed. 899), and Landes v. Brant, 51 U. S. 10 How. 348, 871, 18 L. ed. 449, 459. "It was undoubtedly the purpose [of the constitutional provision] to give to the judicial proceedings of each state the same faith and credit in every other state to which they were entitled in the state in which they took place." Story, Const. § 1310, note. In Thompson v. Whitman, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 457, 21 L. ed. 897, however, the question came directly before the Supreme Court of the United States, and Justice Bradley, admitting that there was no previous express decision on the point, made an elaborate review of all the authorities, and announced for the court the conclusion that jurisdiction was always open to question, even upon facts affirmatively asserted in the record. This decision was affirmed and followed in Knowles v. Logansport Gas-Light & Coke Co. 86 U. S. 19 Wall. 58, 23 L. ed. 70, and Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565, and has been considered as settling the law, by the highest court, on the subject. The great weight of authority in the state courts is to the same effect, and so are the text-books. McDermott v. Clary, 107 Mass. 501; Gilman v. Gilman, 126 Mass. 26, 30 Am. Rep. 646; Wright v. Andrews, 130 Mass. 149; Grover & B. Sewing-Mach. Co. v. Radcliffe, 66 Md. 511; Fairfax Forrest Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Chambers, 75 Md. 614; Eager v. Storer, 59 Mo. 87; Napton v. Leaton, 71 Mo. 358; Whart. Conf. L. § 823; Story, Conf. L. § 609; Story, Const. (M. M. Bigelow's ed. 1891) § 1310, note a; 12 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 1482, and cases there cited.

Our own cases have not been in entire harmony. In Wetherill v. Stillman, 65 Pa. 105, the earlier doctrine was enforced with great strictness, and, the record reciting an appearance by counsel, it was held—Sharswood, J., dissenting—that an affidavit by defendant that he had never been served with process, or authorized any one to appear for him, was not sufficient to prevent judgment; Thompson, Ch. J., saying: "The recital shows conclusively the jurisdiction of the parties; . . . consequently the defendant's affidavit in this particular amounted to nothing against the record to which it referred." In Noble v. Thompson Oil Co., 79 Pa. 354, 21 Am. Rep. 66, however, it was held that, notwithstanding the recital in the record of an attachment in rem in New York, it might be shown that the property was not there, and the court therefore acquired no jurisdiction. And in Guthrie v. Lowry, 84 Pa. 533, it was distinctly held that, "whatever doubts may have been at one time entertained, it is now an incontrovertible position . . . that the record may be contradicted by evidence of facts impeaching the jurisdiction of the court;" citing, among others, the cases in 18 and 19 Wall., supra, though in the particular case the foreign court was held, as a matter of law, to have had jurisdiction. This would seem to be a formal recognition and adoption, even if partially obiter, of the later and presently prevailing doctrine. But in Lance v. Dugan, 23 W. N. C. 182, the court again reverted in a brief per curiam to the old rule, saying that, as the record showed a service on defendants, the judgment was conclusive, notwithstanding an affidavit in denial. In this condition of the law we have the point in the present case for final settlement. Whatever our individual views upon the true spirit of the constitutional provision, we have no hesitation in conforming to the prevailing rule. It would be sufficient to say that it is now the established rule in the supreme court, which is the ultimate authority on all questions depending on the constitution and statutes of the United States. But, in addition to that, the same rule now prevails in the courts of a majority of the states, and it is a question on which uniformity is desirable. It would be contrary to sound policy to deny to our own citizens a defense against judgments obtained in other states out of a comity which such states refused to us. An apt illustration is afforded by the present case, in which it appears that the court of chancery in Maryland denied the appellant relief against the original judgment on the ground that the same defense would be open to him here. The affidavit of defense avers that the appearance recited in the record of the judgment sued on was merely constructive, and that in fact the appellant was not served with process, did not appear, and had no knowledge of the suit until recently, when demand was made upon him for payment. These being facts going to the jurisdiction of the court, the record could be contradicted in regard to them. The affidavit presented a prima facie defense, and was sufficient to prevent judgment.

Judgment reversed, and procedendo awarded.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT (In Banc).

Louisa M. WALTON et al., App'ts.,
v.

Mary Katherine KENDRICK et al.,
Repts.

(.....Mo.....)

1. Declarations by a testator after the execution of his will are not admissible to show due execution.

2. Some evidence that a testator's will was signed in his presence as well as by his direction so as to comply with the statute in a case where the testator does not affix his own signature is furnished by proof that he stated to the witnesses whom he asked to attest it that it was his will and that he had it written, while it appears that he was fully acquainted with all the formalities required by the statute.

(MacFarlane, J., dissents from proposition 2.)

(June 4, 1894.)

APPEAL by contestants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Charlton County in favor of defendants, in a proceeding brought to contest the validity of an instrument purporting to be the last will and testament of John W. Price, deceased. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Messrs. Crawley & Son, for appellants:

The trial court erred in admitting the subsequent declarations of John W. Price, made to the witness, Sarah S. Kendrick, as proper evidence by which to establish the execution of the writing in controversy.

In the first place it was not proven, nor is it even fairly inferable from her testimony, that the paper to which Judge Price referred in the supposed conversation with Mrs. Kendrick, is the same paper now propounded as his will.

In the second place, though the identity of the paper be conceded, still, no subsequent declaration of the supposed testator in regard to it is admissible upon the issue of its due execution.

Schouler, Wills, 2d ed. § 817a; Johnson v.

NOTE.—As to signing will by proxy, see note to Lewis v. Watson (Ala.) 22 L. R. A. 297.
—35 L. R. A.

Hicks, 1 La. 150; Jones v. McLellan, 76 Mo. 49; Gibson v. Gibson, 24 Mo. 227; Cauthorn v. Haynes, 24 Mo. 237; Tingley v. Cowgill, 48 Mo. 291; Spoonemore v. Cables, 66 Mo. 579; Rule v. Maupin, 84 Mo. 587; Bush v. Bush, 87 Mo. 480; Jones v. Roberts, 87 Mo. App. 181; Kennedy v. Upshaw, 64 Tex. 411; Runkle v. Gates, 11 Ind. 95; Couch v. Eastham, 27 W. Va. 796, 55 Am. Rep. 346; Davis v. Davis, 123 Mass. 590; Casman v. Van Harke, 38 Kan. 833; Kitchell v. Beach, 35 N. J. Eq. 446; Hayes v. West, 37 Ind. 31.

The statement of the supposed testator to the persons who subscribed as witnesses, that the paper was his "will," cannot supply or dispense with proof that the previous signature was placed there in one of the only two ways pointed out by the statute.

Mo. Rev. Stat. 1889, § 8870; Mo. Rev. Stat. 1879, § 8962; Catlett v. Catlett, 55 Mo. 330; Chafsee v. Baptist Missionary Convention, 10 Paige, 85, 4 L. ed. 896; Lewis v. Lewis, 11 N. Y. 220; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 16 Hun, 97, 77 N. Y. 596; Baker v. Woodbridge, 66 Barb. 261; St. Vincent de Paul Sisters of Charity v. Kelly, 87 N. Y. 409; Re Mackay, 1 L. R. A. 491, 110 N. Y. 611; Re Booth, 28 N. Y. Week. Dig. 248; Re Dale, 56 Hun, 169; Burwell v. Corbin, 1 Rand. (Va.) 181, 10 Am. Dec. 494; Asay v. Hoover, 5 Pa. 31, 45 Am. Dec. 713; Grabill v. Barr, 5 Pa. 441; Greenough v. Greenough, 11 Pa. 489, 51 Am. Dec. 567; Barr v. Graybill, 13 Pa. 896; Waite v. Frisbie, 45 Minn. 361; 2 Greenl. Ev. 18th ed. § 676.

Where the entire document is written or the name of the testator is signed, by him, in his own handwriting, or where another indites the paper, and there is direct proof that it was signed for the testator, by his direction, in his presence, by a disinterested scrivener, then, if he acknowledges the genuineness of the signature to the subscribing witnesses, the authorities very justly hold this to be sufficient prima facie proof of the execution, notwithstanding none of the subscribing witnesses were present when the testator's name was actually signed.

Cravens v. Faulconer, 28 Mo. 19; Grim v. Titman, 118 Mo. 56; Way v. Brown, 30 Ga. 308; Ragan v. Ragan, 33 Ga. Supp. 106; Hol- loway v. Galloway, 51 Ill. 159; Scoules v. Plowright, 10 Moore, P. C. C. 440; Clarke v. Dunnacant, 10 Leigh, 18; Hall v. Hall, 17 Pick. 878.

But where there is no positive proof that the paper was signed either by the direction, or in the presence, of the supposed testator; where no subscribing witness saw the act of signing, or heard the supposed testator declare that he had signed, or had directed another to sign for him; where the scrivener not only "writes herself an heir," but being an heir, signs as well as writes the paper under which she claims a lion's share of the supposed testator's property, something more is required to establish the "due execution" of the paper, than the mere acknowledgment or declaration of the supposed testator to subscribing witnesses that said paper is his "will."

Hughes v. Meredith, 24 Ga. 325, 71 Am. Dec. 127; Gerrish v. Nason, 22 Me. 488, 89 Am. Dec. 589; Jones v. McLellan, 76 Me. 49; DeLafield v. Parish, 25 N. Y. 9; Purdy v. Hall, 184 Ill. 808; Barry v. Butlin, 1 Curt. Eccl. Rep. 637; Panton v. Williams, 2 Curt. Eccl. Rep. 530; Barry v. Butlin, 2 Moore, P. C. C. 480; Scoules v. Plowright, supra; Lee v. Dill, 11 Abr. Pr. 214; Lake v. Ranney, 38 Barb. 49; Baker v. Woodbridge, 66 Barb. 261; St. Vincent de Paul Sisters of Charity v. Kelly, 67 N. Y. 409; Howland v. Taylor, 53 N. Y. 627; Re Bartholick, 35 N. Y. S. R. 730; Waite v. Frisbie, 45 Minn. 361; Re Booth, 23 N. Y. Week. Dig. 248; Riddell v. Johnson, 26 Gratt. 162; Harvey v. Sullens, 46 Mo. 147; Schouler, Wills, 2d ed. § 245.

Messrs. Tyson S. Dines and C. Hammond & Son, for respondents:

The evidence of the execution of the will in this case shows full compliance with the statute.

Adams v. Field, 21 Vt. 256; Lemayne v. Stanley, 3 Lev. 1; Knight v. Crockford, 1 Esp. 190; Dudleys v. Dudleys, 8 Leigh, 436.

Not only did the testator state to Dr. H. H. D. Moorman, one of the attesting witnesses that "he had written," but he acknowledged the signed instrument, signature and all to be his will; and the witness saw his name written there. This was sufficient.

Baskin v. Baskin, 36 N. Y. 416; Saunderson v. Jackson, 2 Bos. & P. 238; Schneider v. Norris, 2 Maule & S. 286; Sarah Miles' Will, 4 Dana, 1; Ellis v. Smith, 1 Ves. Jr. 11; Carleton v. Griffin, 1 Burr. 549; Roberts v. Welch, 46 Vt. 164; Knight v. Crockford, and Lemayne v. Stanley, supra.

The question of the due execution of the will was a question of fact to be determined by the jury from the evidence. It was a fact that could be established by circumstances as well as direct proof; and there was ample evidence upon which to submit this question to the jury.

Grimm v. Tittman, 118 Mo. 56.

Where a testator declares to two subscribing witnesses that a paper to which his name is already signed is his will, and then requests them to sign as witnesses, he sufficiently acknowledges his signature. "Nor is it necessary that the testator should say in express terms 'That is my signature.' It is sufficient if it clearly appears that the signature was existent on the will when it was produced to the witnesses and was seen by the witnesses when they subscribed the will."

Blake v. Knight, 3 Curt. Eccl. Rep. 547; Keigwin v. Keigwin, Id. 607; Re Ashmore, Id. 756; Jarman, Wills, 5th ed. p. 81; Re Trenor's Estate, 4 N. Y. Supp. 466; Re Austin's Will, 45 Hun, 1; Clarke v. Dunnacant, 10 Leigh, 18; St. Louis Hospital Assn. v. Williams, 19 Mo. 609; Cravens v. Paulconer, 28 Mo. 19; Grimm v. Tittman, supra; Dudleys v. Dudleys, 8 Leigh, 145; Hall v. Hall, 17 Pick. 878; Nickerson v. Buck, 12 Cush. 383; Grayson v. Wilkinson, 1 Dick. 158; Grayson v. Atkinson, 2 Ves. Sr. 454; Addy v. Griz, 8 Ves. Jr. 505; Morison v. Turnon, 18 Ves. Jr. 188; Heloway v. Galloway, 51 Ill. 159; Crowley v. Crowley, 80 Ill. 469; Re Langtry's Will, 24 N. Y. S. R. 472; Baskin v. Baskin, 36 N. Y. 416; Re Bernsee's Will, 71 Hun, 27; Re Klett's Will, 3 Misc. 385; Devey v. Devey, 1 Met. 349, 35 Am. Dec. 867; White v. British Museum, 6 Binn. 310; Hogan v. Grosvenor, 10 Met. 54; Gamble v. Gamble, 39 Barb. 878; Rosser v. Franklin, 6 Gratt. 1; Paramore v. Taylor, 11 Gratt. 220.

A will is sufficiently attested when subscribed by the witnesses in the presence and at the request of the testator, although none of them saw the testator sign, and only one of them knew what the instrument was.

Devey v. Devey, White v. British Museum, Hogan v. Grosvenor, and Gamble v. Gamble, supra.

In this connection we desire to call attention to the change in our statute of wills, and the decisions of the supreme court before and since the change.

Rev. Stat. 1845, chap. 185, § 5; McGee v. Porter, 14 Mo. 611, 55 Am. Dec. 129; Northcutt v. Northcutt, 20 Mo. 266.

That the draughtsman of a will takes a legacy under it, is suspicious only in connection with other circumstances indicating fraud or undue influence.

Coffin v. Coffin, 23 N. Y. 9, 80 Am. Rep. 235; Barry v. Butlin, 1 Curt. Eccl. Rep. 637.

The deposition of Mrs. Sarah S. Kendrick was certainly admissible in evidence under the issues of fraud by the pleadings.

The declarations were admissible in determining whether testator fully comprehended and approved the will.

Maxwell v. Hill, 89 Tenn. 534; Beadles v. Alexander, 9 Baxt. 604; Linch v. Linch, 1 Lea, 526.

They are admissible to show intention, purpose, mental peculiarity, and condition.

Shailer v. Bumstead, 99 Mass. 112; Herster v. Herster, 122 Pa. 289; Harris v. Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co. 10 R. I. 313; Langham v. Sanford, 19 Ves. Jr. 649, 31 Cent. L. J. p. 454.

The instruction is erroneous because it excludes evidence of the deponent which was of her own personal knowledge and not derived from the declarations of the testator.

81 Cent. L. J. p. 454.

Brace, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a statutory proceeding instituted in the circuit court of Chariton county to contest the validity of an instrument of writing purporting to be the last will and testament of John W. Price, late of said county deceased, duly admitted to probate in said county on the 28th of May, 1890, prosecuted by some of his heirs against a daughter of said deceased and her husband; the petition charging in substance that said paper writing so admitted to probate as the last will of the said deceased "was not written or signed by the said John W. Price, and was not signed by any other person for him, by his direction, in his presence, as provided by law; and that the said paper writing, by reason of the matter aforesaid, is not the will of John W. Price." Upon this allegation issue was joined by answer, and the case came on for trial at the October term, 1891, of said circuit court. After the jury had been impaneled and sworn, and the statutory issue framed by the court, the defendants produced said instrument of writing, which is in words and figures as follows, to wit:

"I, John W. Price, of the county of Charlton, and state of Missouri, being of sound and disposing mind, and knowing that I have to leave this world, as all mortal flesh is doomed to do, I feel anxious to dispose of my entire estate after my death. In accordance with my well matured determination I do hereby make, publish, and declare the following to be my last will and testament, viz.: In the first place, I bequeath my entire estate (except what I have already disposed of) to my wife, Mary E. Price, to use for the support of herself and the two youngest children, Mary Katherine Price and Wallace Powell Price. To my daughter Mary L. Harper I will one dollar, having advanced to her her portion of my estate. To my daughter Louisa M. Walton I will one dollar, having advanced to her her portion of my estate. To my daughter Harriet A. Vergin I will one dollar, having advanced to her and her children their portion of my estate. To my son Elmer D. Price I give the south half of my Huss farm, and to my son John Walter Price I will the north half of the Huss farm. To my daughter Aurelia Harding I will 160 acres of land on Yellow creek, the numbers of which can be found in my tax receipts. To my son William W. Price I will one dollar, having advanced to him his portion of my estate. My home residence, which I have given my wife, Mary E. Price, a lifetime control and possession, I give to my two youngest children, M. K. Price and W. P. Price, to be equal heirs of all my land estate that I have not given away in this, my will, and also all the land I may purchase before my death. I will my stock, household furniture, farm utensils, and all the money I have not disposed of to remain as they are, for the use of the homestead as long as my wife lives; after her death to be divided between the two youngest children. I give Mary Katherine Price the home residence in an equal division of all my land that may be attached to the home tract or not otherwise disposed of, which I have heretofore stated my wife, Mary E. Price, is to control her lifetime. I give my wife one third of my money after paying all my debts and what I have ordered in my will. I also appoint my wife executrix of my estate. I will that the probate court have nothing to do with my estate. Written this 18th of November, 1886. John W. Price. Witness: F. K. Venable. H. H. D. Moorman. John A. Broaddus. James D. Ingram."—And in support thereof introduced the attesting witnesses, who testified in substance as follows:

25 L. R. A.

James D. Ingram testified that he lived in Chillicothe, and in the winter of 1886 or 1887 he was at the residence of Mr. Price as a visitor. "In the morning, after breakfast, Mr. Price said: 'I am very glad that you came. I have been wanting to see you. I wanted you to witness my will.' And he produced that paper; just handed it to me. I did not read it. He said that was his will, and, looking at it, I said, 'You have already several names.' He said he wanted me also. I signed it, and he stated that was his will. The paper is in same condition now as then, with same names upon it. The name of John W. Price was to it then. I signed it as a witness. The other names are above mine. I signed it as a witness at Mr. Price's request." This witness on cross-examination testified that he was acquainted with the hand writing of John W. Price. The paper was not written in the handwriting of Mr. Price, nor was it signed in his handwriting. Witness thought both the body of the writing and the signature were in the hand of Mr. Kendrick. When Mr. Price handed him the paper to sign as a witness he said it was his will. He signed it in the presence of Mr. Price.

F. K. Venable, another attesting witness, testified that he lived within half a mile of John W. Price, and knew him well. "Some time about the latter part of the year 1886,—I don't remember the month,—I was called upon to witness a paper presented to me as Judge Price's will. [Paper here exhibited to witness]. This is my signature attached to that paper. I did not read it. I only know that is my signature there. I only know this to be the same paper by the fact that I identify my signature. That is the only paper I ever signed for Mr. Price. I could not say whether the name of John W. Price was signed to it. I witnessed the paper he handed me and told me was his will. He told me that was his will, and I signed it." "Could not identify it only by my signature. If I am not mistaken, when he handed the paper to me he raised it up, and let it fall over, and told me that was his will, and that he wanted me to sign it as a witness, I believe. A day or two—probably three or four days—before that, he sent for me to come to his house when I had leisure. I went there, and he told me what his business was,—signing as a witness his will. I put my name there as a witness at his request, and in his presence. Did not see paper when written. Did not see him sign it. Did not know his handwriting.

J. A. Broaddus testified: "In the fall of 1886—I don't remember the month—I was called upon to witness Judge Price's will. [Here paper exhibited to witness]. This is the document I signed. Judge Price presented it to me. He said it was his will, and he would like for me to sign it as one of the witnesses. I signed it in his presence. I was there perhaps thirty or forty minutes. When I signed the paper I didn't see anything. It was folded up, and handed to me to sign. I didn't read it. I didn't look at it at all. I think one or two names were there, perhaps, when I signed it. Dr. Moorman was one of the witnesses. This is my signature." Don't remember whether members of the family were there or not. Did not see Mr. Price sign the paper or write it. Was not present when it was written, nor when it was signed by him or by any one for him.

H. H. D. Moorman testified: "Am a physician. Practiced my profession at Dalton, Charlton county, for four years, commencing in the spring of 1884. Was well acquainted with the late John W. Price. During my practice at Dalton, was often called to visit him and his family professionally. Am one of the persons whose names appear as attesting witnesses to the paper recently probated as his will in the Charlton county probate court. I signed the paper at Price's request, and in his presence, but did not see him sign it, nor was his name signed to it by any other person in my presence. His name was already written at foot of paper when I first saw it. He handed me the paper, and said, 'This is my will, and I want you to sign it as a witness.' He said he had it written, but I don't remember that he said by whom. He was then of sound mind."

The proponents then introduced in evidence the deposition of Sarah S. Kendrick, which so far as it bears upon the present inquiry, is as follows: "Am sixty years old. Knew John W. Price well. He stayed a week here (at my house) a good many times, and I spent as much as two weeks with him a good many times. His wife was my step-daughter. I knew him for eighteen years. Q. I will get you to state if, about the year 1886, or some time after that you ever had any conversation with him about this will. A. Yes, sir, I was there. I do not know how long after he made his will. I could not say. He came in, and said, 'Mrs. Kendrick, I have made my will.' I said to him, 'Did you sign the will, Mr. Price?' He said: 'No, I didn't sign it. I told Katie to write it, and I saw her do it.' Q. You [he] said, when you asked him whether he signed it or not, that he told Katie to write it? A. Yes, sir; but he saw her do it. He told her to write his name. The condition of his mind was good, very good, at the time of these conversations. He knew everything he had, just as well as I. Was a remarkably smart man, Mr. Price was. You don't often see just such a man." Cross-examined: "Q. Can you fix the date of your conversation? A. I could not, sir. Q. At the time of this conversation with Judge Price about his will, when he told you he had made a will, how long before that did he tell you he executed a will? A. He did not say. Q. Did he say how long the will had been executed? A. No, sir; just as I told you. Q. How long before Judge Price's death was it that this conversation occurred? A. I could not tell you, to save my life. Q. What was the condition of his health at that time? A. Pretty good. He came in from his work in the garden. Q. What was the exact language he used to you about the writing of the will? A. I asked Mr. Price who wrote the will, and he says, 'I wrote the will, but Katie copied it.' Q. Then what else did you ask him? A. I says, 'Mr. Price, they will break your will.' He says 'They cannot do it; I have given every one something.' I says, 'Mr. Price, did you sign the will?' He says: 'No, I did not sign the will. Katie wrote my name, and I saw her do it.' Q. Is that all he told you about the writing of the will? A. All that I have stated to you is all that he stated, as near as I can give it. Q. As I understand, then, he wrote it, Katie copied it, and Katie signed it? A. He told her to do it, and he saw her do it. Q. Are you positive he said he told her to do it? A. Yes, sir; I have sworn to that, and could do it again. Judge Price met with a railroad accident some years before that. Katie did most of his writing. Don't think he consulted anybody about his business much. He was a man of fine sense. Don't think he relied on the advice of any member of his family in regard to business. Won't say that he transacted his business himself. Don't know exactly. Never saw him call on anybody to transact business. Have seen him call on Kate to put his name to a paper or write an article. Never heard him call on anybody to consult. He thought himself as capable as anybody. At times he was a great sufferer; an invalid. Had neuralgia very bad. Several times his side rose. He had a rising in one of his sides, and was a great sufferer. About this time I was at his house sometimes once a month, sometimes once in two months. Could not tell the exact time. My visits were sometimes for a day or two, sometimes two weeks and more. Judge Price used narcotics, whiskey, like any other man. Sometimes he used it to relieve pain. Do not know as to his taking opiates. Never saw him take any. Q. Was he not frequently in a semi-unconscious condition, so that he would scarcely notice anything going on around him? A. I have seen him on two occasions when they gave him too much whiskey. Q. Were there not other occasions when he paid no attention to what was taking place? A. I could not say. I do not know. Q. Who was the attendant who brought these stimulants and gave them to him? A. His wife and his daughter. Q. At the time you speak of when he had too much whiskey, and was in the condition you describe, do you know who gave it to him? A. I suppose it was either Bettie [his wife] or Katie. I do not know. One of the two, Nobody else did. Judge Price kept his valuable papers in the drawer of a bureau in his house. I do not think every one had access to the drawer. I do not know whether it was locked or not. Think it was. He was a money lender. Had no office except his home. Do not know who transacted for him the business of loaning money, receiving interest, and giving receipts. Never saw any of his business transacted when I was there."

To the introduction of so much of this deposition as contained declarations made by the testator in regard to the execution of the will, the contestants objected, and, their objection being overruled, they excepted. Upon the proof thus made proponents offered in evidence the instrument of writing as the last will of said deceased, and over the objection of the contestants the same was permitted to be read to the jury, to which action and ruling they excepted. Thereupon the proponents rested. The contestants introduced no evidence, but asked the court to give the following instructions: "(1) The court instructs the jury that it has not been proven that the paper writing read in evidence was signed by John W. Price, the supposed testator, or by any other person for him at his request, or by his direction, and in his presence; and you are therefore instructed that your verdict must be that said paper writing is not the will of John W. Price. (2) The court instructs the jury that the testimony of Mrs. Sarah Kendrick, contained in her deposition read in evidence, should not be considered by you for any other purpose than to show the mental condition and state of the affections of John W. Price, and that the said testimony is not competent for the purpose of proving that the said John W. Price executed the paper propounded as his will,"—which the court refused. The contestants excepted, and the case was submitted to the jury, who found the issue for the proponents, and upon this verdict the said instrument of writing was by the judgment of the court established as the last will of said Price, from which judgment the contestants appeal.

The errors assigned are substantially: First. That the court erred in overruling the objections to all that part of the deposition of Mrs. Kendrick relating to declarations concerning the execution of his will made to said witness by John W. Price after the date of the supposed execution thereof, and in refusing the second instruction in regard to her evidence. Second. That the court, upon the proof made, permitted the will to go to the jury, and refused to give the first instruction.

1. The errors under the first head are disposed of in a satisfactory manner by Macfarlane, J., in the first paragraph of the opinion handed down in division one, as follows: "(1) Since the decision of Gibson v. Gibson, 24 Mo. 284, it has been the settled law in this state that declarations of the testator made subsequent to the execution and publication of the will are not admissible as evidence of the fact stated. In his able and exhaustive opinion in that case Judge Leonard sums up the law in reference to such declarations as follows: 'The just result of the whole matter, we think, is that these declarations, so far as they are relied upon to furnish evidence of the facts they contain, are mere hearsay, and that there is no ground, either of authority or reason, to exempt them from the rule of law excluding all such testimony. We repeat, however, what we have before remarked, that as mere verbal facts, external manifestations of what is passing within, they are always evidence of the testator's intellect and affections for the time being, provided they are of such a character, either by themselves or in conjunction with other evidence, and are so connected with the making of the will in point of time, as to furnish any reasonable ground of judgment in reference to the testator's mental condition at that time.' This opinion is so conclusive and satisfactory that it has been adopted and followed in this state without question or comment wherever the question has been raised. Tingley v. Cowgill, 48 Mo. 298; Rule v. Maupin, 84 Mo. 589; Bush v. Bush, 87 Mo. 485; Spooneamore v. Cable, 66 Mo. 587. In the case last cited Judge Napton contents himself by saying, 'We have nothing to add to what was there said.' Schouler, in his work on Wills, disposes of the subject in one brief section as follows: 'The declarations of a testator before or after making a will are inadmissible on the issue of its execution.' Section 817a. To the same effect, see Jones v. McLellan, 76 Me. 49; Kennedy v. Upshaw, 64 Tex. 411; Runkle v. Gates, 11 Ind. 95; Davis v. Davis, 128 Mass. 590; Kitchell v. Beach, 85 N. J. Eq. 446; Herster v. Herster, 116 Pa. 612; Caeman v. Van Harks, 88 Kan. 833; Johnson v. Hicks, 1 Lans. 150; and Couch v. Eastham, 27 W. Va. 796, 55 Am. Rep. 346. In the case last cited, the court, after exhaustive review of the authorities, says, 'We have not found a single case that warrants the introduction of such evidence.' Under the law, thus well settled, we can but conclude that the declarations of John W. Price, as testified to by Mrs. Kendrick, bearing upon the execution of the will, were inadmissible." The declarations of the deceased being excluded from the deposition, there was nothing in the case calling for an instruction upon that subject; consequently the second instruction, which should have been confined to those declarations, was properly refused. This brings us to the real difficulty in the case, which arises under the second head of the assignment of errors.

2. Our statute requires that "every will shall be in writing, signed by the testator, or by some person by his direction, in his presence, and shall be attested by two or more competent witnesses subscribing their names to the will in the presence of the testator." Rev. Stat. 1889, § 8870. That this statute is imperative, and that no instrument can be established as a will without a substantial compliance with its requirements, is beyond question. Catlett v. Catlett, 55 Mo. 330. Whether they have been complied with or not is a question of fact to be determined by the jury upon legal evidence in a proceeding under the statute to contest the validity of a probated instrument, when a jury is required, as in the present case. Rev. Stat. 1889, §§ 8888, 8889. The province of the court before whom the issue was tried, and whose action alone is subject to our review, was not to determine the sufficiency of the evidence to establish the facts essential to a due execution of the will, or the credibility of the witnesses giving it,—this belonged exclusively to the jury,—but to submit that issue to the jury when a prima facie case was made by competent legal evidence tending to prove that all the requirements of the statute had been complied with. And the immediate question before us is, Was the evidence hereinbefore set out, minus the declarations made to Mrs. Kendrick, sufficient to make out a prima facie case of proper execution of the instrument, and to warrant the court in submitting that issue to the jury? The case made by that evidence, briefly, is that Judge John W. Price, aged about seventy four years, of sound mind, a money lender, an intelligent man, of property, and conversant with affairs, but who had some years before met with a railroad accident, and was suffering from neuralgia and "risings" in one of his sides, and had to rely upon his daughter Katie, one of the respondents, to do most of his writing, was in the fall of 1886 living with his family at his home in Chariton county, and had then in his possession the instrument of writing propounded as his last will, which, upon its face, bears evidence that it was prepared under the direction of a mind familiar with such matters. This instrument, in apt language and in due form, with his name signed in the proper place at the bottom of it, all, including the signature, in the handwriting of his daughter Katie, he first presents to his near neighbor Venable, whom he had requested to call for that purpose, to whom he said in substance: "This is my will. It is not necessary that you should read it. I want you to sign it as a witness." The witness attests it, and departs. On a subsequent day he presents the same instrument, also at his home, to Moorman, his family physician, and says: "This is my will. I had it written, and I want you to sign it as a witness." That witness attests it, and departs. Subsequently he presents the same instrument, at the same place, to another neighbor, Broadus, whom he had called to witness his will, to whom he said it was his will, and he would like him to sign it as one of the witnesses, and that witness attests it. Subsequently, his old friend and relative Ingram, being at his house on a visit, he presents the same instrument to him, tells him that it is his will, and that he wants him to witness it, and he attests it. These repeated declarations of Judge Price, who may reasonably be inferred from the evidence to have known the requirements of the statute, made in the most solemn manner, in performing the most solemn act of his life, when considered in the light of all the circumstances by which he was surrounded when they were made, and when the instrument was written, and his name signed thereto, surely, in reason, must afford some evidence that his name was signed to the instrument by his direction, and in his presence. Yet in the face of the case thus made counsel for contestants contend that there is in this record no proof whatever that the name of John W. Price was so signed. The cases to which we are cited in support of this proposition from other jurisdictions, except Burwell v. Corbin, 1 Rand. (Va.) 181, 10 Am. Dec. 494, are under variant statutes, differing from ours, as are many of those cited for the proponents, and shed but little light upon the controversy. The single case cited from this court—Callott v. Callott, supra,—gives it no support whatever, for in that case the instrument propounded was not signed at all, and the point ruled was simply that the signing required by the statute was the affixing of the testator's name at the bottom of the will, either in his own handwriting or in that of some one else in his presence, and by his direction. The Virginia case of Burwell v. Corbin, under a statute like ours, which is almost a literal transcript of 29 Car. II., in respect of the matter in hand, does give support to plaintiffs' contention, but this was the decision of a divided court, upon a special verdict, vigorously dissented from by Judge Roan, and virtually overthrown, after being much thrashed over in subsequent cases, in the Virginia court of appeals, all of which are cited in the notes to 8 Lomax, Dig. (2d ed.) pp. 44-49, §§ 14-16, where the cases are reviewed, and the doctrine of the Virginia cases under that statute, so far as it is pertinent to the present inquiry, correctly stated by Judge Lomax to be: "That the instrument, whether signed by the testator himself or by another person for him, is sufficiently attested upon the acknowledgment of the testator that such instrument is his will; that proof of such an acknowledgment is evidence from which a court of probate or a jury may infer the fact that the instrument was signed by the testator, or was signed by another person for the testator in his presence, and by his direction, as the case may be." The question in hand early came under the consideration of the supreme court of Kentucky, under a like statute (3 Dig. Ky. Stat. 1822, p. 1242), in the case of Cochran's Will (decided in 1814), 8 Bibb, 491, in which that court held: "The subscribing witnesses all prove the acknowledgment of the testator that this instrument was his will, and in his presence attested the same. This is a substantial compliance with the law. A will written and signed by the testator himself, attested by the proper number of witnesses, who can prove its execution only from the acknowledgment of the testator at the time of their attestation, though they did not see him sign it, and his handwriting could not be proved, yet, it is believed, would be held sufficient. And it is conceded that proof of the testator's name being signed by another under his direction, who proves that fact, cannot operate more unfavorably to the validity of the will than when proof of the signature or by whom it was written cannot be made, provided the requisite number of witnesses have attested it, and prove the acknowledgment of the testator, at the time of their attesting it as his will." The doctrine here announced has been uniformly maintained in the subsequent decisions in that state under the statute. Shanks v. Christopher (1820) 8 A. K. Marsh. 144; Sarah Miles's Will (1836) 4 Dana, 1; Upchurch v. Upchurch (1855) 16 B. Mon. 102. The Virginia statute seems to have been the common source from which the Kentucky statute of wills (1797, supra) and that of Missouri were originally taken (3 Mo. Laws 1825, p. 790), and all are substantially enactments of the English statute.

While the precise question under consideration has never been directly and authoritatively passed upon in this state, yet the principles decisive of it seem to have been well settled in harmony with the rulings in the English courts and those of Virginia and Kentucky. In Oravens v. Faulcomer (1859) 28 Mo. 19, this court, speaking through Richardson, J., said: "It is manifest that the provision of our act in question was borrowed from the British statute, which has so often been under the consideration of their courts that it has become well settled by a long continued and uniform construction, which we cannot disregard. The witnesses must subscribe their names in the presence of the testator, in order that they may not impose a different will on him; but it is not necessary that they shall attest the very act and factum of signing by the testator. Though he must do some act declaring it to be his will, no particular form of words is required, and it is uniformly held that it is not necessary that the testator shall actually sign his name to the will in the presence of the attesting witnesses, but the acknowledgment by a testator that the name signed to the instrument is his, or that the paper is his will, is sufficient. 1 Jarman, Wills, 72; 1 Pow. Dev. 83; 4 Kent, Com. 576; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 676." To the same purport is the recent case of Grimm v. Titman, 113 Mo. 57. The principle announced in all these cases is simply a recognition and affirmation of the doctrine laid down in Ellis v. Smith, 1 Ves. Jr. 11, decided in 1754 by the high court of chancery of England, after a review of all the precedents, and which was thereafter uniformly followed in the English courts so long as the Statute of Charles II. on this subject remained unchanged. From the authorities on this statute, English and American, but one deduction can be logically drawn, and that is that an instrument of writing purporting to be the will of a person of sound mind and lawful age, signed at the bottom with the name of the testator, and attested by the requisite number of witnesses in his presence, may be established as his last will and testament on the evidence of such attesting witnesses that he acknowledged before each of them, separately or together, that such instrument was his will, without further proof. The application of this principle does not depend upon the physical fact of signing. It applies all the same whether the instrument was signed by the testator by his own hand, or by that of another at his request and in his presence. The acknowledgment has just the same probative force in the one case as in the other, and the removal of that probative force as to either mode by other proof that it was not signed in one of these ways does not and cannot destroy the probative force of the acknowledgment that it was signed in the other way, and to prove that the signature to a will thus acknowledged was not in fact made by the hand of the testator has no more tendency to prove that the will was not signed by another at his request, in his presence, than proof that it was not so signed by another has to prove that it was not signed by the testator in his own proper hand. This is not "consequence built upon consequence," but an inevitable and immediate deduction from the premises. It is not the mere physical act of signing that the witnesses attest; it is that the instrument signed with the name of the testator is his will. Withinton v. Withinton, 7 Mo. 589; Oravens v. Faulcomer, supra; Harris v. Hays, 58 Mo. 90; Norton v. Paxton, 110 Mo. 456; Grimm v. Titman, supra. That fact they are warranted in attesting upon the declaration of the person whose name is signed to the instrument (he being of sound mind and lawful age) that the instrument so signed is his last will and testament, although they neither saw him subscribe his own name to it in proper person, nor another subscribe his name thereto at his request, and in his presence. Proof of this acknowledgment by the deceased before the required number of attesting witnesses, made by them, that he was of lawful age and sound mind, and that they signed their names as witnesses to the instrument in his presence and at his request, under our law, makes a prima facie case, entitling the instrument to go to probate in the first instance, and upon a contest under the statute makes a case entitling the instrument to go to the jury as prima facie the will of the testator. To them is then intrusted the solemn duty of finally determining upon the whole evidence whether the instrument is the will of the testator, which it cannot be unless signed in one or the other modes designated by the statute. That it was so signed, however, need not be proved by positive and direct testimony, but may be established, as any other fact, by circumstances from which it may be legitimately inferred, of which the acknowledgment must always be one of the most convincing that it was in fact signed in one or the other of the modes provided for by the statute. For a decade in the history of Missouri the law in regard to wills signed by another for the testator was different, requiring additional proof in such cases. In the Revision of 1845 (chap. 185, § 5) a new section was adopted, requiring that "every person who shall sign the testator's name to any will by his direction, shall subscribe his own name as a witness of such will, and state that he subscribed the testator's name at his request." It was under this statute that the cases of McGee v. Porter, 14 Mo. 615, 55 Am. Dec. 129; St. Louis Hospital Assn. v. Williams, 19 Mo. 609; and Northcutt v. Northcutt, 20 Mo. 266,—were decided; and even under that statute it was held that there need not be an express direction, but that such direction might be proved by circumstances. 19 Mo. 612. It needed, however, but a brief experience of the dangers of innovation upon well-established and well-understood rules for the government of persons who in contemplation of death desired to make disposition of their property by will, as illustrated in those cases, to induce our lawmakers to return to the well-approved methods of their fathers, and this section was dropped from the Revision of 1855, and never since has found a place among our statutes.

From the evidence in this case there is reasonable ground for the inference that Judge Price was familiar with the statute, and knew its requirements. There can be no doubt that he intended the instrument to be his last will and testament, and thought it was executed in accordance with its requirements; and all the evidence in the case tends to show that it was. His testamentary intentions ought not to be defeated by a narrow and technical construction of the statute, and cannot be defeated by evidence which tends to prove that his will was not signed in one of the ways provided by the statute, but which in no way tends to prove that it was not signed in the other, but tending strongly to prove that it was so signed. We therefore conclude that the trial court committed no error in refusing contestants' first instruction, nor in permitting the instrument to go to the jury on the prima facie case of its proper execution made by the evidence introduced by proponents. So that the only error we find in the trial was the admission of the declarations of the testator as to the manner in which the will was signed. As the acknowledgment of the testator is not conclusive evidence that the instrument was executed in the mode provided by the statute, but only evidence from which the jury would be warranted in inferring that the instrument was so executed, and as in this case they might not have drawn such inference but for this evidence, notwithstanding the acknowledgment was strengthened by the other facts and circumstances in evidence, the judgment, for this error, will have to be reversed, and the cause remanded for new trial, and it is accordingly so ordered.

All concur, except Barclay, J., absent and Burgess, J., not sitting. Gantt, and Sherwood, JJ., concur in this opinion; Black, Ch. J., and Macfarlane, J., each in separate opinions.

Black, Ch. J., concurring:

As said by this court when speaking of our statute concerning wills: "It is uniformly held that it is not necessary that the testator shall actually sign his name to the will in the presence of the attesting witnesses; but the acknowledgment by the testator that the name signed to the instrument is his, or that the paper is his will, is sufficient;" nor is it necessary that the witnesses shall sign in the presence of each other. Cravens v. Paulconer, 28 Mo. 19. As to the attestation, it can make no difference whether the will is signed by the testator himself, or by some other person by his direction and in his presence. In either case the attestation is good and sufficient if the testator acknowledges the instrument to be his will, and the witnesses sign it in his presence. In short, the witnesses attest a signed will, and not necessarily the various steps leading to its execution. This, it seems to us, is the necessary result of the rulings of the courts, often repeated, that the witnesses need not attest in the presence of each other, or attend the ceremony of signing by the testator. A will may be well attested though the attesting witnesses cannot depose to all the facts essential to a good signing by or for the testator. This is especially true in cases like the one in hand, where the name of the testator was not signed by himself, but was signed by another. Where the testator produces an instrument purporting to be his will, and declares that it is his will, and requests the witnesses to attest it, the declaration to them that the instrument is his will is evidence that he signed it; and, should it appear that he did not sign it himself, but that his name was signed thereto by another, the declaration is still evidence that his name was signed thereto by his direction; but in such case we do not see how his declaration, standing alone, can be any evidence that the name of the testator was signed in his presence. To so hold is to build up a presumption from a presumption. In the case in hand it clearly appears the testator did not sign his name to the paper propounded as his last will. His name was signed by another. He, however, presented it thus signed to the several attesting witnesses, and declared to each of them that the paper was his will, and the witnesses attested it at his request. This declaration of the testator that the instrument was his will, as shown by the testimony of the attesting witnesses, is evidence tending to show that his name was signed thereto by his direction; but, standing by itself, it does not, in our opinion, show or tend to show that the testator's name was signed in his presence. The question, then, is whether there is any other evidence in the case which justified the court in submitting the issue to the jury. The other circumstances in evidence are these: The will, including the name of the testator, was written by his daughter Katherine. The will bears date the 18th November, 1886, and was attested about the same date. Some of the attesting witnesses signed it in the presence of the wife of the testator and other members of the family as well as in the presence of Mr. Price. It was in the possession of the testator from the date thereof until his death, in April, 1890. One attesting witness says: "He said he had it written, but I don't remember that he said by whom." Another witness in the case, though not an attesting witness, testified: "Have seen him call on Katie to put his name to a paper or write an article." The will was evidently dictated from first to last by the testator himself, and there can be no doubt but he intended it to take effect as his last will. Taking these circumstances all in all, we think there is evidence from which a jury might properly draw the conclusion that the daughter signed the name of her father to the will in his presence. The testator possessed more than ordinary business capacity. The will was the result of his own judgment, and his name was written thereto by his direction. He intended the instrument should take effect as his will. There is no evidence tending to show that his name was not signed in his presence. Under these circumstances, the will ought not to be rejected, as a matter of law, if there is any evidence tending to show that his name was signed in his presence. We think the fact that this will was prepared according to his dictation at his own house, by his daughter, who signed his name to other papers when requested to do so, is some evidence that she signed her father's name to this instrument in his presence. The case made is therefore one for the jury, in the opinion of the writer.

Macfarlane, J., dissenting:

It is not insisted that the formalities required by the statute in order to the due execution of a will can be dispensed with, and the mere acknowledgment of the testator substituted therefor. In order, therefore, to give effect to the statute in case the name of the testator is subscribed by another for him, it is essential to the perfection and validity of the instrument that it be signed by the direction of the testator, and in his presence. That being so, it follows that a writing not so signed cannot be given validity by adoption, however solemnly made. If the name of Col. Price was not, in fact, written in his presence, and at his request, it was not his will; and no declaration afterwards made by him to the contrary would change its legal character or effect. I understand the majority of the court agree to these propositions. It is also well settled that the burden of proof is on the proponents of the will to prove its due and legal execution. Norton v. Paston, 110 Mo. 456; Gay v. Gillilan, 92 Mo. 255; Schouler, Wills, § 289. I agree that the sole question on this branch of the case is whether there was competent, legal evidence, offered by proponents, sufficient to make prima facie proof that the instrument in question was executed in the manner prescribed by the statute. I agree that the declarations of the testator, made at the time of the attestation of the will, were admissible as part of the res gestæ. When witness Moorman attested the writing, Col. Price stated that he had it written. This declaration, I may admit, tended to prove that the instrument was both written and signed by the direction of the testator, but I think no one can fairly claim that it, taken alone, had the remotest tendency to prove that the name was subscribed thereto in his presence. When we undertake to make the simple declaration of Col. Price that the instrument was his will evidence that it was executed under all the formalities required by the statute, we virtually throw aside the statute altogether, and make a will by mere adoption. We could with equal propriety dispense with the attestation of witnesses. The evident design of the statute, in requiring these formalities, when the name of a testator was written by another, was to prevent, as far as possible, the perpetration of frauds and impositions upon the ignorant and illiterate. But the statute does not confine its requirements to that class of persons. The requirements apply equally to the educated and intelligent business man. Nor are the rules of evidence, or its weight, given flexibility to suit the intelligence or ignorance of the testator. I have no doubt that the paper declared by Col. Price as his will made a disposition of his property according to his intention and wishes. Had he been unable to read or write, and barely competent to make a will, and had the daughter who wrote the will and signed his name to it been the principal legatee, to the substantial disinheritance of brothers and sisters, no more and no less evidence of its execution would have been required. More weight would doubtless be given to the declarations of an intelligent than to those of an ignorant person, but the competency of the evidence of each would be the same. I am unable to see that the declaration of Col. Price had the least tendency to prove that his name was signed to the writing in his presence, notwithstanding his intelligence, his business capacity, and his strong will. These could only give weight to declarations, which would have been evidence if spoken by the most illiterate. If a declaration does not tend to prove a fact, the character of the person making it is wholly immaterial.

The other circumstances shown by the evidence are that the testator, from bodily affliction, was unable to write with ease, and his daughter Mrs. Kendrick generally acted as his amanuensis. They lived in the same house. The will was written some years before the death of the testator, and during the time was kept in his possession. This evidence tends to prove that the will was written and signed by direction of the testator, and that he was satisfied with the disposition he had attempted to make of his property; but I am at a loss to see the least tendency it has to prove the fact that the will was signed by Mrs. Kendrick in his presence. The circumstances were as consistent with one theory as the other. They tended to prove neither. The burden of proof was on the proponents. I think there was no evidence tending to prove the due execution of the will, and therefore I do not concur in the second paragraph of the majority opinion, or in the concurring opinion of the learned chief justice.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

NORFOLK & WESTERN R. CO., Appl.,
v.
William HOOVER.

(.....Md.....)

1. The master's knowledge of the bad reputation for intemperance of a person employed as brakeman on a train is not necessary to render him liable for injuries caused by the brakeman's unfitness, if he was negligent in not knowing of such reputation.
2. Evidence of the general reputation for intemperance of a railroad brakeman is admissible on the question of the negligence of the master in employing or retaining him.
3. A train dispatcher with power to employ and discharge flagmen and brakemen, and having general charge of the trainmen of one division, and movement of trains thereon, but without power to employ engine-men and firemen,—is the fellow servant of an engine-man who is injured in consequence of the train despatcher's negligence in sending incompetent or unfit brakemen with the train.

4. In the absence of a special exception signed and sealed by the judge, an objection that there is no evidence to support an instruction will not be considered on appeal.
5. An instruction that the master is liable for negligence in employing unfit trainmen, if an injury results from the incompetence of a brakeman, is erroneous, as it is not limited to a case of negligence in the employment of the brakeman.

(June 19, 1894.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Washington County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by negligence for which defendant was responsible. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Hy. Kyd, Douglass for appellant.
Messrs. M. L. Keedy and W. C. Griffith for appellee.

NOTE.—Liability of master for injuries caused to one servant by the incompetency of a fellow servant.

1. Employment generally.
2. Retention in employ.
3. Incompetency through use of liquor.
4. Pleading incompetency.
5. Evidence.
  - a. Generally.
  - b. Specific acts.
  - c. Notice to company.
  - d. Burden of proof.

1. Employment generally.

A master is required to furnish to his employes competent fellow servants, and a failure to perform this duty through want of reasonable care on the part of the master is negligence on his part, and a master is liable to a servant for injuries received through the incompetency of a fellow servant, if the master did not use reasonable care in the employment of such servants causing the injury. This liability is an exception to the general rule that a master is not liable to his servants for the negligence of a fellow servant. (Brakeman injured by act of engineer) Tyson v. South & North Ala. R. Co. 61 Ala. 554, 32 Am. Rep. 8; (brakeman injured by act of brakeman) Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Champion (Ind.) Jan. 10, 1894; (brakeman injured) Sweet v. Boston & A. R. Co. 156 Mass. 284; (brakeman injured by act of flagman) Bosout v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 32 N. Y. S. R. 884; (brakeman injured by act of telegraph operator) Wabash R. Co. v. McDaniels, 107 U. S. 454, 27 L. ed. 606; (carpenter injured through act of pile driver engineer) Texas Mexican R. Co. v. Whitmore, 58 Tex. 276; (carpenter injured by child superintendent) Henry v. Brady, 9 Daly, 143; (carpenter injured by act of foreman) Bunnell v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 29 Minn. 305; Slater v. Chapman, 67 Mich. 523; (conductor injured by act of engineer) Harper v. Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. 47 Mo. 567, 4 Am. Rep. 853; (engineer injured by act of brakeman) Mann v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 91 N. Y. 495; (engineer injured by act of engineer) Newell v. Ryan, 40 Hun, 268; (engineer killed by act of engineer) Pennsylvania Co. v. Roney, 89 Ind. 453, 46 Am. Rep. 173; (section boss injured through act of engineer) Cincinnati, H. & I. R. Co. v. Madden, 134 Ind. 463; (fireman injured by act of mechanic repairing engine) Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Thomas, 43 Ala. 672; (fireman injured by act of switchman who could not read time-table) Taylor v. Western Pac. Co. 45 Cal. 323; (laborer injured by act of engineer) Fitzpatrick v. New Albany & S. R. Co. 7 Ind. 423; Cayser v. Taylor, 10 Gray, 274, 69 Am. Dec. 317; Colorado Midland R. Co. v. O'Brien, 18 Colo. 212; (laborer injured by fellow workman in a gin factory) Fones v. Phillips, 20 Ark. 17, 43 Am. Rep. 264; (laborer injured by workman in removing fly-wheel) McEligott v. Randolph, 61 Conn. 157; (laborer injured by fellow laborer in mill) Indiana Mfg. Co. v. Millican, 37 Ind. 87; (laborer injured by act of carpenter) Haworth v. Seavers Mfg. Co. (Iowa) Feb. 13, 1892; (laborer injured by act of laborer) Nordyke v. Van Sant, 99 Ind. 188; Fines v. Silvery, 73 Hun, 549; (switchman injured by act of engineer) Cheapeake, O. & S. W. R. Co. v. McMannon (Ky.) 33 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 308; (laborer injured by laborer with dynamite) Stewart v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. 28 N. Y. S. R. 215; (laborer injured by act of physician) Richardson v. Carbon Hill Coal Co. 20 L. R. A. 333, 5 Wash. 52; (snow shoveler injured by act of engineer) Wall v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 54 Hun, 454; (switchman injured) Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Johnson, 102 Ind. 253; (track hand injured by act of road-master) Chicago & G. E. R. Co. v. Harney, 22 Ind. 28; (employee injured by act of engineer) Blake v. Maine Cent. R. Co. 70 Me. 60, 35 Am. Rep. 297.

Under Kansas Law of 1874, chapter 92, and Iowa Laws of 1882, a railroad company is liable to a servant for injury caused by negligence of fellow servant. Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Peavey, 24 Kan. 472; Kroy v. Chicago, B. L. & P. R. Co. 22 Iowa, 257; Hunt v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 26 Iowa, 352.

And under 43 & 44 Vict., chapter 42, a master is liable to a servant for injury caused by negligence of fellow servant.

A railroad is negligent in selecting a freight conductor of one month's experience to act as conductor of wild train without examination as to his fitness. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Guyton, 115 Ind. 450.

And a railroad company is negligent in allowing the track to stand for ten hours after heavy freshets without any one to guard washout, allowing train to pitch into it, although they claimed the section

McSherry, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries received by the appellee, an employé of the Norfolk & Western Railroad Company, as the result of alleged negligence on the part of his fellow servant. The verdict and judgment were in his favor, and the company has appealed. In the record there are three bills of exception, upon which the questions to be considered arise. Two of these exceptions were reserved by the appellant, and one by the appellee.

It appears that in May, 1891, an extra train of loaded freight cars was started from Shenandoah, Va., about 11:30 P. M., to run through to Hagerstown, Md. The crew consisted of a conductor, an engineman, a fireman, a flagman, and two brakemen. Hoover, the appellee, was the engineman. As the train proceeded northward, it descended some heavy grades, and the engineman noticed that its speed was not kept under proper control by the brakemen. At Luray the train laid over for an hour, and the engineman requested the brakemen not to let him down the hills so rapidly, as the night was quite foggy. After leaving Luray, they ascended the grade to Vaughn's Summit, turning the point at a speed of about ten miles an hour. Immediately upon passing the summit the appellee shut off the steam, so that the train might descend by gravity alone, without aid from the engine. When about a train's length over the hill, he discovered that the train was increasing its speed, and he applied the tank brake; but, this producing no effect, he blew for brakes, turned on the driver brakes, and applied sand to the track. This not checking the train, he again blew for brakes, and reversed his engine. He repeated his signals for brakes at least once, and probably twice, afterwards, but they seem not to have been heeded by the brakemen, for the train moved rapidly onward down the grade. The packing blew out of the cylinder, and this caused the train to plunge forward, throwing the appellee back into the tender. At this juncture they were rapidly approaching, and were only some ten or twelve car lengths distant from, Possum master was skillful. Hardy v. Carolina Cent. R. Co., 76 N. C. 5.

A brakeman injured by a low bridge may show that the other brakemen causing the injury were green and incompetent and known to be such by the company. Altee v. South Carolina R. Co. 21 S. C. 550.

Incompetency on the part of the conductor and engineer operating colliding trains with other evidence showing collision was caused by such incompetency and that the railroad company was aware of such incompetency, establishes liability. (Engineer was killed) Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Salmon, 14 Kan. 512.

In Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Durkin, 76 Ill. 395; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Cox, 21 Ill. 30, 71 A.L.J. Dec. 298; Thayer v. St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co. 22 Ind. 26, 35 Am. Dec. 409; Brazil & C. Coal Co. v. Cain, 98 Ind. 232; Marquette & C. R. Co. v. Taft, 28 Mich. 299; Quincy Min. Co. v. Kitta, 42 Mich. 34; Fidelity Northern Railroad, 42 N. H. 225; Willis v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 11 Or. 267; Hard v. Vermont & C. R. Co. 32 Vt. 473; Fox v. Sandford, 4 Sced. 96, 67 Am. Dec. 597; Weger v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 55 Pa. 460; Brown v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 27 Minn. 163, 38 Am. Rep. 235; O'Donnell v. Allegheny Valley R. Co. 50 Pa. 230, 98 Am. Dec. 886; Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Carroll, 80 Pa. 374.—It was held that if a master has not used due diligence in the selection of competent servants he is liable for injuries caused by their acts to fellow servants by such incompetency; but this was not the question involved in these cases.

But a master is not liable to a servant for injuries caused by incompetency of a fellow servant, if the master has used reasonable care and diligence in selecting such servants causing the injury, and had no notice of his incompetency. (Baggageman claimed the bridge inspector was incompetent) Warner v. Erie R. Co. 30 N. Y. 463; (blacksmith was injured by act of striker) Melville v. Melville, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. 43 Fed. Rep. 830; (brakeman injured by act of engineer) Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Willie, 53 Tex. 318, 37 Am. Rep. 756; (brakeman was injured in making flying switch) Pilkinton v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. 70 Tex. 226; (brakeman injured by act of engineer and conductor) Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Devinney, 17 Ohio St. 197; Summerhays v. Kansas Pac. R. Co. 2 Colo. 484; (brakeman injured by act of switchman) Pontou v. Wilming- 25 L. R. A.

ton & W. R. Co. 51 N. C. 245; (engineer injured by act of chief engineer on a steamer) Searle v. Lindsay, 11 C. B. N. S. 429, 31 L. J. C. P. 106, 8 Jur. N. S. 746, 5 L. T. N. S. 427, 10 Week. Rep. 89; (brakeman injured by defective ladder through act of car inspector) Macdon v. Boston & A. Railroad, 135 Mass. 201, 45 Am. Rep. 456; (bricklayer injured by defective scaffold through act of foreman) Wigmore v. Jay, 5 Exch. 354, 19 L. J. Exch. 294, 14 Jur. 387; (engineer injured by act of telegraph operator throwing switch under sudden impulse) Burke v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. 60 Hun, 21; (fireman killed through act of telegraph operator and conductor) Slater v. Jewett, 35 N. Y. 73, 39 Am. Rep. 627; (fireman injured at a washout through act of chief engineer and superintendent) Mobile & M. R. Co. v. Smith, 59 Ala. 245; (foundry helper injured by truck-wagon driver) Hogan v. Central Pac. R. Co. 49 Cal. 122; (laborer at blast furnace injured by act of laborer) Holland v. Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. 13 L. R. A. 232, 91 Ala. 444; (laborer injured by act of engineer) Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Collins, 2 Duv. 114, 87 Am. Dec. 498; (Laborer at mines injured through act of engineer) Barton's Hill Coal Co. v. Reid, 3 Macq. H. L. Cas. 266, 4 Jur. N. S. 767; (laborer at mines injured by act of mining boss) Reese v. Biddle, 112 Pa. 72; McLean v. Blue Point Gravel Min. Co. 51 Cal. 255; (laborer on tramway injured through act of track layer) Gallagher v. Piper, 16 C. B. N. S. 669, 38 L. J. C. P. 329; (laborer injured by failure to place signal) Moran v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. 8 Thomp. & C. 770; (laborer on cars injured) Hutchinson v. New York, N. & B. R. Co. 5 Exch. 352, 19 L. J. Exch. 296, 14 Jur. 387; (laborer at rolling mill injured by act of engineer) Caldwell v. Brown, 53 Pa. 458; (laborer in building injured by act of superintendent in construction) Brown v. Acornington Cotton Spinning & Mfg. Co. 3 Hurlst. & C. 511, 34 L. J. Exch. 208, 13 L. T. N. S. 94; (laborer injured by act of foreman in locomotive shops) Beaulieu v. Portland Co. 43 Me. 291; (laborer on train injured by act of foreman and engineer) O'Connell v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 20 Md. 212, 33 Am. Dec. 543; (laborer injured by foreman of hoisting tackle) McDermott v. Boston, 133 Mass. 349; (laborer on train injured by act of engineer) Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Keefe, 47 Ill. 108; (mason injured through defective platform) Colton v. Richards, 123 Mass. 484; (painter injured by act of foreman with hoisting engine) Feltham v. Eng-

Hollow, which is crossed upon a trestle 75 or 80 feet high. The appellee saw that a collision with another freight train standing, or moving very slowly northward, on the trestle, was imminent and unavoidable, and, to save himself, jumped from his engine, and received the injuries for which he has brought the pending suit. There was evidence offered tending to prove that Huyett, one of the brakemen, had been drinking that night before the accident happened; and, within thirty minutes prior to the collision, his breath gave unmistakable evidence of it. In this state of the proof, a witness was asked whether he knew the general reputation of Huyett and Reese, the two brakemen, for sobriety for one or two years before the accident and following that, and, if so, to state what that reputation was. To this question and the evidence sought to be elicited thereby, the appellant objected, but the court permitted the question to be asked and answered, and this ruling forms the subject of the first exception.

It has been repeatedly held by this court, land, L. R. § Q. B. 38; (painter injured by scaffold in building) Tarrant v. Webb, 18 C. B. 797, 35 L. J. C. P. 261; (snow shoveler injured by track-walker handling switch) Bagundes v. Central Pac. R. Co. 3 L. R. A. 824, 79 Cal. 97; (switch conductor injured by act of engineer) Columbus, C. & I. Cent. R. Co. v. Troesch, 68 Ill. 645, 18 Am. Rep. 578; (switchman injured by act of engineer) Satterly v. Morgan, 35 La. Ann. 1166; (section hand injured by act of car inspector) Indiana, L. & L. R. Co. v. Snyder (Ind.) 58 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 225; (yardman injured by act of engineer) O'Hare v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 95 Mo. 662.

And where a train manager was experienced and had notice that the conductor was sick or unfit and was compelled to make the run, and the engineer was injured, the master is not liable. Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Dolan, 32 Mich. 510.

And that an inspector had worked three or four months putting in braces and then in the carpentry repair shop for one or two years, does not establish his incompetency. Gibson v. Northern Cent. R. Co. 23 Hun, 299.

The fact that a person is near sighted does not necessarily render him incompetent to be engineer of a locomotive, if he can see with glasses. (Car repairer killed) Texas & P. R. Co. v. Harrington, 63 Tex. 597.

And that a yard-master, was incompetent, partially paralyzed, sluggish, and forgetful, is not sufficient unless the company had notice of that fact or ought to have known it, where an engineer was killed. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Gurley, 12 Lea, 45.

And under Pennsylvania Act of 1885 (Pub. Laws, 217, §§ 15, 17), rendering mining company liable for employing mining boss who has no certificate of competency, the injury must be occasioned by willful failure to comply with the act, and it must be shown that the injury was occasioned by violation of the act. That is, there may be no liability although the boss had no certificate. Christner v. Cumberland & E. L. Coal Co. 146 Pa. 67.

In Wright v. New York Cent. R. Co. 25 N. Y. 562, it was held that where an engineer negligently and recklessly disregarded directions of master and ran ahead of time at great speed the company is not liable where the injury was not the result of ignorance or incompetency but of rashness and recklessness.

The question of competency must relate to the 25 L. R. A.

and is the settled and established doctrine of Maryland, that in actions of this character, where a servant sues his master for injuries resulting from the negligence of a fellow servant, the plaintiff, to succeed, must prove not only that some negligence of the fellow servant caused the injury, but also that the master had himself been guilty of negligence, either in the selection of the negligent fellow servant in the first instance, or in retaining him in his service afterwards. Mere negligence on the part of a fellow servant, though resulting in injury, will not suffice to support the action, because the master does not insure one employé against the carelessness of another; but he owes to each of his servants the duty of using reasonable care and caution in the selection of competent fellow servants, and in the retention in his service of none but those who are. If he does not perform this duty, and an injury is occasioned by the negligence of an incompetent or careless servant, the master is responsible to the injured employé, not for the mere negligent act or omission of the incompetent. (Fireman injured by switchman) Harvey v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. 33 N. Y. 481.

And in Johnston v. Pittsburgh & W. R. Co. 114 Pa. 443, it was held that where a brakeman was injured through the negligence of the conductor and engineer, and it was claimed that the conductor was sick and unfit and the engineer had been on continuous duty so that he was unfit, there is no liability where it is not shown that the cause of the injury was occasioned through these reasons.

So there is no negligence shown in employing the engineer where the master mechanic employing him had reason to think he had served as fireman the usual period and some times as engineer, and no fault had been found. (Brakeman injured) Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Berry, 67 Tex. 293.

And if a foreman acting as engineer handles cars and engines as carefully as any engineer of ordinary care could have done under the circumstances, a railroad company is not liable even if he was otherwise incompetent. (Engine oiler injured) Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Schwabbe, 1 Tex. App. 573.

In Parrish v. Pensacola & A. R. Co., 23 Fla. 251, it was held that where the plaintiff was on a gravel train and claimed that the fireman was inexperienced, incompetent, and unfit to act as fireman or engineer, but the declaration and proofs showed that the fireman was competent for fireman and the engineer was competent for engineer, there is no incompetency shown, although the engineer turned the engine over to the fireman. The turning of the engine over by the engineer was without knowledge or consent of any of the agents of defendant.

In Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Myers, 55 Tex. 110, it was held that admitting that it was negligence for the engineer to trust the engine to the fireman and negligence for the fireman to operate it, still the engineer was competent and the fireman was competent for their purposes, and for this isolated act of negligence there can be no recovery, where a brakeman was injured in coupling.

And for a brakeman to recover for injuries caused by engineer, charging incompetency of fireman temporarily in charge, it must be established that the company did not exercise ordinary care in allowing him to run the engine, that he was so inexperienced as not to be fit for the position, that he mismanaged it and that the mismanagement caused the injury. Core v. Ohio River R. Co. 38 W. Va. 454.

petent or careless servant, but for his own negligence in not discharging his own duty towards the injured servant. As this negligence of the master must be proved, it may be proved like any other fact,—either by direct evidence, or by the proof of circumstances from which its existence may, as a conclusion of fact, be fairly and reasonably inferred. That drunkenness on the part of a railroad employé renders him an incompetent servant will scarcely be disputed; nor can it be questioned that a master who knowingly employs such a servant, or who, knowing his habits, retains him in his service, would be guilty of a reckless and wanton breach of duty, not only to the public, but to every employé in his service. There is no evidence in the record, nor has there been a suggestion, that either the conductor, fireman, or flagman of the train was negligent or incompetent. The negligence which directly caused the accident is attributed solely to the brakemen; and the appellant's negligence, which, as it is claimed, fixes its liability, lies in its employment of, or continuing to retain in its service, these dissipated or intemperate brakemen. But, as we have stated, it was necessary for the plaintiff to show, not only their employment, but that the company had not used due and ordinary care in selecting them. There was no direct evidence adduced to show the absence of such care; but the question excepted to, and the evidence elicited in response to it, were designed to show by indirect or circumstantial evidence that the company had not used the degree of care and caution in the selection of these brakemen that its duty imperatively required it to use. So the question is, Can you fix upon the master a failure to use due care in selecting careful servants by showing such notorious or general reputation respecting the servant's unfitness or incompetency as that the master could not, without negligence on his part, have been ignorant of it when he employed the servant? About this there ought to be no difficulty. If the servant's general reputation before employment is so notorious as to unfitness as that it must have been known to the master but for his

But in Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Thomas (Va.) July 20, 1883, it was held that a railroad did not perform its duty in furnishing a competent engineer where the engineer in charge turned over his engine to an inexperienced fireman who had only been in service three or four weeks and never on a railroad before and the conductor knew he was running the engine.

Although Mo. Gen. Stat. 1885, chap. 68, provides for liability of a corporation to any person for failure to ring a bell, no recovery can be had by an employé if the person causing the injury was competent, as this statute does not change the common law. Robb v. Pacific Railroad, 43 Mo. 187.

Similar doctrine is applied to Maine Rev. Stat., chap. 81. Carle v. Bangor & P. Canal & R. Co. 43 Me. 269.

And under Code of Napoleon, 1802, providing that every act that causes damages subjects him by whose failure it happened to repair it, does not apply to injuries by one servant to another unless it was shown that such servant was unskillful or habitually careless. Hugh v. New Orleans & C. R. Co. 6 La. Ann. 493, 54 Am. Dec. 535.

And in Florida, prior to 1887, a railroad was not responsible to a brakeman for injury caused by a fellow servant unless he was unskillful, and a railroad furnishing a surgeon of ordinary competency and skill is not liable. South Florida R. Co. v. Price, 32 Fla. 46.

Under California Code, section 1970, providing for liability for injuries to persons employed through negligence of other employé, it must be shown that the master was negligent in the selection of the servant. McDonald v. Hazeltine, 68 Cal. 35; Stephens v. Doe, 73 Cal. 28; Congrave v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 68 Cal. 300.

Under the seventh section of Illinois Act for Health and Safety of Miners, the master is liable for injuries to employés caused by the engineer if the engineer is incompetent or under eighteen years of age. Niantic Coal & Min. Co. v. Leonard, 126 Ill. 216.

And it was said in Cowles v. Richmond & D. R. Co., 84 N. C. 300, 37 Am. Rep. 620; Anderson v. New Jersey S. R. Co. 7 Robt. 611; Treadwell v. New York, 1 Daly, 123; Harrison v. Central R. Co. 81 N. J. L. 263; William Bros. v. Cartter, 52 Mo. 373; Gibson v. Pacific R. Co. 46 Mo. 163, 2 Am. Rep. 497; Howd v. Mississippi Cent. R. Co. 50 Miss. 178; Wonder v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 32 Md. 411, 3 Am. Rep. 143; Atch- son, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Moore, 29 Kan. 632; Benn v. Null, 65 Iowa, 407; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Duffey, 35 Ark. 602; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Swett, 45 Ill. 197, 92 Am. Dec. 206; Sherman v. Rochester & S. R. Co. 17 N. Y. 153; Mad River & L. E. R. Co. v. Barber, 5 Ohio St. 541, 67 Am. Dec. 312; Wiggett v. Fox, 36 Eng. L. & Eq. 426; Wilson v. Merry, L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. App. 323, 19 L. T. N. S. 30; Consolidated Coal & Min. Co. v. Floyd, post, 848, 51 Ohio St. — that a master who uses due diligence in the selection of competent servants is not liable to other fellow servants injured by their acts arising from such incompetency; but this was not the question in the case.
25 L. R. A.

2. Retention in employ.

A master retaining in his employ incompetent servants after knowledge or notice of such incompetency is liable to fellow servants for injuries occasioned thereby. (Brakeman injured by switchman) Coppins v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 123 N. Y. 553; (brakeman injured by act of engineer) Union Pac. R. Co. v. Young, 19 Kan. 438; (brakeman injured by act of conductor) Nelson v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 85 Mo. 599; (carpenter injured by act of superintendent) Mentzer v. Armour, 18 Fed. Rep. 373; (deck hand injured by act of steamboat engineer. Failure to test boiler) Walker v. Bolling, 23 Ala. 294; (engineer injured by failure of section boss and road-master) New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co. v. Hughes, 49 Miss. 258; (fireman injured by act of switchman) Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Faber, 77 Tex. 153; (laborer injured by fireman acting as engineer) Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Collam, 73 Ind. 261, 38 Am. Rep. 134; (laborer injured by foreman of pile-driver) Hatt v. Nay, 144 Mass. 184.

But a railroad has a reasonable time in which to discharge an engineer after knowledge of his incompetency. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Stupak, 123 Ind. 210.

The negligence of a company in retaining an incompetent fireman after knowledge of incompetency whereby a switchman was injured, is a question for the jury. Catlin v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. 66 Mich. 365.

But a railroad company is not liable for injury to a watchman through an incompetent engineer causing injury in coupling cars, unless he was continued after knowledge of his incompetency. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Milliken, 3 Kan. 647.

(the master's) negligence in not informing himself,—if he could have been ignorant of it only because he failed to make investigation,—then it is obvious that he had not used the care and caution which the law demands of him in selecting his employes. Hence "the servant's general reputation for unfitness may be sufficient to overcome the presumption that the master used due care in his selection, even though actual knowledge of such reputation for unfitness on the master's part is not shown." Wood, Mast. & S. § 430.

In Davis v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 30 Mich. 112, 4 Am. Rep. 364, Cooley, J., speaking for the court, adopts the case of Gilman v. Eastern R. Co. 13 Allen, 433, 90 Am. Dec. 210, which puts upon the employer the responsibility of negligently employing an unfit person, generally known and reputed to be such, notwithstanding the employer may in fact have been ignorant of such unfitness. Continuing, he said: "The ignorance itself is negligence in a case in which any proper inquiry would have obtained the necessary information, and where the duty to inquire was plainly imperative." So, in Hills v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 55 Mich. 487, where a track hand was killed by an engine backing rapidly along a switch, and the engineman was drunk, the court said: "When, however, as in this case, it is shown that the accident occurred through the negligent act of the servant, who was in an intoxicated condition, and when it is shown, further, that he was in the habit of drinking intoxicating liquors to excess, and such habit had extended over a period of nine months while in defendant's employ, and no actual knowledge or notice ever reached any superior officer of the engineer, we think the jury may be justified in concluding from such evidence that the defendant was negligent in failing to learn such habit, and in retaining the engineer in its employment." See also, Gilman v. Eastern R. Co. 90 Am. Dec. 210, 13 Allen, 433; Wright v. New York Cent. R. Co. 25 N. Y. 566; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Sullivan, 63 Ill. 293; Chapman v. Erie R. Co. 55 N. Y. 579. The evidence offered and admitted had no relation to specific or isolated

3. Incompetency through use of liquor.

The master is liable for injuries to a servant caused by incompetency of fellow servants where such master has not used due care in selecting or retaining in his employ the servant causing such injury; and habits of intoxication by servants in charge of dangerous machinery, rendering them careless or reckless, is equivalent to incompetency, and where a master has actual notice that the servant operating dangerous machinery and occasioning the injury was addicted to the use of intoxicating liquor, he is liable for employing or retaining him after such notice, if injury is occasioned thereby. As where an engineer was injured and the officers had knowledge of the yard-master's habits in the use of liquor. Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Gilbert, 46 Mich. 176.

And where a brakeman was injured by the conductor. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Davis, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 468.

So where a workman was injured and the company had notice of the habits of the foreman of mills. Kean v. Detroit Copper & Brass Rolling Mills, 68 Mich. 277.

And where a brakeman was injured and the company had notice of the habits of the conductor. Neilon v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 85 Mo. 669.

So where a laborer at a quarry was injured and the company had notice of the habits of the foreman. Maxwell v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 85 Mo. 85.

So where a brakeman was injured and the round-house foreman had notice of the engineer's habits. Williams v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 109 Mo. 475.

So where a workman on a scaffold was injured and the general agent of the railroad company for hiring foreman had notice of the foreman's habits. Laning v. New York Cent. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 621, 10 Am. Rep. 417.

And the same was held where an engineer was injured and the railroad superintendent had notice of the habit of the conductor causing the injury. Huntingdon & B. T. R. & Coal Co. v. Decker, 84 Pa. 419.

So where an engineer was killed and the company had notice of the habits of an assistant under Louisiana Code, article 2320, providing master is liable for damages by servants which he might prevent. Poirier v. Carroll, 35 La. Ann. 609.

But a mining law of Pennsylvania of 1835, re-25 L. R. A.

quiring that an engineer employed be a sober and competent person, is satisfied if the employer believes him to be sober and competent. Mulhern v. Lehigh Valley Coal Co. 161 Pa. 270.

If the company is negligent in failing to ascertain the habits as to drinking of such employes which might have been known by reasonable inquiry and were the direct cause of the injury to employe, the company is liable. (Brakeman injured by brakeman) Zumwalt v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 36 Mo. App. 661; (laborer injured by railroad engineer) Hills v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 55 Mich. 446; (car coupler injured by switchman) Gilman v. Eastern R. Co. 13 Allen, 433, 90 Am. Dec. 210; (brakeman killed by act of engineer) Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Jewell, 46 Ill. 99, 92 Am. Dec. 240; (brakeman killed through act of man in charge of train) Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Sullivan, 63 Ill. 293; (employe on engine injured by engineer on another) Lyons v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. 39 Hun. 385; (mail agent injured by act of conductor) Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Books, 57 Pa. 343, 98 Am. Dec. 229; (otter injured by act of engineer) Stevens v. San Francisco & N. P. R. Co. 160 Cal. 554.

These cases supra fully sustain the doctrine announced in NORFOLK & WESTERN R. Co. v. HOOVER.

But to render the master liable it must be shown that the injury was caused by such habits of intoxication where incompetency is alleged to have been from the use of liquor. (Laborer injured by engineer of stevedore company) Cosgrove v. Pittman (Cal.) June 28, 1894; (firemen killed by act of railroad engineer) Engelhardt v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 78 Hun. 568; (laborer injured by act of derrick engineer) Probat v. Delameter, 100 N. Y. 266; (firemen injured by act of conductor) Crew v. St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co. 30 Fed. Rep. 87; Campbell v. Wing, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 431; (laborer injured by act of section foreman) Harrington v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 19 N. Y. S. R. 20; (engineer killed by act of conductor) Bonner v. Whitcomb, 80 Tex. 173.

The question of negligence is one for the jury where a foundry fireman had intemperate habits known to the superintendent, and by reason thereof a workman was injured. Campbell v. Roediger (Md.) March 13, 1894.

And the same was held where a railroad employed a boss carpenter who had habits of intemperance and a carpenter was injured through defective acts of negligence. These, unless brought home to the knowledge of the master, would not have been admissible as reflecting on the question of the master's care. Baltimore Elevator Co. v. Neal, 65 Md. 488. We think, for the reasons we have given and upon the authorities we have cited, there was no error committed in allowing the question excepted to in the first bill of exceptions to be put and answered.

Under the ruling, quite a number of witnesses testified to Huyett's general reputation for intemperance, extending from a period long anterior to his employment by the appellant, up to and after the accident. One witness, Eyer, gave evidence as to Reese's general reputation. With respect to Huyett, the evidence, if credited by the jury, showed a general reputation, covering many years, uninterruptedly, and of such a notorious character that a jury might well have inferred it was known to the master when Huyett was employed, or else that the master failed to know it only because of neglecting to make proper inquiry. There was consequently evidence legally sufficient to go to the jury upon the subject of the company's negligence; and therefore there was no error in rejecting the appellant's first and fifth prayers, which sought to take the case from the consideration of the jury, nor in rejecting its fourth prayer, which sought to exclude this evidence from the case.

There was error in rejecting the second prayer of the appellant. It asked the court to say to the jury that, if the injury to the plaintiff was caused by the intoxication or negligence of the brakemen, or either of them; that the brakemen were employed by Shull, the train dispatcher, and were sent out by him on the train in question; and, further, that Shull was guilty of negligence in sending out these brakemen, or either of them, on the train,—“yet the jury are further instructed that Shull and the plaintiff were coemployés of the defendant in the sending out of said brakemen, and the defendant is not responsible to the plaintiff for the neglect or want of care of the said Shull, unless they shall further find that there was scaffold. Brickner v. New York Cent. R. Co. 2 Lans. 518.

And in Gilman v. Eastern R. Corp., 10 Allen, 288, 67 Am. Dec. 635, it was held that, if a railroad company knowingly or in ignorance caused by its own negligence employed an habitual drunkard as switchman and thereby occasioned an accident, it is liable to a car repairer.

In Sizer v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. 7 Lans. 67, it was said that a railroad company owes to a car repairer the highest care to select a temperate engineer, and would be liable for knowingly employing others causing the injury, but that was not the question involved.

But in Chapman v. Erie R. Co., 55 N.Y. 579, where an engineer was killed in a collision through the negligence of a telegraph operator and train dispatcher, competent when employed, but given to intoxication thereafter, it was held that good character and proper qualifications once possessed would be presumed to continue.

4. Pleading incompetency.

A complaint is sufficient charging death of the baggage-master through the act of the conductor alleging that he was not a careful, skillful, and attentive conductor for a passenger train, which was known to defendant, and that the death of plaintiff's intestate was caused by such conductor's negligence. Kerlin v. Chicago, P. & St. L. R. Co. 50 Fed. Rep. 185.

A petition by a laborer for a rope company alleging employment of a fellow servant was done in a careless and negligent manner and that in consequence thereof an incompetent servant was taken into the company's service who caused the injury by his incompetency, is a sufficient allegation of the negligence of employment. Galveston Rope & Twine Co. v. Burkett, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 308.

Complaint by a yard switchman charging incompetency of the fireman through failure to understand signals, and alleging his inexperience is sufficient as to the allegation of his incompetency. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Eckels (Tex.) May 18, 1894.

But failure by a brakeman injured by a defective bridge to allege employment of incompetent servants or failure to exercise ordinary care in their selection is insufficient. McDermott v. Pacific R. Co. 80 Mo. 115.

A petition by a brakeman charging negligence 25 L. R. A.

and unskillfulness of the conductor causing the injury, is insufficient unless it alleges that the company was negligent in employing or retaining. Dow v. Kansas Pac. R. Co. 3 Kan. 642.

And a complaint by an employé not alleging want of ordinary care and prudence in the employment of coemployé causing the injury, or retention after notice of inefficiency, and that the injury was caused by such incompetency, is insufficient. (Brakeman injured by engineer) Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. v. Dailey, 110 Ind. 75; (laborer injured by act of roadmaster) Lawler v. Andros-coggin R. Co. 63 Me. 467, 18 Am. Rep. 428; (laborer injured by employé) Elwell v. Haoker (Me.) May 17, 1894; (mining laborer injured by engineer) Collier v. Steinhart, 51 Cal. 119; (laborer in factory injured by straw feeder) Boyce v. Fitzpatrick, 80 Ind. 527; (switchman injured by act of section boss) Slattery v. Toledo & W. R. Co. 23 Ind. 81; (teamster injured by blast) Bogard v. Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. 100 Ind. 491; (track repairer injured by act of engineer) Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Stupak, 108 Ind. 1.

A petition alleging that the receiver and engineer in charge had put an unskillful engineer on a locomotive does not state a cause of action if it fails to allege that the receiver negligently and knowingly employed an unskillful and incompetent engineer, as he might have had good reason for believing he was competent. Jordan v. Wells, 3 Woods, C. C. 527.

And a complaint failing to allege that the act of the fireman caused the injury and that he was incompetent, was insufficient, where a brakeman was injured. Kersey v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 79 Mo.; 382.

And an allegation by an employé that it was the railroad's duty to employ careful and skillful servants but that it failed to select those that were competent, is insufficient, as it should have charged want of care and diligence in the selection. Moss v. Pacific Railroad, 49 Mo. 167, 8 Am. Rep. 128.

And a complaint not alleging that the officer causing injury was incompetent, is insufficient. Albro v. Agawam Canal Co. 6 Cush. 75.

But a plea that the company had exercised ordinary care and diligence to secure a skillful engineer who was reputed to be careful and skillful and supposed to be such at the time of the collision is not good, as supposed means no more than believed. Alabama & F. R. Co. v. Waller, 48 Ala. 459.

negligence on the part of the defendant in the employment of Shull; and there is no legally sufficient evidence in the cause from which the jury can so find." Now, whether Shull was a deputy master, or vice-principal, or only a fellow servant of the plaintiff, is a question of law to be determined by the court, if the facts be undisputed or conceded. Yates v. McCullough Iron Co. 69 Md. 383. Shull was a mere dispatcher of trains, with power to employ and discharge flagmen and brakemen, and having general charge of the trainmen of the first division of the road, and the movement of trains thereon. He was employed by the division superintendent, who had the general management of the division. The enginemen and firemen are also under the instructions of the division superintendent. This is all the evidence (and it is entirely undisputed) to show that Shull was a vice-principal, and not a fellow servant. In Wonder's Case, 83 Md. 418, 3 Am. Rep. 143, the general rule was laid down that all who serve the same master, work under the same control, derive authority and compensation from the same source, and are engaged in the same general business, though it may be in different grades and departments of it, are fellow servants, each taking the risk of the other's negligence.

A complaint by an engine cleaner injured by the act of the engineer was sufficient as regards the allegation of incompetency of the engineer and negligence of the company in employing and retaining him; but was not sufficient for other reasons. Spencer v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 130 Ind. 181.

b. Evidence.

a. Generally.

If there is no evidence of personal negligence of the master in failing to ascertain fitness in hiring a servant, there can be no recovery for that cause. Ormond v. Holland, El. Rl. & El. 102; Wiggins Ferry Co. v. Blakeman, 54 Ill. 201.

And the mere fact of hiring a boy twelve years old to operate an elevator is not of itself want of ordinary care. Smillie v. St. Bernard Dollar Store, 47 Mo. App. 402.

Raising a car coupler to the place of conductor in a yard is not of itself evidence of negligence where his experience in inferior positions was such as to fit him for the higher. (Car coupler killed) Haskin v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 65 Barb. 120.

And a single act of incompetency together with the engineer testifying before the jury is not sufficient to justify the conclusion on his appearance and this act that his incompetency was known to the company where there was nothing in his appearance to indicate his incompetency. Peaslee v. Fitchburg R. Co. 152 Mass. 155. This case distinguishes Keith v. New Haven & N. Co., infra, but also seems to overrule it.

In Keith v. New Haven & N. Co., 140 Mass. 178, the jury were permitted to consider the appearance of the car inspector who was called as a witness, where a brakeman was injured, to aid them in determining whether he was of suitable qualification and sufficiently intelligent.

In Corson v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 78 Me. 244, it was held that where a brakeman was injured by incompetency of an engineer he cannot show negligence in employment by looks and manners of engineer while testifying as a witness.

In Summersell v. Fleh, 117 Mass. 312, the court sustained an objection to argument as to negligence in selecting foreman when there was no evidence in the case on that question except the injury in raising the derrick. The negligence in employing was not pleaded.

b. Specific acts.

Knowledge of one act of incompetency or recklessness is not sufficient to impose liability. (Road master injured by act of engineer) Holland v. Southern Pacific Co. 100 Cal. 240; (brakeman injured by act of engineer and brakeman) Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Dunn (Ind.) March 7, 1894; (laborer on look injured by act of laborer) Lee v. Detroit Bridge & Iron Works, 62 Mo. 555; (laborer injured in shaft by act of engineer) Baltimore v. War, 77 Md. 593.

In Frazier v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 38 Pa. 104, 80 Am. Dec. 467, it was held that where a brakeman was injured by negligence of conductor the fact that the conductor had caused several collisions by carelessness for which he had been fined by the company, is inadmissible to establish his incompetency, as special acts do not establish reputation.

So specific acts of carelessness or unskillfulness do not establish negligence on the part of the master in employing or retaining such servant. (Laborer injured by act of captain of tug) Baltimore Elevator Co. v. Neal, 65 Md. 436; (employé injured by act of engineer) Huffman v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 78 Mo. 50; (fireman killed through act of switchman) Baulee v. New York & H. R. Co. 59 N. Y. 354, 17 Am. Rep. 335. See also Peaslee v. Fitchburg R. Co., supra.

So incompetency is not shown by the act causing the injury. (Employé at factory injured by act of operator) Curran v. Merchants Mfg. Co. 120 Mass. 974, 39 Am. Rep. 457; (laborer injured by act of foreman in stone quarry) Salem Stone & Lime Co. v. Chestain (Ind.) March 15, 1894; (laborer on railroad injured by act of co-laborer) Lindvall v. Woods, 44 Fed. Rep. 355; (brakeman injured by act of engineer) Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Berry, 67 Tex. 238.

But in Potts v. Port Carlisle Dock & R. Co., 2 L. T. N. S. 268, 8 Week. Rep. 524, where a brakeman was injured by faulty construction of turn-table, it was held that if the work could be shown to be grossly bad it might not be necessary to call evidence of negligence in faulty construction, but where it has stood the test for four years there is no case.

Evidence of specific acts is admissible to show notice to the company. (Brakeman injured by act of conductor) Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Ruby, 38 Ind. 234, 10 Am. Rep. 111.

And in Couch v. Watson Coal Co., 46 Iowa, 17, the same was said, but was not admissible in that case because such acts were not shown to be prior to the accident. (Miner injured by act of engineer.) (Bridge carpenter injured by act of another carpenter) Craig v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 54 Mo. App. 523.

And evidence of subsequent acts of engineer not showing the incompetency complained of is not sufficient. Ranstier v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 32 Minn. 331.

c. Notice to company.

Evidence of reports to conductor of carelessness on the part of the engineer and that the engine had frequently come into the shop in bad condition, was sufficient to make question for the jury where a brakeman was injured through act of engineer. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Patton (Tex.) June 30, 1893.

And after notice of incompetency of conductor the railroad continues him at their own risk, where an engineer was injured. Ross v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 2 McCrary, 235.

And knowledge of infirmity of brakeman, habit

In that case, a brakeman, who was injured while using a defective brake, was held to be a fellow servant with the mechanics in the shops, the inspector of machinery and rolling stock, and the superintendent of the movement of trains. And so in State v. Malster, 57 Md. 287, it was held that a superintendent or manager is a fellow servant, within the rule which exonerates the master. In Baltimore Elevator Co. v. Neal, 65 Md. 488, the captain of a steam tug owned by the company was held to be a fellow servant of a laborer who was injured in the company's service. This court said in that case: "Nor is the liability of the master enlarged or made different by the fact that the servant who has suffered the injury occupied a grade in the common service inferior to that of the servant whose misconduct caused the injury complained of." And in Yates v. McCullough Iron Co., 69 Md. 870, the authorities were all reviewed, and it was held that the chief manager of the carbon works, who hired and discharged the hands, kept their time, etc., was only a fellow servant of a laborer who was injured while operating the machinery. Baltimore v. War, 77 Md. 593. In the face of these decisions, it is impossible to treat Shull as anything more than a fellow servant. The management of the division upon which he was train dispatcher was not committed to him. He was a subordinate, ap-of going to sleep and failing to throw switch, is binding on the company. (Conductor injured) Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Pierce (Tex.) June 14, 1894.

Notice to general superintendent of incompetency of engineer is notice to the company. (Road-master injured) Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Patton (Tex. Civ. App.) 25 S. W. Rep. 339 (Tex. Sup.) 26 S. W. Rep. 973.

And a protest against the appointment of an engineer and discharge by the superintendent for causing a wreck, justifies finding that he was unfit. Mexican Nat. R. Co. v. Mussette, 24 L. R. A. 642, 36 Tex. 708.

And the knowledge by a road-master of the incompetency of a foreman is notice to the company. (Track repairer injured) McDermott v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 73 Mo. 516, 39 Am. Rep. 526; McDermott v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 87 Mo. 285.

But in Beiser v. Pennsylvania Co., 152 Pa. 83, it was held that notice to the chief train dispatcher and telegraph operator that the station agent acting as telegraph operator was incompetent, whereby the fireman was killed, is not notice to the company, as the train dispatcher did not employ or discharge such servants.

The promise of a yard-master that a fireman should not run the engine is binding on the company. (Switchman injured) Lyttle v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 84 Mich. 239.

And the master promising a blacksmith to discharge his helper is sufficient notice. Lyberg v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 39 Minn. 15.

So a promise by the general superintendent to discharge for inefficiency the engineer is notice where a car coupler was injured. Sutton v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 50 N. Y. S. R. 514.

Where a company ought to have known of the habits of a switchman by the exercise of reasonable diligence, the question of liability is one for the jury where a brakeman was killed. Cameron v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 77 Hun. 519.

And evidence showing that the company ought to have known of the incompetency of the foreman is sufficient, where a track repairer was injured. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Doyle, 15 Kan. 88.

A bricklayer in a sewer injured by a barrow full of brick may show general reputation of infirmity of sight and hearing and strength of man in charge of barrow. Monahan v. Worcester, 150 Mass. 439.

But the fact that some workmen had remarked that the engineer had a careless reputation where there is no notice to the company of habitual carelessness, does not show want of care in his employment. Davis v. Detroit R. Co. 30 Mich. 106.

A reputation of incompetency as yard-master is not sufficient when based only on the fact that he had had no experience as switchman. (A laborer was injured) Lee v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. 37 Mich. 574.

25 L. R. A.

See also subhead, Habits of Intoxication.

Where an injury was caused to an employé by the incompetency, recklessness, and unskillfulness of a captain of a tug, and the master by the exercise of reasonable care could have easily learned that the reputation of such captain for want of skill and recklessness was bad, it is wholly immaterial whether he knew it or not. Western Stone Co. v. Whalen, 161 Ill. 472.

d. Burden of proof

The burden of proof is on the party injured to establish the fact that the master did not use due care in the selection of the employé causing injury. (Conductor injured by act of engineer) Roblin v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 119 Mo. 476; (switchman injured by act of engineer) Stafford v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 114 Ill. 244; (employé injured by man in charge of machinery) Southern Cotton-Oil Co. v. De Vond (Tex.) Feb. 1, 1894.

The same was said in Chicago & R. I. R. Co. v. Geary, 110 Ill. 383, but was not the question involved. (Flagman injured by act of foreman.)

But if unfitness of engineer is shown to have existed at the time of employment the burden is then on the master to disprove negligence in employing him, where brakeman was injured. Crandall v. McIlrath, 24 Minn. 157.

And incompetency of brakeman cannot be inferred from the fact that he was colored. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Christman, 65 Tex. 389.

Under 5 U. S. Stat., p. 305, § 14, the burden of proof is on the master, in case of the boiler bursting, to show that he was not negligent. (An employé was injured and engineer had no license and was unskillful) McMahon v. Davidson, 12 Minn. 357.

While an employé may be competent and yet negligent and cause injury to a fellow servant for which the master is not liable since negligence is not always the same as incompetency, yet if the employé is in fact incompetent, lacks capacity or skill for the work assigned, his negligence causing an injury may sometimes be held to be the result of his incompetency or synonymous with it, so as to connect the injury with the master's negligence in employing such a fellow servant. And where incompetency was charged, the court in some cases has in fact spoken of the negligence of an incompetent servant causing an injury, as if it were in the particular case before them identical with incompetency.

In the preparation of this note cases in regard to contributory negligence of the employé; cases where the number of employés was inadequate; and cases where the master was attempted to be held for negligence of co-employé without regard to his incompetency,—are not included. I. T.

pointed by the superintendent; and though he had charge of the trainmen and of the movement of trains on his division, and could employ and discharge flagmen and brakemen, it is far from being shown that the master had relinquished all supervision of the work on that division, and intrusted its direction, as well as the procuring of materials and machinery and other instrumentalities necessary for the service, to his judgment and discretion. The engine-man and fireman were not employed by him, but by the division superintendent; and, if the grade of his position was superior to that of the engine-man, that fact did not make him a vice-principal as respects the latter. They were both engaged in the same common work, employed by the same agent of the common master, and were performing duties pertaining to the same general business; and, unless the whole current of the Maryland decisions is to be reversed, they were fellow servants of the railroad company, upon the evidence now before us. If this be so, then, even if Shull had been negligent in sending out these brakemen, and if that negligence caused the injury sued for, still the plaintiff could not recover, unless the company had not used due care in the selection of Shull, and of this there was not a particle of evidence offered.

The appellant's sixth prayer was properly rejected. There was no necessity to prove that the company had been incorporated. That fact was averred in the declaration, and was not denied by the pleas, and under section 108, article 75, of the Code, must be taken to be admitted.

This brings us to the prayers presented by the appellee. Under a local law of Washington county (sections 69, 70, article 22, Code Pub. Local Laws), we are required to consider the rejected prayers of the plaintiff, if he has excepted; and this he has done. By the defendant's exception, the plaintiff's granted prayers and the defendant's rejected prayers are brought before us. By the plaintiff's exception, his rejected prayers, as well as the defendant's granted ones, are presented for review. The court granted the plaintiff's first, seventh, and eighth prayers. We do not understand that the seventh and eighth are seriously questioned. Without discussing them, we need only say they are not open to substantial objection.

The appellee's first prayer, however, ought not to have been granted. It was objected in the argument that there was no evidence to support some of the hypotheses it contained, but as no special exception based upon that objection, and signed and sealed by the judge, appears in the record, we are not at liberty to consider it. Albert v. State, 66 Md. 384, 59 Am. Rep. 159. The prayer, after setting forth the facts, proceeds: "Then, if the said injury to the plaintiff was caused by the want of ordinary skill and experience or other unfitness on the part of the other hands, or any of them, in charge of said train, to manage and conduct the same, by reason of the intemperate state or condition of either of them," the plaintiff using due diligence, "the plaintiff is entitled to recover, provided the jury further find from the evidence that the defendant did not use reasonable care in the selection and employment of the brakemen or other hands or employees engaged with the plaintiff in conducting said cars;" that is to say, if the injury resulted from negligence caused by the intemperance of any of the train hands, the defendant would be liable, if it had failed to use due care in the selection of either of the employees on that train, even though that particular employé, thus carelessly selected, had been guilty of no negligence, and had in no way occasioned the accident. Consequently, if the jury thought the injury was caused by the drunkenness of the brakemen, and that the company had not used due care in the selection of the fireman, the company would be liable, notwithstanding the fact that the fireman had been guilty of no negligence, and had in no way produced or helped to produce the injury. Thus, the negligence of one servant, and the independent negligence of the master in employing some other servant, who had no connection with the accident, established, under this instruction, the plaintiff's right to recover. This is not the law. On the contrary, it is the negligence of a fellow servant, and the additional negligence of the master in employing that servant, whose negligence actually caused the injury, which must concur before a plaintiff can recover in a case of this character. The instruction therefore announced an obviously erroneous proposition, and was calculated to mislead the jury, because there was evidence before them from which they might have inferred that due care had not been used in the selection of the fireman, though there was no evidence from which they could have found that the fireman was responsible for the accident. The instruction should have clearly restricted the negligence of the defendant in selecting the plaintiff's fellow servants to the selection of such of them as by their incompetency, growing out of their intemperance, actually caused the injury.

The appellee's second, third, fourth, and fifth prayers were properly rejected. There was no legally sufficient evidence adduced to support them, or the several hypotheses assumed in them; and, if they had been free from other objections, this one was sufficient to justify the court in refusing to grant them.

There remains the appellant's third prayer, which the court granted, but we think erroneously granted. It told the jury, in substance, that unless the brakeman Huyett was drunk at the time of the accident, and his negligence, by reason of such drunkenness, produced or contributed to the accident, the evidence of general reputation as to his intemperance was not relevant, and could not be considered by the jury, "unless such reputation was brought home to the knowledge of the defendant before the accident," and there is no such evidence of such knowledge. Had the prayer omitted the words italicized, it would have been correct, but those words superadded a condition which is manifestly inaccurate. Now, it is obvious that if Huyett was not drunk and was not negligent when the accident happened, and therefore did not cause or contribute to it, the evidence of his general reputation for intemperance was wholly irrelevant, even though that reputation had been brought home to the knowledge of the appellant before the accident, because, if he did not occasion the injury by his negligence, the fact that the master had knowledge of his bad reputation would in no way have made the master liable for an injury not caused by Huyett at all. In other words, the master's knowledge of Huyett's bad reputation had nothing whatever to do with the case if Huyett did not cause or contribute to the accident; and if Huyett did, by his intemperance, cause the accident, then it was immaterial whether the master had knowledge of his bad reputation or not, because, as already stated, the master was negligent in not knowing it. So, in either view of the question, the prayer was wrong, because of the addition of the words indicated.

For the error in granting the appellee's first instruction and the appellant's third, and for the error in rejecting the appellant's second prayer, the judgment must be reversed, and a new trial be ordered.

Judgment reversed, with costs above and below, and new trial awarded.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

James C. DEYO

v.

George H. HAMMOND, Plff. in Err.

(.....Mich.....)

Failure of the purchaser of a mare to have a test of her speed as compared with that of another one owned by him, made by the person and within the time agreed upon, because the mares were not in proper condition for the test, or to have the test made afterwards, will not relieve him from liability to pay an extra hundred dollars in case she is as fast as the other one on other proof of such speed.

(September 25, 1894.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Wayne County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the contract price of a mare sold by plaintiff to defendant. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Fred H. Warren, for plaintiff in error:

In the case of a condition precedent, that is, an act to be performed by the plaintiff before the defendant's liability is to accrue under his contract, the plaintiff must aver in his declaration and prove, either his performance of such condition precedent, or an offer to perform it, which the defendant rejected; or, his readiness to fulfill the condition, until the defendant discharged him, the plaintiff, from so doing, or prevented the execution of the matter to be performed by him.

Chitty, Cont. 7th Am. ed. 787; 1 Chitty, Pl. 11th ed. 821; Brogden v. Marriott, 2 Bing. N. C. 478; Thurnell v. Balbirnie, 2 Mees. & W. 786; Benjamin, Sales, 2d Am. ed. § 675; Shear v. Wright, 60 Mich. 159; Thompson v. Russey, 50 Ala. 339; Hanley v. Walker, 8 L. R. A. 207, 79 Mich. 607; Guthat v. Gow, 95 Mich. 527; Johnson v. Lyon, 75 Mich. 477; Maryon v. Carter, 4 Car. & P. 295; Thomas v. Corey, 74 Mich.

216; Abell v. Munson, 18 Mich. 306, 100 Am. Dec. 165.

Courts cannot make contracts for parties, and in interpreting them cannot be influenced by the hardships of a particular case.

Michigan Pipe Co. v. Michigan Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 20 L. R. A. 277, 92 Mich. 483; Lorscher v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Honor, 2 L. R. A. 206, 72 Mich. 816.

Mr. John D. Conely, for defendant in error:

Even in cases where a sale itself is conditional that the goods shall be satisfactory to the purchaser upon a trial to be made by him, the purchaser cannot take advantage of his own omission to make the trial to defeat payment of the purchase price.

Thompson-Houston Electric Co. v. Brush-Swan Electric Light & Power Co. 81 Fed. Rep. 585; Waters Heater Co. v. Mansfield, 48 Vt. 878; Potter v. Lee, 94 Mich. 140.

Long, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On January 25, 1888, the plaintiff, who resides at Jackson, this state, sold his mare, the "Shelby Maid," to defendant. The contract was made in Jackson, and the bargain, as claimed by the plaintiff, is that, after Hammond had driven the mare, he offered to give plaintiff his check for $800, and a further sum of $100 if she could go as fast as his (defendant's) mare; that Mr. Moran was to drive them, and make the test, when he had been notified by defendant that he was ready, which test was to be made within 90 days. The plaintiff further testified that Mr. Moran was to decide if plaintiff's mare could go as fast to pole as defendant's, and, if she could, then defendant was to pay plaintiff the extra $100. The defendant testified that after going to Jackson, and driving the mare, he commenced figuring with Mr. Deyo about buying her. Concerning the terms of the bargain, he gave the following testimony: "I offered Mr. Deyo $900 for the mare if she could go as fast as my bay mare.

NOTE.—The above decision that the stipulated test of speed by a certain person was not a condition precedent to the right of payment is somewhat analogous to those cases which hold a stipulation for an architect's or engineer's certificate is 25 L. R. A.

not absolutely binding, if the other party to the contract prevents obtaining it, or if it is withheld by fraud or collusion. For this class of cases, see notes to Boettler v. Tendick (Tex.), 5 L. R. A. 270; Church v. Shanklin (Cal.) 17 L. R. A. 207.

He says: 'She can go as fast. I will guarantee her to go as fast as your mare.' I said: 'Guaranties don't do. She has got to do it herself.' I says: 'I will give you $800, and take her down there, and if she will go as fast as the bay mare I will give you $900 for her,—an extra $100. . . . He says, 'All right,' and we made the trade then and there. The mare, if she filled the bill, was to be $900. There is no question about that; but otherwise she was to be $800. . . . I was to pay an additional $100 if the gray mare could trot as fast as the bay mare to pole. The test was to be made within ninety days, by Mr. Moran. Mr. Moran was mutually agreed upon to make the test. It would make no difference to me who drove if this mare could trot as fast as mine." The suit was brought to recover this $100 and interest, and upon the trial the jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff.

It appears that defendant took the mare to Detroit, but that Mr. Moran was never notified by either of the parties to make the test, and that the test was never made; the defendant claiming that it was impossible for him to make the test within 90 days for the reason that one mare was sick and the other lame. The plaintiff testified on the trial that the defendant was to notify Mr. Moran when he was ready to make the test, and within the 90 days; while the defendant testified that, though it was mutually agreed that Mr. Moran should make the test, nothing was said about his (the defendant's) notifying Mr. Moran. Defendant's contention here is that he is not liable to pay the additional $100, as by the terms of the contract the plaintiff agreed that the mare purchased should, within 90 days, in a trial of speed to be made by Mr. Moran, trot as fast to pole as defendant's bay mare; that it was impossible to make the said trial within the time fixed by the parties by their contract by reason of circumstances over which he had no control, and for which he was not responsible; that a trial of speed by Mr. Moran, and a decision by him that plaintiff's mare was as fast to pole as defendant's, was a condition precedent to his liability to pay the $100, and, having never been fulfilled, defendant is discharged from liability. We think the contract cannot be construed in this way. Defendant, after the purchase, took the mare into his possession, and thereafter kept it. The test was to be made in Detroit. While the parties agreed to abide by Mr. Moran's decision as to the speed of the gray mare, yet the Moran test was not a vital part of the contract, but only the means provided by the parties for ascertaining the speed of the gray mare. The only condition upon which the $100 depended was that she could trot as fast as defendant's, for he said: "It would make no difference to me who drove, if this mare could trot as fast as mine." The plaintiff introduced testimony to show that his mare was 8 or 10 seconds faster than defendant's, and this testimony was undisputed. Defendant was the only party who had it within his power to have the test made, and yet he seeks to set up in this case as a defense his failure to have it made, and thus avoid the payment of the $100. The case is very similar in principle to Potter v. Lee, 94 Mich. 140. There it appeared that the plaintiff sold a number of cheeses by sample. There was testimony showing a warranty as to the quality of the cheeses. The defendant, however, said to plaintiff's agent: "You are a stranger to me, and I have only seen ten boxes of these cheese, and I don't know what is in the car. If, within the course of ten days, we find this cheese as you represent it, we will pay for them." Within the ten days some of defendant's customers rejected the cheeses, and refused to pay for them; but defendant continued to make sales for twenty-six days, and then notified the plaintiff that the cheeses were not as represented, and refused to pay for them. It was said by this court: "It is therefore evident, even if the warranty was made by Potter as to the quality of the cheeses in the car, and not examined by defendant, that defendant did not rely upon it, but preferred to make an examination for himself, and was to have ten days in which to do so. If he did not make such examination, it was his own fault." So in the present case. The plaintiff offered to guarantee the speed of his mare. The defendant rejected the offered guaranty, saying that he preferred to make a test of the speed. That he did not do so was no fault of the plaintiff's. There is no dispute about Mr. Moran's willingness to make the test. He testifies the opportunity was never given him. We think, under the undisputed testimony in the case, the court would have been justified in directing a verdict in favor of the plaintiff. In view of this, the other questions raised become immaterial.

The judgment is affirmed.

The other Justices concur.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

Joseph MULLEN, Appt.,
v.
Edward F. SANBORN et al.

(.....Md.....)

A plaintiff in an attachment suit who comes from another state to testify therein is not privileged from service of summons while there is an action for maliciously bringing the attachment suit.

(June 20, 1894.)

APPEAL by complainant from an order of the Baltimore City Court quashing a writ

NOTE.—Privilege of nonresident witness from suit.

- I. Reason of the privilege.
- II. Nature of the privilege.
- III. The extent and limit of the privilege.
- IV. Parties as witnesses.
- V. Witnesses in general.
- VI. The effect of fraud and decoit.
- VII. Enforcement of the privilege.
- VIII. The question of waiver.
- IX. The question of deviation.
- X. English doctrine.

As to the effect upon a suit of a discharge from arrest of one arrested while attending court, see note to Ellis v. De Garmo (E. L.) 19 L. R. A. 580.

I. Reason of the privilege.

The common law has, from its earliest period, extended privilege and immunity to parties and witnesses in a law-suit while attending court, including the going and coming; the arrest of a party to a suit by civil process being regarded as a breach of the defendant's privilege. Green v. Young, 120 Ill. 189.

The foundation of the common-law rule is the policy of permitting an act which will deter suitors or witnesses from attending court. Massey v. Colville, 45 N. J. L. 119, 45 Am. Rep. 734.

It is the policy of the common law that witnesses should be produced for oral examination, and that parties should have full opportunity to be present and heard when their cases are tried; and in furtherance of such policy and the due administration of justice, suitors and witnesses from abroad are privileged from liability to suits commenced by summons as well as by causas. First Nat. Bank of St. Paul v. Ames, 39 Minn. 179; Person v. Grier, 66 N. Y. 124, 23 Am. Rep. 35, affirming Person v. Pardee, 6 Hun. 477.

It is the court's duty to foster this policy, out of which spring the privilege. Merrill v. George, 23 How. Pr. 381.

Foreign or nonresident witnesses cannot be reached by the process of the courts, and their attendance is therefore voluntary. Ibid.; Brett v. Brown, 13 Abb. Pr. N. S. 295; Sherman v. Gundlach, 57 Minn. 118.

For this reason therefore their arrest on civil process is illegal. May v. Shumway, 16 Gray, 86, 77 Am. Dec. 401.

They should therefore, as far as possible, be encouraged to voluntarily come into the state where the action is pending and give their testimony in open court, but the policy of protection, as sound principles require, and as asserted by many courts, extends as well to parties as to witnesses. Wilson v. Donaldson, 3 L. R. A. 266, 117 Ind. 856.

It is very important and right that persons leaving the place of their domicile to attend to such duties in obedience to a direct or indirect requirement of law should be protected by the law, while so engaged, from being caught up to answer to actions brought in a different place from that of their domicile. Homes v. Nelson, 1 Phila. 217.

That a suitor should feel free and safe at all times to attend within any jurisdiction without incurring the liability of being picked up and held to answer some other adverse judicial proceeding against him, is so far a rule of public policy that it has received almost universal recognition wherever the common law is known and administered. Andrews v. Lembeck, 46 Ohio St. 88.

A witness thus required to attend should feel that he is not subject, either to arrest or to the prosecution of a civil suit. Atchison v. Morris, 11 Biss. 191.

To deny him such exemption and leave him subject to a suit within such jurisdiction, would be a breach of faith upon the part of the court. Waterman v. Merritt, 7 R. L. 845.

By a contrary doctrine subjecting him to the necessity of remaining or returning to litigate foreign suits a serious obstacle would be interposed to his voluntary attendance. Merrill v. George, 23 How. Pr. 381; Kauffman v. Kennedy, 25 Fed. Rep. 785.

And as the judgment thus obtained would conclude him in all jurisdictions, its effect would be to deter him from coming at all. Sherman v. Gundlach, 37 Minn. 118.

Such a witness would refuse to come within the state to give testimony unless he was sure of protection. Hollender v. Hall, 56 Hun. 604, 18 N. Y. Supp. 759, 33 N. Y. S. R. 843.

Parties would be prevented from attending, delays would ensue and injustice be done. Person v. Grier, 66 N. Y. 124, 23 Am. Rep. 35.

It would obstruct the administration of justice. Re Healey, 53 Vt. 694, 38 Am. Rep. 713.

And work a miscarriage thereof, especially in a criminal case where the witness must meet the accused face to face, for no one would voluntarily go into a foreign state to give testimony in a suit if he were liable to be put to the expense of a law-suit in a strange forum. Kauffman v. Kennedy, 25 Fed. Rep. 785.

Courts of justice ought to be open and accessible to suitors, who ought to be permitted to approach and attend the courts in the prosecution of their claims, and the making of their defenses without fear of molestation or hindrance; their attention ought not to be distracted from the prosecution or defense of the pending suit, otherwise they might be deterred from prosecuting their just rights or making their just defenses to a suit by reason of their liability to suit in a foreign jurisdiction. Baldwin v. Emerson, 16 R. I. 304.

The reason of the rule extends to every obstacle that stands as a barrier, in the way of the preattendant of witnesses in a court of justice. Merrill v. George, 23 How. Pr. 381.

Its object is to encourage witnesses from abroad to come forward voluntarily and testify. Sherman v. Gundlach, supra.

Whether a man wishes to attend the court as a party or a witness, he should be able to do so under its protection. Halsey v. Stewart, 4 N. J. L. 306; Mitchell v. Huron Circuit Judge, 53 Mich. 542.

Such immunity works no injustice to any one, as, if the witness does not come into the state there would be no opportunity to serve process upon him. Sherman v. Gundlach, 37 Minn. 118.

Principles of public policy require that no unof summons and the return thereon in an action brought to recover damages for wrongfully and maliciously suing out an attachment on the ground that service had been obtained on defendant while he was in the state as a witness in another suit. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. R. W. Applegarth, and H. C. Kennard for appellant.

Messrs. Hinckley & Morris, for appellees:
A nonresident plaintiff coming to this state solely to testify in court and intending to re-necessary obstacles shall be interposed to prevent the attendance and examination of witnesses in the presence of the court and jury. Seaver v. Robinson, 3 Duer, 622; Tamkin v. Starkey, 7 Hun, 479; Mitchell v. Huron Circuit Judge, supra; Wilson v. Donaldson, 3 L. R. A. 263, 117 Ind. 366; Molestor v. Sinnen, 7 L. R. A. 817, 76 Wis. 308.

Courts of justice are bound to see that no improper use is made of such proceedings, which would look like a violation of good faith and perversion of measures to be resorted to in order to bring the party within their jurisdiction. Molestor v. Sinnen, supra.

The protection of parties and witnesses demands it. Mitchell v. Huron Circuit Judge, supra; Vincent v. Watson, 1 Rich. L. 194; Wilson v. Donaldson, supra.

It affects the integrity of the administration of justice, in the protection of which the courts have ordained that no man in attendance upon the courts of deliberation shall be interfered with or the administration of justice interrupted by the service of process, the doctrine having its origin in those cases where the process was one of arrest. McIntire v. McIntire, 5 Mackey, 344; Mitchell v. Huron Circuit Judge, supra.

A party who could not attend to his suit without being liable to such service would be under personal restraint, from which those engaged in the administration of justice have a right to be free. Re Healey, 53 Vt. 694, 38 Am. Rep. 713; Bridges v. Sheldon, 7 Fed. Rep. 36.

The immunity does not depend upon statutory provisions, but is necessary for the due administration of justice. Sherman v. Gundlach, 37 Minn. 118; Ex parte Cobbett, 7 El. & Bl. 965, 26 L. J. Q. B. 293, 3 Jur. N. S. 686; First Nat. Bank of St. Paul v. Ames, 39 Minn. 179; Re Healey, supra.

The necessities of the judicial administration would be embarrassed if such rule were not enforced. Juneau Bank v. McSpedan, 5 Bliss. 64; Byler v. Jones, 22 Mo. App. 623; Wilson v. Donaldson, 3 L. R. A. 266, 117 Ind. 366; Halsey v. Stewart, 4 N. J. L. 363; Mitchell v. Huron Circuit Judge, supra; Palmer v. Rowan, 21 Neb. 452, 50 Am. Rep. 844; Tribune Asso. v. Sleeman, 12 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 21; Matthews v. Tufts, 87 N. Y. 568.

And without such exemption their attendance might not be readily obtained. Parker v. Manco, 61 Hun, 519.

In Re Healey, 53 Vt. 694, 38 Am. Rep. 713, it was stated as a well-settled rule of law.

The rule exists in order that causes may be fully heard and justice administered in an orderly manner. Nichols v. Horton, 4 McCrary, 567.

The protection is not chiefly the privilege of the person, but is granted in the necessity of the public in order that the courts may not be embarrassed or impeded in the conduct of their business. Baldwin v. Emerson, 16 R. I. 304.

A party should be permitted to approach the courts, not only without subjecting himself to evil, but even free from the fear of molestation or hindrance. Halsey v. Stewart, 4 N. J. L. 363.

As a breach of privilege. Jacobson v. Hosmer, 76 Mich. 234.

Such an arrest was held an invasion of the prerogative of the court, and entitled him to a discharge. Jones v. Knauss, 31 N. J. Eq. 211.

No lawful thing founded upon a wrongful act can be supported. Lutin v. Benin, 11 Mod. 80.

In Hayes v. Shields, 2 Yeates, 222, it is said the 25 L. R. A.

party's attention to his own business in the suit depending is distracted by other objects and he is subjected to the inconvenience of attending an action at a considerable distance from his own place of abode, contrary to the wise indulgence of the law.

The arrest of one attending as a witness may be a contempt of the court as if made in the face of the court, against which the court must protect. Vincent v. Watson, 1 Rich. L. 194.

A person ordering an arrest of a witness is punishable for contempt of court for interfering with its business. Smith v. Jones, 76 Me. 123, 49 Am. Rep. 598.

The same reasons for exempting a nonresident witness from arrest exists in favor of exempting him from service of a summons in a civil action. Sherman v. Gundlach, 37 Minn. 118.

But the reason does not apply to a case in which the defendant is arrested on a criminal charge, and taken into a foreign state to answer such charge. Byler v. Jones, 22 Mo. App. 623.

In Holmes v. Nelson, 1 Phila. 217, it was contended that the defendant, a foreign corporation, was not entitled to the privilege, but the court held that the fact that the defendant was a citizen of another state was no ground of the exemption; that such contention was prevented by section 2, article 4, of the Constitution of the United States, declaring that the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens of the several states, the court stating that such article was a special application of the grand Christian rule of intercourse, "Whatever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."

In Day v. Harris, 37 N. Y. S. R. 323, 59 Hun, 623, the court approved the principles established by Matthews v. Tufts, 87 N. Y. 568. The essential condition of the rule and ground of the exemption is, that the person claiming it shall come within the jurisdiction of the court issuing the process as such party or witness.

The reason for the distinction is, that in the case of a resident he could be immediately prosecuted, and if the right to do so did not exist, could be arrested again, and therefore it was not to his prejudice but rather to his benefit to require him to endorse his appearance as upon a non-bailable process, while in the case of a nonresident the court refused to acquire jurisdiction of his person by a legal arrest, the effect of such a discharge being necessarily to dismiss the action. Merrill v. George, 23 How. Pr. 331.

II. Nature of the privilege.

The nature and extent of the privilege which the law accords to witnesses is not a natural right, it is contrary to common right; it is not an absolute right such as belongs to members of the royal family in England, or to ambassadors or some others, nor the case of total exemption from arrest such as the law extends to persons discharged from arrest by bankruptcy or insolvency proceedings, or where the law forbids arrest for the collection of demands. Smith v. Jones, 76 Me. 123, 49 Am. Rep. 598.

Yet the privilege to parties to judicial proceedings, as well as others required to attend upon them, of going to the place where they are held, and remaining so long as is necessary, and returning wholly free from the restraint of process in other civil proceedings, has always been well set-turn home the same day, by the first convenient train, is privileged from summons as he leaves the court.

Boligiano v. Gilbert Lock Co. 78 Md. 182.

Sanborn was both a suitor and a necessary witness, and privileged in both capacities. He tied and favorably enforced. Bridges v. Sheldon, 18 Blatchf. 507.

The proceedings, however, must be in court. Parker v. Manco, 61 Hun, 519.

The exemption rule is not by force of any statute. Damkin v. Starkey, 7 Hun, 479; Sheehan v. Bradford, B. & K. R. Co. 3 N. Y. Supp. 790.

The privilege arises out of the authority and dignity of the court where the cause is pending, and protection against the violation of the privilege is to be enforced by that court and will be respected by others. Re Healey, 53 Vt. 694, 38 Am. Rep. 713.

It is one of the necessities of the administration of justice, and courts would often be embarrassed if suitors or witnesses should be molested with process while attending court. Person v. Grier, 66 N. Y. 124, 23 Am. Rep. 85; Parker v. Manco, supra; Parker v. Hotchkiss, 1 Wall. Jr. 269; Sheehan v. Bradford, supra; Moletor v. Sinnen, 7 L. R. A. 817, 76 Wis. 308.

The privilege exists to subserve public interest. Moletor v. Sinnen, supra.

It is founded upon valid considerations of public policy. Sherman v. Gundlach, 37 Minn. 118.

And is for the benefit of parties, enabling them to obtain the testimony of witnesses who might otherwise be reluctant to attend the court. May v. Shumway, 16 Gray, 86, 77 Am. Dec. 401.

It is a policy of the law established for the facilitation of the public business. Smith v. Jones, 76 Me. 138, 49 Am. Rep. 598.

As such it has received almost universal recognition wherever the common law is known and administered. Andrews v. Lembeck, 48 Ohio St. 38.

Rendering the privilege of justice free and untrammelled, and protecting from improper interference all who are concerned in it. Huddeson v. Prizer, 9 Phila. 65.

The claim of privilege must, however, in general be taken strictly. Chaffee v. Jones, 19 Pick. 261.

It does not depend upon the writ of subpoena or of protection, but grows out of the privilege established by the law and constitutes a continuing order. Re Healey, 53 Vt. 694, 38 Am. Rep. 713; Brett v. Brown, 13 Abb. Pr. N. S. 296; Palmer v. Rowan, 21 Neb. 452, 59 Am. Rep. 344; Sherman v. Gundlach, supra.

There is no difference as regards this privilege between writs of summons and writs of capias, the exemption tending to both alike and is well settled. Huddeson v. Prizer, supra; Richards v. Goodson, 2 Va. Cas. 381.

The service of a subpoena makes no difference, and would be an idle ceremony. Sherman v. Gundlach, supra.

A witness from a foreign jurisdiction being under the protection of the law. Wilson v. Donaldson, 3 L. R. A. 263, 117 Ind. 356.

In the case of a nonresident suitor or witness, the weight of authority is to the effect that the immunity is absolute from the service of any process, unless the case is exceptional. Re Healey, 53 Vt. 694, 38 Am. Rep. 713.

Their immunity from the service of process for the commencement of civil actions against them is absolute quando morando et redeundo, both upon principle and authority. Person v. Grier, 66 N. Y. 124, 23 Am. Rep. 85; Richards v. Goodson, 2 Va. Cas. 381; Seaver v. Robinson, 3 Duer, 622; Sanford v. Chase, 3 Cow 381.

And the party if arrested will be discharged absolutely. Merrill v. George, 28 How. Pr. 331; Hop- 25 L. R. A.

was obliged to be here to testify, as he could not testify on commission and was so advised by counsel.

Goodman v. Wineland, 61 Md. 455.

If there is room to contend that the Boligiano Case does not go so far as the present case, see kings v. Coburn, 1 Wend. 232; Frable v. Young, 11 Hun, 474.

The privilege of parties and witnesses is alike the privilege of the court and the citizen; it protects the court from interruption and delay, takes away the inducement to disobey the process and enables the citizen to prosecute his rights without molestation, and procures the attendance of all who are necessary for his defence or support. Halsey v. Stewart, 4 N. J. L. 386.

It is the privilege of the court, yet it is the protection of the suitor or witness to whom the common law gives a right of privilege, in that case, in lieu of which summary relief on motion is now substituted and this cannot be denied on proper grounds shown, for there is no such thing in the law as writs of grace and favor issuing from the judges, they are all writs of right and not of courts. United States v. Edme, 9 Serg. & R. 147.

The privilege, however, has been held to be not that of the person attending, but of the court which he attends. Re Healey, 53 Vt. 694, 38 Am. Rep. 713; Smith v. Jones, 76 Me. 138, 49 Am. Rep. 598; Parker v. Hotchkiss, 1 Wall. Jr. 269; Hunter v. Cleveland 1 Brev. 167; Hayes v. Shields, 2 Yeates, 222; Ex parte Everts, 3 Disney (Ohio) 83.

And as such has to be vindicated by a discharge when an arrest has taken place in violation of their privilege. Com. v. Daniel, 4 Clark (Pa.) 49.

The right is afforded, not so much for the witness as for the party. Smith v. Jones, supra.

Yet it has been held that the privilege does not concern the dignity of the court merely, but is primarily, and above all conferred for the just protection of the party himself, in order that the performance of a duty, or the submission to process which the party cannot resist, shall not be made use of to his injury or oppression. People v. Detroit Super. Ct. Judge, 40 Mich. 729.

It is the privilege of a party to an action or suit to attend the court and be examined as a witness or not, as he may be advised, without being subjected to civil prosecution while so remaining or being examined. First Nat. Bank of St. Paul v. Ames, 30 Minn. 179.

The privilege is personal, part of the man's individual freedom, essential to the defense of his legal rights, and designed to protect the feeble and the poor from oppression. Key v. Jetto, 1 Pittsb. 117; Smith v. Jones, supra; Huddeson v. Prizer, 9 Phila. 65.

The protection afforded by the law is a personal privilege of which the party entitled to rely upon it, may avail himself to prevent or defeat an arrest. Brown v. Getchell, 11 Mass. 11.

It has been considered not only the privilege of the party but of the people. Anderson v. Rountree, 1 Pinney, 115.

As the privilege of a court the incidental immunity to the party is scarcely the subject of abuse, being exercisable, or not, in each particular case, as the process of substantial justice may seem to require. Parker v. Hotchkiss, 1 Wall. Jr. 269.

The law does not declare that a witness shall not be arrested, but gives him the right to free himself from arrest if he desires to. Smith v. Jones, supra.

Protection to a witness ought to be at least as extensive as to a party. United States v. Edme, 9 Serg. & R. 147.

The fact that he was not summoned and ob-the following cases, cited with approval by this court, which are exactly on "all fours" with the present case.

Mitchell v. Huron Circuit Judge, 58 Mich. 541; First Nat. Bank of St. Paul v. Ames, 89 Minn. 179; Matthews v. Tufts, 87 N. Y. 568; Person v.

Grier, 66 N. Y. 124, 28 Am. Rep. 35; Wilson v. Donaldson, 3 L. R. A. 268, 117 Ind. 856; Small v. Montgomery, 28 Fed. Rep. 707. See also Dungan v. Miller, 87 N. J. L. 182; Kaufman v. Kennedy, 25 Fed. Rep. 785; Sherman v. Gundlach, 87 Minn. 118; Palmer v. Rowan, 21 tained no writ of protection, does not alter the case. May v. Shumway, 16 Gray, 86, 77 Am. Dec. 401.

The right is not so much to avoid the arrest, but to terminate it. Smith v. Jones, supra.

It is a conditional or contingent right of the witness which may be taken advantage of by him or not as he pleases. Ibid.

Therefore judges are not bound judicially to notice a right of privilege, nor to grant it without claim. Gyer v. Irwin, 4 U. S. 4 Dall. 187, 1 L. ed. 762.

It is to some extent a discretionary matter with a court or judge, whether a witness shall be discharged upon arrest. Smith v. Jones, supra.

When it is not a mere cover to a skulking debtor, it ought to be considered liberally. United States v. Edme, supra.

Yet it is not an actual right. Smith v. Jones, supra.

The arrest of a person who has a special privilege or exemption is in no case void but voidable, merely, and an action of false imprisonment will not lie against the officer or party issuing out the process. Fletcher v. Baxter, 2 Aik. 224; Smith v. Jones, supra; People v. Detroit Super. Ct. Judges, 40 Mich. 729.

It remains valid until avoided. Smith v. Jones, supra.

A person ordering an arrest may be punished for contempt of court for interference with its business. Ibid.

An arrest is ceremonious with actual detention of the person of the party arrested, and does not mean merely a summons or citation. Huntington v. Shultz, Harp. L. 452, 18 Am. Dec. 660.

An arrest should not be valid, even for the purpose of giving jurisdiction to the court out of which the process issues, more especially where the witness is attending from a foreign state. Seaver v. Robinson, 3 Duer, 622; Sanford v. Chase, 3 Cow. 361.

III. The extent and limit of the privilege.

Generally, at common law, parties and witnesses are liable to be sued though their bodies cannot be detached or detained, and hence it is stated that they are entitled to their liberty, but the privilege extends no further, the suit not abating for any such cause. Bishop v. Vose, 27 Conn. 1.

From the first it has been the law, both common and statute, that a foreign citizen if found in the state, whether there on business or pleasure, or hastening through the state with railroad speed, is liable to be sued like any other person and is not entitled to any personal or peculiar immunity. Ibid.

But a defendant is not amenable to process unless he is in, or comes voluntarily within the territorial jurisdiction of the court. Wanser v. Bright, 62 Ill. 42; Williams v. Bacon, 10 Wend. 636; Carpenter v. Spooner, 2 Sandf. 717; Seaver v. Robinson, 3 Duer, 622.

It is a general principle, however, that parties and witnesses, and all who have any relation to a cause which calls for their attendance in court as bail, are privileged during their attendance upon court, and in going to and returning from it, whether they are compelled to attend or not. Fletcher v. Baxter, 2 Aik. 224.

Parties and witnesses attending in good faith any legal tribunal, whether a court of record or not, having power to pass upon the rights of the person attending, are privileged from arrest on civil process during their attendance, and for a reasonable time in going and returning, whether they are residents of the state or come from abroad; whether they attend on summons or voluntarily; and whether they have or have not obtained a writ of protection. Thompson's Case, 122 Mass. 423, 28 Am. Rep. 370.

In point of time, the privilege exists during the time fairly occupied in going to and returning from the place of trial or hearing, as well as during the time when the party is in actual attendance at the place of trial. Nichols v. Horton, 4 McCrary, 567, 14 Fed. Rep. 327; Brooks v. Farwell, 2 McCrary, 220; Juneau Bank v. McSpedan, 5 Bos. 64; Bridges v. Sheldon, 7 Fed. Rep. 17; Plimpton v. Winslow, 9 Fed. Rep. 355; Lyell v. Goodwin, 4 McLean, 20; Person v. Grier, 66 N. Y. 124, 28 Am. Rep. 35; Holmes v. Nelson, 1 Phila. 217; Smythe v. Banks, 4 U. S. 4 Dall. 329, 1 L. ed. 854; Moletor v. Sinnen, 7 L. R. A. 817, 78 Wis. 308; Wilbur v. Boyer, 1 W. N. C. 154; Gregg v. Sumner, 21 Ill. App. 110; Re Dickenson, 3 Harv. (Del.) 517; Henegar v. Spangler, 29 Ga. 217.

With a reasonable time for the witness to return home after the rising of the court. Ex parte Hall, 1 Tyler (Vt.) 274; Schlesinger v. Foxwell, 1 N. Y. City Ct. Rep. 461; Brett v. Brown, 13 Abb. Pr. N. S. 295.

It is not sufficient, however, that he is a nonresident of the jurisdiction; it must appear that he came from without the jurisdiction upon the occasion of the judicial proceeding which he was attending and for the purpose of attending it. Day v. Harris, 59 Hun. 623, 87 N. Y. S. R. 322, 14 N. Y. Supp. 3.

The immunity does not extend merely to particular individuals, but to all persons under certain circumstances, on the principle that where the law requires any duty of the citizen, it will protect him in the discharge of that duty, and that individuals cannot demand the use of public civil process so as to arrest or interfere with others in the performance of public duties, or of duties required by public process. Holmes v. Nelson, supra.

The rule has been thus expressed: "All parties to a suit, and their witnesses, are, for the sake of public justice, protected from arrest in coming to, attending upon, and returning from the court, or as it is usually termed cumdo, morando et redeundo." Greer v. Young, 120 Ill. 189, reversing Greer v. Youngs, 17 Ill. App. 103. To the same effect, Palmer v. Rowan, 21 Neb. 422, 59 Am. Rep. 844.

The immunity is secured to all jurors, parties, witnesses, law agents, and even common agents of the parties. Holmes v. Nelson, 1 Phila. 217; Hudson v. Prizer, 9 Phila. 65.

To all who have any relation to a cause as parties, attorneys, bail, etc. Christian v. Williams, 111 Mo. 429.

And to a nonresident officer of a foreign corporation attending for the purpose of giving evidence. Mulhearn v. Press Pub. Co. 11 L. R. A. 151, 58 N. J. L. 153.

If the cause calls for their attendance in court. Baldwin v. Emerson, 16 R. I. 304; First Nat. Bank of St. Paul v. Ames, 89 Minn. 179.

The doctrine of exemption was upheld in North v. Hassler, 23 Fed. Rep. 551.

Even though attending voluntarily. Ballinger v. Elliott, 72 N. C. 598; Boigiano v. Gilbert Look Co. 73 Md. 133.

Neb. 452, 59 Am. Rep. 844; Miles v. McCou-lough, 1 Binn. 77; Atchison v. Morris, 11 Fed. Rep. 582; Massey v. Colville, 45 N. J. L. 119, 46 Am. Rep. 754; Huddeson v. Prizer, 9 Phila. 65; 1 Whart. Ev. § 389; Freeman's note, 77 Am. Dec. 401; Rorer, Interstate Law, 2d ed.

p. 82; Comyn's Dig. title Privilege; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 816-818; Taylor, Ev. § 1930 p. 1126; 22 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 163, title, Service of Process, 8, 3; 3 Bl. Com. 289; Cole v. Hawkins, 2 Strange, 1094; May v. Shumway, 16 Gray, 86, 77 Am.

The court being bound to protect them. Norris v. Beach, 2 Johns. 294. To the same effect, Person v. Grier, 66 N. Y. 124, 23 Am. Rep. 86; Palmer v. Rowan, 21 Neb. 452, 59 Am. Rep. 844.

Even if summoned. Palmer v. Rowan, supra; Sherman v. Gundlach, 37 Minn. 112; Brett v. Brown, 13 Abb. Pr. N. S. 205.

Whether attending with or without a subpoena. Pollard v. Union Pac. R. Co. 7 Abb. Pr. N. S. 70; Walpole v. Alexander, 8 Dougl. 45; Rogers v. Bullock, 8 N. J. L. 106; Dixon v. Ely, 4 Edw. Ch. 567, 6 L. ed. 978; Dungan v. Miller, 37 N. J. L. 123; Re Healey, 63 Vt. 664, 35 Am. Rep. 713; Brett v. Brown, 13 Abb. Pr. N. S. 205; May v. Shumway, 16 Gray, 86, 77 Am. Dec. 401.

The principles of exemption rest and apply as well to parties as to witnesses. First Nat. Bank of St. Paul v. Ames, 39 Minn. 179; Mitchell v. Huron Circuit Judge, 53 Mich. 542; Pollard v. Union Pac. R. Co. and Dungan v. Miller, supra; Merrill v. George, 23 How. Pr. 331; MacKay v. Lewis, 7 Hun, 63. And to strangers as to citizens. Holmes v. Nelson, 1 Phila. 217.

Where they are necessarily attending any court. First Nat. Bank of St. Paul v. Ames, supra.

Having been brought into such foreign state by process of law, they cannot, while there, be called to answer in another action. Brooks v. Farwell, 2 McCrary, 220.

This is so whether the privilege be regarded as a personal one to the witness or a privilege of the court. Bolgiano v. Gilbert Look Co. 73 Md. 132.

The exemption from arrest in returning home is never allowed but for the sake of enabling the party to go and stay freely without any apprehension, even in regard to his return home. Scott v. Curtis, 27 Vt. 762.

The courts will not take jurisdiction of a party thus attending in good faith as a witness during the continuance of his freedom from arrest. Person v. Grier, 66 N. Y. 124, 23 Am. Rep. 86.

The point has never been doubted. Seaver v. Robinson, 3 Duer, 622.

It is bad faith to commence a civil action and attempt to serve a summons and an order of arrest therein, before conviction on a criminal charge, and before the defendant has an opportunity to return. Compton v. Wilder, 40 Ohio St. 130.

And the tendency of the courts is to enlarge the privilege to all forms of process of a civil nature. Bolgiano v. Gilbert Look Co. supra.

The protection extends to all legal tribunals of a judicial character, whether strictly courts of record or not, recognized by the laws of the state and having power to pass upon the rights of persons attending them. Wood v. Neale, 5 Gray, 588; Larned v. Griffin, 15 Fed. Rep. 590; Bolgiano v. Gilbert Look Co. supra.

The term "court" has been thus construed: "The privilege is granted in all cases where the attendance of the party or witness is given in any matter pending before a lawful tribunal having jurisdiction of the cause." Greer v. Young, 120 Ill. 130, reversing Greer v. Young, 17 Ill. App. 106.

In civil suits of the United States courts there is the same privilege to suitors and witnesses as the law gives in actions by one citizen against another. United States v. Edme, 9 Serg. & R. 147; Holmes v. Nelson, 1 Phila. 217.

Such a witness in the circuit court is privileged from service of summons in an action in a state court. Atchison v. Morris, 11 Fed. Rep. 582.

25 L. R. A.

It extends to any tribunal sitting in the nature of a court in the administration of justice. Fletcher v. Baxter, 2 Aik. 324.

Not only to persons who are in the immediate presence of the judge of the courts of record, but to those also who are in attendance upon the subordinate tribunals and officers appointed by those courts, to assist them in the discharge of their duties to witnesses subpoenaed by commissioners. Huddeson v. Prizer, 9 Phila. 65.

Wherever attendance is a duty in conducting any proceedings of a judicial nature, as commissions of bankrupt, a judge at his chambers, and a witness attending an arbitration under a rule of court, a witness before a master in chancery, to make an affidavit. United States v. Edme, supra; Bridges v. Sheldon, 18 Blatohf. 507.

To proceedings before any person substituted pro hac vice in the place of the court. Holmes v. Nelson, 1 Phila. 217.

Whether taking place in court or not. People v. Detroit Super. Ct. Judge, 40 Mich. 729.

The place of attendance is immaterial. Dungan v. Miller, 37 N. J. L. 122.

But the extension does not protect a witness or suitor of a tribunal unknown to our laws. Holmes v. Nelson, supra.

Nor where the evidence is taken out of court. Parker v. Manco, 61 Hun, 519.

It is not limited to mere exemption from arrest. Martin v. Ramsey, 7 Humph. 200.

Witnesses should be protected against molestation by means of the process of the court in any form; the practice of extending such protection must be upheld. Lamkin v. Starkey, 7 Hun, 479.

There must be an opportunity to return. Compton v. Wilder, 40 Ohio St. 130.

A reasonable time must elapse after the discharge for this purpose before service can be made. Palmer v. Rowan, 21 Neb. 452, 59 Am. Rep. 844; Schlesinger v. Foxwell, 1 N. Y. City Ct. Rep. 461; Ex parte Hall, 1 Tyler (Vt.) 274; Brett v. Brown, 13 Abb. Pr. N. S. 205.

It extends to a witness preparing for home served with summons the morning after the trial. Wilbur v. Boyer, 1 W. N. C. 154, where the witness had remained till after verdict.

His acts must be bona fide, and without unreasonable delay. Sherman v. Gundlach, 37 Minn. 112; Bolgiano v. Gilbert Look Co. 73 Md. 132.

It extends for so long a time as is fairly required in going and returning. Gregg v. Sumner, 21 Ill. App. 110.

Such time is measured according to the circumstances. Wilbur v. Boyer, supra.

Liberality is exercised in regard to the reasonableness of the time. Saehinger v. Adler, 2 Robt. 704.

The courts will not nicely scan the time of the return of parties, witnesses, etc. Hayes v. Shields, 2 Yeates, 222.

It would be too severe a rule to say that a witness must take the first train after leaving court. Wilbur v. Boyer, supra.

The privilege extends to the protection of the party at his lodgings. Ex parte Hurst, 1 Wash. C. C. 186.

But if he stays for purposes of business or pleasure he is not protected. Rex v. Platt, 3 W. N. C. 187; Smythe v. Banks, 4 U. S. 4 Dall. 289, 1 L. ed. 854; Finch v. Gallagher, 12 N. Y. Supp. 497, 25 Abb. N. C. 404.

Dec. 401, note; Hayes v. Shields, 2 Yeates, 222; Seaver v. Robinson, 8 Duer, 622; Re Henley, 53 Vt. 694, 38 Am. Rep. 717, note.

Mr. Bernard Carter also for appellees.

Fowler, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Edward F. Sanborn and Arthur C. Mann,

It extends to exemption from suits or other civil process as not only the privilege of the party but of the people. Anderson v. Roundtree, 1 Pinney, 115.

Not only to arrest, but also freedom from action. Merrill v. George, 23 How. Pr. 331.

It extends to an attachment for nonpayment of costs only. Snelling v. Watrous, 2 Paige, 314, 2 L. ed. 923.

And to the taking upon a writ of ne exeat. Dixon v. Ely, 4 Edw. Ch. 557, 6 L. ed. 973.

To arrest under bail process. Vincent v. Watson, 1 Rich. L. 194.

His privilege protects him. Jenkins v. Smith, 57 How. Pr. 171.

In an action against him personally, or in a fiduciary capacity. Grafton v. Weeks, 7 Daly, 523.

It is enforced to protect not only the body of the suitor from arrest, but his horse and other things necessary for his journey which would otherwise be attachable by the custom of London from seizure for debt. Bridges v. Sheldon, 18 Blatchf. 507; Year Book, 20 Hen. VI. 10.

In all cases coming within its reason and true purpose, the court will not hesitate to enforce it. Nichols v. Horton, 4 McCrary, 557; Pollard v. Union Pac. R. Co. 7 Abb. Pr. N. S. 70.

And without a writ of protection. Larned v. Griffin, 12 Fed. Rep. 590; Palmer v. Rowan, 21 Neb. 452, 59 Am. Rep. 844; Schlesinger v. Foxwell, 1 N. Y. City Ct. Rep. 461.

The claim of protection not being affected by reason of the service of a summons to attend. Atchison v. Morris, 11 Biss. 221.

Upon principle as well as upon authority, the immunity from the service of process for the commencement of civil actions against them, is absolute eundo, morando et redeundo. Person v. Grier, 66 N. Y. 124, 23 Am. Rep. 36; Schlesinger v. Foxwell, and Larned v. Griffin, supra.

The court will not sanction the service of a summons or mesne process upon a nonresident, coming into the state for the purpose of prosecuting or defending a cause of his own. Juneau Bank v. Mospedan, 5 Biss. 64.

It does not extend to the taking of depositions before a notary who performs purely ministerial functions, and cannot decide questions or determine any matter affecting the rights of the parties, not having jurisdiction of the cause. Greer v. Young, 120 Ill. 189, reversing Greer v. Youngs, 17 Ill. App. 106; Parker v. Manco, 61 Hun, 519.

Yet it has been held to be no objection to the doctrine where the parties consent to the testimony being taken before a notary, instead of before an officer of the court, appointed for the purpose, the testimony given being as much in the action as if it had been given in court. Hollender v. Hall, 13 N. Y. Supp. 759, affirmed, 58 Hun, 604, 33 N. Y. S. R. 848; Larned v. Griffin, supra.

Nor where the testimony is taken de bene esse before a referee or notary. Marks v. La Société Anonyme de L'Union des Papeteries, 19 N. Y. Supp. 470, 46 N. Y. S. R. 660; Hollender v. Hall, 13 N. Y. Supp. 753, 33 N. Y. S. R. 848.

In Andrews v. Lembeck, 46 Ohio St. 38, the privilege was extended to a party attending court upon the hearing of an injunction.

To the case of a party to a suit in equity attending before a master or an examiner, the party having been served with summons. Hudson v.

trading as Sanborn & Mann, residing and doing business in Massachusetts, issued out of the Baltimore City Court an attachment on original process against Joseph Mullen, a citizen of this state and a resident of Baltimore City. This attachment was subsequently quashed, and the short note case was prosecuted, but without success. Sanborn,

Prizer, 9 Phila. 65; Larned v. Griffin, 12 Fed. Rep. 590; Dungan v. Miller, 37 N. J. L. 182; Scott v. Curtis, 27 Vt. 762; First Nat. Bank of St. Paul v. Ames, 39 Minn. 179.

Even though voluntary. Dungan v. Miller, supra.

And in vacation. Vincent v. Watson, 1 Rich. L. 194.

Also to one of several defendants so attending. Dungan v. Miller, supra.

And to such attendance in a suit for the infringement of letters patent. Plimpton v. Winslow, 3 Fed. Rep. 365.

And to the taking of testimony before a master or commissioner, preparatory to the final submission of the cause to a court. Nichols v. Horton, 4 McCrary, 557, 14 Fed. Rep. 327.

Also to the taking of testimony upon motion before a supreme court commissioner. Mulhearn v. Press Pub. Co. 11 L. R. A. 101, 53 N. J. L. 153.

To the taking of depositions upon commission as a contempt of court under section 723, Rev. Stat. of the United States. Bridges v. Sheldon, 18 Blatchf. 507, where a defendant so attending was served with summons.

To a witness returning home from attending before a magistrate under a rule of court. United States v. Edme, 9 Serg. & R. 147.

And to the attendance before arbitrators, commissioners. Larned v. Griffin, 12 Fed. Rep. 590; Farmer v. Robbins, 47 How. Pr. 415; Sheehan v. Bradford, R. & K. R. Co. 3 N. Y. Supp. 790.

Whether appointed by rule of court and master in chancery, or on the execution of a writ of inquiry. Dungan v. Miller, 37 N. J. L. 182.

There is no difference in principle or practice, whether the parties are necessarily and in good faith attending the trial of an action in court, or an examination before a referee or a master in chancery. First Nat. Bank of St. Paul v. Ames, 39 Minn. 179.

The privilege extends to freedom from arrest in attending upon an action referred for the court's decision upon a case stated. Ex parte McNeil, 6 Mass. 245.

To the service of a summons upon a party while attending an appeal of his case from the court below. Miles v. McCullough, 1 Binn. 77.

It extends to attendance upon the court in the case of a suit adjourned from day to day owing to the illness of the other party. Ellis v. De Garmo, 19 L. R. A. 560, 17 R. I. 715.

If a defendant is really in the state to protect his own interest in the taking of testimony to be used against him in another state, the principles enunciated in the New York cases are looked upon as broad enough to protect him eundo, morando et redeundo. Greer v. Young, 120 Ill. 184.

The mere service of the summons upon a non-resident, when in another state, for the purpose of taking depositions to be used in an action to which he is a party in his own state, imposes no greater hardship upon him than to be served with process out of his own state when attending to any other kind of business. Greer v. Young, 120 Ill. 189, reversing Greer v. Youngs, 17 Ill. App. 106.

Yet the privilege has been held to extend to the taking of depositions upon commission. Bridges v. Sheldon, 18 Blatchf. 507, under rule of court.

one of the plaintiffs in the attachment suit, was advised by his counsel here that it would be necessary for him to testify as a witness at the trial of the short note case, and it is admitted he came here for that purpose.

The case, however, was continued and Sanborn having left the court-room in Baltimore was about to depart from this state for his home in Massachusetts, when he was summoned as a defendant in the cause brought by the appellant, Mullen, to recover damages for wrongfully, maliciously, and without apparent cause issuing the attachment above mentioned. Sanborn moved to quash the writ of summons and the return of the sheriff thereon, on the ground that being a witness from Klusman v. Reineix, 2 Miles (Pa.) 200; Wetherill v. Seitzinger, 1 Miles (Pa.) 237.

If a citizen or resident of the state, he is entitled to discharge on entering his appearance, and if from a foreign state, absolutely. Pollard v. Union Pac. R. Co. 7 Abb. Fr. N. S. 70.

The privilege of a witness from arrest requires an absolute discharge from arrest, and makes such arrest a contempt of court under 3 Rev. Stat. 402, § 51. Ibid.

The power to discharge suitors and witnesses is inherent in every court, but will not be exercised except under special circumstances. Kinsman v. Reineix, and Wetherill v. Seitzinger, supra.

It has been held there is no immunity from the service of process, because the party is only temporarily within the jurisdiction of the court. McIntire v. McIntire, 5 Mackey. 344.

In Blight v. Fisher, 1 Pet. C. C. 41, the privilege of a suitor or witness was held to extend only to an exemption from arrest, and did not extend to exemption from the service of a summons, either upon a party to a cause or a witness.

The exemption has been held only to apply to arrest and not to cover cases of service of process which does not interfere with or prevent the party's attendance upon the court. Baldwin v. Emerson, 16 R. I. 304; Capwell v. Sipe, 17 R. I. 475.

A suitor may be privileged from arrest on civil process, but is not privileged from service of non-bailable process. Hunter v. Cleveland, 1 Brev. 187; Hopkins v. Coburn, 1 Wend. 232; Sadler v. Ray, 5 Rich. L. 523; Legrand v. Bedinger, 4 T. B. Mon. 539.

The privilege only extends to the exemption of his person from arrest. Sadler v. Ray, supra.

It does not apply to a prisoner discharged from duress or imprisonment. Lynch's Case, 1 City Hall Rec. 133; Shotwell's Case, 4 City Hall Rec. 75.

And does not extend throughout the term at which the cause is marked for trial. Smythe v. Banks, 4 U. S. 4 Dall. 329, 1 L. ed. 354.

Nor is it an absolute freedom from arrest, such as belongs to the members of the royal family of England, or to ambassadors and some others. Smith v. Jones, 76 Me. 133, 49 Am. Rep. 508.

It is not a total exemption from arrest, such as is extended to persons discharged from arrest in bankruptcy or insolvency proceedings, or where the law forbids arrest for the collection of demands. Ibid.

It does not apply to a witness taken to a foreign state to answer a criminal charge, served with a summons while there. Scott v. Curtis, 27 Vt. 732; Com. v. Daniel, 4 Clark (Pa.) 49; Key v. Jetto, 1 Pittsb. 117; Byler v. Jones, 22 Mo. App. 623; Moore v. Green, 73 N. C. 394, 21 Am. Rep. 470; Williams v. Bacon, 10 Wend. 636; Addicks v. Bush, 1 Phila. 19.

In Lucas v. Albee, 1 Denio, 663, the court held the rule of privilege did not extend to a defendant, arrested on a capias in a civil action for an offense of which he had just been tried and convicted in the court of special sessions.

It has been held not to apply to the case of a suitor served with a writ of summons while attending court, such process not interfering with his attending nor obstructing the due administration of justice. Ellis v. De Garmo, 19 L. R. A. 550, 17 R. I. 715.

Nor to protect a witness from arrest for perjury 35 L. R. A. committed in the cause wherein he had given evidence. Ex parte Levi, 23 Fed. Rep. 651.

The privilege extends at common law only so far as to discharge from arrest when arrested on civil process, and does not abate the suit. Christian v. Williams, 111 Mo. 429.

The privilege from arrest of parties and witnesses attending before the senate or house of representatives, or their committee, is the same as of those attending any strictly judicial tribunal. Thompson's Case, 122 Mass. 423, 23 Am. Rep. 370.

The fact that a party is engaged in preparing to set aside a referee's report gives him no claim to exemption from arrest. Clark v. Grant, 2 Wend. 257.

Such act only grants immunity from arrest when the party is in attendance under due service of a subpoena. Massey v. Colville, 45 N. J. L. 119, 45 Am. Rep. 754.

The law permits civil suits to be commenced and prosecuted against persons who may be brought unwillingly into the state, where the creditor has nothing to do directly or indirectly with bringing such debtor within the jurisdiction of the court. Nichols v. Goodheart, 5 Ill. App. 574; Williams v. Bacon, 10 Wend. 636.

In Nichols v. Goodheart, supra, the defendant, brought within the state on a criminal process, was sued civilly, and it was held the evidence not showing that the plaintiff brought him within the jurisdiction, either directly or indirectly, that such suit was maintainable.

On every joint and several bond, where the actions are supported against two or more defendants, every individual is liable in his separate and distinct capacity, and the privilege or exemption from arrest which the law allows to one defendant will not prevent the ordinary course of justice against any of the other obligors, the privilege not being extended by implication, because a fellow debtor is entitled to legislative exemption from arrest. Gibbs v. Mitchell, 2 Bay (S. C.) 406.

In Greer v. Young, 120 Ill. 130, reversing Greer v. Youngs, 17 Ill. App. 106, the court held the privilege was not to be extended to a case of service by merely reading the document.

Such an action does not come within the reasons of the rule. Greer v. Young, supra.

IV. Parties as witnesses.

Nonresident parties have been held entitled to privilege from service of summons. Wilson Sewing Mach. Co. v. Wilson, 22 Fed. Rep. 308; Brooks v. Farwell, 4 Fed. Rep. 166; Parker v. Hotchkiss, 1 Wall. Jr. 206; Juneau Bank v. McSpedan, 5 Bias. 64; Small v. Montgomery, 25 Fed. Rep. 707; United States v. Bridgman, 9 Bias. 221; First Nat. Bank of St. Paul v. Ames, 39 Minn. 179; Gregg v. Sumner, 21 Ill. App. 110; Wilson v. Donaldson, 3 L. R. A. 266, 117 Ind. 356; Greer v. Young, 120 Ill. 130, reversing Greer v. Youngs, 17 Ill. App. 106; Jacobson v. Hosmer, 76 Mich. 234; Letherby v. Shaver, 73 Mich. 500; Mitchell v. Huron Circuit Judge, 53 Mich. 545; Torry v. Bast, 3 W. N. C. 63; Moletor v. Sinnen, 7 L. R. A. 817, 76 Wis. 308; Addicks v. Bush, 1 Phila. 19; Wetherill v. Seitzinger, 1 Miles (Pa.) 237; Waterman v. Merritt, 7 R. I. 345; Palmer v. Brown, 21 Neb. 452, 59 Am. Rep. 344; Halsey v. Stewart, 4 N. J. L. 366; Tribune Assn. v. Sleeman, 12 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 21; Matthews v. Tufts, 57 N. Y. 563; Murphy v.

another state he was exempt from civil process while attending as a witness in the short note case, and for a reasonable time thereafter. This motion was answered by Mullen, who insisted that it should be dismissed but the court below being of opinion that it was bound by the decision of this court in Belgiano's Case, 73 Md. 183, passed an order quashing the writ of summons as prayed by Sanborn. From this order Mullen has appealed.

The only question, therefore, presented

Sweezy, 2 N. Y. Supp. 241; Person v. Grier, 66 N. Y. 124, 28 Am. Rep. 36; Dungan v. Miller, 37 N. J. L. 182; Holmes v. Nelson, 1 Phila. 217; Hayes v. Shields, 2 Yeates, 222; Kaufman v. Kennedy, 26 Fed. Rep. 786; Miles v. McCullough, 1 Binn. 77; Bridges v. Sheldon, 18 Blatchf. 507.

They have also been held exempt from arrest in civil actions. Compton v. Wilder, 40 Ohio St. 130; Page v. Randall, 6 Cal. 28; Thompson's Case, 123 Mass. 428, 23 Am. Rep. 870; Com. v. Huggesford, 9 Pick. 267; Wood v. Neale, 5 Gray, 583; Case v. Rorabacher, 15 Mich. 537; Torry v. Bast, 3 W. N. C. 68; Addicks v. Bush, 1 Phila. 19; Wetherell v. Seltzinger, 1 Miles (Pa.) 237; Harris v. Grantham, 1 N. J. L. 142; Clark v. Grant, 2 Wend. 257; Snelling v. Watrous, 3 Paige, 314, 2 L. ed. 923; Murphy v. Sweezy, 2 N. Y. Supp. 241; Salbinger v. Adler, 2 Robt. 704; Ellis v. De Garmo, 19 L. R. A. 580, 17 R. L. 715; Dungan v. Miller, 37 N. J. L. 182; Tribune Assn. v. Sleeman, 12 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 21; Holmes v. Nelson, 1 Phila. 217; Hayes v. Shields, 2 Yeates, 222; Moletor v. Sinnen, 7 L. R. A. 817, 76 Wis. 308; Com. v. Daniel, 4 Clark (Pa.) 40; Pollard v. Union Pac. R. Co. 7 Abb. Pr. N. S. 70; Ex parte McNeill, 6 Mass. 245; Blight v. Fisher, 1 Pet. C. C. 41; Schlesinger v. Foxwell, 1 N. Y. City Ct. Rep. 451; Richards v. Goodson, 2 Va. Cas. 383; Taft v. Hoppin, Anthon, Niel Prius 187.

But some courts have held that a nonresident plaintiff is not exempt from obeying any ordinary process of the court. Page v. Randall, supra; Bishop v. Vose, 27 Conn. 1.

A nonresident plaintiff is not exempt from service of a summons in another suit. Baldwin v. Emerson, 16 R. I. 304.

The reason being that such service amounts simply to a notice and does not obstruct the administration of justice, nor interfere with the attendance or attention of a party to the suit then on trial. Ellis v. De Garmo, 19 L. R. A. 580, 17 R. L. 715.

Where the plaintiff alleged that he was not a resident of San Francisco, in attendance as a suitor upon the board of the United States land commissioner, but did not allege that at the precise time of the summons he was in attendance upon any court as a witness, juror, or party, the court held that even if this had been so he would only have been exempted from arrest in a civil action, and not from obeying any ordinary process of the court. Page v. Randall, 6 Cal. 32.

Yet where a nonresident party plaintiff in a suit procured a writ of protection and attending under it on the trial, and until the case was committed to the jury, and when on his way home was served with a writ of summons, the action was dismissed for want of legal service. Waterman v. Merritt, 7 R. I. 345.

Where the defendant pleaded in abatement that he was privileged while attending court as a party defendant to another suit from service of a civil process, the court held that in general, exemption from service of process without arrest, merely because a party was attending court awaiting trial, was unauthorized by any settled rule of law and was not required by public policy. Case v. Rorabacher, 15 Mich. 537.

A mere nominal plaintiff without personal interest in the suit in attendance as such, is entitled to exemption from service of summons. Capwell v. Stipe, 17 R. L. 473.

In Moletor v. Sinnen, 7 L. R. A. 817, 76 Wis. 308, 25 L. R. A.

however, it was held that the weight of judicial opinion was in favor of the proposition that where a party in good faith is brought within the jurisdiction of a state, or detained therein, being a non-resident either as a party to a suit or as a witness in another suit, he is not subject to service.

The authorities hold that privilege from the service of summons has existed from time immemorial, and has been upheld by both the federal and state courts, and the rule of law announced by them with such unanimity ought not to be considered to have been abrogated by any implication from the language used in section 5459 of the Ohio Statute. Andrews v. Lembeck, 46 Ohio St. 28.

In Addicks v. Bush, 1 Phila. 19, the defendant was charged with criminal conspiracy, tried, and acquitted, and immediately afterwards served with writ. The court held there was no distinction of the privilege between that of arrest, and service of civil process.

In State v. Stewart, 60 Wis. 587, 50 Am. Rep. 388, however, where the relator was arrested in Indiana upon a requisition, and after being tried, acquitted, and discharged, was again arrested before he had time to return, it was held, there being arrangement between the states, that the second arrest was legal.

And in a case where the question was whether a person, charged with crime before a committing magistrate to discharge on his recognizance for a further hearing, was subject while returning from the office of the magistrate to arrest on civil process for debt, the court held that such a man did not come within any of the classes of persons exempted by law, while going to, attending on, or returning from judicial proceedings in which they were interested, he being neither a suitor, witness, juror, nor officer of the court. Key v. Jetto, 1 Pittsb. 117.

So where the defendant, charged with having obtained goods by false pretenses, arrested as a fugitive from justice in the state of Massachusetts, by virtue of a precept by the governor of that state, was again arrested on a captas ad respondendum in actions founded upon contract, it was held he was not within the rule of privilege. Williams v. Bacon, 10 Wend. 638.

Again where the plaintiff sought to set aside a verdict and judgment, upon the ground that the suit was brought and service perfected upon him while in attendance upon the court, by virtue of a state requisition for him as a fugitive from justice forced to return to answer the charge against him to which he did not appear or plead, but it did not appear that he was in the state under any extradition in legal contemplation, his presence not being compelled, the court held he was there as a mere volunteer, and that if not in the state as a prisoner or under compulsion as a fugitive from justice, he was liable as others and must answer in like manner; and further that he did not avail himself of the privilege at the proper time, even if he were entitled to it. King v. Phillips, 70 Ga. 409.

In Brooks v. Farwell, 4 Fed. Rep. 163, the court stated that the authorities were clear to the point, that a party going into another state as a witness or as a party under process of a court, to attend upon the trial of a cause, was exempt from process in such state while necessarily attending in respect to such trial, following Parks v. Hotchkiss, and Juneau Bank v. McSpedan, 5 Bls. 64.

here, is whether, under the circumstances of this case, the appellee, Sanborn, is exempt from the service of summons issued to bring him into court to respond in damages for the wrongful and malicious issuing of the attachment. We do not think this case is within the rule laid down by this court in Bolgiano's Case, supra. That was the case of a witness, who was not a party to the suit, who came here from New Jersey, where he resided, for the purpose of testifying in a cause on trial in this state, and we there ex-

The rule was extended to the case of a nonresident defendant, indicted in the district court, who came to the state without arrest, under arrangement with the government for the purpose of being present at his trial, and pleading to the indictment and giving bail, served with summons in a civil action, his attendance being really compulsory, as if he had not come he could have been brought upon warrant, and for that reason he was necessarily within the jurisdiction. United States v. Bridgman, 9 Biss. 221.

Where a citizen of the state of Pennsylvania was extradited upon a criminal prosecution instituted in the state of Ohio, and upon his being brought into the latter state, was served with summons and arrested in a civil action, it was held he was entitled to privilege. Compton v. Wilder, 40 Ohio St. 180.

Where the defendant, immediately after the trial was served with a capias containing an ac etiam clause, and bail not being demanded indorsing his appearance, it was held that the defendant was privileged from arrest, but not from having process served upon him in that action, which was non-bailable. Hopkins v. Coburn, 1 Wend. 302.

The doctrine of privilege of nonresident witnesses and parties was upheld in Small v. Montgomery, 23 Fed. Rep. 707, where a nonresident defendant, a necessary witness on his own behalf, was served with a subpoena in another cause then pending in the circuit court, and while attending as a witness in the latter in obedience to the subpoena, was served with process to which he pleaded in abatement upon which plea the court gave judgment.

So in Parker v. Hotchkiss, 1 Wall. Jr. 299, the defendant, a nonresident served with summons on the day of the trial at his lodgings, was held privileged, the court overruling Blight v. Fisher, 1 Pet. C. C. 41.

The rule applies to a defendant, attending as a party and witness before an examiner in chancery in the circuit court in a suit, served with summons pursuant to section 287 of chapter 66 of the Minnesota General Statutes of 1873, requiring him to show cause why he should not be bound by the judgment in an action brought against the firm in which he was a partner. First Nat. Bank of St. Paul v. Ames, 30 Minn. 179.

To the case of one within the jurisdiction for the purpose of testifying on his own behalf under the advice of counsel, served with summons while the jury were considering the case and while he was still in the court-room. Gregg v. Sumner, 21 Ill. App. 110.

In Wilson v. Donaldson, 3 L. R. A. 366, 117 Ind. 366, a nonresident defendant in the state for the purpose of testifying, was held not legally served with a summons at the suit of the same plaintiff, the provisions of section 312 of the Indiana Revised Statutes of 1881, providing for service on a nonresident not applying to such a case.

Where the litigants, citizens of Tennessee, met in Georgia and each sued out ball'process against the other, and the defendant was arrested in vacation, the court thought it but just that he might have the plaintiff arrested during the term, where he was in attendance as a suitor, but the court upon appeal held that, inasmuch as the law as it then stood made no such distinction, the exception must be grafted upon common-law principle by the legislature and not by the courts. Henegar v. Spangler, 29 Ga. 217.

Where a nonresident presented a claim against 25 L. R. A.

the commonwealth of Massachusetts to the legislature, and voluntarily appeared before a joint committee to prove the same, when he was arrested on an execution issued upon a judgment of that state against him, he was held privileged and discharged on writ of habeas corpus. Thompson's Case, 123 Mass. 423, 33 Am. Rep. 370.

So where the petitioner, having a suit pending, obtained a writ of protection and was arrested while employed about his cause, which presented a question of law upon facts agreed, and it was not shown that it would not be put upon the law docket of the term, or that there would be no jury trials, it was held he could not be prejudiced by the circumstance that the term was a law term and was therefore entitled to be discharged upon habeas corpus. Com. v. Huggesford, 9 Pick. 257.

And where the petitioner, a foreigner, whose claim was specially assigned for examination, attended a hearing by commissioners appointed by a judge of probate to examine claims against an insolvent decedent's estate, which was begun and continued, was arrested on mesne process before the adjourned meeting, he was held privileged and discharged upon habeas corpus. Wood v. Neale, 5 Gray, 538.

Again where the relator was served with a summons while on his way home, without any deviation as to his journey, and with no delay that was not fully justified, the service was held a breach of privilege and an abuse of process and a mandamus was granted with costs against the plaintiff. Jacobson v. Hoemer, 76 Mich. 234.

And again where a nonresident plaintiff was served with a summons while attending court on a trial of his suit, as a party and a witness therein, and for no other purpose, it was held such service was void and might be set aside upon a motion to the court. Letherby v. Shaver, 73 Mich. 500.

So also where the relator, a nonresident, attending to business, was sued civilly and also arrested criminally, being let out on bail went in search of his attorney, but did not find him on that day, subsequently visited him in consultation when he was served with summons for the tort involved in the criminal complaint, the service was set aside upon mandamus as a breach of privilege. Jacobson v. Hoemer, supra.

Where the relator, a party to two suits in a foreign jurisdiction, examined as a witness in one of the causes, the other being continued, was served with summons in another suit while attending court for the sole purpose of giving evidence, and applied to the court to set aside the service which being refused he moved for a mandamus, the court held that the writ should issue as public policy, the due administration of justice and the protection to parties and witnesses alike demanded it. Mitchell v. Huron Circuit Judge, 53 Mich. 543.

A nonresident, attending upon a notice of his counsel the argument of a rule on which he was defendant, was served with summons while on his way back to his hotel, and was held privileged from arrest or service of summons. Torrey v. Bast, 3 W. N. C. 63.

So where a nonresident defendant attended with a view of being present with his counsel at the taking of the depositions of a witness, under rule entered for that purpose, the court held that he was entitled to the privilege of a suitor, notwithstanding the cause was at that time under arbitration. Wetherill v. Seitsinger, 1 Miles (Pa.) 237.

In Com. v. Hambricht, 4 Serg. & R. 146, the depressed the view that the tendency of the courts in this country "is to enlarge the privilege and afford full protection to suitors and witnesses from all forms of process of a civil nature during their attendance before any judicial tribunal, and for a reasonable time in going and returning," but continuing, we said, "We think the decided weight of authority has extended the privilege so far, at least, as to exempt a resident of another state who comes into this state as a witness to give evidence in a cause here from service of process of the court and dismissed the writ. Ex parte Everts, 2 Disney (Ohio) 83.

And where the defendant served with an ordinary summons pleaded in abatement that he was a resident of another state, present for the purpose of defending an action pending against him, and testifying on his own behalf, which action being called on for trial he announced his readiness to proceed, but plaintiff dismissed the action and withdrew the papers from the file, but immediately afterwards refiled his complaint and caused defendant to be served with a new summons while on his way home, the court held the service illegal. Wilson v. Donaldson, 3 L. R. A. 236, 117 Ind. 356.

Again where a nonresident attended divorce proceedings, the hearing of which was adjourned owing to the wife's sickness, and remained in the state awaiting the assignment of the hearing, the court held that until such assignment under the facts, he was, and was required to be in attendance upon the court in the strict sense of the term, the case not being continued or definitely postponed, and being in order, he was liable to be called at any time when the petitioner could come into court, and that therefore his arrest on writ of assumpsit was a violation of his privilege as a party attending court. Ellis v. De Garmo, 19 L. R. A. 560, 17 R. I. 715.

In Re Kimball, 2 Ben. 38, a bankrupt was arrested while on his way to the register's office for the purpose of examination, it was held that he was not exempt from arrest under section 26 of the Bankrupt Act, but that the order was substantially a subpoena and he was to be considered as a witness, and that as such and as a party, he was entitled to protection and his discharge was ordered as a breach of privilege subject to the power to rearrest.

In Ex parte Kerney, 1 Atk. 55, the question was raised as to whether a man was liable to be rearrested while under the summons of commissioners of bankrupts, and the court considering it a question of great importance and finding no precedence of like cases, ordered the petition to stand over and a search to be made for such cases, and in the meantime advised the sheriffs to discharge the petitioner.

But in Parker v. Manoo, 61 Hun, 519, the evidence was agreed to be taken before a notary public out of court, and the defendant who came into the state for that purpose was served with summons in a civil action by the same plaintiff. It was held that he was not entitled to the privilege, as the doctrine did not apply to cases where the testimony was taken out of court.

So in Finch v. Galligher, 12 N. Y. Supp. 457, 55 Abb. N. C. 404, the defendant, a nonresident, was served while attending court as a party and attorney in his own behalf, the proofs showing that he remained longer than was necessary after his determination to drop the examination by way of depositions, and the court held the privilege was lost by remaining within the state an unreasonable and unnecessary length of time, his presence having no real relation with the examination of witnesses, and was purely for his own pleasure and purely for ulterior objects.

So where the parties were attending court upon the hearing of an habeas corpus, which was dismissed and the parties had an interview, which the plaintiff pretended was for the purpose of an amicable settlement, but really for the purpose of detaining the defendant until such time as he could issue another writ, which was served during the interview, the court held the same an abuse of the process of the court and dismissed the writ. Ex parte Everts, 2 Disney (Ohio) 83.

And where the defendant served with an ordinary summons pleaded in abatement that he was a resident of another state, present for the purpose of defending an action pending against him, and testifying on his own behalf, which action being called on for trial he announced his readiness to proceed, but plaintiff dismissed the action and withdrew the papers from the file, but immediately afterwards refiled his complaint and caused defendant to be served with a new summons while on his way home, the court held the service illegal. Wilson v. Donaldson, 3 L. R. A. 236, 117 Ind. 356.

Again where a nonresident attended divorce proceedings, the hearing of which was adjourned owing to the wife's sickness, and remained in the state awaiting the assignment of the hearing, the court held that until such assignment under the facts, he was, and was required to be in attendance upon the court in the strict sense of the term, the case not being continued or definitely postponed, and being in order, he was liable to be called at any time when the petitioner could come into court, and that therefore his arrest on writ of assumpsit was a violation of his privilege as a party attending court. Ellis v. De Garmo, 19 L. R. A. 560, 17 R. I. 715.

In Re Kimball, 2 Ben. 38, a bankrupt was arrested while on his way to the register's office for the purpose of examination, it was held that he was not exempt from arrest under section 26 of the Bankrupt Act, but that the order was substantially a subpoena and he was to be considered as a witness, and that as such and as a party, he was entitled to protection and his discharge was ordered as a breach of privilege subject to the power to rearrest.

In Ex parte Kerney, 1 Atk. 55, the question was raised as to whether a man was liable to be rearrested while under the summons of commissioners of bankrupts, and the court considering it a question of great importance and finding no precedence of like cases, ordered the petition to stand over and a search to be made for such cases, and in the meantime advised the sheriffs to discharge the petitioner.

But in Parker v. Manoo, 61 Hun, 519, the evidence was agreed to be taken before a notary public out of court, and the defendant who came into the state for that purpose was served with summons in a civil action by the same plaintiff. It was held that he was not entitled to the privilege, as the doctrine did not apply to cases where the testimony was taken out of court.

So in Finch v. Galligher, 12 N. Y. Supp. 457, 55 Abb. N. C. 404, the defendant, a nonresident, was served while attending court as a party and attorney in his own behalf, the proofs showing that he remained longer than was necessary after his determination to drop the examination by way of depositions, and the court held the privilege was lost by remaining within the state an unreasonable and unnecessary length of time, his presence having no real relation with the examination of witnesses, and was purely for his own pleasure and purely for ulterior objects.

So where the parties were attending court upon the hearing of an habeas corpus, which was dismissed and the parties had an interview, which the plaintiff pretended was for the purpose of an amicable settlement, but really for the purpose of detaining the defendant until such time as he could issue another writ, which was served during the interview, the court held the same an abuse of the cess for the commencement of a civil suit against him in this state, and that the privilege protects him in staying and returning, provided he acts bona fide, and without unreasonable delay."

The language above quoted was, of course, used in reference to the facts of the case then before us—that of a witness who was not a party to the cause. As we did not, in the case just cited, undertake to lay down any general rule as to the exemption of suitors from civil process, because that was a case privileged and the service was good. Greer v. Young, 120 Ill. 189, reversing Greer v. Youngs, 17 Ill. App. 103.

The words "taken" "captas" and "arrest" do not comprehend the service of a process by which no imprisonment, no restraint of liberty, no bail is required, but only a notice or copy of the process. Legrand v. Bedinger, 4 T. B. Mon. 539.

The privilege from arrest, as established under the Vermont Statute, chapter 84, section 17, extends only to parties or witnesses in civil suits, and not to criminal proceedings, the words of the statute showing that it was intended to confine its provisions to the former class of cases its words are "any party or witness in any case pending before any court in this state, or before auditors, referees, etc." Scott v. Curtis, 27 Vt. 762.

A statute only extends to the witness's exemption when he is attending under the compulsion of a subpoena. Hardenbrook's Case, 3 Abb. Pr. 416.

Prior to the revised statutes, the exemption of voluntary witnesses from arrest was confined to voluntary foreign witnesses.

A summons in a civil action is "process" within the meaning of the cases, although it is held not to be a process within the meaning of section 14 of article 6 of the Minnesota Constitution. Sherman v. Gundlach, 37 Minn. 118.

The suggestion that the North Carolina statutes, which in express terms exempt witnesses from arrest, had the effect by implication of abrogating the rule of the common law in regard to suitors, was held to have no force. Hammerskold v. Rose, 52 N. C. 629.

In Hammerskold v. Rose, supra, the court held that it saw no ground to support the position that the principles of the common law, by which the suitor while going to, remaining at, or returning from court was exempted from arrest, was in force in that state.

Section 5457 of the Revised Statutes of Ohio designates particularly the persons either absolutely or at certain times, privileged from arrest, and includes all suitors while going to, attending, or returning from court.

Section 5458 fixes the time and place which shall be free from the disturbance liable to follow from an arrest.

Section 5459 provides, nothing in this subdivision contained shall be construed to extend to cases of treason, felony, or breach of the peace, or to privilege any person herein specified from being served at any time with a summons or notice to appear, and all witnesses not contrary to the provisions herein contained, made in any place, or on any river or watercourse within or bounding upon the state, shall be deemed lawful.

In the construction of this statute, it is held that an indictable offense was included under the term "breach of peace." Ex parte Levi, 23 Fed. Rep. 651.

V. Witnesses in general.

A resident of another state or country who has in good faith come into a state as a witness to give evidence in a cause, is exempt from service with process for the commencement of a civil action against him. Sherman v. Gundlach, 37 Minn. 118; Bishop v. Vose, 27 Conn. 1; Moletor v. Simmen, 7 L. R. A. 817, 76 Wis. 308; Schlesinger v. Foxwell, 1 N. Y. City Ct. Rep. 461; Jenkins v. Smith, 57 How. Pr. 171; Matthews v. Tufts, 87 N. Y. 568; Pope v. Negus, 8 N. Y. Supp. 798; Person v. Grier, 66 N. Y. 124, 23 25 L. R. A.

Am. Rep. 35; Brown v. Sleeman, 12 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 20; Hopkins v. Coburn, 1 Wend. 392; Hollender v. Hall, 58 Hun. 604, 13 N. Y. Supp. 759, 33 N. Y. S. R. 848; Snelling v. Watrous, 2 Paige, 314, 2 L. ed. 923; Lamkin v. Starkey, 7 Hun. 479; Thorp v. Adams, 58 Hun. 603, 11 N. Y. Supp. 41; Sheehan v. Bradford, B. & K. R. Co. 3 N. Y. Supp. 790; Wilbur v. Boyer, 1 W. N. C. 154; Atchison v. Morris, 11 Biss. 191; Bridges v. Sheldon, 18 Blatchf. 507; Brooks v. Farwell, 4 Fed. Rep. 106; Parker v. Hotchkiss, 1 Wall. Jr. 226; Juneau Bank v. McSpedan, 5 Biss. 64; Small v. Montgomery, 23 Fed. Rep. 707; First Nat. Bank of St. Paul v. Ames, 39 Minn. 179; Gregg v. Sumner, 21 Ill. App. 110; Wilson v. Donaldson, 3 L. R. A. 266, 117 Ind. 356; Palmer v. Rowan, 21 Neb. 452, 50 Am. Rep. 844; Dungan v. Miller, 37 N. J. L. 182; Brett v. Brown, 13 Abb. Pr. N. S. 226; Capwell v. Sipe, 17 R. I. 475; Kauffman v. Kennedy, 25 Fed. Rep. 735; Baldwin v. Emerson, 16 R. I. 304; Saever v. Robinson, 3 Duer, 622; Boigliano v. Gilbert Lock Co. 73 Md. 122; Pollard v. Union Pac. R. Co. 7 Abb. Pr. N. S. 70.

He is also privileged from arrest. Christian v. Williams, 111 Mo. 429; Sanford v. Chase, 3 Cow. 381; Mackay v. Lewis, 7 Hun. 83; Schlesinger v. Foxwell, 1 N. Y. City Ct. Rep. 461; Jones v. Knauss, 31 N. J. Eq. 211; Norris v. Beach, 2 Johns. 294; Hollender v. Hall, 58 Hun. 604, 13 N. Y. Supp. 759, 33 N. Y. S. R. 848; Farmer v. Robbins, 47 How. Pr. 415; Dixon v. Ely, 4 Edw. Ch. 557, 6 L. ed. 973; Snelling v. Watrous, 2 Paige, 314, 2 L. ed. 923; Lamkin v. Starkey, 7 Hun. 479; Vincent v. Watson, 1 Rich. L. 194; Martin v. Ramsey, 7 Humph. 260; Moore v. Chapman, 3 Hen. & M. 260; Washburn v. Phelps, 24 Vt. 506; Hurst's Case, 4 U. S. 4 Dall. 387, 1 L. ed. 878; Smith v. Jones, 76 Me. 123, 49 Am. Rep. 598; Pollard v. Union Pac. R. Co. 7 Abb. Pr. N. S. 70; Blight v. Fisher, 1 Pet. C. C. 41; Massey v. Colville, 45 N. J. L. 119, 46 Am. Rep. 754.

But where witnesses had given testimony before the grand jury and were discharged and were arrested on a warrant charging them with perjury, it was held they were not protected from arrest on such criminal charge, it being an indictable offense. Ex parte Levi, 23 Fed. Rep. 651.

In Flechter v. Franko, 15 N. Y. Supp. 674, the court upheld the doctrine as applied to nonresident witnesses, although in that case the party was a resident of the state.

The fact that the witness was not influenced makes no difference. Atchison v. Morris, 11 Biss. 191.

The rule is especially applicable in all its force to suitors and witnesses from foreign states attending upon the courts of this state. Person v. Grier, 66 N. Y. 124, 23 Am. Rep. 35.

An arrest should not be valid, even for the purpose of giving jurisdiction to the court out of which the process issues, especially where the witness is attending from a foreign state. Sanford v. Chase, 3 Cow. 381.

It is no answer to the claim of privilege of a non-resident witness, that he was not served with compulsory process after his arrival within the jurisdiction. Brett v. Brown, 13 Abb. Pr. N. S. 226.

In Pollard v. Union Pac. R. Co. 7 Abb. Pr. N. S. 70, the court held that the mere service of a summons without arrest, in a cause other than the one in which the party was attending court, would not be set aside on the ground of privilege.

Since the revised statutes, the privilege from arrest has been confined to witnesses attending court involving only the rights of a witness, we do not think the case now before us would justify us in announcing a rule of exemption applicable alike to all suitors in all civil actions. As to what the better rule may be, both as to plaintiff and defendants, there is some conflict of authority; but we are of opinion that this right of exemption should not be extended to one who, like the appellee, comes here and avails himself of the right given him by our statute to issue an attachment for fraud, or, as it is generally after being subpoenaed. Pollard v. Union Pac. R. Co. supra.

In Finch v. Galligher, supra, the court stated that it was not prepared to follow in all particulars the doctrine of Greer v. Young, 120 Ill. 184.

Where a witness was arrested while returning home from a criminal trial in which he had given evidence, it was held in an action of trespass brought by him against the sheriff, that the action could not succeed, except it were granted by a legislative power. Carle v. Deledernier, 13 Me. 363, 29 Am. Dec. 508.

In Smith v. Jones, 75 Me. 133, 49 Am. Rep. 536, the plaintiff sued defendant for causing his arrest upon civil process while returning as a witness from court; the court refused to entertain the action, as the nature and extent of the privilege from arrest accorded by law to a witness was not a natural right and was contrary to common right, the plaintiff's arrest being pursuant to a general right in the same manner as any other debtor could have been, the claim being suable the court having jurisdiction.

In Jones v. Knauss, 81 N. J. Eq. 211, the defendant was arrested on a ca. ex. while in attendance as a voluntary foreign witness. It was held that his arrest was illegal, the court distinguishing the case from that of Rogers v. Bullock, 3 N. J. L. 109, upon the ground that in the latter case the witness was a citizen of the state and as such amenable to the process of its courts, and that if it were otherwise the fact was too important to have escaped mention by the reporter, a member of the court deciding the case.

The courts will not take jurisdiction of a party whose rights are thus invaded, as to do so would be to withdraw the shield and protection uniformly given by the law to witnesses. Person v. Grier, 66 N. Y. 124, 23 Am. Rep. 35.

Where the defendant, a nonresident, was present to testify in two separate courts on the same day, and the cases were adjourned of which fact he had not personal knowledge and his attendance was not required during the day, upon his being served with process on the same day, it was held he was entitled to the privilege, the court stating that his remaining within the jurisdiction during the time the court was in session and up to the time of its usual adjournment, was not such an unreasonable delay as to prevent his claiming the privilege of exemption. Pope v. Negus, 3 N. Y. Supp. 794.

The defendant, a nonresident subpoenaed to attend before arbitrators, was arrested by virtue of a caus ad respondendum, and was ordered discharged absolutely without being required to find bail. Sanford v. Chase, 3 Cow. 381.

So where a nonresident was attending court at the request of the executor and devisee of a will, for the purpose of proving it, to which will he was a witness, was arrested after he had given his testimony, and was proceeding home, he was discharged. Norris v. Beach, 3 Johns. 294.

And where the defendant, a resident of Nicaragua, having foreign residence there, but retaining his status as a citizen of the state of New York, was in that state for the purpose of testifying in an action in the federal court, his evidence being taken before a notary public, it was held the doctrine of privilege from service of summons extended to the case where the testimony was taken by consent in 35 L. R. A.

that form. Hollender v. Hall, 56 Hun. 604, 13 N. Y. Supp. 759, 33 N. Y. S. R. 848.

But where a witness attended the trial upon subpoena, and afterwards at the request of counsel, the court held that the last attendance was not privileged, being voluntary. Hardenbrook's Case, 8 Abb. Pr. 414.

Section 860 of the New York Code of Civil Procedure, Bliss' ed. vol. 1, p. 723, provides a person duly and in good faith subpoenaed and ordered to attend for the purpose of being examined in a case where his attendance may lawfully be enforced by attachment or by commitment, is privileged from arrest in a civil action or special proceeding while going to, remaining at, or returning from the place where he is required to attend.

By section 54 of 3 New York Revised Statutes, 419, it is provided that every arrest of a witness made contrary to the foregoing provisions shall be absolutely void and shall be deemed a contempt of the court issuing the subpoena. Farmer v. Robbins, 47 How. Pr. 415.

A defendant exempt by reason of his attendance before a referee upon a subpoena, arrested when about to return home without unnecessary delay or deviation from the proper route, was held privileged. Farmer v. Robbins, 47 How. Pr. 415.

If his attendance is in good faith, service of summons is irregular. Person v. Grier, 66 N. Y. 124, 23 Am. Rep. 35.

And even though not subpoenaed after his arrival, he cannot be taken on a writ of ex ceat while waiting to give evidence. Dixon v. Ely, 4 Edw. Ch. 557, 6 L. ed. 973.

An attachment for the nonpayment of costs only, although criminal in form, in substance is civil, and a party will be entitled to the like protection from arrest thereon, as in other civil process during his attendance as a party or witness, and a reasonable time to go and return. Snelling v. Watrous, 2 Paige, 814, 3 L. ed. 933.

In Lamkin v. Starker, 7 Hun. 479, it was held that the court had power independently of statute to protect its suitors, officers, and witnesses, protection being afforded for the sake of public justice.

Matthews v. Tufts, 37 N. Y. 563, was followed and approved of in Thorp v. Adams, 58 Hun. 608, 11 N. Y. Supp. 41, where the defendant came to testify before a legislative committee, such committee not sitting for some few days after his arrival, the summons being served upon him while coming from the committee rooms.

If attending in good faith either with or without a writ of protection, they are privileged from arrest on civil process and this immunity extends to all kinds of civil process and affords an absolute protection to set aside the service as illegal. Schlesinger v. Foxwell, 1 N. Y. City Ct. Rep. 461.

Where service was made upon one of the directors of a foreign railroad and a resident of a foreign state, attending before a referee at the request of one of the parties, such service was set aside on motion. Sheehan v. Bradford, B. & K. R. Co. 3 N. Y. Supp. 790.

Under section 3071 of the General Statutes of South Carolina all witnesses are exempted from service of all process going to, and remaining, and returning from court to which they have been subpoenaed or bound, except upon criminal charges of treason, felony, or breach of the peace.

called, an attachment on original process. This proceeding has always been considered an extrinsic remedy, and the legislature seeing the great temptation there would exist to abuse it, and the loss and injury to the defendant which must necessarily follow such abuse, provided by statute that no such attachment should issue until the plaintiff therein should give bond with good security to answer for all such costs and damages as should be awarded against him for wrongfully suing out such an attachment.

In Martin v. Ramsey, 7 Humph. 260, it was held that the process of subpoena to answer in chancery executed in that case upon witness was within the act.

The Tennessee Act of 1794, chapter 1, section 84, provides for the exemption from service of any writ, warrant, order, judgment, or decree, except witness summonses during the attendance of any person, summoned as a witness to any court whatsoever, and during the time that such person is going to and returning from the place of such attendance, allowing one day for every twenty-five miles such witness has to travel to and from his place of residence.

In Moore v. Chapman, 3 Hen. & M. 260, a witness attending court under subpoena was arrested under an execution and brought action for assault and battery, and false imprisonment. The court held such action would not lie, even though the debt in the prior action had been paid.

In Hurst's Case, 4 U. S. 4 Dall. 387, 1 L. ed. 378, it was held that a citizen of another state in attendance on court as a suitor, subpoenaed as a witness in another case, was privileged from an arrest in execution issued from a state court while at his lodgings.

Upon a motion to set aside the service of a summons upon the ground that the defendant was a state's witness in attendance upon a congressional committee under subpoena, the court held that the privilege of a witness before congress, or before any of its committees, stood on the same footing as the privilege of the members of that body, and did not extend to freedom from the service of a simple summons but only from arrest. Wilder v. Welsh, 1 McArthur. 566.

Where a motion was made to be discharged from arrest, on the ground that he was attending the trial of a cause in a county court as a witness without a subpoena, the court held that under the New Jersey statutes, a witness to be entitled to protection from arrest must be necessarily attending court, or going to or from it under a subpoena "previously and duly executed." Rogers v. Bullock, 8 N. J. L. 109.

In Dungan v. Miller, 37 N. J. L. 182, the court referred to the opinion in Rogers v. Bullock, supra, and held that it did not apply to the case of a non-resident.

In Masey v. Colville, 45 N. J. L. 119, 45 Am. Rep. 754, the privilege conferred upon witnesses by "an act concerning evidence" was said to be that every witness should be privileged from arrest in all civil actions, and no other during his necessary attendance, where his attendance should have been required by subpoena previously and duly served, and in coming to and returning from the same, allowing one day for every thirty miles from his place of business.

The South Carolina Act of 1791, 7 Stat. at L. 265, section 15, which provides all persons necessarily going to, attending on, or returning from the same, (referring to the superior courts) and shall be freed from arrest in any civil action, was held not to protect a party served with a captus ad respondendum. Huntington v. Shultz, Harp. L. 453, 18 Am. Dec. 600.

The scope and object of the South Carolina act was held to require no more than that the person of the party attending the court should be free from detention, and that therefore he might be cited or summoned without any detention of his person. Ibid.

25 L. R. A.

VI. The effect of fraud and deceit.

A valid and lawful act cannot be accomplished by any unlawful means, and whenever such unlawful means are resorted to the law will interpose and afford some suitable remedy, according to the nature of the case, to restore the party injured by such unlawful means to his rights. Byler v. Jones, 22 Mo. App. 623; Isaley v. Nichols, 12 Pick. 270, 22 Am. Dec. 435.

The law will not lend its sanction or support to an act otherwise lawful which is accomplished by unlawful means. Chubbuck v. Cleveland, 37 Minn. 466; Townsend v. Smith, 47 Wis. 623, 33 Am. Rep. 798; Isaley v. Nichols, 12 Pick. 270, 22 Am. Dec. 425; Sherman v. Gundlach, 37 Minn. 118; Williams v. Reed, 30 N. J. L. 385.

It is undoubtedly the law that where a debtor has been fraudulently induced to come within the jurisdiction of the court, so that he may be served or arrested under civil process, he is entitled to privilege. Nichols v. Goodheart, 5 Ill. App. 574; Snelling v. Watrous, 2 Paige, 814, 2 L. ed. 923, to the same effect.

An inhabitant of another state has a right to have his controversies settled by the courts in his own government, and must not be drawn into another state under ostensible protection of the court, and then be exposed to an entanglement and litigation. Ex parte Hall, 1 Tyler (Vt.) 274.

Courts of record will not tolerate service of process on any person, who for that purpose has been deceitfully brought within their jurisdiction, and they will protect from arrest eundo et redeundo not only parties, but also witnesses, who in obedience to its process, or in furtherance of its proceedings, appear within its jurisdiction. Slade v. Joseph, 5 Daly, 187.

In Van Horn v. Great Western Mfg. Co., 37 Kan. 523, the defendants moved to set aside a summons and the service thereof, upon the grounds inter alia that the service was procured by fraud or trick, by means of which they were brought within the jurisdiction of the court, and the court held that such a process was an abuse and could not be tolerated in any court of justice, and entertained the motion. To the same effect, Dunlap v. Cody, 31 Iowa, 260, 7 Am. Rep. 129; Goupil v. Simonson, 3 Abb. Pr. 474; Baker v. Wales, 14 Abb. Pr. N. S. 381; Wood v. Wood, 78 Ky. 624; Steele v. Bates, 3 Ark. 338, 16 Am. Dec. 720; Wanser v. Bright, 52 Ill. 85; Townsend v. Smith, 47 Wis. 623, 33 Am. Rep. 798; Allen v. Miller, 11 Ohio St. 374; Hevener v. Heist, 9 Phila. 274; Williams v. Reed, 30 N. J. L. 385; Metcalf v. Clark, 41 Barb. 44; Brenner v. Kelly, 28 Kan. 123; Snelling v. Watrous, 2 Paige, 814, 2 L. ed. 923.

Where the party is induced by fraud, or compelled by criminal process, to enter within the boundaries of a county other than that of his residence, he is privileged. Christian v. Williams, 111 Mo. 429; Lagrange's Case, 14 Abb. Pr. N. S. 333, in note.

No court will take jurisdiction of a party where it is obtained by fraud. Wanser v. Bright, 52 Ill. 42.

The same conclusion was arrived at in the case of Capitol City Bank v. Knox, 47 Mo. 34; Martin v. Woodhall, 24 Jones & S. 439; Chubbuck v. Cleveland, 37 Minn. 466.

The privilege is confined to parties in civil proceedings, unless it appears that his apprehension of the criminal charge was a contrivance by the

When the appellee issued the attachment, the wrongful issuing of which and the damages thereby caused being the causes of action in this case, he gave bond as required by law, and the appellant not only has the right to look to that bond for compensation for the injury done him by the appellee, but in most cases it is the only source from which he may hope to secure it. We have held, however, that the bond cannot be put in suit, unless a suit against the plaintiff in the attachment for wrongfully suing it out plaintiff to get him into custody on the civil suit. Com. v. Daniel, 4 Clark (Pa.) 49; Addicks v. Bush, 1 Phila. 19.

In order to sustain the objection that the defendant was brought by criminal proceedings, and against his will, within the civil jurisdiction of the court, two things must be established: first, that the criminal proceedings were instigated by a creditor or person attempting to subject him to the civil jurisdiction, and second, that such creditor or person was guilty of a wrongful act in the instigation of the criminal proceedings. Martin v. Woodhall, 24 Jones & S. 439.

Where the plaintiff in procuring the arrest of the defendant acted maliciously and without probable cause, his acts were wrongful and unlawful, and the service of a summons upon such defendant obtained by means of such act were not upheld. Byler v. Jones, 22 Mo. App. 623.

If a man voluntarily leaves his residence and goes to another county, or is seized when properly chargeable with crime and taken to another county, he may be said to be found there within the sense of the word as used in the Illinois statutes, but it is a base and utter perversion of the object of the law to permit an arrest under false and fraudulent pretense, and the abduction of a man for the sole purpose of obtaining service in a civil proceeding. McNab v. Bennett, 66 Ill. 157.

In Vastine v. Bast, 41 Mo. 493, the plaintiff, a resident of Illinois, sought to set aside a judgment rendered against him in the Missouri courts, upon the ground that jurisdiction was obtained by a false and fraudulent design in the service of the process in order to bring him within the jurisdiction of the court; the court held that the objection should have been taken by appearing in the original suit by way of motion to set it aside upon the ground of fraud.

Where a nonresident was decoyed into the state for the purposes of suit upon which his body was attached, the court ordered him discharged upon habeas corpus. Hill v. Goodrich, 32 Conn. 583.

Where a relator was arrested in the county of which he was a resident, on a criminal warrant from another county, and his examination was postponed upon his giving bail when he was arrested on a civil capias from the circuit court of the latter county, and also gave bail and moved to set the proceedings aside, it was held that such arrest was illegal, pending his release on bail on the criminal charge. Baldwin v. Branch Circuit Judge, 48 Mich. 525.

Where the evidence showed that the plaintiff arrested the defendant, and thereby caused him to be brought within the jurisdiction of the plaintiff's court, where he was then served with summons, the court held that if he was induced there by false representations for the purpose of being served with summons, such process was an abuse of legal process, and the court upon proof would set aside the service. Byler v. Jones, 22 Mo. App. 623.

Where the defendant was arrested on criminal process for the purpose of coercing him into a compromise of the plaintiff's demand for money, alleged to have been obtained by false pretenses, and was detained in custody until an order for his arrest in a civil action could be obtained, the court held it an abuse of the process of the law. Benninghoff v. Oswell, 37 How. Pr. 235.

With reference to the language "served at any time with a summons or notice to appear" as used in section 5459 of the statute, and "may be summoned" as used in section 5381 of the same statute, is to be held to contemplate such a service of summons as, according to the course of proceedings at the common law, where capias corresponded in its use to a summons, was free from the objection that it is either inactive fraud of the law or tended to impede or embarrass the administration of public justice, by deterring suitors from freely attending all proceedings which concern them or require their presence, the language contemplating such service as by well-recognized principles constitute good service. Andrews v. Lembeck, 46 Ohio St. 33.

With reference to the provisions of the above statute, it was held that the general assembly neither intended nor attempted to comprehend within the purview of these enactment cases, where service of a summons was procured and made in fraud of the law, or cases where the tendency was to impede or embarrass the free and complete administration of justice in courts of law. Ibid.

In United States v. Rauscher, 119 U. S. 407, 30 L. ed. 425, the defendant was charged with murder on the high seas and delivered up by the foreign authorities to the United States for trial upon that charge, upon which he was not prosecuted, but a minor offense, not included in the treaty by extradition was preferred against him, and the court held that he could not lawfully be tried for any offense other than that of murder, and that the treaty, the act of congress and the proceeding by which he was extradited, clothed him with the right to exemption from trial for any other offense until he had an opportunity to return to the country from which he was taken, a national honor requiring good faith to be kept with the country concerning him.

VII. Enforcement of the privilege.

He may procure his writ of protection in advance of starting for or from the court, if circumstances make it reasonable to ask the court's mediation for such protection. Smith v. Jones, 75 Me. 138, 40 Am. Rep. 598.

Such writ always receives a liberal construction in favor of the witness covered by it. Ex parte Hall, 1 Tyler (Vt.) 274.

Every privileged person, however, must at a proper time, and in a proper manner, claim the benefit of his privilege. Gyer v. Irwin, 4 U. S. 4 Dall. 187, 1 L. ed. 763.

The usual course is to appear in the cause for which the arrest was made and procure a rule against the plaintiff and his attorney, to show cause why the defendant should not be discharged out of custody by reason of his alleged privilege upon his filing common bail, the rule being supported by affidavit setting up the fact of arrest and the attending circumstances. Greer v. Young, 120 Ill. 189, reversing Greer v. Young, 17 Ill. App. 103.

It was formerly necessary to plead specially the privilege from arrest, but modern practice gives relief on motion. Vincent v. Watson, 1 Rich. L. 194.

The process can only be avoided by applying to the court for a discharge. Smith v. Jones, 75 Me. 138, 40 Am. Rep. 598; Lyell v. Goodwin, 4 McClun. 29; Ellis v. De Garmo, 19 L. R. A. 540, 17 R. I. 715.

It does not dismis the suit which may stand as though commenced by summons. Ellis v. De Garmo, supra.

In such a case the service will be stricken out. Juneau Bank v. McSpedan, 5 Bls. 64.

has first been prosecuted to judgment. McLuckie v. Williams, 68 Md. 265. The appellee having failed to prosecute his attachment with success, and the appellant having sued him in the court where the bond was filed to ascertain the damages so that he could avail himself of a suit on the bond to make himself whole we think the appellee should be held to have waived his right, if he had any, to exemption from summons, and should at least be put in the same and no worse situation than resident suitors would be under

The applicant must show that he is a nonresident. Matthews v. Puffer, 10 Fed. Rep. 606.

The privilege may also be taken advantage of by plea in abatement. King v. Colt, 4 Day, 129; Gregg v. Sumner, 21 Ill. App. 110.

Such plea must be filed in apt time, that is, at the earliest practicable moment. Holloway v. Freeman, 23 Ill. 197; Union Nat. Bank of Chicago v. First Nat. Bank of Centerville, 90 Ill. 53.

It was held the proper remedy in McNab v. Bennett, 63 Ill. 157, where defendant was arrested upon a false complaint and taken by force to another jurisdiction for the purpose of being sued civilly.

In order to preserve his right to move to discharge the arrest, the attorney should appear specially, notice of retainer generally being an appearance in the cause. Stewart v. Howard, 15 Barb. 23.

He should plead his privilege in abatement of the action, or in bar of an execution against his body. Wood v. Kinsman, 5 Vt. 588.

Prior to the passing of the Vermont statute, a mere privilege from arrest could not be pleaded in abatement. Washburn v. Phelps, 24 Vt. 508.

So he may sue out a habeas corpus. Smith v. Jones, 76 Me. 138, 49 Am. Rep. 588; Wood v. Neale, 5 Gray, 538; Com. v. Huxford, 9 Pick. 257; Thompson's Case, 122 Mass. 423, 23 Am. Rep. 870; Ex parte McNeil, 6 Mass. 245.

There is no question about the issuing of the writ where the suit was commenced by arrest, and the reasons for exemption are applicable, though with less force in other cases. Mitchell v. Huron Circuit Judge, 53 Mich. 542.

So the proceedings will be set aside upon mandamus. Jacobson v. Hosmer, 76 Mich. 234; Mitchell v. Huron Circuit Judge, 53 Mich. 542.

In Grover v. Green, 1 Cal. 115, the court held that a person arrested while attending a reference under an order of the court would not be discharged upon motion if there was no notice of applying, but the court would only grant a rule to show cause.

Either the court, whose proceedings, having been interrupted by the arrest of a witness or the court in whose process the arrest is made, may interfere for the discharge. Vincent v. Watson, 1 Rich. L. 194.

The general practice is to apply to the court on whom the contempt has been committed, for redress. United States v. Edme, 9 Serg. & R. 149; Kinsman v. Reinex, 2 Miles (Pa.) 200.

The court in which the party is a suitor or witness is the proper one to apply for the discharge. Com. v. Daniel, 4 Clark (Pa.) 49.

Such court has the power conferred upon it in order that its business may not be interrupted or its dignity impaired. Ibid.

The court from which the process issued may discharge, but would act upon a different principle, namely, for an abuse of its process and not for contempt. Ibid.

VIII. The question of waiver.

The presumption is that every person within the territorial jurisdiction of a justice of the peace is subject to his jurisdiction for the service of process, and the party claiming an exemption must overcome the presumption by affirmative proof. Day v. Harris, 59 Hun, 623, 37 N. Y. S. R. 322, 14 N. Y. Supp. 2.

25 L. R. A.

A waiver and voluntary submission are to be presumed, where there are no allegations to the contrary. Brown v. Getchell, 11 Mass. 11.

The exemption from arrest is a mere personal privilege which can be waived. Hardenbrook's Case, 8 Abb. Pr. 416.

While the privilege continues the person is sacred, but no longer. Petrie v. Fitzgerald, 1 Daly, 401.

The privilege may be waived and therefore the arrest is not void but voidable, and remains valid until avoided. Smith v. Jones, 76 Me. 138, 49 Am. Rep. 588.

By not taking steps the privilege is waived.

Ibid.

No application to set aside process or proceedings for irregularity will be allowed, unless made within a reasonable time, nor if the party applying has taken a fresh step with a knowledge of the irregularity complained of, and the rule applies as well to the case of a prisoner as to other persons. Green v. Bonaffon, 2 Miles (Pa.) 219.

In general the party will waive his privilege unless he applies for a discharge upon motion, or on habeas corpus. Smith v. Jones, supra; Fletcher v. Baxter, 2 Aik. 224.

The privilege must be taken advantage of at the proper time or it will be waived. King v. Phillips, 70 Ga. 409.

Upon the first opportunity, otherwise his neglect will be deemed a waiver. Wood v. Kinsman, 5 Vt. 588.

The privilege fails unless claimed at once. Petrie v. Fitzgerald, 1 Daly, 401; Fletcher v. Baxter, 2 Aik. 224; Pollard v. Union Pac. R. Co. 7 Abb. Pr. N. S. 870.

Unless it be promptly taken. Matthews v. Puffer, 10 Fed. Rep. 606.

It must be insisted upon. Tipton v. Harris, Peck (Tenn.) 414.

A party privileged from arrest must take advantage thereof before pleaded in bar, as such plea admits that he is in court by proper process. Randall v. Crandall, 6 Hill, 342.

The giving of bail is no waiver of privilege. Mackay v. Lewis, 7 Hun, 83; Larned v. Griffin, 13 Fed. Rep. 590; United States v. Edme, 9 Serg. & R. 147; Washburn v. Phelps, 24 Vt. 508.

An appearance by an answer which simply protests against the exercise of jurisdiction and claims no other right is not such an appearance as waives the objection. Chubbuck v. Cleveland, 37 Minn. 466.

Where the defendant came into the jurisdiction with a bona fide intention of taking depositions, and upon sufficient justification changed his purpose, such alteration of purpose was held not to be a waiver of his privilege. Wetherill v. Seitzinger, 1 Miles (Pa.) 237.

So where the defendant came within the jurisdiction for the purpose of testifying before a legislative committee which did not sit for some few days. Thorp v. Adams, 53 Hun, 603, 11 N. Y. Supp. 41.

In Brett v. Brown, 13 Abb. Pr. N. S. 295, the question was whether the defendant had appeared generally and thereby waived his exemption, his affidavit relating to his attendance as a witness, the service of the summons upon him while so attending, and the order to show cause predicated of that paper, and related also to such attendance and service and asking the summons to be set aside, the court held the indorsement of the papers "attor-like circumstances. Having voluntarily appeared in our courts to take advantage of this peculiarly harsh remedy; and having given bond, without which he could not have attached, he ought not to be allowed to assume a position which might enable him to escape all liability for his wrong doing, and at the same time destroy the efficacy of his bond. For, if the bond which in many cases will alone protect the defendant from loss and his business from destruction, cannot be put in suit until the nonresident plaintiff on attachneys for defendant " must be shown in connection with the proceeding initiated, of which it was a part, and that the extension of the time to answer was a precautionary step founded upon the possible denial of the motion, and that the appearance could not be enlarged into a waiver of the privilege, especially as the claim relating thereto was asserted to at the same time that the quasi appearance was made.

If he waives the privilege and submits himself in the custody of the officer, he cannot afterwards object to the imprisonment as unlawful or as made by a void authority. Brown v. Getchell, 11 Mass. 11.

Where the defendant is given bail and justified, he waives his privilege. Petrie v. Fitzgerald, 1 Daly, 401.

So his silence is a waiver. Farmer v. Robbins, 47 How. Pr. 415.

And the demand of a copy of the demand and notice of retainer have been held waivers. Stewart v. Howard, 15 Barb. 28.

Where, at the time of the arrest, the defendant was actually under examination as a witness in a case before a commissioner under subpoena, it was held that by putting in bail he waived his privilege. Ibid.

An appearance is a waiver when general. Williams v. McGrade, 13 Minn. 174; Brett v. Brown, 13 Abb. Pr. N. S. 295.

So is the doing of some act in the cause in reference to his appearance or defense. Petrie v. Fitzgerald, 1 Daly, 401.

The giving of a bond for the prison bounds is a waiver of such privilege. Tipton v. Harris, Peck (Tenn.) 414.

And where the irregularities are known the obtaining of a rule to show cause there is a waiver. Green v. Bonafon, 2 Miles (Pa.) 219.

It will be waived if judgment is suffered to pass without claiming the privilege, and by giving bail. Fletcher v. Baxter, 2 Aik. 224.

Where the principal not only gave bail but suffered judgment to pass against him in the original suit, without claiming or setting up his privilege, it was held he committed a waiver and there was no defense to an action against the bail. Ibid.

In Atchison v. Morris, 11 Fed. Rep. 532, the privilege was extended to a nonresident witness in the circuit court, from service of the summons in a civil action in the state court. The fact that the defendant so served, moved the court by petition and bond under the act of congress to remove the cause to the federal court, was held not to be a waiver of privilege, nor of the objection to service in the circuit court.

Where an answer to the motion asserted that the defendant did not claim his privilege as a witness, and that the sheriff did not know or suspect thereof, and that the defendant gave bail without objection, the sheriff discharging him out of custody, and subsequent notice of retainer by defendant's attorneys and demand of copy of complaint, it was held the privilege was waived, as had the defendant claimed his privilege the officer had power to discharge him out of custody; and for the further reason that notice given by his attorneys of retainer in the cause, and demanding copy of complaint, was a further waiver. Stewart v. Howard, 15 Barb. 28.

Where the defendant failed to claim his personal privilege to the sheriff, and to demand the same. -25 L. R. A.

from the county judge who issued the order but acquiesced in the arrest by his silence, and entered into the usual undertaking, and then waited twenty-one days before serving the motion papers for his discharge, it was held the defendant waived his personal privilege and acquiesced in the arrest. Farmer v. Robbins, 47 How. Pr. 415.

Where the defendant, a resident of Kansas, attended as a witness but the case not being tried, claimed his privilege for the reason that the new circuit commenced in the following February and that it would be more convenient and less expensive for him to stay over until then than to return home; upon arrest in another action and giving bail, the court held he could not claim the privilege as it did not appear that he was not at perfect liberty to return since the fifteenth of December. Shults v. Andrews, 54 How. Pr. 390.

Where the defendant obtained a rule to show cause of action, and why he should not be discharged on common bail, in which the court reduced the bail, and afterwards he obtained a rule to show cause why the writ and service should not be quashed, upon the ground that the defendant was a suitor in the case pending, the court held that the writ and service could not be quashed, the defendant having obtained a rule to show cause of action, and several days having elapsed since its hearing. Green v. Bonafon, 2 Miles (Pa.) 219.

In Van Liew v. Johnson, decided in March, 1871, but not reported, and cited in Person v. Grier, 33 N. Y. 124, 126, 23 Am. Rep. 85, the court held in substance that a summons could not be served upon a defendant, a nonresident of the state, while attending a court in the state as a party. The order, however, was denied upon the ground that the party had lost his privilege by remaining within the state an unreasonable and unnecessary time after the close of the trial upon which he had attended, but not without the dissent of two of the judges.

In Marks v. La Société Anonyme de l'Union des Papeteries, 19 N. Y. Supp. 470, 48 N. Y. S. R. 600, the question was whether a director and president of the defendant's society was actually in this country as a witness at the time of the service of the summons upon him, and for no other purpose, the facts showing that he was cabled here as a witness, and that he left Brussels but on arrival found the action had been tried and a verdict rendered against his company, but although not needed as a witness, his evidence was taken de bene esse after verdict, in view of a possible new trial. The witness transacting business in the meantime the court held the service of summons valid, as there was unnecessary delay in the taking of his depositions and that attending to business while here occasioned a loss of privilege.

Where the defendant claimed that he was engaged in the military service of the United States, and the suspension of plaintiff's remedy by the Act of March 2, 1865, section 1, of which exempted him from service of all civil process during their military service, the court held that the legislature had not declared the service of process void, but had attempted to confer a personal privilege upon those falling within the class designated, and that such privilege might be waived; that the defendant availing himself of the exemption should move to set aside the service and not appear generally by answering, which was submitting himself to the jurisdiction of the court and a waiver of privilege. Williams v. McGrade, 13 Minn. 174.

ment has been sued and a judgment recovered against him in the perhaps far distant state where he resides, the value of the bond as a security to the alleged debtor, and as a means of preventing the fraudulent and reckless abuse of the process of the court, will be greatly diminished, if not in many cases made absolutely worthless.

It would seem, therefore, that whatever rule of exemption we may adopt in regard to suitors generally in civil actions when the occasion arises, that neither public policy

In Rex v. Platt, 8 W. N. C. 187, a rule was applied for to set aside a summons on the ground that defendant was served while attending the trial as a witness in another jurisdiction, the trial of the case being postponed when the defendant returned to Philadelphia, where he had no special business and for the probable purpose of seeing the Centennial, and while there was served with the writ in question, and left Philadelphia for the place of trial after service of the writ in order to be in time for the trial, and the court discharged the rule.

IX. The question of deviation.

The law is not so strict in point of time as to require a party to set out immediately after the trial; a little deviation or loitering will not forfeit the privilege, provided the act be done in good faith, and the delay and deviation not for the purpose of transacting private business. Chaffee v. Jones, 19 Pick. 261.

There is no deviation where the delay is fully justified. Jacobson v. Hosmer, 70 Mich. 234.

A party may be indulged in remaining to learn the verdict of a jury, who cannot separate after a cause is committed until they pronounce a verdict. Clark v. Grant, 2 Wend. 257.

A party returning from court is not bound to go the direct road, necessary deviations being allowed. Chaffee v. Jones, 19 Pick. 261.

Yet there must not be any unnecessary delay or deviation. Farmer v. Robbins, 47 How. Pr. 415.

When his business is done he must return, so as not to be guilty of a material deviation. Ex parte Hurst, 1 Wash. C. C. 186.

The defendant must be free from laches in his efforts to get rid of the arrest to which he has a valid objection. Farmer v. Robbins, supra.

The burden of establishing a deviation rests upon the arresting party. Salhinger v. Adler, 2 Robt. 704.

His privilege, however, ought not to avail him if the deviation is equivalent to an abandonment of the original journey, for the purposes of pleasure or family visiting. Miner v. Markham, 28 Fed. Rep. 387; Rex v. Platt, 8 W. N. C. 187.

A witness has a reasonable time to return to his residence, but if instead of doing so he proceeds about his business, he loses his privilege. Shultz v. Andrews, 54 How. Pr. 380.

Where the deviation is for a distinct purpose disconnected with the return home of the party, he will not be protected. Chaffee v. Jones, 19 Pick. 261.

Stopping to attend to other matters has been held a deviation. Salhinger v. Adler, supra; Clark v. Grant, 2 Wend. 257; Chaffee v. Jones, supra; Smythe v. Banks, 4 U. S. 4 Dall. 329, 1 L. ed. 654.

Where it appeared that the defendant was not returning home from court at the time of his arrest, but that in returning home he unnecessarily deviated from the direct route in order to attend a funeral, the court held he forfeited his privilege. Chaffee v. Jones, supra.

Where the deviation was occasioned by circumstances which rendered it justifiable if not absolutely necessary, it was held no waiver of the privilege. Miner v. Markham, 28 Fed. Rep. 387.

X. English doctrine.

A party is protected quando, morando et redeundo. King v. Hall, 2 W. Bl. 1110.
25 L. R. A.

The privilege exists in all cases, whether civil or criminal, in respect to witnesses, jurymen, and prosecutors. Glavin v. Cohen, L. R. 4 Exch. 181.

In Magnay v. Burt, 5 Q. B. 381, Davis & M. 652, it was held that a party arrested by the sheriff while attending as a witness had no ground of action for damages, but his only remedy was by application to the court and by whose authority he had been compelled to appear as a witness, the privilege being not that of a person but of the court, and therefore discretionary.

The protection of a witness is founded upon the suggestion that a person properly in attendance ought not to be prejudiced in his own interests by his attendance. Webb v. Taylor, 1 Dowl. & L. 584, 13 L. J. Q. B. 24, 8 Jur. 30.

In Cole v. Hawkins, 2 Strange, 1094, the defendant was served with a copy bill while attending the sitting of a cause wherein he was defendant. The court held the privilege was designed to prevent any interruption of the business of the court, and such service was a contempt for which the lawyer would be arrested, but that he consented to waive the proceedings and pay the costs.

However inferior the tribunal may be, if it be a lawful one the privilege on principle exists. Ex parte Cobbett, 7 El. & Bl. 565, 26 L. J. Q. B. 298, 8 Jur. N. S. 685.

But this does not extend to a person going voluntarily with a view of commencing a proceeding as a common informer. Ibid.

The privilege of a witness does not depend upon the subpoena, no subpoena being necessary where the witness lives abroad. Walpole v. Alexander, 8 Dougl. 45.

The insolvent court is a court of justice. Chauvin v. Alexander, 31 L. J. Q. B. 79, 2 Best & S. 47, 31 L. J. Q. B. 79, 8 Jur. N. S. 262, 10 Week. Rep. 248.

On general principles there is no difference between an insolvent and any other court in this respect. Ibid.

A bankrupt is privileged while attending before the commissioners. Arding v. Flower, 8 Term Rep. 584, 8 Esp. 117.

In Ex parte King, 7 Ves. Jr. 312, it was intimated that a creditor attending to prove his debt, though not under summons, was entitled to privilege.

In Spencer v. Newton, 6 Ad. & El. 623, 1 Nev. & P. 313, 1 Jur. 52, the court questioned whether the privilege would be extended to the case of the detention of a witness through sickness.

The question in such cases always is whether the person arrested was at the time of his arrest bona fide engaged in the business he was called on to execute. Heron v. Stokes, Re Owen, 6 Lr. Eq. Rep. 125.

In Davis v. Sherron, 1 Oranch. C. C. 257, a witness was attached while in the gallery of the courtroom, and the court held the service was not good.

A party on his return from a court of justice ought substantially to receive its protection, and to have the benefit of its dignity and quiet till he reached his home. Pitt v. Coomes, 5 Barn. & Ad. 1078, 3 Nev. & M. 312.

A party is not bound to go the nearest way home, and if he does not abuse the privilege for the purpose of going about a business of his own, he is entitled to be discharged. Willingham v. Matthews, 6 Taunt. 356, 2 Marsh. 57.

If a party shows that he is on his way home, it is for the party who arrests him to show a deviation.

nor the due administration of justice demands that we should hold the appellee exempt from the service of the summons issued against him to compel him to answer in damages for the alleged wrongful issuing of the attachment in question. Sound public policy, on the contrary, as well as the administration of equal justice, would seem to demand that no inducements should be held out to non-resident suitors to avail themselves of the harshest remedy known to our statutes; but if they should come, and should abuse the remedy to the injury of an alleged debtor, let them answer here, as the residents of this state must do in like cases.

In conclusion we need only say that we think it unnecessary to discuss further than we have already done Bolgiuno's Case, for whether or not the principles there announced and the cases there cited to support them establish, as contended by counsel for appellee in the additional brief filed a few days ago, that generally, plaintiffs, defendants, and witnesses are all equally exempt from civil process while attending court in another state, the case now before us, for the reasons we have given, is unlike that case and the cases therein cited.

We must not be considered as agreeing that Bolgiuno's Case goes to the extent contended for by the appellee here. The exemption from service of civil process enjoyed by witnesses in this state under the rule laid down in the case cited should not be further extended, except upon the most careful consideration.

Order reversed and cause remanded.

Selby v. Hills, 8 Bing. 166; Lightfoot v. Cameron, 2 W. Bl. 1113; Willingham v. Matthewa, supra.

The doctrine of deviation must not be carried to such an extent that whenever the officer sees the party going one yard out of his way home he may immediately arrest him. The party should not be dodged too closely. Pitt v. Coomes, 5 Barn. & Ad. 1078, 8 Nev. & M. 212.

The delay on the road must not be too great or the deviation unreasonable. Randall v. Gurney, 3 Barn. & Ad. 252, 1 Chitty. 679.

In Ex parte Clarke, 2 Deacon & Ch. 90, a witness from a distant part of the country attending court upon a summons was arrested for debt while waiting for his conveyance home. The court held he was entitled to be discharged, even though he had gone some little distance to another part of the city before taking the conveyance.

The privilege of a party attending his own cause extends to a bankrupt on his return from attending his petition for leave to surrender after expiration of the time, where he has deviated no further than to call on the solicitor to arrange the proper steps for giving effect to the order. Ex parte Jackson, 15 Ves. Jr. 117.

And where two witnesses staid in the town in which the trial took place for the purpose of returning home by coach on the succeeding day, it was held they were privileged from arrest. Hatch v. Blissett, 2 Strange, 268.

Where a person returning home from a motion in a case to which he was a party, called in at an office where he kept his papers but did not reside, for the purpose of refreshing himself and sorting the papers, remaining there one or two hours, when he left and went into a tailor shop in the same locality, intending, however, to proceed home immediately, when he was arrested by an officer who had watched him from the court, it was held he was entitled to the privilege of the party redeundo from the court and must be discharged. Pitt v. Coomes, 5 Barn. & Ad. 1078, 8 Nev. & M. 212.

In Atty. Gen. v. Skinners, Co., Ex parte Watkins, 8 Sim. 377, 1 C. P. Coop. 1, the privilege was objected to upon the ground that the applicant did not take the shortest road to his residence, and that he stopped to speak to an acquaintance in the street and deviated from his course by going into a public house. The court held that although the road taken by him was not the shortest possible, yet it being one not unusually taken, that he might therefore reasonably and fairly take it, and that his stopping to speak to an acquaintance, or his deviating a yard or two from his course for the purpose of taking refreshment, was not a sufficient ground for deviation and did not deprive him from his benefit of privilege.

In Poole v. Gould, 1 Hurst. & N. 90, 25 L. J. Exch. 250, it was held it was no ground for setting aside the service of a summons, that it was served on the defendant while attending in a niel prius court, in obedience to a subpoena to give evidence in a cause in which he was plaintiff, the court stating that the service of summons would not be set aside on slight grounds, and that every opportunity ought to be afforded to persons to serve debtors with writs.

A witness is not protected in going three days before the time appointed for his examination to the solicitor's office to look at the interrogatories in view of preparing himself. Gibbs v. Phillips, 1 Russ. & M. 19, 8 L. J. Ch. 43.

In Randall v. Gurney, 3 Barn. & Ad. 252, 1 Chitty. 679, the defendant, who was summoned to give evidence in an arbitration in a distant court, left for that jurisdiction three days before and went to where his wife resided, and sought up papers necessary to be produced by the arbitrator, occupying a greater portion of two days in selecting and arranging the same, and on the afternoon of the second day was arrested. The court held he could not claim the privilege, having employed more than a reasonable time for the above purpose, he not having sworn that he was occupied the whole time in the object of the suit.

Where a party to a cause had attended before the master upon a summons, and having left the office was arrested on his way home, it was held, it appearing that the direction he took was beyond the jurisdiction of his residence, that there was a deviation which deprived him of his privilege. Heron v. Stokes, Re Owen, 6 Ir. Rq. Rep. 125.

The application should be made to the court out of which the attachment issues. Pitt v. Evans, 2 Dowl. P. C. 222. E. W.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Stephen BALDWIN

v.

George S. HOSMER, Circuit Judge.

(.....Mich.....)

1. The title to the twenty per cent of the assessments levied by the Order of Iron Hall which is retained by the local branches, as well as to the eighty per cent which is transmitted to the supreme sitting, is under the laws of the order in the supreme sitting.
2. Local branches of a secret benefit order cannot, when called upon to pay over assessments which they have collected under the laws of the order and which by such laws belong to the supreme sitting, question the validity of the incorporation of the supreme sitting.
3. An ancillary receiver may be appointed by the Michigan chancery court to aid the receiver appointed for a benefit society by the courts of the state of its residence, in collecting assessments located in Michigan and which belong to the order.
4. Local branches of a foreign benefit society which has become insolvent cannot refuse to turn over assessments in their hands to an ancillary receiver appointed to aid the foreign receiver in collecting in the assets, to be by him transmitted to the foreign receiver for distribution in the discretion of the court, if such disposition appears to be proper and consistent with affording due protection to the citizens of the state.
5. Funds which have been garnished will not be directed to be turned over to the receiver until the rights of the plaintiffs in the garnishment proceedings have been disposed of.
6. Contempt proceedings are not appropriate for the trial of issues involving the title to a fund raised by assessments upon the members of the benefit society, which is in the possession of the local branch from whose numbers it came, nor to determine the validity of a lien alleged to have been acquired by garnishment proceedings against it.

(June 16, 1894.)

APPPLICATION for a writ of mandamus to compel respondent as judge of the Circuit Court to punish for contempt certain persons who were officers of local branches of the order of iron hall, for refusing to turn over funds in their hands to a receiver who had been appointed by the court. Denied.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Carlos E. Warner for relator.

Mr. Charles A. Kent for respondent.

Long, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an application for a writ of mandamus to compel the respondent, who is one of the judges of the circuit court for the county of Wayne, to punish as for contempt certain persons who are officers of a local branch of the Order of the Iron Hall. The petition alleges substantially that the Order of the Iron Hall is a corporation organized at the city of Indianapolis, Ind., in the month of July, 1881, under and pursuant to the provisions of article 8, chap. 24, of the Revised Statutes of the state of Indiana; that, after its formation, it entered upon the business for which it was organized, and solicited memberships throughout the different states of the Union. The business of the order was carried on by and through the instrumentalities of so-called "local" or "sisterhood" branches, which were responsible to the main organization, and which, as declared by their constitutions, were required to consist of no less than 16 members, who should possess certain powers and privileges under the jurisdiction of the supreme sitting. There were about 1,190 local branches established in the United States, and 9 in Canada, making a total membership exceeding 60,000 persons, including those in the benefit division and life division, all of whom were subject to the authority and control of the main organization and its officers, under the articles of association, constitution, laws, and regulations of the supreme sitting, and each of which said local branches has in its hands, accumulated as a reserve fund, a large amount of money, the amount in Detroit alone ranging from $300 to $14,000. The supreme sitting continued to exist and carry on its business until about the 29th of July, 1893, when it became insolvent; and upon a bill filed in the superior court for Marion county, Ind., one James F. Failey was on the 28d day of August, 1893, appointed receiver of all the property and effects of every kind of the Iron Hall, both within and without the state of Indiana, with full power to receive, demand, and collect in his own name, as receiver, from the defendant and all of its officers, agents, branches, bankers, and any and all other persons, whether within or without said state, and to take, hold, and keep in his possession, under the direction of said court, all of said property, rights, credits, and effects, books, papers, and things, of any and every description, belonging to the defendant at the time of bringing such action on July 29, 1893, or since acquired, and to do and perform all and singular the duties imposed upon him and required by law. Mr. Failey duly qualified as such receiver, and entered upon the performance of his trust.

On the 2d of December, 1893, a final decree was entered in that court and cause, in which it was adjudged that the order of the iron hall, at the commencement of said action, was, and ever since had been, insolvent and unable further to carry on the business for which it was organized, and that its assets and property should be reduced to money, paid and applied upon its debts and outstanding obligations; and Mr. Failey was continued and confirmed as permanent receiver of said order. September 27, 1893, a bill of complaint was filed in the circuit court for the county of Wayne, in chancery by one

NOTE.—In connection with the above case as to the exercise of comity toward the foreign receiver of the Iron Hall, see Fawcett v. Supreme Sitting of Order of I. H. (Conn.) 24 L. R. A. 815, and Buswell v. Supreme Sitting of Order of I. H. (Mass.) 23 L. R. A. 846.

25 L. R. A.

Lewis P. Durkee, in behalf of himself and all others interested who should choose to come in and be made parties, praying that a receiver be appointed in aid of and ancillary to the administration and receivership of all the property and effects of the defendant corporation appointed by the court in Indiana; and on the 1st of October, 1892, an order was entered in said Wayne circuit court, in chancery, appointing Stephen Baldwin, of Detroit, this state, as such ancillary receiver of all the property and effects of the order within the state of Michigan. Mr. Baldwin thereupon duly qualified, and entered upon the discharge of his trust, and such proceedings were thereafter had that on February 9, 1894, a final decree was entered in said Wayne circuit court, in chancery, in which it was declared that the defendant corporation, or supreme sitting of the Order of the Iron Hall was on the 20th of July, 1892, and ever since has been, insolvent; that it was unable further to carry on the business for which it was organized within the state of Michigan and elsewhere; and that its assets and property should be reduced to money, and applied upon its debts and outstanding obligations and liabilities,—and in which decree Mr. Baldwin was further continued and confirmed as ancillary permanent receiver of all such assets within the state of Michigan, with direction and authority, among other things, to take, hold, and convert into money, under the order and direction of the court, all the property, real, personal, and mixed, of every kind, belonging to said supreme sitting of the Iron Hall, with full power to demand, receive, and collect in his name as receiver or otherwise, as he might deem proper, from the defendant and all its agents, officers, branches, bankers, and any and all other persons within the state of Michigan, all such property and effects, and to take, hold, and keep in his possession, under the direction of the court, all such demands and effects, books, papers, and property, and other things, of every description, belonging to the defendant corporation on July 29, 1892, or since acquired, and to do and perform all and singular of the duties imposed upon him or required by law. It is further alleged in the petition that the organization was effected and existed only under the laws of the state of Indiana, and that the branches of the order existed, not by independent authority in any state in which they are situated, but solely by the authority of the charter granted to them in pursuance of the constitution and laws of the order under which they were permitted and organized. It is further shown that local sisterhood branch No. 5, so called, was one branch of the supreme sitting of the order in the state of Michigan, and was organized as such under the rules, regulations, constitution, and laws of the supreme sitting; that, at the time of the filing of the bill in this cause, Peter J. Schiffer, Jr., was the chief justice of said branch, Fred J. Kirtz accountant, John J. Starling cashier, and George Leitch, Fred. Linsell, and Charles Hampshire trustees; that afterwards Fred J. Kirtz removed from the city of Detroit, and one Carlton H. Royce was appointed or electd his successor, and that Charles Hampshire died, and Charles Beck was afterwards appointed or elected his successor, as trustee; that, at the time of filing the bill in this case, the said chief justice, accountant, cashier, and trustees had charge of the funds, property, and assets of the supreme sitting, which were collected and received through the instrumentality of said local sisterhood branch No. 5; and that they then held in moneys, property, and securities of said order the sum of about $20,000, which was subject to the order and direction of the supreme sitting, subject to the decree before mentioned; and that, at the time of filing this petition, the said officers and trustees held the moneys in the possession of the branch, which sum was subject to the order and direction of the supreme sitting, subject to said decree. It is further alleged that the petitioner caused a copy of the order appointing him receiver in this state, and a copy of the final decree in the cause, to be served upon the officers and trustees of said branch No. 5, and also caused personal written demands to be made upon each and every of said officers and persons for all moneys, property, goods, chattels, and effects in their hands belonging to the supreme sitting; but that said officers and trustees refused to comply with such demands and pay over the said moneys, property, and effects to the petitioner.

It appears that on March 12, 1894, the petitioner caused a petition to be filed in the Wayne circuit court, in chancery, praying that the officers of local branch No. 5 of said order might be ordered and required to show cause in said court why they should not be punished for contempt in neglecting and refusing to turn over to the petitioner such moneys, property, and effects in their hands and under their control, and that an attachment or other process might be issued requiring the persons named to comply with such order; and that, on said 12th day of March, that court entered an order requiring such persons to show cause on the 19th of March why they should not be punished for contempt, and why an attachment should not issue as prayed in the order. On the 19th day of March, in response to the order, the officers and trustees of said local branch appeared and answered the petition. In their answer they say: (1) That they were not parties to or bound by the proceedings by which Mr. Baldwin was appointed receiver ancillary to the receiver appointed by the court of Indiana; and, upon information, they assert that the appointment of Mr. Baldwin was made at the instance of the Indiana receiver, though, as he is not a party, he cannot be bound thereby, and for the purpose of taking all the funds belonging to branch No. 5, as well as those belonging to other branches, out of the state, and distributing them mainly among persons who have not contributed to them, and against the equitable rights of the members of branch No. 5, and that his appointment is unauthorized and void. (2) That the Order of the Iron Hall, and especially of the supreme sitting thereof, was devised and conducted with the grossest fraud; and that this appears in the bill filed in the cause; and that, in consequence, any contract between said supreme sitting and the local branches is void, at the option of said branches. They aver further, on the advice of counsel, that, while said order claimed to be a corporation organized under the laws of Indiana, in fact there has not been and is not any law in Indiana under which said corporation could organize, and the claim to be a corporation is a fraudulent scheme, devised to deceive and defraud the members of the local branches. (8) That all the funds in their hands have been contributed by the members of said local branch No. 5; that these moneys were contributed by each member under the belief that he would receive the benefits promised in the contract; and that, with the failure of the order, justice requires that these moneys should be returned to those who contributed them. (4) That, under the rules of the order, every local branch, in proportion to the number of its members, should have a fund nearly equal to that held by any other local branch; and that, if the funds in the possession of each branch be distributed among its members, justice will be better done than in any other way. (5) That if the money in question is to be sent to Indiana, and there distributed, the members of local branch No. 5 will be put to great expense in proving their claims in the Indiana court; that, as they are informed and believe, dividends have already been made by said Indiana receiver in which the members of said branch No. 5 will not be able to participate; and that the result will be that such members will receive a much smaller dividend than if the money be divided among those who have contributed it. (6) They admit that the fund in their hands or under their control is respectively as follows: Peter J. Schiffer has nothing. Fred J. Kirtz has about $1,000. Carlton H. Royce has nothing. John J. Starling, George Leitch, Frederick Linsell, and Charles L. Beck have in money and securities about the sum of $15,000. (7) The respondents Leitch and Linsell, further answering, say that on or about August 28, 1892, they, with John J. Younghusband and Charles Hampshire, were served with a writ of garnishment issued out of the circuit court for Wayne county in a cause then pending, in which Lewis Cohen is plaintiff, and the supreme sitting of the Iron Hall defendant; that they, as garnishee defendants, are enjoined from paying over the money or delivering any property or effects to said principal defendant until the further order of the court; that said cause is still pending and undetermined in said court; that said Charles Hampshire, named in said writ, is now dead, but that, at the time of service of said writ, he was one of the trustees of branch No. 5; and that Beck, one of the respondents herein, was duly appointed as his successor.

The issues raised by these pleadings were referred by the court to a commissioner to take proofs, whereupon the parties entered into a stipulation as to the facts which they deemed material to the issues. The stipulation admits the organization of the defendant company, and also sets out the various provisions of the statutes of Indiana authorizing the formation of corporations which were in force at the time this corporation was organized. The court thereupon entered an order denying the relief asked, and refusing to adjudge the parties guilty of contempt. It is now averred by the petition here that, under the pleadings and proofs so stipulated, it is shown that the officers and members of local branch No. 5 received their charter and right from and under the supreme sitting, and that the property, money, and effects held by said branch belong to the supreme sitting; and it is prayed that a writ of mandamus issue to be directed to the Honorable George S. Hosmer, circuit judge, commanding him to show cause why he should not set aside and vacate the order denying the relief prayed, and why he should not proceed, in said court and cause, to compel the payment of said moneys now in the hands of such local branch to such ancillary receiver by the ordinary proceeding as for contempt, and why he should not enter an order in said court and cause adjudging the officers of said local branch in contempt of the authority of the court in neglecting and refusing to pay over said moneys. An order to show cause was issued, and the circuit judge has made a return thereto substantially as follows: (1) That the order and decree appointing Stephen Baldwin as receiver of the assets of the Order of the Iron Hall, the order that the local branches turn over the assets to said receiver, were granted in a suit in which none of said local branches or their trustees or other officers were made parties; that said order and decree were made without opposition or discussion, and by the consent of all the parties then represented. (2) That when the answer of Peter J. Schiffer and others, officers of branch No. 5, was filed in the contempt proceeding instituted by said receiver, it became evident that several serious questions of law were involved, some of which are as follows: (a) Whether or not there was any law of Indiana authorizing the formation of the corporation of the supreme sitting of the Order of the Iron Hall. (b) Whether or not the bill does not show that the organization of such association was so fraudulent as to release all the branches from their obligations or contracts entered into with said supreme sitting. (c) Whether or not, on the dissolution of said supreme sitting, from whatever cause, equity does not require that the moneys in the hands of the local branches be distributed among the persons who have contributed to the same, the purposes of such contributions having wholly failed. (d) Whether or not a court of equity in this state will not protect the persons equitably entitled to the funds held by the local branches of this state by a decision here, instead of compelling them to prove their claims before the court of Indiana, and taking such dividends as may be there ordered. (e) Whether or not the different local branches have such connection as renders the appointment of one receiver for all proper. (f) Whether or not it is proper for a court of equity to appoint in this state a receiver ancillary to the Indiana receiver. (g) Whether or not, under the averments of the bill to the effect that all the assets of said supreme sitting have been assigned to said Failey, by the voluntary assignment of said supreme sitting, any receiver should be appointed of such assets, or whether such appointment is not, for this cause alone, void.

(8) That this respondent is of the opinion that it is not proper that said cause should be decided on application to punish for contempt; that, in his opinion, when only persons who are not parties to a suit in which a receiver is appointed make a bona fide claim to property claimed by the receiver, the dispute should be decided in a regular suit brought by the receiver against the parties making the claim, and he submits that this rule is laid down by the authorities, citing Ex parte Hollis, 59 Cal. 405; Re Paschal, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 483, 19 L. ed. 992; Beach, Receivers, § 247; State v. Ball, 5 Wash. 387. (4) For these reasons, the respondent refused to punish the officers and agents of local branch No. 5 for not turning over this fund to the receiver; but, at the same time, the court offered the attorney for the receiver, and who has appeared in said proceeding for him, an order permitting the receiver to sue the officers and agents of the local branch, and this offer was refused.

There is returned into this court, as a part of the case, a copy of the decree made by the Indiana court appointing Mr. Failey receiver, and defining his powers and duties, together with the several orders made by that court, the constitution and by-laws of the order of the supreme sitting, a copy of the bill filed by Mr. Durkee, and the decree made by the Wayne circuit court appointing Mr. Baldwin ancillary receiver, and defining his powers and duties. It appears from the decree of the Indiana court that the corporation was organized under the Indiana statute. Whether such organization was authorized by those statutes does not seem to have been raised by the Indiana court, or, if so, the proceedings before us do not disclose the fact. That court proceeded to authorize the winding up of the concern and the collection of the assets, and, for that purpose, directed the receiver to collect from the local branches and others, whether within or without the state of Indiana, the property and assets of the corporation. Upon the appointment of the ancillary receiver within this state, he was authorized to receive and collect in the assets within this state; but it is nowhere provided in the decree that the moneys shall be transmitted by the ancillary receiver to the receiver at Indianapolis, but that he shall report to the court his doings in the matter, to the end that the court may make such further order in the premises as justice and equity may require. By the articles of association and the laws of the company, these local branches are made subordinate to the supreme sitting. All their powers and duties are set forth therein, and they exist only by authority of the law of the supreme sitting. The moneys now held by the officers of local branch No. 5 were collected by and under the authority thus conferred. The constitution and laws of the order provide for the raising of these funds. Section 1, law 1, is as follows: "There shall be attached to this order a benefit fund in which members may participate (except social members) as they may severally elect, either in the sum of one thousand dollars, eight hundred dollars, six hundred dollars, four hundred dollars, or two hundred dollars, on which they shall pay the rates and be entitled to the benefits prescribed in the following table," etc. One of the objects of the organization, as stated in article 2. § 3, of the constitution, is as follows: "To establish a benefit fund from which those who have held membership in the order for thirty days or more may, should they so desire, on proper application, and complying with all the rules and regulations governing said benefit fund, become participants therein, and may receive the benefit of a sum not exceeding twenty-five dollars per week, nor more than one half the amount of the benefit certificate held by each member, when, by reason of disease or accident, they become totally disabled from following any avocation; or in case of death, if a member for more than two years, one half of the amount of the benefit certificate will be paid, less benefit received; or an amount of not more than one thousand dollars when they have held a continuous membership in the order for seven years: provided, however, that the sum total drawn from this order by any of its members shall never exceed in sick, disability, death, and final benefits the sum named in the benefit certificate." This benefit fund was derived from assessments upon the holders of benefit certificates, which assessments were made by the supreme sitting of the order from time to time, and out of which benefits were paid in case of the sickness, disability, or death of a member. The assessments were made through the local branches, and 80 per cent thereof was sent to the supreme cashier of the supreme sitting. Law 11, § 1, is as follows: "Twenty per cent of the amount received by each branch on each assessment shall be set aside and retained as a reserve fund, which fund is the property of the supreme sitting, and shall be subject to its control at all times as herein-after provided. At the expiration of the first term of six years and six months from the date of the organization of the order, one seventh of the reserve fund then on hand shall be called for by the supreme accountant, and used by the supreme cashier in the payment of the benefits; and annually thereafter one seventh of the reserve fund on hand shall be called for and used in like manner, unless otherwise ordered by the supreme sitting." An examination of the various provisions of the constitution and laws of the order convinces us that the legal title to this reserve fund is in the supreme sitting of the order, and not in the different local branches; that the 20 per cent of the assessment retained by each local branch differs from the 80 per cent transmitted to the supreme sitting, mainly in this: that the possession and supervision subject to the constitution remain with the local branches. The whole fund is for the protection of, and payment of benefits to, holders of benefit certificates; and the reserve fund seems to us essentially a part of the benefit fund, although it may be in the nature of a safety fund to insure the payment of maturing certificates. This question has lately been before the courts of last resort in Massachusetts. The case is not yet officially reported, and is entitled Buncell v. Supreme Sitting of Order of I. H. 161 Mass. 224, 23 L. R. A. 846. There it was held that the funds held by the local branches of the order belong to the supreme sitting, and we think there can be no escape from such conclusion. In a late case in equity, brought in New Jersey, the vice-chancellor holds the same rule, and determined that the fund belonged to the home company. The case is Ware v. Supreme Sitting of Order of I. H. (N. J. Eq.) 28 Atl. 1041, and is not officially reported. Several of the states, through their courts of last resort, have passed upon this question, and, so far as we have found, have not held to the contrary.

It is said, however, that there was no legal incorporation in Indiana. We are not called to pass upon that question. The courts of Indiana have permitted the proceedings to be brought there to wind up the affairs of the order as a valid and subsisting corporation, and have recognized its legal status. The several courts of other states have also taken jurisdiction by the appointment of ancillary receivers to aid in collecting the funds to be transmitted to the home receiver. But we think the parties here are not in a position to raise that question. These local branches and their officers are a part of the order, and cannot, in this proceeding, question its due incorporation. Merchants & Mfrs. Bank v. Stone, 88 Mich. 779; Empire Mfg. Co. v. Stuart, 46 Mich. 482; Niblack, Mut. Ben. Soc. § 2. The object of the association was to create what is called a "benefit fund." The constitution and laws of the order were the contract between the parties. Courts can only enforce the contract as made, which is that the fund shall belong to the supreme sitting, and be distributed so that each member shall derive a benefit from the entire corpus of the assets of the supreme sitting, without regard to his local habitation. It was for the purpose of collecting in these assets in this state that the ancillary receiver was appointed. There can be no doubt of the right of a court of chancery within this state to make the appointment. Mr. Baldwin was so appointed, and is attempting to gather in these assets. These are trust funds for creditors and for distributees under the laws of the order. It is a principle now generally acted upon by the courts that a receiver or other trustee appointed in another state will be permitted, on the principle of comity, to bring an action in the domestic forum for the purpose of collecting the assets of the insolvent for distribution, in accordance with the law of the jurisdiction within which the receiver has been appointed, when so to do will not contravene the rights of citizens of the state in which the action is brought. Metzner v. Bauer, 98 Ind. 425; Bagby v. Atlantic, M. & O. R. Co. 86 Pa. 291; Toronto General Trust Co. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. 25 L. R. A.

Co. 123 N. Y. 87; Comstock v. Frederickson 51 Minn. 350; Graydon v. Church, 7 Mich. 86.

But the rule of comity is never allowed to operate when it will contravene the rights of a citizen of the state where the action is being taken. So far as this local branch and its officers and members are concerned, however, they are part and parcel of the corporation. The receiver appointed in Indiana and the ancillary receiver appointed here, not only represent the creditors of the corporation, but stand in its stead; and under the decree of the Indiana court and the Wayne circuit court, in chancery, in this state, they are directed to gather in the assets; and, unless some reason is shown why that order should not be carried out, this local branch and its officers and members cannot refuse to turn over the assets to the ancillary receiver, and, when he has possession of such assets the court may order them transmitted to the Indiana receiver. But such order should be made only when it is made certain to the court that the members from this state would share proportionately with the other members throughout the organization. The fund is found in many different states, and comity requires that we should do all we can to insure, as far as possible, a speedy distribution of the whole property among those entitled to it. But the court below must have some discretion in making this order so that the rights of the citizens of this state may be protected.

By the answer of the local branch and its officers, it appears that the fund has been garnished in their hands, and that such proceedings are still pending and undetermined. Certainly, the court would not make an order for the payment of this fund into the hands of the receiver until the questions arising under the garnishment proceedings are determined. The plaintiffs in those cases have a right to their day in court before they can be deprived of the fund, or before the local branch and its officers are bound to pay it over to the receiver. The plaintiffs in the garnishment proceedings are not parties here, and their rights cannot be here litigated. If they have obtained a valid lien on the fund, that lien is not dissolved by the filing of a bill, and the appointment of a receiver, but may be enforced. Hubbard v. Hamilton Bank, 7 Met. 340; Taylor v. Columbian Ins. Co. 14 Allen, 553; Folger v. Columbian Ins. Co. 99 Mass. 267. Proceedings for contempt are not appropriate for the trial of issues involving the title to this fund, or to determine the validity of the lien which the garnishee claims. Ex parte Hollis, 59 Cal. 405; Re Paschal, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 483, 19 L. ed. 992; State v. Ball, 5 Wash. 387. In Beach on Receivers (section 247) it is said: "It is also equally well settled that, in a proceeding to punish for contempt of court, the question of the title to the property cannot arise or be adjudicated. The court will not in such a proceeding do more than pass upon the bare question of contempt. It will not directly or indirectly assume to consider or to decide to whom the property belongs, or to decide that the receiver has or has not the right of possession in and to it."

The court below offered to permit the receiver to bring suit for these assets, which offer was declined. We think the court, under the facts stated in the answer of the local branch and its officers, properly refused to adjudge the parties guilty of contempt. We may remark, however, that, if the assets are finally paid into the hands of the receiver, it will be the duty of the court to direct that, upon their payment over to the Indiana receiver, the Michigan claimants shall receive a proportionate dividend with creditors elsewhere.

The writ will be denied.

The other Justices concur.

Flora A. POOLE

v.

CONSOLIDATED STREET R. CO., Plf. in Err.

(.....Mich.....)

1. It is not negligence as matter of law to attempt to alight from a car at a pleasure resort station established by a street railway company, on the side opposite to that prepared for the reception of passengers if those in charge of the car have invited an alighting on such opposite side.
2. That a car has not reached the usual stopping place when a stop is made and a passenger attempts to alight, will not render him guilty of negligence if there was no warning not to alight and from the surroundings a passenger might well have understood that the stop was made for that purpose.
3. Whether or not the unevenness of the ground at a point used by passengers in alighting from a car is such as to constitute negligence on the part of the carrier is a question for the jury.
4. A defendant is entitled to have its theory of the case presented to the jury in specific instructions if such theory is supported by evidence and the instructions are properly requested.

(May 22, 1894.)

ERROR to the Superior Court of Grand Rapids to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Kingsley & Kleinbans for appellant.

Messrs. Wesselius, Corbitt & Ewing for appellee.

Montgomery, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant operates an electric street railroad in Grand Rapids, with a line extending to Reed's Lake, which is a summer resort a short distance east of the city. The company maintains pleasure grounds at this place, including a pavilion and conveniences for visitors. During the summer, the travel over this route is very large. For the convenient transaction of its business, the company's double track is extended and formed into a loop at the Reed's Lake terminus, so that cars may run continuously, without reversing or switching, around this loop, and back to the city. Within this loop is vacant ground, and, on the side to the north, nearest the pavilion, cinders have been spread, connecting with the walk and the pavilion, and forming an admittedly safe landing place. The accompanying sketch sufficiently shows the surroundings to indicate the situation.

On the evening of the 12th of April, 1892, the plaintiff, who had taken passage on one of defendant's cars, in attempting, after the car came to a stop, to alight inside, next the loop, received serious injuries. She brought this suit against the company, alleging that the defendant did not keep its grounds at Reed's Lake, at and adjacent to where said car stopped for passengers to leave the same, in such condition that passengers might alight with safety from said cars by night, but permitted said grounds to be and remain in such a rough, broken, and uneven condition, and permitted a steep bank of earth, of the height of, to wit, six inches, to be and remain at and alongside of said railway at said terminus where said cars stopped for passengers to leave the same, so that passengers alighting from said cars were liable to be thrown down and injured; and alleging that the plaintiff, by reason of the unsafe condition of the grounds, was, without fault on her part, thrown down and caused to fall to the ground with great force and violence, and received the injury complained of. The plaintiff covered a verdict for $5,000, and defendant brings error.

NOTE.—The situation of the stopping place where the accident occurred in the above case, while unusual, is sufficiently like that in many other places to make the decision valuable. For the whole array of cases on injuries received in getting on or off railroad trains (but not including street railway cases), see note to Carr v. Bal River & E. R. Co. (Cal.) 21 L. R. A. 354.

The defendant contends that upon the whole record it appears that the landing place provided on the northerly side of the track was suitable and proper, and known to the plaintiff to be so, and that she had no right to alight on the side of the car next the loop, and that, if she chose to do so, it was at her own risk; and it is further contended that the plaintiff's testimony, taken as a whole, failed to make it clear how the injury occurred, and also that the grounds inside the loop were a reasonably safe landing place. A number of other questions are raised, relating to rulings on the trial as to admissibility of testimony, refusal of requests to charge, preferred by counsel for the defendant, and the charge of the court on its own motion, which will be considered in order. The plaintiff's theory is that in attempting to leave the car she stood with both feet on the running board; that a gentleman who was aboard the car assisted her from the running board to the ground; that she clasped his hands in making her descent to the ground, and that, upon stepping down from the running board, she stepped upon the steep bank of earth, which the testimony shows to be somewhere from four to five inches high; that her foot slipped and gave way, and that she fell, and received the injuries in question. The defendant's theory as to the manner of her injury is that the true cause of her injury was not the uneven condition of the ground, but that it was occasioned by some person stepping upon the plaintiff's dress as she was alighting, thereby throwing her to the ground; and the defendant offered the testimony of numerous witnesses tending to sustain this theory.

It is strenuously insisted that, the company having provided a safe landing place on the northerly side of the loop, its full duty to the passengers was performed, and that it cannot be held liable for an injury occurring by reason of a passenger attempting to alight inside the loop. Upon this question the trial judge charged the jury as follows: "A street-railway company has the right to select and adhere to the making of their own arrangements for platforms and landing places at such resorts as Reed's lake, provided, only, that they make the landing place on one side safe and commodious, and so conspicuous that all passengers can see it by day or by night, unless it has been so used, and is so used, and the circumstances are such, in connection with the landing, as amounts to an invitation to alight on the other side;" and, further: "It is certain, under the testimony in this case, that the construction of that walk and landing, running from 30 feet wide down to 10 feet each way, and an extent of from 150 to 200 feet along this north side next to the resort, that it offers a plain and palpable invitation for the passengers upon its trains to get off upon that side; and I have no doubt that under the arrangements as testified to, and uncontradicted, in order for the company to be held as inviting an alighting upon the inside of the loop, that there must be, and should be, some positive act on the part of the company, as if a conductor should invite a passenger to get off upon that side, or as if any arrangements had been made for the landing of passengers upon that side; and I believe the law to be, under the peculiar testimony in this case, that there should be something that you should fix in your minds, other than the fact that passengers upon a loaded train, riding upon the running board, upon the outside, saw fit to jump off within the loop, and run around across the track to the place of amusement." This charge was sufficiently favorable to the defendant, and fairly stated the law of the case, if there was any testimony tending to show that passengers had been, by the course of conduct of the defendant, invited to alight upon the inside of the loop. See McDonald v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 26 Iowa, 124, 96 Am. Dec. 114; 2 Redf. Railways, 582. We also think that there was testimony which justified this instruction. According to the plaintiff's testimony, she had previously been helped off the car by conductors inside the loop, and there is abundant testimony in the record that the common practice was to alight on either side indiscriminately. The car was so constructed that passengers could alight from either side, and there was no warning or notice to passengers to step off only on the northerly side. The cars were crowded with passengers, and the evidence shows that, as some would alight, others would press forward and take their seats. Under these circumstances, we are not prepared to say that, as a matter of law, it was negligent to attempt to alight on the inside the loop. But it is said that the car had not reached its usual stopping place, nor the place where plaintiff had been previously assisted to alight. But the car had come to a full stop on the occasion in question. There was no warning not to alight, and a glance at the surroundings is sufficient to indicate that a passenger might well have understood that the stop had been made for that purpose. The evidence shows that not the plaintiff alone, but substantially all, if not all, the passengers, interpreted the stop as an invitation to alight. The cinder walk was opposite the stopping place on the north, and the car was directly opposite the walk which leads to the pavilion. We also think the question of whether the uneven condition of the ground was such as to amount to negligence on the part of the company was, under the circumstances of this case, fairly a question for the jury. The plaintiff's theory was that the bank of earth from which her foot slipped was directly at the point where one, in alighting from the car, would be likely to step upon its edge, and slip backward. We are not prepared to say, as a matter of law, that this was a suitable landing place.

The defendant asked the court to charge the jury as follows: "If the jury find that the space between the outer edge of the running board of the car and the edge of the sod or little embankment was not more than seven or eight inches in width, it was not negligence on the part of defendant to have such a space at that time and place, and the plaintiff cannot recover." This request was refused, and the defendant's counsel assigns error upon its refusal, citing and relying upon the case of Ryan v. Manhattan R. Co., 131 N. Y. 126, as sustaining their contention that the request should have been given. That case is not at all analogous to the present. That was the case of an elevated railway company, which had left a space of from seven to eight inches between its platform and the running board of the car. This running board was presumably substantially upon the same level as the platform, and the court held that some space was necessary between the running board and the platform to enable the company to run its cars, and that, because of a necessary curve in the track, the distance of seven or eight inches was not unreasonable, and that, as it must be known that there is a vacant space between the car and the platform, such a space as could be spanned by a single step of a passenger was not unreasonable, and the leaving of such a space was not negligence. But in the present case the passenger was compelled to step downward in order to alight, the running board of the car being about eighteen inches above the surface of the earth, and we cannot say, as matter of law, that a passenger, in stepping down from the running board of the car, would in all cases step outward more than seven or eight inches. There was certainly no necessity for maintaining an obstruction there which could work injury, and the only legal question which could possibly be involved is whether the situation of this mound was such that one, in landing from the car, would reach it, and be likely to be injured by stepping upon the edge of the mound; and that question the request does not submit, and was therefore properly refused.

In the main, the cause was very carefully presented to the jury; but we think the court committed one error which is important, in view of the defendant's testimony, and the theory upon which it contested the case before the jury. The defendant requested the court to charge the jury as follows: "If the jury find that the injury was occasioned by some one stepping on plaintiff's dress as she was alighting, and she was thereby caused to fall, she cannot recover." This request presented the defendant's theory of the case, and should have been given. The plaintiff denied any such occurrence, and described in detail how she claimed the injury occurred, while the defendant produced a number of witnesses who testified that her first statement of the occurrence was that some person stepped upon her dress, and caused her to fall from the car, and produced three witnesses who witnessed the occurrence, and who gave testimony in the same line. This presented the issue for the jury. There was no middle ground. There was no claim of two concurring causes. There could be no recovery unless the plaintiff's theory of the manner in which the accident occurred was found to be sustained by the proof; and if the testimony offered by the defense, which tended strongly to show that the injury occurred by reason of some person stepping upon her dress, was believed, there was no testimony in the case connecting the cause of the injury with the fault attributed to the defendant in the declaration. The omission to give this request is not cured by the general instruction that, if the injury was caused by accident or misadventure, without fault of either the plaintiff or defendant, there could be no recovery. The defendant had a right to have its theory of the case covered by specific instructions. Dikeman v. Arnold, 71 Mich. 656; People v. Jacks, 76 Mich. 218; O'Callaghan v. Boeing, 72 Mich. 669; Cooper v. Muller, 74 Mich. 374; Willey v. Crane, 69 Mich. 17; Babbitt v. Bumpus, 73 Mich. 331; Miller v. Miller, 97 Mich. 151.

The other questions presented are not likely to arise upon a new trial, but, for the error pointed out, the judgment will be reversed, with costs, and a new trial ordered.

Hooker, J., did not sit; the other Justices concurred.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

Walter P. WARREN et al., Appts.,
v.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF COLUMBUS.

(149 Ill. 2.)

1. A part of a debt or a chose in action may be assigned in equity creating a trust in favor of the assignee and an equitable lien upon the fund.
2. A fund that exists potentially, although it is not yet due, is subject to an equitable assignment of a portion of it which will be operative as soon as the fund is acquired.
3. The charter alone of a foreign corporation and not the general legislation of the state in which it was created will have effect to limit its powers outside of that state.

NOTE.—As to validity of preferences among creditors given by insolvent corporations, see note to Lyons-Thomas Hardware Co. v. Perry Stove Mfg. Co. (Tex.) 23 L. R. A. 303.
25 L. R. A.

4. The New York statute prohibiting assignments or transfers by insolvent corporations has no extraterritorial force and does not affect the validity of an assignment by an insolvent corporation executed in Ohio as a transfer of a fund in Illinois.
5. The mere insolvency of a corporation does not eo instanti deprive its directors and officers of power to dispose of the corporate property in good faith as payment or security of corporate debts, although the effect may be to give some creditors a preference over others.
6. A factor's lien cannot attach to goods which never came into his actual possession but were delivered or consigned by the owner directly to the purchasers, even if the factor's contract provided that the goods should be consigned to him for sale.

(October 25, 1903.)

APPEAL by defendants, claimants of a fund in the hands of Pullman's Palace Car Company which belonged to the Ohio & Western Coal & Iron Company, other than the First National Bank of Columbus from a decree of the Appellate Court, First District, reversing a decree of the Circuit Court for Cook County giving appellants' claims priority over that of the bank in an interpleader proceeding by Pullman's Palace Car Company to determine the right to such fund. Reversed.

The facts are fully stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Warren & Cox and Flower, Smith & Musgrave, for appellant Walter P. Warren:

There are five objections to the bank's claim:

1. The order was drawn by H. C. Stanwood, who signed as assistant treasurer, but who had no authority whatever to draw such a draft.

Taylor, Corp. § 286; Koch v. National U. Bldg. Assn. 35 Ill. App. 465; Adams v. Cross Wood Print Co. 27 Ill. App. 318; Stokes v. New Jersey Pottery Co. 46 N. J. L. 287; Thomas v. Morgan County, 59 Ill. 479; Read v. Buffum, 79 Cal. 77; Titus v. Cairo & F. R. Co. 37 N. J. L. 98; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. §§ 585 et seq.; Leggett v. New Jersey Mfg. & Bkg. Co. 1 N. J. Eq. 541, 23 Am. Dec. 728; Stow v. Wyse, 7 Conn. 214, 18 Am. Dec. 99; Hyde v. Larkin, 35 Mo. App. 365; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. James, 22 Wis. 194; Hoyt v. Thompson, 5 N. Y. 320, 19 N. Y. 207; Walworth County Bank v. Farmers Loan Co. 14 Wis. 325.

2. The order was a partial assignment of a particular fund to become due, to the drawer, and is not good unless accepted.

Mandeville v. Welch, 18 U. S. 5 Wheat. 278, 5 L. ed. 87; Chapman v. Shattuck, 8 Ill. 49; Crosby v. Loop, 18 Ill. 625, 14 Ill. 380; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Nichols, 57 Ill. 464.

3. The draft is void under the New York statute, because at the time it was given the Ohio & Western Coal & Iron Company had refused the payment of its notes, and the order was drawn and delivered with the intent, and such was its effect, of assigning or transferring the property of the company for the benefit of John M. Glidden, who was a stockholder in and the president of the company.

N. Y. Rev. Stat. 1827-28, § 4, chap. 18; Lippincott v. Shaw Carriage Co. 25 Fed. Rep. 577; Adams v. Kehler Mill Co. 35 Fed. Rep. 483.

4. The order or draft is void under the New York statute because it was given in contemplation of the insolvency of the Ohio & Western Coal & Iron Company.

N. Y. Rev. Stat. 1827-28, § 4, chap. 18; Robinson v. Bank of Attica, 21 N. Y. 406; Brouner v. Harbeck, 9 N. Y. 589; Bowen v. Lease, 5 Hill, 221; Harris v. Thompson, 15 Barb. 62; Sibell v. Remsen, 33 N. Y. 95; Paulding v. Chrome Steel Co. 94 N. Y. 384; Pierce v. Crompton, 18 R. L. 312; Starkweather v. American Bible Soc. 72 Ill. 50, 22 Am. Rep. 133; Santa Clara Female Academy v. Sullivan, 116 Ill. 885, 56 Am. Rep. 776; Metropolitan Bank v. Godfrey, 23 Ill. 579, and note; Ewing v. Toledo Soc. Bank, 48 Ohio St. 31; Wait, Insolv. Corp. § 328.

5. The order or draft is invalid under the 25 L. R. A.

common law, as declared by the decisions in the state of Ohio, because it was a preference given by an insolvent corporation, which had ceased doing business.

Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 308; Wait, Insolv. Corp. §§ 162, 654; Rouse v. Merchants' Nat. Bank of Cincinnati, 5 L. R. A. 378, 46 Ohio St. 498; Kankakee Woolen Mill Co. v. Kampe, 38 Mo. App. 229.

Glidden & Curtis, as sales agents, never had such possession of the property out of which this fund arises as to acquire a lien thereon.

Mechem, Agency, §§ 676 et seq.; Strahorn v. Union Stock Yard & T. Co. 43 Ill. 427, 92 Am. Dec. 143; Winna v. Hammond, 37 Ill. 99.

Glidden & Curtis acquired no right to a lien on this fund by virtue of the contract of November 8, 1887.

Boomer v. Cunningham, 22 Ill. 320, 74 Am. Dec. 155; Hunt v. Hullock, 23 Ill. 320; Allen v. Montgomery, 48 Miss. 101; Strong v. Krebs, 63 Miss. 388; Hoffman v. Brungs, 83 Ky. 400; Cook v. Brannin, 87 Ky. 101; City F. Ins. Co. v. Olmsted, 38 Conn. 476; Clay v. East Tennessee & V. R. Co. 6 Heisk. 421; Read v. Mosby, 5 L. R. A. 122, 87 Tenn. 759; Moody v. Wright, 13 Met. 17, 46 Am. Dec. 706; Chynoweth v. Tenney, 10 Wis. 403; Stearns v. Quincy Mut. F. Ins. Co. 124 Mass. 63, 26 Am. Rep. 647; Chase v. Denny, 130 Mass. 566; Christmas v. Russell, 81 U. S. 14 Wall. 69, 20 L. ed. 762; Ford v. Garner, 15 Ind. 298; Rogers v. Hosack, 18 Wend. 319; Holt v. Bank of Augusta, 13 Ga. 341; Bromwell v. Turner, 37 Ill. App. 561.

The contract of November 8, 1887, was not a valid contract, because procured by Glidden for the benefit of his firm when the company was insolvent and he the president thereof.

Beach v. Miller, 130 Ill. 170; Atwater v. American Exch. Nat. Bank, 40 Ill. App. 501; 1 Beach, Priv. Corp. § 241b.

Mr. E. R. Jewett for appellant Baltimore & Ohio R. Co.

Mr. John S. Cook for appellant Evan T. Ellicott.

Messrs. Smith, Helmer & Moulton for appellant Marcus A. Thompson.

Messrs. Lyndon Evans and Frederick Arnd, for appellants, the trustees of Glidden & Curtis:

When the goods are consigned to a factor, and he makes advances on them, he has the right to sell them, and may, out of the proceeds, satisfy his lien.

2 Kent. Com. § 44, p. 642; Zoit v. Millandon, 4 Mart. N. S. 470.

The lien also extends to proceeds of the goods.

Hudson v. Granger, 5 Barn. & Ald. 27; Keiser v. Topping, 72 Ill. 226; Jarvis v. Rogers, 15 Mass. 389.

An agreement to pledge property to come into being makes the pledge attach immediately upon the property coming into being.

Macomber v. Parker, 14 Pick. 497; Donald v. Hewitt, 33 Ala. 534, 73 Am. Dec. 481; Smith v. Atkins, 18 Vt. 461; Goodenow v. Dunn, 21 Me. 86; Ayers v. South Australian Bkg. Co. L. R. 3 P. C. 548; Wisner v. Ocumpaugh, 71 N. Y. 113; Coates v. Donnell, 16 Jones & S. 46; Barnard v. Norrwich & W. R. Co. 4 Cliff. 351; Kirksey v. Means, 42 Ala. 426; Bibbend v. Liverpool & L. F. & L. Ins. Co. 30 Cal. 78.

On future property this lien is good against subsequent contract creditors of the lineor.

Jones, Liens, § 42; Jones, Chattel Mortgages, § 157; Tedford v. Wilson, 8 Head, 311; Polk v. Foster, 7 Baxt. 98; Grange Warehouse Assn. v. Owen, 86 Tenn. 355; Read v. Mosby, 5 L. R. A. 122, 87 Tenn. 759.

The pledgee does not lose his lien by permitting the pledgor to have the property for a special and limited purpose.

Cooper v. Ray, 47 Ill. 53; Hutton v. Arnett, 51 Ill. 198; Langton v. Waring, 18 C. B. N. S. 815; Way v. Davidson, 12 Gray, 465, 74 Am. Dec. 604.

Messrs. Norton, Burley & Howell, for appellee:

The order or draft in question operated as an equitable assignment, pro tanto, of the fund in the hands of the Pullman company from the time of its delivery. Notice to the drawee was not necessary to perfect the title of the bank as against any party to this cause.

3 Pomeroy, Eq. Jur. §§ 1280, 1281, and notes; Pomeroy v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. 40 Ill. 898; National Bank of America v. Indiana Bkg. Co. 114 Ill. 483; Phillips v. Edsall, 127 Ill. 547.

The fact that the debt against which the draft was drawn was not then due and payable is immaterial.

3 Pomeroy, Eq. Jur. § 1283, and cases cited; Anderson v. DeSoer, 6 Gratt. 364. See also 1 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 830, 840; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 13th ed. § 1044; 1 Daniel, Neg. Inst. 8d ed. § 28.

An insolvent corporation may deal with its creditors by making payment, etc.

Wait, Insolv. Corp. § 162; 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. §§ 802, 804; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 691; Paulding v. Chrome Steel Co. 94 N. Y. 334; Dutcher v. Importers & T. Nat. Bank, 59 N. Y. 12; Reichwald v. Commercial Hotel Co. 106 Ill. 439; Ragland v. McFall, 137 Ill. 81; Glover v. Lee, 140 Ill. 102; Weber v. Mick, 181 Ill. 526.

Bailey, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 5th day of October, 1889, Pullman's Palace-Car Company, being a debtor of the Ohio & Western Coal & Iron Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the state of New York, in the sum of $31,695.63, filed its bill of interpleader in the circuit court of Cook county against the First National Bank of Columbus, Ohio, the trustees of the late firm of Glidden & Curtis, the Ohio & Western Coal & Iron Company, and James A. Hall, its assignee, and divers creditors of that corporation, who were seeking to reach the indebtedness in question by process of garnishment, praying to have these various claimants upon the fund in its hands brought into court, and required to interplead as to their respective interests and priorities. The defendants having appeared and answered, the cause was heard on pleadings and the master's report, and it was decreed that a proper case for an interpleader was presented; and, the complainant having paid into court the full amount of the indebtedness in question, the defendants were perpetually enjoined from proceeding further against it for the collection of the same, and it was ordered that the fund thus paid into court stands in lieu of the complainant's liability as garnishee or otherwise. The cause, as between the several defendants, being afterwards heard, it was adjudged and decreed that the claims of four of the attaching creditors, viz., those of Walter P. Warren, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, Evan T. Ellicott, and Marcus A. Thompson, aggregating $23,771.97, were entitled to priority, and those claims, with interest thereon from the date of the decree were ordered to be paid in full; and it was further decreed that the First National Bank of Columbus was entitled to the residue of the fund after the payment in full of these four attaching creditors. From this decree the First National Bank of Columbus and the trustees of Glidden & Curtis appealed to the appellate court; and in that court the decree was reversed, and the cause was remanded to the circuit court, with directions to enter a decree giving priority to the claim of the bank, amounting to $16,676.79, and ordering that claim, with interest thereon from March 1, 1889, to be first paid in full, and ordering payment of the residue of the fund to the trustees of Glidden & Curtis. From the judgment of the appellate court the four attachment creditors and the trustees of Glidden & Curtis have appealed to this court.

The facts in relation to the claim of the First National Bank of Columbus, Ohio, as shown by the evidence, are substantially these: On February 8, 1889, and prior to that time, the trustees of the Ohio & Western Coal & Iron Company resided in Massachusetts, Maine, New York, and Pennsylvania, and one of their number, James A. Hall, who was also vice-president of the company, resided at Columbus, Ohio. John M. Glidden, the president, and George R. Chapman, the treasurer, resided and had their office at Boston, Mass., and Chester Griswold, the secretary, resided and had his office in the city of New York. The company had an office in New York City, where its corporate meetings were held, and it also had an office in Boston, where its principal financial business was transacted, and also one at Columbus, where its principal operative business was carried on; its mines and furnaces being all situated in Ohio. Books of account of the transactions in Ohio were kept at the Columbus office, and books of account were also kept at Boston. The representatives of the company residing at Columbus were Hall, the vice-president, and H. C. Stanwood, whose office or agency, as he was known and held out to the world, was that of assistant treasurer; and he had, ever since the organization of the company, which was then about six years, been performing the duties appropriate to that position, and had been recognized by the company in many ways as holding that office. It is now claimed, however, that no such office as assistant treasurer was provided for by the by-laws of the company, and that there is no record upon the books of the company of Stanwood's appointment to that office; but the evidence clearly warrants the conclusion that, from the first organization of the company down to the time of the transactions in question in this suit, he had actual charge of the financial affairs of the company at Columbus, and was, de facto, its treasurer at that place. In transacting its financial business in Ohio, the company, from the first, kept its bank account with the First National Bank of Columbus; the business with the bank being all transacted, on the part of the company, by Stanwood. All deposits were made by him, and all checks bore his signature, although a part of the checks seem to have been also countersigned by Hall, the vice-president, while others were signed by Stanwood alone. Among other financial transactions between the bank and the company, Stanwood drew, through the bank, a large number of drafts in favor of the company on Glidden & Curtis, of Boston, which were honored. In January, 1889, the company was indebted to the bank in the sum of $20,000 for money previously borrowed, and in renewal of which indebtedness it gave its two promissory notes for $10,000 each, one dated January 10, and the other January 12, 1889, and each payable thirty days after date, to the order of Glidden & Curtis, and indorsed by them. This loan was made at the earnest solicitation of Stanwood, and the business with the bank in relation to it was transacted by him. The loan seems to have been made principally upon the financial standing and credit of Glidden & Curtis, who were then reputed to be wealthy and responsible, the bank having declined to make the loan on the credit of the coal and iron company alone. On the night of February 8, 1889, the officers of the bank having learned that Glidden & Curtis had failed, and had made an assignment for the benefit of their creditors, and being alarmed about their security upon the notes, sent for Stanwood, who was the only officer of the company then in Ohio, and demanded further security from the company. No security was given that night, but, at about 9 o'clock the following morning, Stanwood executed and delivered to the bank the following instrument: "Columbus, Ohio, February 8, 1889. To the Pullman Palace-Car Company, Pullman, Ill.: Please pay to the First National Bank of Columbus, Ohio, or order, the sum of twenty thousand dollars of the money owing by you, and to become due to us on or about the 15th day of February and the 15th day of March, 1889, value received by us, and charge the same to our account. The Ohio & Western Coal & Iron Co., by H. C. Stanwood, Asst. Treasurer." Notice of the execution of this instrument was at once given to the Pullman Company by telegraph, and on February 11th it was presented to that company, and protested for nonacceptance; and on the 15th day of February, and again on the 15th day of March, it was presented, and protested for nonpayment. On February 9th, Thompson began his suit by attachment, in the circuit court of Cook county, against the coal and iron company, and caused the Pullman Company to be summoned as garnishee. This attachment was followed at different dates by those of the other attaching creditors, and on February 11th the coal and iron company made an assignment to James A. Hall, assignee; the deed of assignment being delivered to Hall, and filed for record in the probate court of Franklin county, Ohio.

The first proposition affecting the claim of the bank to priority, raised by counsel for the appellants, is that Stanwood had no authority to execute to the bank the instrument above set forth, and that such instrument therefore was ineffectual as an assignment to the bank of any portion of the fund in the hands of Pullman's Palace-Car Company. The question thus raised is one of fact to be determined from all the evidence, and it must be confessed that the testimony of the various witnesses, applicable to that question, is far from being harmonious. It is to be noticed, however, that both the circuit and the appellate court, after considering the evidence, have reached the conclusion that Stanwood was vested by the coal and iron company with competent authority to execute the order on its behalf. While, in cases in chancery, where, as in the present case, the evidence has not been taken orally in open court, in the presence of the chancellor, we are not concluded by the decision of the court below, but may examine and pass upon the evidence de novo, still some degree of weight is properly due to the concurring decisions of the two courts to whose judicial investigation the evidence in the case has already been subjected. We have nevertheless given the evidence an earnest and careful consideration, and, while it must be said that the question is not altogether free from doubt, we are inclined to concur with the conclusion reached by the courts below. The evidence in the case is very voluminous, the abstract of the record constituting a volume of over 540 printed pages. It is manifest, therefore, that any attempt on our part to give such an analysis of the evidence as will adequately show the grounds upon which our conclusion is based would involve an expenditure of time and space which, in view of the pressure of other duties, we can but ill afford, and which, after all, would subserve no useful purpose. It may be said, briefly, that it is clearly shown that, in his position of assistant treasurer, Stanwood had general control of the fiscal concerns of the company in Ohio, especially in the absence of Hall, the vice-president; and it appears that, at the time the instrument in question was executed, Hall had gone to New York to attend a corporate meeting, leaving the entire charge of the financial concerns of the company in Ohio in Stanwood's hands. Hall testifies that, as to financial matters,—matters in respect to loans and their payment,—Stanwood had always been authorized to act for the company; that, in the absence of the witness, Stanwood conducted the financial business of the company; and that witness had no recollection of having ever notified the bank of any limitation upon Stanwood's power to manage financial matters. On further examination he says that the particular part of the company's business at Columbus which Stanwood attended to was the money part; that he had charge of all matters of money at the Columbus office, including the accounts at the bank; that he negotiated the $20,000 loan, and was in the habit of negotiating loans at Columbus; that he signed checks on the bank, which the witness countersigned while there, but that, when he was away, Stanwood drew checks without his countersigning them. Stanwood himself testified that the duties he performed as assistant treasurer were all the financial duties,—the entire business of the company, so far as it related to the disbursing of money, the collection of accounts, and the care of property under his charge; that he attended to the building of some 150 houses; that he bought the most of the supplies of all kinds, and had the general conduct of the business, up to the time Hall came to Ohio, which was in July, 1887, except the operation of the furnaces and coal mines; that he had charge of the financial business entirely, and of everything connected with that department; that he kept the accounts with the bank, looked after deposits, and drew the checks; that he negotiated the $20,000 loan, and also other loans; that on certain occasions he signed notes for the company, in pursuance of special directions for that purpose; that Hall, after coming to Columbus, had general supervision of the mines and furnaces, but had nothing whatever to do with the financial affairs of the company; that there was never a single transaction, of any sort or nature, connected with the financial department of the company, that anybody attended to, except himself, from the organization of the company to the date of its failure. John M. Glidden, the president of the company, testifies in cross-examination that, as he understands it, Stanwood managed the financial affairs of the company at Columbus generally and continuously for several years, ending at the time of the failure, in the capacity of assistant treasurer; that he was recognized by the officers of the company, and by its agents and employes and the public generally, as the assistant treasurer of the company; that witness himself recognized Stanwood as assistant treasurer of the company, and recalls no instance where he dissented from his acts as such. The foregoing is not, and is not intended to be, a complete statement of the evidence applicable to the question under consideration; but it is sufficient, we think, to show, that Stanwood, under the designation of "assistant treasurer," was a fiscal officer or agent of the coal and iron company, clothed with very broad and general powers. The fund in the hands of the Pullman Company consisted of money due and to become due for products of the coal mines of the coal and iron company; and it seems, therefore, to have properly pertained to the department of the financial business of that company, which was under the control and supervision of Stanwood. We are of the opinion, then, that in view of all the evidence it must be held that the appropriation of a portion of that fund to the satisfaction or securing of the $20,000 loan was within the scope of the powers conferred by the company upon him. Nor do we think it necessary, in order to sustain this view, to resort to the doctrine of estoppel, or to draw any distinction between the actual and the apparent scope of his authority as agent. The case does not rest, as it seems to us, upon proof of the acts of the company in holding him out as its agent possessing sufficient authority to enable him to execute on its behalf the instrument in question, but the evidence tends to establish an actual delegation of powers broad enough for that purpose.

It is next contended that the order upon the Pullman Company was only a partial assignment of the fund due or to become due to the drawer, and that as it was not accepted by the drawee it was ineffectual to pass the title thereto to the bank in whose favor the order was drawn. In this view we are unable to concur. While a part of a debt or chose in action is not assignable at law, it may be assigned in equity, and in such case a trust will be created in favor of the equitable assignee of the fund, and will constitute an equitable lien upon it. Phillips v. Edsall, 127 Ill. 585. On this question, Mr. Pomeroy, in his treatise on Equitable Jurisprudence, says: "Equity recognizes an interest in the fund, in the nature of equitable property, obtained through the assignment, or the order which operates as an assignment, and permits such interest to be enforced by an action, even though the debtor or depository has not assented to the transfer. It is an established doctrine that an equitable assignment of a specific fund in the hands of a third person creates an equitable property in such fund." And again: "The agreement, direction, or order being treated in equity as an assignment, it is not necessary that the entire fund or debt should be assigned. The same doctrine applies to an equitable assignment of any definite part of a particular fund. The doctrine that the equitable assignee obtains, not simply a right of action against the depository, mandatary, or debtor, but an equitable property in the fund itself, is carried out into all its legitimate consequences. Thus, the assignee may not only recover the money from the original depository (the drawee), but may pursue it or its proceeds, under any change of form, as long as it can be certainly identified, into the hands of third persons who have acquired possession of it from the depository, as volunteers, or with notice of the assignee's prior right. The fund, in this respect, resembles a fund impressed with a trust." 8 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1280. See also Pomeroy v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. 40 Ill. 398; National Bank of America v. Indiana Bkg. Co. 114 Ill. 483. Nor is it material that the fund upon which the draft is drawn is not due, in that it is not actually in being, if it exists potentially, for even in that case the order will operate as an equitable assignment of the fund as soon as it is acquired, and will create an interest in it which a court of equity will enforce. 8 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1283.

It is further urged that the order in question contravenes the provisions of a statute of the state of New York in relation to corporations, and is therefore void. The Ohio & Western Coal & Iron Company was organized under a general statute of the state of New York, authorizing and providing for the formation of corporations for manufacturing, mining, mechanical, or chemical purposes, passed February 17, 1848. That statute contains no provision prohibiting preferences by insolvent corporations. But there seems to be a general statute in force in that state in relation to corporations, passed in the year 1825, and which forms a chapter in the "Revised Statutes of New York passed in the years 1827 and 1828, and certain former acts which had not been revised." That statute contains a section which provides as follows: "Whenever any incorporated company shall have refused the payment of any of its notes, or other evidence of debt, in specie, or lawful money of the United States, it shall not be lawful for such company, or any of its officers, to assign or transfer any of the property or choses in action of such company, to any officer or stockholder of such company, directly or indirectly for the payment of any debt; and it shall not be lawful to make any transfer or assignment in contemplation of the insolvency of such company, to any person or persons whatever; and every such transfer and assignment to such person, stockholder, or other person, or in trust for them or their benefit, shall be utterly void." There can be no doubt that the coal and iron company, at the time the draft was drawn, was in contemplation of insolvency. On that very day, or the day before, a meeting of the trustees was held in the city of New York, at which Hall, the vice-president, was present, and at which it was determined that the company should make an assignment for the benefit of its creditors,—a step which was taken very shortly afterwards. If, then, the New York statute above quoted is to be enforced extraterritorially, the draft must be held to be void. Should it be so enforced? It is the charter alone which, by the law of comity, is recognized and enforced in other jurisdictions, and not the general legislation of the state in which the company is formed. The general laws and regulations of a state are intended to govern only within the limits of the state enacting them, and the state can have no power to give them extraterritorial force. Such provisions do not, as a rule, enter into contracts made within the state, if they are to be performed in another jurisdiction. It follows, therefore, that where a state statute is enacted for the enforcement of a local policy only it will not be presumed that such statutory provisions were intended by the state, or by the shareholders forming the corporation, to enter into the charter contract, and to regulate the company in its transactions outside of the state, and they will not affect the validity of the dealings of the company in foreign states. 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 967.

In White v. Howard, 88 Conn. 342, a question arose as to the power of a New York corporation to take a devise in the state of Connecticut, devises to corporations being forbidden by the New York statute of wills. The court, in sustaining the devise, said: "If the inability to take by devise arose out of a prohibitory clause in the charter, the conclusion contended for would be legal and logical. But the inability does not so arise. There is no prohibition in the charter. The inability is created by the New York statute of wills, expressly excepting corporations from taking by devise. Now this corporation brings with it from New York its charter, but it does not bring with it the New York statute of wills, and cannot bring it to be recognized as law within this jurisdiction. There is an obvious distinction between an incapacity to take, created by the statute of a state, which is local, and a prohibitory clause in a charter, which everywhere cleaves to the corporation." In Ellencorth v. St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co., 98 N. Y. 553, the corporation in question was organized under the laws of Illinois, and the point in dispute was whether a provision in its charter prohibiting it from selling its bonds at less than 80 cents on a dollar would apply, as a statutory provision, to a sale made in the state of New York. In deciding this question in the negative, the court said: "There is nothing in the laws of New York which renders the contract illegal. Even if the charter of the defendant should be so construed as to contain prohibitions which would have rendered the contract illegal in Illinois, if made there, they do not have that effect in this state." In Hoyt v. Shelden, 3 Bosw. 267, the charter of a corporation created by the laws of New Jersey contained no prohibition upon the disposition of its property in case of insolvency. A general statute of the state, however, prohibited incorporated companies, after becoming insolvent or in contemplation of insolvency, from selling, assigning, or transferring any of their property or effects, and declared all such sales to be utterly null and void as against creditors. The question was as to whether the title of a citizen of New York, derived through a transfer of a portion of its property by such corporation, the transfer being made outside of New Jersey, was affected by such prohibition. The court, in deciding that question in the negative, held that the power of disposing of its property was one of the powers incident to corporate existence, and was not destroyed by insolvency, unless so expressly provided in the act of incorporation, and that a citizen of New York, dealing with a New Jersey corporation, might rely upon the act of incorporation, and was not chargeable with notice of the general laws of New Jersey restraining the powers of corporations. See also National Bank of America v. Indiana Bkg. Co. 114 Ill. 498; Hoyt v. Thompson, 19 N. Y. 207.

In view of these authorities, and of many others of like character which might be cited, we are of the opinion that the general statute of New York prohibiting the assignment or transfer of property by a corporation in contemplation of insolvency is only a part of the local law of that state, which New York corporations organized under the Act of 1848 do not carry with them when they go to other jurisdictions to do business, and that, having no extraterritorial force, it has no application to an assignment of a fund in Illinois executed in Ohio by a New York corporation. In Starkweather v. American Bible Soc., 73 Ill. 50, 22 Am. Rep. 138, it was held that a New York corporation could not exercise a power in this state which was denied to it by the general statutes of the state of its creation, and to that extent the rule in this state must be held to be in conflict with that laid down in White v. Howard, supra. We are aware of no decision in this state, however, which holds that the local statutes of another state, regulating the mode in which corporate powers shall be exercised, or determining the validity of corporate acts performed in the exercise of such powers, are to be given any extraterritorial effect.

But it is contended that, even if the draft in question is not affected by the New York statute, it should, under the circumstances, be held to be void on general principles of equity. The theory upon which this contention rests is that the assets of a corporation, the instant the corporation becomes insolvent, become a trust fund for the benefit of its creditors, and that the officers of the corporation, in possession of the corporate property, being trustees for all the creditors, cannot lawfully dispose of it otherwise than for the equal benefit of all the corporate creditors. In support of this view the case of Rouse v. Merchant's Nat. Bank of Cincinnati, 46 Ohio St. 498, 5 L. R. A. 878, is referred to; and this decision, among others, was read in evidence at the hearing for the purpose of showing, as a matter of fact, the conclusion adopted by the highest court of the state of Ohio in relation to the equitable rule contended for. It is there held that a corporation organized for profit under the laws of Ohio, after it has become insolvent and ceased to prosecute the business for which it was created, cannot, by giving some of its creditors mortgages to secure antecedent debts, without other consideration, create valid preferences in their behalf over other creditors, or over a general assignment thereafter made for the benefit of creditors. The court, in the opinion, recognizes the fact that the decisions on the question in the other states are conflicting, and admits that it is a matter of first impression in that court. In this state, however, where the fund assigned had its situs, where the drawee resided, and where the order, as the parties must have contemplated, was to be executed, a somewhat different rule prevails. The doctrine is recognized here that the property of an insolvent corporation is a trust fund, in such sense as precludes the directors and officers of the corporation from dealing with it in such manner as to secure preferences for themselves. Roseboom v. Whittaker, 182 Ill. 81; Beach v. Miller, 180 Ill. 162. But we have not gone so far as to hold that the mere insolvency of a corporation, eo instanti, deprived the directors and officers of the power to dispose of the corporate property, in good faith, by way of paying or securing corporate debts, even though the result may be to give certain creditors a preference over others. In Reichwald v. Commercial Hotel Co., 106 Ill. 489, a corporation organized under the laws of Iowa, and doing business in this state, being insolvent, turned out a part of its property in payment of one of its creditors; and it was held that a corporation, like a natural person, in the absence of any positive law to the contrary, may turn out a part or the whole of its property in payment of its debts, and in so doing may prefer creditors, if done in good faith, and not for a fraudulent purpose. In Ragland v. McFall, 137 Ill. 81, the question arose between a judgment creditor of an insolvent corporation and a creditor to whom the corporation had turned out a portion of its property in payment of that creditor's claim; and such disposition of the corporate property was sustained, the decision in Reichwald v. Commercial Hotel Co. supra, being cited and approved. In Glover v. Lee, 140 Ill. 102, creditors of an insolvent Iowa corporation brought suit against it by attachment, and caused certain insurance companies to be summoned as garnishees. A creditor, to whom the insolvent corporation had assigned the policies of insurance sought to be reached by the garnishment proceeding, intervened, and set up title under such assignment; and this court, in affirming a judgment in favor of the intervener, said: "The mattress company had an undoubted right to pay any and all of its creditors any debt which it justly owed, or it might secure a creditor. Here the policies were in good faith transferred to the bank, a creditor, with the approval of the insurance companies, before any other creditor acquired any lien, or took any steps to reach the assets of the mattress company, and we are aware of no principle which would prevent the bank from securing its debt in the mode adopted." In Cook on Corporations the rule is laid down as follows: "Corporations, unless restricted by their charters, or by general statutes, may make assignments for the benefit of creditors to the same extent that individuals may. In making the assignment the corporation may make preferences for one or more creditors over others, or of one class of creditors over other classes. A preference by the directors, of themselves, is generally held to be fraudulent." Cook, Corp. § 661; and see authorities collected in notes. Our conclusion, then, is that the order drawn by Stanwood on the Pullman company in favor of the bank was valid, and that it vested in the bank a first lien upon the funds in the hands of the Pullman company, if, under the evidence, it can be held that that fund at the time belonged to the coal and iron company, and was subject to its disposition. And this brings us to a consideration of the claim of Glidden & Curtis, now represented by the trustees of that firm.

The contention is that Glidden & Curtis were the general selling agents of the coal and iron company, and as such had advanced to that company large sums of money, for which the company, at the time of its failure, was indebted to them in the sum of nearly $400,000, and that they had a first lien on the fund in the hands of the Pullman Company for the payment of that indebtedness. It appears that in March, 1887, the company, being in need of money, adopted a resolution authorizing its treasurer to execute a contract with Glidden & Curtis to advance money for the use of the company upon such terms as should be approved by certain officers of the company, and that it also at the same time adopted a resolution appointing Glidden & Curtis "fiscal and general selling agents of the company." Glidden & Curtis thereupon loaned to the company $300,000, and took as security $400,000 of its bonds, with the option to purchase the bonds, within a certain time, at 75 cents on a dollar,—an option which was duly exercised. The indebtedness created by this loan, however, as it seems, forms no part of the indebtedness for which the lien is now claimed. Afterwards, on the 3d day of November, 1887, a written contract between the company and Glidden & Curtis was executed, the material portions of which were as follows: "Whereas, by a vote of the trustees of said company, the said firm of Glidden & Curtis were duly appointed fiscal and general selling agents of said corporation: Now, therefore, it is hereby agreed by and between the said corporation and the said firm that the said agency shall be carried on and conducted upon the following agreements and conditions, to the faithful performance of which they, the said corporation and the said firm, mutually bind themselves, each to the other, its successors and assigns, firmly by these presents. First. The said firm are to sell or supervise and control all sales of said corporation's articles and products, and they are to furnish advances on said corporation's products according to its needs, to such an extent as they shall consider themselves safely secured therefor, at current rates of interest and exchange; and they are to render accounts of sales monthly to said corporation, and charge their commissions at the rate of ten cents per ton on the sales of coal, and two and one-half per cent on sales of iron. Second. All articles and products of the said corporation are to be, and are hereby, consigned to said firm. Third. This contract is to continue for five years from the thirty-first day of October, 1887." This contract was executed on behalf of the corporation by James A. Hall, vice-president, and consent to its execution seems to have been given by a large majority of the stockholders, but it does not appear to have been authorized by the trustees of the corporation. Glidden & Curtis, after being appointed general selling agents, appointed William C. Wyman their agent at Chicago to sell coal. There is very considerable evidence, however, both direct and circumstantial, tending to show that Wyman acted also as agent of the coal and iron company. But the business of his agency seems to have been conducted substantially as follows: Coal was shipped by the company to him, or, as was most generally the case, directly to the parties to whom he had sold it, and he collected the money therefor, and remitted it to Glidden & Curtis. He had on his office door the following sign: "Ohio and Western Coal and Iron Company, Walter C. Wyman, Agent,"—and the name of the company was also printed on his letter heads. Where the coal was shipped directly to the purchaser, the only document issued to Wyman was an instrument called a "Manifest of Mine Shipments," made out by the employés of the coal and iron company at the mines, which was in the nature of a letter of advice, containing a statement of the date, nature, and amount of the shipment, the name of the railroad by which the shipment was made, the number of cars, and the name of the purchaser, who was therein designated as consignee, and the printed heading of which was as follows: "From the Ohio and Western Coal and Iron Company to Glidden & Curtis, General Selling Agents. Walter C. Wyman, Manager Sales Department. These instruments seem to have borne no signature. On the 26th day of November, 1888, the following agreement was entered into between the coal and iron company and the Pullman Company:

"Chicago, Ill., November 26, 1888. Pullman's Palace Car Company, Chicago, Ills.—Gentlemen: The Ohio & Western Coal & Iron Company, for convenience hereinafter called the, 'coal company,' hereby proposes to furnish you with coal of the kind and quality hereinafter mentioned, for steam and hammer shop purposes at your works at Pullman, Ills., until June 1st, 1889; the coal to be of the best Ohio XX Shawnee, uniform in quality, and free from dirt, stone, slate, and other impurities, and subject to inspection and approval of your representative at Pullman, at the following price, f. o. b. cars at Pullman Junction, Ills.: One and one-quarter (1¼) inch screened lump, three dollars ($3.00) per ton. Three-quarters (¾) inch screened lump, two dollars and ninety-five cents ($2.95) per ton. Screened nut, two dollars and sixty-five cents ($2.65) per ton. Payment to be made for the coal delivered in each month in cash on your regular pay day, namely, the 15th day of the second month following the deliveries. It is the intent and meaning of this agreement that the coal company shall at all times supply coal of proper quality, and in sufficient quantities, to fully meet your current requirements, and under all contingencies, and also for at least ten days beyond your current needs; and whenever it shall partially or wholly fail to do so, or whenever you shall have reason to believe it will fail to do so, then it is understood and agreed that you shall have the right, in anticipation of such failure, to purchase in the market the required quality and quantity of coal necessary for your use, and to charge to the coal company any sum that the cost of such coal is in excess of the price herein agreed upon, which the coal company agrees to pay you. It is also understood and agreed that the above prices shall also apply to all coal that the coal company has furnished you since the completion of the delivery of coal under contract between our respective companies dated November 7, 1887, and that the coal company shall refund to you the amount you have paid it in excess of the price above named during said period. It is further agreed that, in the event the freight rates on the coal furnished under this contract between the coal mines of this company and Pullman Junction shall at any time during the continuance of this agreement be less than $2.00 per ton of 2,000 lbs., this company will at once notify you of such fact; and from the date of such reduction, and so long as it may continue, you will be entitled to a credit on the price of each ton of coal furnished equal to the difference between such reduced rate and the rate of $3.00 per ton. Your written acceptance of this proposition will make the contract mutually binding upon both companies hereto. Executed in duplicate. The Ohio and Western Coal and Iron Company, By W. C. Wyman.

"Approved: James A. Hall, Vice Pres't.

"Accepted: Pullman Palace Car Company, by George F. Brown, General Manager."

After the execution of this agreement the coal sold and delivered thereunder was shipped by the coal and iron company from its mines in Ohio to the Pullman company, at Pullman, Ill.,—the Pullman company, or one of its agents, being in all cases named as the consignee,—and the contract price was credited by that company, on its books, to the iron and coal company. The indebtedness thus created, prior to that in controversy here, seems to have been collected from the Pullman company by Wyman, and by him remitted to Glidden & Curtis. But, at the time the order in favor of the First National Bank of Columbus was drawn, no attempt so far as appears, had been made by Wyman to collect of the Pullman company the accounts for coal maturing February 15 and March 15, 1889; and the question is whether, under the facts proved, Glidden & Curtis had such a claim to or lien upon those accounts as precluded the coal and iron company from appropriating or assigning them for the purpose of paying or securing the $20,000 loan. The claim is now made that the form in which the instrument of November 26, 1888, above set forth, purporting to be an agreement between the coal and iron company and the Pullman company, was executed, was a mistake; that it was drawn up by the Pullman company, and that, when presented to Wyman to be executed, the typewritten signature of the coal and iron company was already at the bottom of it, and that Wyman hastily and unadvisedly executed the instrument by adding his own signature to that of the company, already typewritten, although it was his intention to execute it on behalf of Glidden & Curtis, and that it should be treated as the contract of Glidden & Curtis, and not that of the coal and iron company. It will be noticed that the mistake, if there was one, was not in the signature alone, but that it pervades the entire instrument. The coal and iron company is named and referred to throughout as one of the contracting parties, and Glidden & Curtis are not referred to, either as principals, factors, selling agents, or in any other relation; and their signature to the instrument, without further explanation, would have been unmeaning. Even if it were admissible to change the legal effect of a written instrument by parol evidence, as is attempted to be done, proof that there was a mistake in the mode of signing comes quite short of obviating the difficulties which the tenor of the instrument presents. To accomplish the result contended for, the entire agreement must be reformed, and that, too, in such a way as to make it an agreement between other parties; and, even if that could be done by parol, there is no evidence in the record, so far as we are advised, upon which such reformation could be based. We see no sufficient ground for holding that this instrument was not executed precisely as it was intended to be, and that, so far as it goes, it does not truly represent the transactions and relations of the parties to which it applies. If, then, Glidden & Curtis were entitled to or had a lien upon the money due from the Pullman Company for coal February 15 and March 15, 1889, upon what was that right based? We are unable to see how it could result from the terms of the contract of November 8, 1887, except so far as that contract must be deemed to recognize the lien which the common law gives to factors upon the goods consigned to them for sale, and upon the proceeds thereof when sold. The only provision in the contract having any bearing upon the question is the one by which Glidden & Curtis agreed "to furnish advances on said corporation's products, according to its needs, to such extent as they shall consider themselves safely secured therefor, at current rates of interest and exchange." How this security was to be effected, is not stated, but the contract provides for a consignment of the products of the coal and iron company to Glidden & Curtis for sale on commission, thus constituting them the factors of the company, and it is left to be inferred that the security intended is the one which the law gives to factors. In no other way does the contract assume to pledge the products of the coal and iron company as security for such advances as Glidden & Curtis might make under it.

25 L. R. A.

This branch of the case, then, is reduced to the single inquiry whether, under the circumstances shown by the evidence, Glidden & Curtis were entitled to a factor's lien upon the particular coal sold to the Pullman company, and for which the indebtedness now in question accrued, or upon the proceeds of the coal after it was sold. Doubtless, if their agent had collected the money of the Pullman company, as he had the moneys due for previous sales, so as to get it into their possession, or that of their agent, before third parties had acquired liens upon it, they would have been entitled to hold it, and apply it in satisfaction of their advances to the coal and iron company. But that was not done. Were they entitled to a lien as factors? By the common law a factor has a general lien upon all the goods of his principal in his possession, and upon the price of such as are lawfully sold by him, and upon the securities received therefor, to secure the payment of the general balance of the accounts between himself and his principal, as well as for the advances, charges, and disbursements made upon or in reference to the particular goods. Mechem, Ag. § 1033; 3 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 833. But to obtain such lien the factor must have the goods lawfully in his possession. 3 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 835. Actual possession is of course sufficient, and delivery to the factor's own servant or agent will suffice. So, putting the goods upon the factor's dray to be drawn to his warehouse is a sufficient delivery. Mechem, Ag. § 1055. Some of the authorities go further, and hold that where, before the goods have come into the possession of the factor, he has made advances upon them, or incurred liabilities in respect thereto, potential or constructive possession is sufficient. Bishop, Cont. § 1140. Thus, while some of the cases hold that his lien will not attach until the goods are actually in his possession, others maintain the doctrine that, where advances have been made in reliance upon a promise to subsequently consign the goods, a delivery to a common carrier consigned to the factor is sufficient. Elliott v. Cox, 48 Ga. 39; Hardeman v. De Vaughn, 49 Ga. 596; Wade v. Hamilton, 80 Ga. 450; Mechem, Ag. § 1085.

But no cases can be found, we think, which hold that the factor's lien can attach to goods which have never come into his actual possession, and have never been consigned to him, but which have been delivered or consigned by the owner directly to the purchaser. In such case the possession of the factor,—if, indeed, as to such goods, he can be called a factor,—is not actual, nor is it constructive or potential. The goods do not come into his possession or under his control, nor is it within the contemplation of the parties that they should do so. The principal yields possession directly to the purchaser, and no possession of the goods or control over them by the factor intervenes. Such seems to have been the precise condition of things in the present case. The coal was all consigned by the coal and iron company directly to the Pullman company or its agent, and it never came into either the actual or constructive possession of Glidden & Curtis. True, there was an agreement on the part of the coal and iron company to consign all of its products to them for sale, but a mere agreement to consign does not operate as an assignment. If the agreement was broken in this respect, Glidden & Curtis had their remedy for a breach of contract, but it was only through the actual performance of the agreement that their factor's lien could arise. If it be admitted that Wyman, in executing the contract of November 26, 1888, between the coal and iron company and the Pullman company, acted in fact as the agent of Glidden & Curtis, and that the contract is to be treated as though executed on behalf of the coal and iron company by Glidden & Curtis, their relations to the coal and iron company in executing that contract would seem to be that of brokers rather than that of factors. That contract clearly contemplated the consignment of the coal to be delivered under it directly to the Pullman company, and not to Glidden & Curtis, and the mode in which the contract was afterwards carried out as clearly indicates that such was the understanding of the parties. One of the essential differences between a factor and a broker is that, while the former has the possession of the goods to be sold, the latter has not; and it therefore follows that the common-law lien, which necessitates and grows out of possession, is given to the former, but is denied to the latter.

We are of the opinion, then, that under the facts, as shown by the evidence, Glidden & Curtis had no lien upon the fund in question in this suit. The lien of the bank became perfected by notice to the Pullman company before any other lien attached, and their claim must therefore be paid first, with interest. After its payment the residue of the fund should be distributed among the four attachment creditors above named in the order of priority fixed by the statute.

The decree of the Circuit Court and the judgment of the Appellate Court will be reversed, and the cause will be remanded to the circuit court, with directions to enter a decree as above stated.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Minnesota, ex rel. W. H. CHILDS, Atty-Gen.,

v.
‘Village of MINNETONKA et al.

(.....Minn.....)

*1. “Any district, sections, or parts of sections which has been platted into

*Headnotes by MITCHELL, J.

lots and blocks, also the land adjacent thereto . . . said territory containing a resident population of not less than 175, may become incorporated as a village.” Laws 1885, chap. 145. Held, that “lands adjacent thereto” include only those which lie so near the center or nucleus of population on the platted lands as to be somewhat suburban in their character, and to have some community of interest with the platted portion in the maintenance of a village government. The act does not authorize the incorporation

NOTE.—Physical characteristics necessary to municipal organization.

If the legislature itself undertakes to create a municipality the number of inhabitants and the size and character of the territory embraced in it are of very little importance.

For in the absence of special constitutional provisions the power of the legislature to fix the boundaries of municipalities is uncontrollable by the courts. Martin v. Dix, 52 Miss. 53, 24 Am. Rep. 661.

The legislature may fix any boundaries which it chooses. Norris v. Waco, 57 Tex. 635.
25 L. R. A.

The legislature may alter and change boundaries at will. Galesburg v. Hawkinson, 75 Ill. 152.

The propriety of establishing a municipal corporation and of including within its boundaries a particular territory, is in general a political question for the legislative part of the government. If the course pursued in establishing a municipality is substantially such as is pointed out by the law the courts do not interfere. People v. Riverside, 70 Cal. 461.

The legislature might compel the acceptance of municipal organization at its pleasure regardless of the wishes of the people, or of the character of the of large tracts of rural territory having no natural connection with any village and no adaptability to village purposes.

2. Ordered that a writ of ouster issue.

(June 15, 1894.)

PETITION for a writ of quo warranto to oust the defendant village from exercising the privileges of a municipal corporation. Granted.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Mr. Charles E. Vanderburgh, for the State:

The Act of 1885, providing for the incorporation of villages, is unconstitutional, for the following reasons:

1. Because it delegates legislative functions to thirty electors, private citizens, residing upon the lands to be incorporated.

2. Because it is in violation of article 3 of the Constitution, which declares that the "powers of the government shall be divided into three distinct departments, legislative, executive and judicial; and no person belonging to or constituting one of these departments, shall exercise any of the powers properly belonging to either of the others, except in the instances expressly provided in this constitution."

3. Because it violates section 1, article 9: "All taxes to be raised in this state shall be as nearly equal as may be; and all property on which taxes are to be levied, shall have a cash valuation, and be equalized and uniform throughout the state."

4. Because it violates section 13, article 1, of the Constitution, which declares that "private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation therefor, first paid or secured."

5. Because it violates section 7, article 1, of the Constitution, which declares that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law."

A village is a political subdivision of the state, a municipal corporation, the creation of which has been intrusted by the people to the legislature. This power residing in the legislature, cannot, however, be delegated by it to another person or body.

State v. Simons, 32 Minn. 542.

The legislature cannot confer upon any body or person the power to determine what the law shall be.

Ibid.; State v. Young, 29 Minn. 474; Cooley, Const. Lim. § 117; Shumway v. Bennett, 29 Mich. 451.

In Shumway v. Bennett, supra, the village law was declared unconstitutional, because it delegated to private citizens the legislative function of fixing boundaries and compelling the incorporation of separate villages and inter-inhabitants, or the territory for establishing useful manufactures. Paterson v. Society for Establishing Useful Manufactures, 24 N. J. L. 385.

But compulsory incorporation can come only from direct legislative action. People v. Bennett, 29 Mich. 451, 18 Am. Rep. 107.

And in Wisconsin there seems to be an inclination to restrict even the power of the legislature to some extent. For it has been held that a town cannot be made to consist of non-contiguous territory. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Oconto, 50 Wis. 189, 36 Am. Rep. 840.

And that an unoccupied tract of country nowhere adjoining a village cannot be made part of it for the purpose of increasing the revenues of the village. Smith v. Sherry, 50 Wis. 210.

If the legislature provides a general law under which municipalities may incorporate then the municipalities are held somewhat strictly within the terms of the statute, or if such terms are not definite the courts will give the statute a reasonable construction and hold the incorporation within such construction.

It has been held that if the legislature had provided that cities proposing to incorporate under a general law should be empowered to embrace territory lying beyond their actual limits, it may be that in the clear abuse of the power it would be the duty of the courts to respect the legislative will and to hold the incorporation including such additional territory valid. But if no such power is granted the court has the power to determine whether or not the attempted incorporation is one within the authority granted by the legislature. Ewing v. State, 81 Tex. 177.

So the legislature may make the question of incorporation depend on the determination of some persons to be designated by it, whose finding will be conclusive on the courts. State v. Goowin, 69 Tex. 55.

But in the absence of such statutory provisions which are sufficient to control the question the courts will not countenance unreasonable attempts at incorporation.

25 L. R. A.

A municipal corporation cannot cover territory already covered by a legal effective prior incorporation. State v. Winter Park, 25 Fla. 371; Taylor v. Fort Wayne, 47 Ind. 281.

A new corporation cannot be made to include a portion of an old one without direct legislative authority which shall extend to the restriction of the boundaries of the old one. Darby v. Sharon Hill, 112 Pa. 66.

So if the settlement has been recognized as a corporation by the legislature it must, under the New Jersey statutes, proceed in the way pointed out for incorporated villages to change their form in order to secure wider powers. State v. Van Valen, 56 N. J. L. 85.

The authority to incorporate has generally been applied to reach only those communities which have already become villages or dense settlements and which need nothing but corporate existence to complete their character. People v. Bennett, supra.

An attempted incorporation will be invalid if so much unoccupied land is embraced as to indicate a fraud on the law, or which cannot be fairly treated as part of the town. McCleskey v. State, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 323.

Territory containing a town covering not more than two square miles of territory is not authorized to incorporate an area of twenty-eight square miles including farms, ranches, and unoccupied tracts of land. State v. Eldson, 7 L. R. A. 733, 76 Tex. 308.

A city covering two miles square cannot incorporate territory to the extent of ten miles square including farms and unoccupied country. Ewing v. State, supra; Mathews v. State, 82 Tex. 577.

In Pennsylvania the court has no authority to incorporate three square miles of territory containing two settlements, one of which opposes the incorporation, and also containing for the most part unoccupied farm land not connected by lines of buildings or improvements with the villages. Re Larksville, 7 Kulp, 84; Re Swoyeraville, 5 Kulp, 191.

There may be in any township a small region vening farms against consent and without any opportunity for hearing.

See also Dillon, Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 188.

The legislature here proposes to put it in the power of a small hamlet to provide itself with conveniences, the greater portion of the expense of which it taxes upon farm lands which cannot possibly have any benefit from or connection with such conveniences; it amounts to a gift to the hamlet, and the imposition of a tax upon other territory for the purpose of raising the money necessary to purchase the gift. The law allowing such a condition of things is unconstitutional and void.

Sunburn v. Rice County Comrs. 9 Minn. 278.

The unplatted lands are not adjacent to the platted lands, and there is no one body of platted lands which, with the lands adjacent thereto, contains a resident population of one hundred and seventy-five persons.

Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Williams, 27 Ill. 48; Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Spangler, 71 Ill. 568; Smith v. Sherry, 50 Wis. 210; Enterprise v. State, 29 Fla. 128; Dillon, Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 188.

As used in the act, the word "adjacent" has a well known and clearly defined meaning. It means "lying close, bordering upon, or adjoining."

People v. Schermerhorn, 19 Barb. 540; Re Municipality No. 2 for Opening of Roffignac Street, 7 La. Ann. 76; Continental Imp. Co. v.

Phelps, 47 Mich. 299; Re Little Meadows, 28 Pa. 256; Re West Philadelphia, 5 Watts & S. 281; Vestal v. Little Rock, 11 L. R. A. 778, 54 Ark. 321.

The organization was void, because the statute was not complied with.

Potter's Dwar, Stat. 224; Corwin v. Merritt, 8 Barb. 841; People v. Brooklyn, 23 Barb. 404; Sherman v. Dodge, 6 Johns. Ch. 107, 2 L. ed. 69.

Where the state is proceeding against a de facto municipal corporation by quo warranto, and the respondent admits that it is exercising a municipal franchise, and claims the right to do so, the burden rests upon it to show a grant of power, and that it has brought itself within the prescribed legislative conditions.

State v. Parker, 25 Minn. 219; High, Extr. Legal Rem. § 712; State v. Sharp, 27 Minn. 39; State v. McReynolds, 61 Mo. 211.

Under general laws, "the authority to incorporate is usually restricted to cases in which communities more or less dense and populous already exist, which require a corporate character to exercise the powers of local government."

Where the legislature exercises the power by direct legislation, it may probably include such lands as it deems proper within the limits of a municipal corporation; but where the power is delegated it is usually restricted to the populous districts and lands immediately contiguous.

densely populated with more people than all the rest. Any question on which they united could be carried by their votes at a township election; but it would be tyrannical to allow them to determine for themselves what property should be made tributary to their local interests in which the rest of the town had no concern. People v. Bennett, supra.

There can be no incorporation of a tract of country one and three-fourths miles square, some of the lines of which run through a wilderness, where it is not shown what the number of inhabitants is. Re Little Meadows, 28 Pa. 256, 35 Pa. 336.

Under the statute permitting incorporation of villages containing 800 inhabitants, to make up that number it is not permissible to include two distinct collections of houses with a tract of farm land lying between them. Re West Philadelphia, 5 Watts & S. 281.

In Osgood v. Clark, 26 N. H. 307, it was held that under the New Hampshire statutes the whole village must be included in the incorporation.

The legislature cannot give municipal corporations the power to arbitrarily fix its own limit so as to absorb so much of the property and so many of the people of the county as it may suit their wishes to make subject to their taxation and ordinances. Prince George's County Comrs. v. Bladensburg, 51 Md. 465.

The inhabitants of a hamlet, village, or town, recognized by the Florida statutes as a community of persons authorized to form a municipal government, include persons living on contiguous territory, and an attempt to incorporate two distinct detached tracts of land as corporate territory under one government is unauthorized and void. Enterprise v. State, 29 Fla. 128.

In Ashley v. Calliope, 71 Iowa, 465, it was held that if a village incorporates territory two miles long by a mile wide, and a rival village afterwards springs up in a portion of the territory so included and the interests of the villages, whose centers are a mile apart, are antagonistic, and the land lying between them is not platted, a severance of the two shall be granted upon the petition of the inhabitants of the second village.

In People v. Bennett, 29 Mich. 451, 18 Am. Rep. 107, where a hamlet sought to incorporate with itself a hamlet a mile away and about one thousand acres of farm land, the court held that the law which permitted them to determine absolutely what the size of the municipality would be and what it would include, was void.

Under the New York statutes, to entitle a village to incorporate there must be at least 800 inhabitants, and if it contains more than one square mile of territory there must be 800 additional for each additional square mile or fraction thereof. Re Elba, 30 Hun, 548.

The Florida statutes provide for reducing the territory of a municipality if there is included in it an undue amount of vacant farm land. Jacksonville v. L'Engle, 20 Fla. 344.

The extent and character of the land are not per se controlling objections if the persons to be affected unite in the petition. Re Blooming Valley, 56 Pa. 66.

There is no designation as to number of inhabitants required under the Pennsylvania statutes passed in 1861 and 1863. Re Sewickley, 36 Pa. 30.

Three centers of population may be incorporated into one borough if they virtually form but one village connected by three main highways and the intervening lands are not used exclusively for farm purposes but some of them are already divided into building lots. Re Yeaton, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 609.

A ravine dividing two centers of population is not such a natural barrier as to prevent including both in one village, if the inhabitants of both demand it, and if such action will not remove part of the territory from its natural place as a part of some other municipality. Re Edgewood, 130 Pa. 348.

An Indian reservation may be included in the boundaries of a town. Schriber v. Langlade, 68 Wis. 616.

H. P. F.

15 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 1011.

Such general legislation must receive a strict construction; and any ambiguity or doubt arising out of the terms used by the legislature must be construed against the corporation.

Boone, Corp. § 26.

The petitioners cannot arbitrarily fix boundaries, and in case the boundaries are clearly unwarranted or unreasonable, there is a departure from the statute, and an abuse of the incorporating power. No franchise passes, and the proceedings are void.

The petitioners fix the boundaries, and the county commissioners have nothing to do with that matter. They can determine nothing which the legislature has not authorized them to do.

Boeing v. State, 81 Tex. 172.

The course pursued must be such as is pointed out by the statute.

People v. Riverside, 70 Cal. 468.

The word "adjacent" in the connection found in the statute, is used in the obvious sense of contiguous and adjoining in—

Re Camp Hill, 142 Pa. 511.

There can be no inflexible rule to determine when the incorporated territory is unreasonable in extent; that will depend upon the facts of each case.

State v. Eklund, 7 L. R. A. 738, 76 Tex. 308;

Boeing v. State, 81 Tex. 178.

The question of boundaries is jurisdictional in its nature.

Page v. Los Angeles County Supra, 85 Cal.

54; People v. Riverside, 68 Cal. 290.

In a case of a clear abuse of the power to fix the corporate limits, in an attempt to incorporate under the general law, the court will not hesitate to annul the proceedings.

Vestal v. Little Rock, 11 L. R. A. 778, 54

Ark. 831; Boeing v. State, 81 Tex. 177; State

v. Baird, 79 Tex. 64; People v. Riverside, supra.

Messrs. H. W. Childs, Atty-Gen., Resa,

Hubachek & Healy and A. D. Smith also for the State.

Messrs. Young, Fish & Dickinson and Hale, Morgan & Montgomery, for respondents:

This act has been before the court upon various points, in at least the following cases:

State v. Cornwall, 85 Minn. 176; State v.

Spaude, 87 Minn. 322; Bradish v. Lucken, 88

Minn. 186; Stemper v. Higgins, 88 Minn. 222;

Baldwin v. Robinson, 89 Minn. 244; Bradley

v. West Duluth, 45 Minn. 4; St. James v.

Hingten, 47 Minn. 521.

Many cases have also been reported, to which such villages were parties, and in which public and private rights have been determined.

Wayzata v. Great Northern R. Co. 50 Minn. 488; Buffalo v. Harling, Id. 551.

Considering these frequent interpretations, the extent of such litigation and the very large number of villages now existing under the act, it would at this late day be as surprising as disastrous to destroy the legislative foundation upon which all such villages stand.

The legislature may, in the exercise of its undoubted power to create village corporations, leave it to the people immediately concerned, and to the local authorities, to determine for themselves, under specified conditions and on proper terms, whether territory of their selection shall be formed into such corporation or not.

The acceptance or rejection of city charters, the location of county seats, the division of counties, towns, and school districts and many local concerns of similar character, have habitually been made to depend upon a vote of the resident electors.

8 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 698; State v. Hennepin County Dist. Ct. 88 Minn. 235; Cooley, Const. Lim. § 141; 1 Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 44; State v. Cooke, 24 Minn. 247, 51 Am. Rep. 844.

In the case at bar, no power to legislate is delegated.

1 Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 41.

The term "adjacent" is not restrictive, but the contrary. It is not a measure of space or distance.

United States v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 29 Alb. L. J. 24.

As the corporators have a special and peculiar interest in the question whether they shall originally be or afterwards remain incorporated at all or not, and as the burdens of municipal government must rest upon their shoulders, and especially as by becoming incorporated they are held, in law, to undertake to discharge the duties the charter imposes, it seems eminently proper that their decision should be conclusive, unless for strong reasons of state policy or local necessity it should seem important for the state to overrule the opinion of the local majority.

Cooley, Const. Lim. *118.

Whether cities, towns, or villages should be incorporated, and, if incorporated, whether enlarged or contracted, in boundaries, presents no question of law or fact for judicial determination.

Galesburg v. Hawkinson, 75 Ill. 157.

Mitchell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is conceded that the respondent exists, if at all, by virtue of the petition and other exhibits attached to the information, and purporting to be proceedings under Laws 1885, chap. 145, entitled "An act to provide for the incorporation of villages," etc. The language of the statute is: "Any district, sections, or parts of sections which has been platted into lots and blocks, also the lands adjacent thereto, . . . said territory containing a resident population of not less than 175, may become incorporated as a village." The territory claimed to have been incorporated as the village of Minnetonka is that inclosed in blue pencil lines on the map annexed to the information. It lies between the western boundary of the city of Minneapolis and the eastern shore of Lake Minnetonka, and contains nearly 85 square miles, being nearly equal in area to a full government township. Within this territory there were, at the time of its alleged incorporation, 17 or more tracts which had been platted, as indicated on the map, into lots and blocks, but these were in no way connected, but were separated, each from the other, by quite an extent of farm or uncultivated lands; and one peculiarity of the petition is that it does not indicate which of these numerous plats was to be the nucleus of the proposed village. Many of these platted tracts are entirely vacant and uninhabited, and on most of the others there are only a very few permanent inhabitants, not sufficient to constitute a "village," in the popular and ordinary sense of the word. The only one which has inhabitants enough to constitute any considerable nucleus of either business or population is "Minnetonka Mills," situated on section 15. This contains about twenty families, and a population variously estimated from 60 to 105, and, together with the whole of sections 14 and 15, contains a population of only about 120. There are several post-offices, and as many as eight railway stations, within the boundaries of the alleged village. There is a considerable number of summer cottages and boarding houses along the shore of Lake Minnetonka, but these are mainly occupied by temporary summer visitors, who have no business or other relations with "Minnetonka Mills" during their sojourn. The northwesterly part of the territory is naturally tributary to the considerable village of Wayzata, situated just outside of the respondent village; while the southwesterly portion is in like manner tributary to the village of West Minneapolis, just outside its east boundary. There are 23 sections, including the south 10, within the boundaries of the corporation, which contain neither platted lands nor collections of houses in the nature of villages. The greater part of the resident population is strictly rural or agricultural, and the greater part of its territory consists of either wild lands or cultivated farms, of which there are about 150. It is apparent that this large territory, essentially rural, has no fitness for village government, and absolutely no community of interest in respect to the purposes for which such a government is designed.

The validity of respondent's incorporation is assailed on the grounds (1) that the act is unconstitutional; (2) that the act does not authorize the incorporation of such territory into a village. The point made against the validity of the act is that the legislature has neither itself determined how much or what character of land shall be included in a village, nor delegated the power to do so to any proper subordinate official body, but has left it wholly to the arbitrary determination of any 30 private citizens who may sign the petition, subject only to the conditions that the territory contains a population of 175, and that there be somewhere within its boundaries a tract of land platted into lots and blocks, and that the majority of the electors, within the territory whose boundaries are thus arbitrarily fixed by the petitioners, vote in favor of incorporation. It would be difficult to sustain the act if the word "adjacent," as used in the third section, is to be given the meaning contended for by the respondent, for under such a construction it would be left to the petitioners, subject only to the above limitations, to arbitrarily determine how much and what character of territory should be included in the proposed village. They might include a rural territory 50 or 25 L. R. A.

100 miles square, provided "they did not skip over any as they advanced." But clearly this was not the intention of the legislature. The purpose evidently was to authorize the incorporation of "villages," in the ordinary and popular sense, and not to clothe large rural districts with extended municipal powers, or subject them to special municipal taxation for purposes for which they were wholly unsuited. A "village" means an assemblage of houses, less than a town or city, but nevertheless urban or semiurban in its character; and the object of the law was to give these aggregations of people in a comparatively small territory greater powers of self-government and of enacting police regulations than are given to rural communities under the township laws. The law evidently contemplates, as a fundamental condition to a village organization, a compact center or nucleus of population on platted lands; and, in view of the expressed purposes of the act, it is also clear that by the term "lands adjacent thereto" is meant only those lands lying so near and in such close proximity to the platted portion as to be suburban in their character, and to have some unity of interest with the platted portion in the maintenance of a village government. It was never designed that remote territory, having no natural connection with the village, and no adaptability to village purposes, should be included. Whether the word "adjacent" is to be given a more limited and definite meaning of universal application, or whether, as is my own impression, there is no inflexible rule, except the general one already laid down, as to what lands are adjacent, and that each case will depend somewhat on its own particular facts, it is not necessary to consider in the present case. There is no difficulty in determining, as a matter of law, that this territory is not "adjacent," within any meaning of the word, and that its attempted incorporation into a village was wholly unauthorized by the act.

Let a writ of ouster issue.

Buck and Canty, JJ., took no part.

STATE of Minnesota, Resp't.,
v.

Frank S. HOSKINS, App't.

STATE of Minnesota, Resp't.,
v.

Dow S. SMITH, App't.

(..... Minn. ....)

*Laws 1893, chap. 63, entitled "An act to compel street railway companies to protect certain of their employes from the inclemency of the weather," is constitutional.

*Headnote by GILFILLAN, Ch. J.

NOTE.—Constitutionality of laws to secure safety and comfort of employes.

In the case of STATE V. HOSKINS the court holds that this act to protect street railway employes is not invalid on the ground of class legislation, that

(June 28, 1894.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Municipal Court of St. Paul convicting him of violating the provisions of the statute requiring street railway companies to protect their employes from the inclemency of the weather. Affirmed.

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Municipal Court of Minneapolis convicting him of violating the provisions of the statute requiring street railway companies to protect their employes against the inclemency of the weather. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Munn, Boyeson & Thygeson for appellant Hoskins.

Messrs. Koon, Whelan & Bennett for appellant Smith.

Messrs. H. W. Childs, Atty. Gen., Frank M. Nye, and Pierce Butler for the state.

Gillilan, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In these two cases the validity of Laws 1893, chap. 63, entitled "An act to compel street railway companies to protect certain of their employes from the inclemency of the weather," is called in question. That act requires of street-railway companies operating electric, cable, or steam cars, requiring the constant service of persons on any part of the cars except the rear platform, to provide each car with an inclosure, constructed of wood, iron, and glass, or similar suitable material, sufficient to protect such employes from exposure to the inclemency of the weather, but not so as to obstruct the vision of the person operating the car, at all times between November 1st and April 1st in each year. What are called "trailing cars" are excluded from this requirement, so that it applies only to cars on which the motive power is operated or controlled. The law was passed with reference to the fact that the man operating or controlling the motive power of such cars was required to stand where his person was almost wholly exposed to cold, storm, and wind, having but little protection except such as the clothing affords. The act is assailed as unconstitutional, on the grounds—First. That it is not an exercise of the police power of the state. Second. It is class legislation. Third. It impairs the obligation of a contract. Fourth. It interferes with the liberty of contract between street-railway companies and their employes. Fifth. It imposes an excessive fine.

It is stipulated as a fact, what everybody knows, that electric cars are run at a rate of speed of from four to fifteen miles an hour, and at an average rate of between eight and nine miles an hour. Any one acquainted with the extreme cold of much of the weather in this climate between the 1st of November and the 1st of April, and who knows, as everybody does, that the motorman on an electric car is obliged to stand in one place, always on the alert, his whole attention given to the means of controlling the motive power and the brake, and to looking out ahead, and unable, with due regard to his duties, to give attention to protecting himself from the cold, must appreciate that, when going at the rate of eight or nine miles an hour, perhaps against a head wind, and with the mercury below zero, the position of the motorman is one not merely of discomfort, but of actual danger to health, and sometimes to life, and the tendency of which is to disable him to some extent to perform his duties in the way that care to safety of his passengers and of travelers on the streets requires. It has never been questioned that the police power of the state extends to regulating the use of dangerous machinery, with a view to protecting, not only others, but those who are employed to use it; and if it be conceded, as it must be, that the state may intervene by regulations in such a case, we do not see why it may not in such a case as this. The act is within the police power. When a subject is within that power, the extent to which it shall be exercised, and the regulations to effect the desired end, are generally wholly in the discretion of the legislature. The legislature might in this case have required the use of the prescribed inclosure only at such times when the cold reached a certain degree, or when storms prevailed, but it was thought fit to make sure of the result aimed at by covering the time of year when extreme cold and bitter storms may occur at any time; and that was within its exclusive province.

The objection that this is class legislation is based on the fact that the act is confined to street-cars propelled by cable, steam, or the care and control of the cars by the employes, allowing protection from the weather, is different with cars propelled by motors as distinguished from those drawn by horses; and it is further held not to impair the obligation of the contract, where the contract only required cars of the best modern style and construction; on the ground that this contract is held to be subservient to the police power of the state and there is nothing in the act showing that the state intended to yield up the police power.

A great many states have laws affecting employes and workingmen, as factory inspection laws, mining safety acts, fire escapes and the like; but the decisions regarding the validity of these acts are very few. It seems to be admitted that where the state has passed a law for the safety and health of employes that is reasonable, such laws have been generally unchallenged as regards their validity
25 L. R. A.

The Pennsylvania Act of March 8, 1871, for ventilation of coal mines, is constitutional as it is within the police power of the state and only means that the operators of coal mines shall so work them as not to injure the health nor endanger the lives of employes. Com. v. Bonnell, Jr. 3 Phila. 534.

The Illinois Act of May 23, 1879, entitled miners providing for escapement shafts, was passed in obedience to Ill. Const., art. 4, § 29, and was for the health and safety of employes and not for the benefit of owners. Loose v. People, 11 Ill. App. 445.

But in Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 60 Am. Rep. 639, it was held that the New York Act, Laws 1884, chap. 272, prohibiting the manufacture of cigars and the preparation of tobacco in any form in tenement houses in certain cases was unconstitutional as not within the police power, and was not made for the health and safety of employes and was not a health law.

electricity, and does not include street-cars drawn by mules and horses, or carriages or wagons; and it is assumed that here is an attempt at purely arbitrary classification for the purpose of the act. The evil sought to be remedied does not exist in case of the slowly going mule or horse car, or carriage or wagon, to the same degree as in the case of cable, electric, or steam cars. But, where an evil exists in a variety of cases, it is a sufficient ground for classification in legislating, so as to include some and exclude others, that in the former the evil can be remedied, while in the latter it cannot be. The man in control of the cable, electric, or steam railway car may be boxed in without impairing his power of control in the slightest degree; but to box in the driver of a horse or mule car, or of a stagecoach or carriage or wagon, separating him from his animals, while of course it could be done, would bring about greater evils than those sought to be remedied. The difference in this respect between cars included in this act and those not included is such as to justify difference in legislating.

The claim that the act impairs the obligation of a contract is based on the fact that in each case the railway company had a contract with the city, made before the passage of the act, in which the former bound itself to run cars of "the best modern style and construction," and this act requires something in addition thereto. We need only say of that, where parties contract on matters within the police power of the state, they do so subject to the exercise of that power whenever the legislature chooses to exercise it. If one contract with the state or a municipal corporation, acting under authority of the state, even if it were conceded that the legislature can, by contract or by giving authority to make a contract, bind the state not to exercise the police power, the legislative intent to do so would have to appear unmistakably. There is nothing to suggest such intent in the charter of either city.

What we have said on the third point made by appellants applies with equal force to the fourth.

The act imposes a fine of not less than $50, nor more than $100, for a violation of the law, and makes each day that cars shall be run without complying with the law a separate offense. A fine of from $50 to $100 could not be called excessive. It is true the party may, by repeatedly committing the offense, add up a large aggregate of fines; so might the offender against any other law,—the law against larceny or embezzlement, or any other; but that would not make the punishment excessive.

Judgments affirmed.

Collins and Buck, JJ., took no part in the decision.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COURT OF APPEALS.

William W. AVERELL

v.

SECOND NATIONAL BANK OF WASHINGTON, Appl.

(.....D. C. App. ....)

1. Testimony that if a post-dated check had been presented during business hours it would not have been received as a deposit, is not admissible upon the question whether or not when presented after business hours the bank agreed to apply to its payment any funds standing to the drawer's credit when it became due and hold them subject to the check of the holder.

2. One who goes into a bank after business hours, and finds in a room used for the transaction of business after usual hours the paying teller of such bank, who is the only officer with whom he is acquainted, and deposits with such teller for collection a post-dated check upon such bank upon the teller's promise to hold the proceeds subject to his check, the transaction being substantially in the presence of the cashier though he is separated by a wire partition, is entitled to hold the bank liable.—especially where such teller has, to the knowledge of the cashier, occasionally acted as receiving teller, and the depositor is not aware of any limitations upon his authority.

3. A bank which receives a post-dated check upon itself for collection, under a promise to hold the proceeds subject to the check of the depositor, is liable to the latter where, when the bank opens on the day of the date of such check, the drawer has funds sufficient to discharge the debt, although at the closing hour on such day the account of the drawer is overdrawn.

(March 5, 1894.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of a Special Term of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in favor of plaintiff, in an action for money had and received. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. W. F. Mattingly, for appellant:

There is no privity of contract between the

NOTE.—The above case is peculiar in the fact that the check deposited with the drawee bank was post-dated and not yet due as well as in the fact that the transaction was after banking hours, but these facts do not seem to have been particularly considered. Whether such a deposit of a check with the bank on which it is drawn be regarded in any case as a deposit for collection or as a deposit with a conditional acceptance and credit to be charged back if not paid, is a question which does not seem to be very material although in some of the cases cited above the transaction is spoken of as a deposit for collection, while in others it is regarded as a deposit for credit or payment. The important point is that the bank must regard it as paid by the first funds in its possession which may be applied thereon.

As to indorsement of a check "for deposit," see note to Ditch v. Western Nat. Bank of Baltimore (Md.) 23 L. R. A. 164.

holder of a check and the bank on which it is drawn. The bank owes no duty and is under no obligation to the holder, and he cannot sue the bank for refusing payment in the absence of proof that the check was accepted by the bank or charged against the drawer.

National Bank of the Republic v. Millard, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 152, 19 L. ed. 897; First Nat. Bank of Washington v. Whitman, 94 U. S. 243, 24 L. ed. 229.

Drinkard, the paying teller, was the agent of the plaintiff and not of the bank. The check might as well have been left with the janitor or any other employé of the bank. No banking corporation will be safe if such acts could be construed an acceptance of commercial paper by a bank.

Morrow v. James, 8 Mackey, 27, 4 Mackey, 59; Morse, Banks & Banking, § 174a; Thatcher v. Bank of the State of New York, 5 Sandf. 122; Manhattan Co. v. Lydig, 4 Johns. 377, 4 Am. Dec. 289; Clarks Nat. Bank v. Bank of Albion, 52 Barb. 592; Pickle v. Muse, 7 L. R. A. 98, 88 Tenn. 880; First Nat. Bank of Lyons v. Ocean Nat. Bank, 60 N. Y. 278, 19 Am. Rep. 181; Security Bank of New York v. National Bank of the Republic, 67 N. Y. 458, 23 Am. Rep. 129; Bullard v. Randall, 1 Gray, 605, 61 Am. Dec. 483; Wyman v. Hollowell Bank, 14 Mass. 58, 7 Am. Rep. 194; Terrell v. Branch Bank at Mobile, 12 Ala. 502; State v. Commercial Bank of Manchester, 6 Smedes & M. 218, 45 Am. Dec. 280; Franklin Bank v. Steward, 87 Me. 519.

A bank has the undoubted right to reject or accept a depositor.

Morse, Banks & Banking, § 178.

There can be no such thing as an acceptance of a post-dated check.

Morse, Banks & Banking, § 889c.

Messrs. A. A. Birney and E. A. Newman, for appellee:

The question is, Was Mr. Drinkard acting within the apparent scope of his agency, and did General Averell have the right to believe him empowered to do what he did?

And this is the rule even though the act is in fact fraudulent, provided the customer has no knowledge of the fraud, but is himself dealing bona fide, and believes the official to be dealing in like good faith in the business of his principal.

Morse, Banks & Banking, p. 205.

Those dealing with a bank in good faith have a right to presume integrity on the part of its officers when acting within the apparent sphere of their duties, and the bank is bound accordingly.

Merchants Nat. Bank of Boston v. State Nat. Bank of Boston, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 650, 19 L. ed. 1020; Farmers & M. Bank of Kent County v. Butchers & Drovers Bank, 16 N. Y. 125, 69 Am. Dec. 678; Barnes v. Ontario Bank, 19 N. Y. 156; East River Nat. Bank v. Gove, 57 N. Y. 597; Hotchkiss v. Artisans Bank, 42 Barb. 517; Munn v. Burch, 25 Ill. 35; Lloyd v. West Branch Bank, 15 Pa. 172, 53 Am. Dec. 581.

In the case of a deposit of a check drawn upon itself the bank becomes at once the debtor of the depositor, and the title to the deposit passes to the bank.

Oddie v. National City Bank, 45 N. Y. 735, 25 L. R. A.

6 Am. Rep. 160; Tinkham v. Heyworth, 31 Ill. 519.

If at the time the holder hands in the check he demands to have it placed to his credit and is informed that it shall be done, or if he holds any other species of conversation which practically amounts to demanding and receiving a promise of a transfer of credit as equivalent to an actual payment, the effect will be the same as if he had received his money in cash, and the bank's indebtedness to him for the amount will be equally fixed and irrevocable.

First Nat. Bank of Cincinnati v. Burkhardt, 100 U. S. 686, 25 L. ed. 766.

In the case of checks not good when presented, either for lack of funds or because the check is not due, the bank, if it receives the check for collection from itself, will be bound so soon as the check is payable and there are funds to meet it, and the depositor may sue as for money had and received.

Bank of New Hanover v. Kenan, 76 N. C. 345; Kilsby v. Williams, 5 Barn. & Ald. 815; Morse, Banks & Banking, p. 321; Oddie v. National City Bank, 45 N. Y. 735, 6 Am. Rep. 160; National Gold Bank & Trust Co. v. McDonald, 51 Cal. 64; City Nat. Bank of Selma v. Burns, 68 Ala. 375, 44 Am. Rep. 198; First Nat. Bank of Cincinnati v. Burkhardt, supra.

The evidence showed that Mr. Drinkard had repeatedly performed acts like that in question, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the cashier. This was enough to entitle the court to leave to the jury the question of his authority.

Morse, Banks & Banking, p. 206; Merchants Nat. Bank of Boston v. State Nat. Bank of Boston, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 604, 19 L. ed. 1008.

The action is not upon the check. It is a suit for money had and received based upon the duty of the bank to carry to the credit of the plaintiff on the 19th of May the amount of the check, there being then sufficient funds to the credit of the drawer.

Kilsby v. Williams, supra; Munn v. Burch, 25 Ill. 35.

Shepard, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for money had and received. On May 16, 1884, one George H. Levis, in the city of Washington, a depositor of the defendant bank, executed and delivered two checks on said bank, in the usual form, for $1,000 each, payable to the order of M. D. Helm, who, for value, on the same day endorsed them to the plaintiff Averell. One of these checks bore date as of the 18th of May. The check dated May 16th was paid by the bank on the same day after its closing hour, and this suit is to recover the amount of the second or post-dated check, with $2.05 protest fees.

The testimony of the plaintiff Averell, which was not contradicted, is substantially as follows:

"I had dealings with the defendant bank in reference to said checks on the 16th day of May, 1884. I received that check and another check for $1,000, one bearing date the 16th day of May, 1884, and the other bearing date the 18th day of May, 1884, from M. D.

Helm, about 8 o'clock, P. M. I went to the defendant bank to get them cashed, and arrived there about 8:30 P. M. The outside door of the bank was closed, but upon my knocking it was opened by the watchman of the bank and I was invited into the rear room occupied by the bank, through a door leading therein from the hall; I went into the rear part of said room occupied by the bank, and from there into a private compartment partitioned off from the main room of the bank; this private room was used by, and in connection with, and contiguous to the bank. While there I was approached by Mr. Robert M. Drinkard, one of the officers of the defendant bank, with whom I was acquainted, and he asked me what he could do for me. In reply I stated that my nephew was very ill in New York and that I was anxious to leave the city that evening to visit him and needed the money for that purpose. At his suggestion I endorsed the checks which I had received from Helm, as I have stated, and presented them to him for payment. Mr. Drinkard received them and immediately went to the counter of the bank, a few steps from the private apartment where I was, and returned with $1,000 in payment of the check dated May 16th, 1884. He then called my attention to the fact that the check dated May 18, 1884, was dated May 18th, which fell on Sunday, and would not be due and payable until Monday, May 19. I told Mr. Drinkard that I would not be in the city on the 19th of May, and he then said he would place it to my credit and that I could check against it. Thereupon, at his suggestion, I wrote my name in the signature book of the bank.

"Mr. Drinkard retained the check, and I left it with him with the distinct understanding that an account was opened between the bank and myself on the said check, and that the same was placed to my credit in the account.

"On or about the 23d day of May, 1884, I returned to the city of Washington and went to the bank for the purpose of getting some money, and while I was writing a check for it Mr. Drinkard called me to the counter and presented me with the check, with the protest attached thereto, and stated that it had been protested, and that there was due and payable to the bank the sum of $2.05 for the said protest, which I paid, and received the check and the certificate of protest.

"On the first visit the bank was closed for the day's business, but was opened to oblige me by admitting me to the rear entrance by a side door leading from the main hall. Mr. Drinkard and other officers of the bank were still busy with their books and papers when I arrived there."

It was further proved that on May 19 (the day of the maturity of the check in question) at the opening of the bank there was to the credit of Levis the sum of $5,126.48 subject to his checks. On that day the bank paid $3,928.83 on other checks of Levis, some of them bearing date that day, one of these being for $2,000. It also reserved the amount of two drafts on New York which it had discounted and forwarded for collection, one for $790.10, due May 17, the other for $801.20, due May 19, the latter being dishonored at 8 o'clock on that day.

The bank learned of the non-payment of the draft maturing May 17th by mail on the morning of the 19th about 9 o'clock. It learned of the non-payment of the second about its closing hour on the 19th. These drafts had been placed to the credit of Levis by the bank as cash; and the bookkeeper had been instructed by the cashier not to let his account be drawn below the amount thereof.

The bank had, besides the paying teller, Drinkard, a receiving teller and a collection clerk, the window of each of whom at the bank counter in front being indicated by a sign. Drinkard had been both paying and receiving teller up to 1879. Between that time and the date of the transaction in controversy, he had with the knowledge and acquiescence of the cashier, occasionally received deposits and opened up new accounts by taking the signatures of depositors in the "signature book." It was shown also that signatures were sometimes taken for the purpose of identifying that upon which the draft is cashed, or to preserve an address, etc.

Plaintiff had no account with the bank, and his name nowhere appeared on its books as a depositor. The usual course of business at the bank for depositors was to deliver post-dated or undue checks to the collection clerk, and those payable at once to the receiving teller to be charged to the drawer and credited to the depositor.

The small room in which Drinkard met plaintiff and received the check was separated from the main office by a wire partition, in which there was a door and a small arched opening for the passage of papers. It had a door also communicating with the president's room. Drafts had been cashed and deposits received in this room occasionally, after the regular closing hour; and it was customary at such times to transact business there with such customers as the bank was willing to accommodate.

The case has been tried three times in the special term, and twice, on appeal, in the general term of the supreme court of the District of Columbia. On the first trial the jury were directed to find for the defendant; but the judgment was reversed. 6 Mackey, 358.

On that trial the only evidence regarding the protest of the check on the 19th of May was the certificate of the notary that it had been presented at the bank for payment at the request of the bank. The trial justice was of the opinion that Drinkard was the agent of the plaintiff in the transaction and not of the bank. The court, in general term, reversed this judgment in a short opinion, in which great stress was laid upon the fact that the check was protested at the request of the bank, and that this was a ratification of the paying teller's act in receiving it for deposit to plaintiff's credit.

On the second trial proof was offered by the defendant tending to show that after 3 P. M. on Monday Drinkard, accompanied by the notary, carried the check to the cashier, and asked him what to do with it, and that the cashier suggested to him that he had better hand it to the notary, in order to save the rights of the parties and hold the indorser; in other words, that the protest was made for the benefit of the plaintiff. The trial justice, following, as he supposed, the opinion of the general term, submitted the case to the jury to find from the evidence whether the act of Drinkard had been recognized or ratified by the defendant, and refused an instruction, asked by defendant, to the effect that if the jury should believe the evidence above mentioned to be true, they would regard the protest as no evidence of ratification by the bank of the act of Drinkard; and further would find that, upon the evidence in the case, Drinkard was to be considered the agent of the plaintiff, and not of the bank. The jury found for the plaintiff and, on appeal, the general term held that the refusal of said instruction was error, and again reversed the judgment. 8 Mackey, 246. The court was of opinion that the additional evidence, explaining the protest, made a radical change in the case and took it out of the ruling upon the first appeal.

On this, the third trial (and for the first time), testimony was introduced respecting the time when defendant's cashier first learned of the possession of the check by Drinkard. The cashier was called by the plaintiff and testified as follows, as appears from the notes of his testimony in the bill of exceptions: "Q. When did you first learn of this check? A. I do not remember. I think I knew of it though before the 19th. I knew that the check was there on Mr. Drinkard's counter. Q. What did he tell you about it? A. I do not know that he told me anything of the fact. I knew that he had it in his possession. Q. You knew that it was in his possession? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did you know that General Averell's signature was upon the book of the bank? A. No, sir; that did not come to my knowledge until afterwards. Q. At what time? A. I cannot tell—I think when the inquiry began to be made there afterwards about the check; I do not think I had any knowledge; I do not remember that I had any knowledge of General Averell's signature being upon the book at all. Q. Well, can you state on what date you learned that Mr. Drinkard had it? A. I think that I knew that probably on the 16th; I think that I knew of it on the evening of the 16th; I had knowledge that he had that check in his possession. Q. On his desk? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did Mr. Drinkard tell you from whom he had received it? A. I think so; yes, sir. Q. That he had received it from General Averell? A. Yes, sir. Q. And did you know why he had it? A. No, sir; I knew nothing of the fact that he had gotten a check cashed there that evening. Q. He had one check cashed, and Mr. Drinkard had the other? A. Yes, sir. Q. You knew that the check did not belong to Mr. Drinkard, did you not? A. I did not think of it in that way. Q. Did you know at that time that that check was to be presented on the 19th? A. No, sir; I do not think I did, sir; it was a post-dated check that he had in his possession. Q. Did you know what he had it there for? A. The inference was that it was there to be paid, if I had thought of it at all?"

Upon the close of the testimony, the defendant prayed the court to instruct the jury that upon the whole evidence the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. This was refused, and the defendant excepted.

At the request of defendant the court gave the following special instructions to the jury; the first is the same for the refusal of which the judgment had been last reversed.

1. "If the jury believe from the evidence that Mr. Drinkard, the paying teller of the bank, after three o'clock on May 19, when there was no money to Levis' credit, as shown by the proof, in company with General Balloch, the notary, consulted Mr. Swain, the cashier, as to whether the check should be protested, and that the cashier stated to him that in order to save the rights of the parties to the check he had better have it protested, and Mr. Drinkard handed the check to the notary to protest it, that is not sufficient evidence of a ratification by the bank of the act of Drinkard, and will not enable the plaintiff to recover."

2. "If the jury believe from the evidence that the cashier of the defendant bank on the evening of the 16th of May, 1884, knew that the paying teller had possession of the check in question, and that it so remained in his possession, but the cashier did not know of any agreement or arrangement between the paying teller and the plaintiff, to the effect that said check should be placed to the credit of the plaintiff on the following Monday morning, subject to his check, then the same is not evidence from which an acceptance of said check by the bank may be inferred, and will not entitle the plaintiff to recover."

The court then gave the following special instruction at the request of the plaintiff:

"If the jury believe from the evidence that the check in question, bearing date on the 18th day of May, 1884, was deposited by the plaintiff with the defendant bank, and by it received through its officer, Drinkard, on the 16th day of May, 1884, to be placed to the plaintiff's credit, and further that the bank by its cashier knew of such transaction and assented thereto, and the same was in defendant's possession at the opening of the said bank on the 19th day of May, 1884, and that there were then sufficient funds to the credit of the drawer in said bank to pay the same, the plaintiff is entitled to recover, and the measure of his recovery should be the face of the check, one thousand dollars, and two dollars and five cents protest, with interest from the 23d day of May, 1884."

The court also gave another instruction in obedience to the opinion of the general term on the last appeal as follows: "Upon the evidence in the case, Drinkard, the paying teller, in receiving the check, is to be considered the agent of the plaintiff, and not the agent of the bank."

But this instruction, in order to harmonize with the instruction given on behalf of the plaintiff, was accompanied by this qualification:

"That is a true, and a correct statement of:

the law, that in receiving it, he was the agent of the plaintiff, and not the bank; yet Mr. Swain had the power and the right to convert Mr. Drinkard's act into the act of the bank; and the question for you to determine is, as I have said before, whether he did so or not, and in determining that question, you are to take into consideration all the facts and circumstances in the case."

To the addition of the foregoing qualification, as well as to the grant of the plaintiff's special prayer aforesaid, the defendant excepted.

The jury found for the plaintiff, and judgment was rendered for the full amount of the sum claimed, with interest. From this judgment the appeal has been duly prosecuted.

1. The first error assigned is based upon the refusal of the court to permit the defendant to prove by its cashier, who had been examined as a witness by plaintiff, that if the plaintiff had brought the post-dated check to the bank on the 16th or 17th, and presented it during business hours, it would not have been received as a deposit from him as a depositor and an account opened. There is no doubt that a bank has the right to reject or accept a depositor at will. Morse, Banks & Banking, § 178.

But this right was not in issue. The question to be determined by the jury was this: Did the defendant receive this check after business hours, for collection, out of any funds the drawer might have in its possession when it should become payable, and promise to hold the money when collected, to the plaintiff's credit and subject to his check? In other words, did the paying teller, Drinkard, receive the check from plaintiff for the purposes aforesaid; and did the cashier, with knowledge thereof, ratify or acquiesce in his action. The question was, what had been done under certain circumstances; not what might have been done under others. The evidence was not relevant, and the court was right in excluding it.

2. The doctrine is unquestioned that where a corporation is engaged in a business requiring the services of several agents, whose powers are limited and whose duties are separate and distinct, and a party knowingly deals with one of them in a matter beyond his authority, he cannot hold the principal bound by the agent's act unless the same shall have been ratified. Had the plaintiff met Drinkard away from the bank and intrusted the check to him, relying upon him to collect it and deposit the proceeds to his credit, clearly the bank would not have been bound by Drinkard's action, without some act of ratification. Under such circumstances Drinkard would be his own agent and not the bank's. Manhattan Co. v. Lydig, 4 Johns. 877, 4 Am. Dec. 289. The facts in this case, however, show that the check was delivered to the teller at the bank where he and all the officers of the bank were engaged in attention to their duties. He was the paying teller, it is true, but he had occasionally acted as receiving teller within the knowledge of the cashier and without any objection from him. By acquiescence of the principal in the exercise of authority beyond his agency the powers of a limited agent may sometimes become greatly extended. MERCHANTS NAT. BANK OF BOSTON v. STATE NAT. BANK OF BOSTON, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 604, 19 L. ed. 1008. If the facts in this record had all been before the general term on the last appeal before this, it is not probable that the court, in its opinion would have gone so far as it did in the limitation given to Drinkard's agency. That opinion, too, was based almost wholly upon the case of Thatcher v. Bank of the State of New York, 5 Sandf. 122, a decision by the supreme court of New York, the authority of which has since been overturned by the court of appeals in the well-considered case of East River Nat. Bank v. Gove, 57 N. Y. 597.

In that case the bank sued Gove to recover $1,100 that had been paid him by mistake. By some error he had been credited with that sum in excess of his deposits and had drawn it. When the mistake was discovered he was asked to return the money. Failing to do so for some days, the paying teller wrote him a note asking him to call and pay the amount due. Gove knew that there was both a paying and a receiving teller in the bank. He came to the bank and paid the money to the paying teller, who failed to report it. It does not appear where the receiving teller was at the time. The proof showed that the paying teller sometimes, in the absence of the receiving teller, had received money paid to or deposited in the bank. The bank was held bound by the receipt of the money by the teller. The court said: "Banks must be held responsible for the conduct of their officers within the scope of their apparent authority. When one goes into a bank and finds behind the counter one of its officers employed in the business, and upon his demand pays a debt due the bank, in good faith, without any knowledge that the officer's authority is so limited that he has no right to receive it, he must be protected and the bank must be bound by the payment." See also Munn v. Burch, 25 Ill. 85.

The principle governing the New York case seems to us to be both reasonable and just, and the facts of this case, as we find them in the record before us, are clearly within it. Averell was not a customer of the defendant. He was slightly acquainted with Drinkard, but knew no one else connected with the bank. He called after the doors were closed for the day, as others frequently did for the transaction of business, and was admitted and shown into the ante-room. This room was next the main office where the officers and clerks were still at work, and persons therein could see through the wire partition. Drinkard went to meet the plaintiff, ascertained his business and took the two checks which he presented. He went back to the main office, procured the money and paid the check which bore date that day. He retained the post-dated check, promising to pay it when due and enter it to plaintiff's credit as a deposit. As is usual in the case of receiving a deposit he brought out the "signature book" and had plaintiff to write his signature so that the genuineness of his checks might be established by comparison in case of need. These transactions were had, it may be said, in the very presence of the cashier, or more nearly so than similar transactions during the ordinary business opening of the bank.

Though not charged with the particular duty of receiving such checks for collection and deposit, Drinkard had nevertheless occasionally performed the duties of the receiving teller within the knowledge of the cashier and without his objection. It is not shown as a fact that the plaintiff intended to make Drinkard his own agent; nor does it appear that he was aware of any limitations upon his authority in that regard.

The cashier testified that he saw the check on Drinkard's desk on the same afternoon and knew that he had received it from plaintiff; that he did not think it belonged to Drinkard, but inferred it was there to be paid. He made no further inquiry and said nothing with respect to Drinkard's exercise of authority beyond the scope of his employment.

The trial justice, following the decision on the last appeal, charged the jury that in the transaction Drinkard was the agent of plaintiff and not of defendant. But, he further instructed them substantially to the effect that if the cashier knew of the transaction immediately after it occurred and assented thereto, the defendant would be liable for the amount of the check and protest fees if, on the 19th, the drawer had sufficient funds in the bank to meet it. We find no error in the charge with which the case was given to the jury, either in the instructions given on behalf of plaintiff or in the qualification attached to defendant's special instruction. Had the court instructed the jury to find as a fact from all the evidence, whether or not in the transaction itself, Drinkard was acting as the agent of the defendant, we would not hold it to be error. The effect of the charge as given was substantially the same as that, but the form in which it was put made it more favorable to the defendant.

3. When the bank opened on the 19th the drawer had funds therein more than enough to discharge the check. This was sufficient to make the bank liable, and it made no difference that at the closing hour the account of the drawer had been overdrawn. The money must be considered as if in fact collected and placed to the credit of the plaintiff, and the failure to recognize his right to it gave him his right of action as for money had and received. Kilsby v. Williams, 5 Barn. & Ald. 815; Oddie v. National City Bank, 45 N. Y. 785, 6 Am. Rep. 160; City Nat. Bank of Selma v. Burns, 68 Ala. 275, 44 Am. Rep. 138; Tinkham v. Heyworth, 81 Ill. 519. It was well said in Kilsby v. Williams that: "When they received the check from him they became his agents to receive the money upon it as soon as possible, and if they could be allowed to appropriate the money received by them to the payment of subsequent checks it would be doing great injustice and injury to their own customers." In First Nat. Bank of Cincinnati v. Burkhardt, 100 U. S. 686, 25 L. ed. 766, it was held that if at the time a check is handed in to the bank, the holder demand to have it placed to his credit, the bank may refuse to do so. But if it retains the check it is bound to the depositor; and no usage or custom that checks shall be held and only credited at the close of the day's business, provided there are then funds on hand to meet it, will be suffered to prevail against it. It was also said that in such a case the ordinary rule that a day is an indivisible unit will be disregarded, and the actual priority of the transaction permitted to be shown.

No error having been found in the proceedings below, the judgment must be affirmed, with costs to the appellee; and it is so ordered.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

James D. CASE, Plff. in Err.,
v.

E. Jason HALL, Admr., etc., of Benjamin Bartholomew, Deceased, et al.

(.....Ohio.....)

*1. Where land is devised in fee simple with direction to the devisee to pay certain legacies as each legatee attains the age of twenty-one years, the devisee, on accepting the devise, becomes personally liable to pay the same as directed by the testator.

2. And where, in such case, the devisee dies before all the legatees attain the requisite age, his estate, as an entirety, remains liable to such as thereafter become of age; and it is the duty of his administrator, having assets, to pay the same.

Headnotes by the Court.

3. Again, in such case, where the legatees become the owners of the land, not by the provisions of the will but by descent, the legatees, remaining unpaid, are not extinguished by merger or otherwise, but must be paid from the personality of the deceased devisee, where that is sufficient, as any other debt of his estate.

(October 16, 1894.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Delaware County to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in favor of defendants in an action brought to compel payment of money which defendants' intestate had promised to pay in consideration

NOTE.—The above case presents an unusual question as to the merger of legacies in an estate in fee in land, on which they constitute a lien, which descends to them from a devisee who was bound to pay the legacies. Many cases as to charges of legacies on land are collected in a note to Davidson v. Coon (Ind.) 9 L. R. A. 584. See also Evans v. Foster (Wis.) 14 L. R. A. 117.

25 L. R. A.

of a devise made by a third person to himself. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Jones, Lytle & Jones, for plaintiff in error:

Benjamin F. Bartholomew, by accepting the devise of real estate under said will and by taking possession of the same, is by implication personally and absolutely liable for the payment of said legacies; the acceptance of the estate devised to him, charged with the payment of these legacies, made them his personal debt, and rendered him personally liable for their payment.

Dunne v. Dunne, 66 Cal. 157; Porter v. Jackson, 95 Ind. 210, 48 Am. Rep. 704; Dodge v. Manning, 1 N. Y. 298; Olmstead v. Brush, 27 Conn. 530; Williams v. Nichol, 47 Ark. 254; Brown v. Knapp, 79 N. Y. 143; 2 Redf. Wills, p. 209; Mensch v. Mensch, 2 Lans. 285; McLachlan v. McLachlan, 9 Paige, 534, 4 L. ed. 805; Wood v. Wood, 26 Barb. 356; Reynolds v. Reynolds, 16 N. Y. 257; Girdley v. Girdley, 24 N. Y. 130; Harris v. Fly, 7 Paige, 421, 4 L. ed. 218; Birdsall v. Hewlett, 1 Paige, 32, 2 L. ed. 550, 19 Am. Dec. 892; Fox v. Phelps, 17 Wend. 393; Glen v. Fisher, 6 Johns. Ch. 33, 33, 2 L. ed. 45, 46, 10 Am. Dec. 810.

With respect to "all claims founded upon any obligation, contract, debt, covenant, or other duty the right of action on which the testator or intestate might have been sued in his lifetime survives his death, and is enforceable against his executor or administrator."

8 Williams, Executors, pp. 1721-1723.

One who accepts an estate devised to him, under a charge or condition of his paying a legacy or annuity, is liable in contract for the legacy or annuity, even without any express promise to pay.

2 Williams, Executors, 1272-1273, note N, and authorities cited; 8 Williams, Executors, p. 1931, note K, and cases cited; 2 Woerner, Administration, p. 1099, and authorities cited.

If the payment of the legacy by the acceptance of the provisions of the will became an obligation of Benjamin F. Bartholomew there can be no doubt that the personal estate of said Benjamin F. Bartholomew, deceased, in the hands of his executor, is the primary and natural fund, which must be resorted to for its payment.

8 Williams, Executors, 1704, 1705.

"If for any reason the debt becomes the debt of the owner of the land, it must be paid out of his personality."

Bispham, Equity, p. 409, and note 1, p. 411; Thompson v. Thompson, 4 Ohio St. 333; 1 Chitty, Pl. 4-6; Crumbaugh v. Kugler, 8 Ohio St. 549.

Although at the death of Benjamin F. Bartholomew, the fee of the real estate went to his son Leslie Bartholomew, and at his death, subject to the life estate of Amanda Bartholomew, went to the heirs of Emily Jane Case, the doctrine of merger does not apply.

Bispham, Eq. p. 210.

Mr. George L. Converse also for plaintiff in error.

Mr. J. T. Holmes, for defendant in error: To take from the son's widow his separate, personal estate, which by operation of law has 35 L. R. A.

become hers, and add it to the testator's estate, in the form of legacies would be to make a new will for Major Bartholomew and rob his son's widow in a way of which he never even dreamed.

The cases which suggest that the devisee is liable personally, hold that the lien continues on the land, and may be enforced even against the vendees of the devisee.

Clyde v. Simpson, 4 Ohio St. 459.

The testator intended the provisions of items four and five to be beneficial, not alone to the Case heirs, his grandchildren, but to his son. These provisions constituted his method of dividing his property. The course of events natural and legal has provided for those grandchildren; they hold and own the bounty designed for the son and themselves; it is no longer necessary to have the legacies paid, or if they must be paid, the land should be sold for that purpose.

The testator will be held to have meant that Benjamin should have the full title which the words of "gift, bequest, and devise," carried to him after he had paid the legacies, and not until he had paid them.

Linton v. Laycock, 33 Ohio St. 128; Schouler, Wills, § 562; 2 Redf. Wills, *283 et seq.; Lupton v. Lupton, 2 Johns. Ch. 614, 1 L. ed. 512; 2 Lomax, Exrs. 90; 2 Redf. Wills, 209, note 9; Hoyt v. Hoyt, 35 N. Y. 142.

This land is the primary, and sufficient, the intended and the only equitable source or property, for the payment of the plaintiff's legacy.

McOullough v. Copeland, 40 Ohio St. 329; Fuller v. Fuller, 34 Me. 475.

Minshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The suit below was an action for the recovery of a legacy, brought by the legatee against the administrator of a devisee, who, as is claimed, was personally bound to pay it. Judgment was rendered for the defendant, which, on error, was affirmed by the circuit court and the plaintiff excepted. Error is prosecuted here to reverse both these judgments. The facts are as follows: On October 30, 1874, Major Bartholomew died leaving a will which was shortly afterward admitted to probate and recorded. By his will he devised to his wife all his personal estate, and an estate for life in one third of all his real estate, "save that this day deeded by myself and wife to Benjamin F. Bartholomew," and at her death to go to my son Benjamin F. Bartholomew. Then follow the items on which the question arises in this case; and which are as follows:

"4th. I give, bequeath, and devise to my son all the remainder of my real estate, being two thirds of the same after he shall pay to the heirs of my daughter, Emily Jane Case, the several amounts hereinafter bequeathed to each of said heirs.

"5th. I give and bequeath to the heirs of my deceased daughter, Emily Jane Case, one thousand dollars each, to be paid to each of them by my son, B. F. Bartholomew, as they become twenty-one years of age."

On the probate of the will, November 3, 1874, Benjamin took possession of the land devised to him, used and occupied it as his own to the time of his death, receiving all the rents and profits amounting to some $13,500. He died April 27, 1888, leaving a widow and an only son, Leslie Bartholomew, who died December 1, 1888, intestate and without issue. The heirs of Emily J. Case were her children, eight in number, all of whom became of age and were paid their legacies during the lifetime of Benjamin, except the plaintiff, who became of age March 7, 1890, and W. P. Case, who, though he became of age February 29, 1888, had received but one half of his legacy. Hall was duly appointed administrator of Benjamin, accepted the trust and qualified as such; and the plaintiff, on arriving at age, presented his claim for the payment of his legacy with interest from the time he became of age which was rejected.

Whereupon the plaintiff brought his suit, and the widow of Benjamin having been made a party at the instance of the administrator, both answered. There is, however, no controversy as to the facts. On the death of Leslie, the son of Benjamin, intestate and without issue, the land inherited from his father passed by descent to his cousins, the heirs of Emily Jane Case, deceased, and of whom the plaintiff is one. His mother took the personalty, and, as widow, was entitled to her portion of his father's estate. The question presented is, whether in view of the facts and the language of the will, the legacy bequeathed the plaintiff by the will of his grandfather became a personal obligation of Benjamin Bartholomew on his accepting the devise of the land made to him. The plaintiff claims that it did; the defendants claim that it did not; that no personal obligation attached until the time appointed for the payment of the legacy; and, this not having arrived until after the death of Benjamin, no personal obligation can be asserted against his estate; and that the plaintiff must look to the land on which his legacy is simply a charge and no more. This view seems to have prevailed in both the lower courts, but we are unable to adopt it. Whilst many cases may be found in which a question was made as to whether a certain legacy had, by a fair construction of the will, been charged on land devised, none has been cited, where, in a case like this, the entire fee simple is devised to one with direction to pay certain legacies, an acceptance of the devise does not, without question, impose a personal obligation on the devisee to pay the legacies. Thus in Glen v. Fisher, 6 Johns. Ch. 33, 2 L. ed. 45, 10 Am. Dec. 310, it is held that, where land is devised charged with the payment of a legacy, and the devisee accepts the devise, he is personally and absolutely liable for the legacy; and he has no right to require of the legatee, before payment, a security to refund, in case of a deficiency of assets, to pay debts. And in Fuller v. McEwen, 17 Ohio St. 289, this court stated the rule in substantially the same language, and held that, in an action to enforce such personal obligation the fact that the devisee or legatee is or is not also the executor of the will, makes no difference in the case. The rule is also recognized and stated in Yearly v. Long, 40 Ohio St. 27. The rule is thus stated in Porter v. Jackson, 95 Ind. 210, 48 Am. Rep. 704: "Where lands are devised to one who, by the will, is directed to pay a legacy, the legacy is charged upon the land devised, and when payment of the legacy is made a condition of the devise, its acceptance creates also a personal liability to the legatee which may be enforced without resorting to the land, the lien still remaining as a security. Many other cases might be cited to the same effect; and are sustained by text-writers of standard authority. Woerner, Administration, 1099; Williams, Executors, 1272, 1704.

The rule rests upon the reasonable principle, that he who takes a benefit under a will must take it subject to its provisions; any other construction would necessarily defeat the intention of the testator. So that, where a devise is required to pay legacies to others, an acceptance of the devise imparts a promise to pay the legacies; and the legatees have the right to maintain an action thereon for its non-performance, as though the promise had been made to themselves.

There is, we think, no ground for the contention that the estate in the land, devised to Benjamin, did not vest until the payment of the legacies had been made. Payment is not made a condition precedent to the vesting of the estate; the effect of the language employed is simply to charge the land as a security for the payment of the legacies. Thompson v. Hoop, 6 Ohio St. 480, 489; Woerner, Administration, 592. Therefore, Benjamin took an estate in fee simple in the land, devised to him, on the death of the testator.

It is claimed, however, that while such is the general rule, the facts bring this case within the principle on which Decker v. Decker, 8 Ohio, 157, was decided. That was regarded by the court as a novel case. The land was devised by his father to Jacob Decker with direction to pay certain legacies at different times in the future to the other children of the testator, with a limitation that if Jacob should die without issue, the estate should go to those other children. By this provision the court held that the devisee took simply a life estate in the land, and that this negated any intention to make the legacies, before they became due, a personal liability of the devisee. The apparent injustice of charging the devisee personally with the legacies, though the estate might terminate by his death before he received any benefit therefrom, influenced the court in making the holding it did. And the judge delivering the opinion observed that "a devise of the fee, has been considered as sufficient to show an intention in the testator, to create a personal charge, while a devise of any inferior interest, as an estate for life, is taken to indicate an intention to charge the land, and not the person of the devisee." In the case before us the land was devised in fee, and was of much greater value than the legacies the devisee was required to pay. Subject to the payment of the legacies he could deal with it as he pleased, and did so.

At his death it passed, by operation of law, to his son as his heir, and not by the provisions of the will of his father; and this marked distinction in the facts clearly distinguishes the case from that of Decker v. Decker. Here the entire subject of the devise became, by its acceptance, the property of the devisee, charged, however, with the payment of the legacies. It went to increase the amount of his estate, less only the sum of the legacies to be paid. The fact that he might die before the time fixed for the payment of any or all of the legacies was not, under the provisions of the will, in any way to affect the quantity of his estate in the land. Whether he paid any or all of the legacies during his lifetime, his estate in the land would be none the less; and it would, and did, descend to his heir in fee simple, subject only to the payment of such legacies as had not been paid. Such, without doubt, was the intention of the testator; and to give the will any other construction would defeat that intention. He designed that his son would have the land, for he in plain terms gives it to him; but he also designed that the children of his deceased daughter should have their legacies, as a part of his bounty, for he directs his son, as devisee, to pay them as they attain twenty-one years of age. His son and these children were the immediate objects of his bounty; they were the only ones that concerned him. He cannot be supposed to have foreseen all that afterwards happened,—the death of his own son, and the heir of the latter, intestate and without issue, before all of the children of his deceased daughter had arrived at twenty-one years of age; and to speculate as to what he would have done, had he foreseen these remote contingencies, is useless, as it can shed no light upon the construction of his will. But it is well, in this connection, to observe that he had provided liberally for his own son—having given him the greater portion of his estate; and no reason is perceived why he should have had more concern for the widow of his son, so provided for, than for those of his own blood, related to him as grandchildren.

But again it is claimed that the direction being to pay each of the legatees as they became twenty-one years of age, the legacy to each did not vest until the legatee attained that age; and, therefore, that no personal obligation attached to pay any particular legatee until he attained the age of twenty-one; and, therefore, the personal estate of Benjamin is not liable for the payment of the legacy to the plaintiff as he did not attain twenty-one years of age until after the death of Benjamin. It is not necessary, as we think, to decide whether these legacies vested at the death of the testator, or not; though, under the settled rule in such cases, we see no reason for saying that they did not. Bingham, Descents, 59. If they did not, still a conditional liability, personal in character, was created as to each, which became absolute on the legatee attaining the requisite age; the legacy then became an absolute personal liability of the devisee, if living, or of his estate, if dead. Now it is the settled rule of the law that the personalty of an estate is the primary fund for the satisfaction of all the personal obligations of the deceased. Williams, Executors, 1705. And that it was the personal duty of Benjamin Bartholomew to pay this legacy to the plaintiff on his arriving at twenty-one years of age, has been already shown to have arisen from his acceptance of the devise under the will of his father. And although he died before the time arrived for making the payment, the obligation attended his estate as an entirety, to be performed by his administrator as his personal representative. It frequently happens that a conditional obligation, assumed by a person in his lifetime, does not become absolute until after his death, and must be, and is, satisfied by his administrator, though not named in the contract. Williams, Executors, 1734. In addition to the many instances given by this author, the obligation of a principal to indemnify his surety may be noticed. No absolute obligation arises in such case until the surety has paid the debt, and this may be after the death of the principal; and the state of the principle then becomes liable to indemnify the surety. The case of Camp v. Bostwick, 20 Ohio St. 337, 5 Am. Rep. 669, grew out of such a state of facts, and was prosecuted against the heirs for assets received, because the liability of the deceased did not, by the payment of the surety, become absolute until after the administrator had settled the estate, and the suit as to him had become barred.

There remains the further contention, that the legacy to the plaintiff has merged in the legal estate, which, by operation of law, has descended to him and his brothers and sisters, co-legatees, by the death of Leslie Bartholomew, intestate and without issue. This, we think, is entirely erroneous. It is true as a general rule, that where the equitable and legal estate unite in the same person in the same right, the former will merge in the latter. But this is simply a rule of convenience to the owner of the two estates, and is never applied where it would be to his interest to treat the equitable interest as subsisting. Here, as shown, the plaintiff has the right to have his legacy satisfied from the personal estate left by Benjamin Bartholomew, though, by so doing, it will diminish a fund that would otherwise go to his widow. His right in this regard is that of a creditor of the deceased. The fact that, by inheritance, he with his co-legatees, has become an owner of the land, that may be treated as a security for the payment of the legacy, does not change the equity of the case. It is not by any provisions of the will that this has occurred; and the fact, as before shown, cannot, therefore, in any way influence its construction. The condition of the plaintiff is, in law, no way different from what it would have been, had he and his brothers and sisters purchased and paid full value for the land. In such case, as it would be to his interest to treat the legacy as existing, though a lien on the land, for the purpose of enabling him to compel it to be satisfied by his debtor, or his estate, the law would treat it as existing for such purpose. The legacy and the lien are not inseparable. The legacy is the principal, the lien is an incident, and may be extinguished by merger in the estate of the creditor, although the legacy is not.

Judgment of the lower courts reversed, and judgment on the pleadings for the plaintiff in error.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

BOARD OF EDUCATION OF MARION TOWNSHIP, Plff. in Err.,

v.

STATE of Ohio, ex rel. A. C. LINDSEY.

(51 Ohio St. 531.)

*1. Where no obligation, legal or moral, rests upon a board of education, to pay a claim asserted against it by a private individual, an act of the general assembly, procured by the claimant, commanding such board to levy a tax for its payment, is unconstitutional and void.

2. In such case, if the board of education disputes the facts asserted by the claimant as the foundation of his claim, the general assembly, while it may make inquiry to ascertain, in the first instance, the truth of the facts so asserted, yet is without authority to conclusively find and recite in the act providing relief, the facts in dispute, so as to estop the board of education from contesting them in a court of justice where the act is sought to be enforced.

(June 19, 1894.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Fayette County to review a judgment, granting a writ of mandamus to compel the Board of Education of Marion Township to levy a tax to pay a claim which relator held against the township and which the legislature had by special act directed to be paid. Reversed.

Statement by Bradbury, J.:

The defendant in error brought an action of mandamus against the plaintiff in error in the circuit court of Fayette county to compel it to levy a tax under and by virtue of the following act of the general assembly of this state:

"Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, That the board

*Headnotes by the COURT.

NOTE.—On the question of implied restrictions on legislative power in cases somewhat similar to the above, see note to Staton v. Norfolk & C. R. Co. (N. C.) 17 L. R. A. 888, in which most of the authorities deny that the power of the legislature to take private property or interfere with vested rights is unlimited.

Somewhat akin to these authorities are those found in the note to Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. v. Jordan (Miss.) 18 L. R. A. 254, respecting the constitutionality of private statutes to authorize disposal of property, and those in the note to Lowe v. Harris (N. C.) 22 L. R. A. 879, concerning the constitutionality of a statute legalizing an invalid private contract.

In respect to the public purposes for which money may be appropriated or raised by taxation, see numerous authorities collected in a note to 25 L. R. A.

of education of Marion township, Fayette county, Ohio, shall, at the next regular meeting of the said board of education, after the passage of this act, levy upon the taxable property of said Marion township, Fayette county, Ohio, not to exceed one mill on the dollar, as and for a contingent fund, for the purpose of refunding to A. C. Lindsey, former treasurer of said township, the sum of one hundred and ninety-seven dollars and seventy-six cents, with interest thereon from April 1, 1882, which said sum was charged to said A. C. Lindsey, as treasurer, and said sum paid over to his successor in office, by mistake, and has not been refunded to him; that said board of education shall certify said levy to the auditor of said Fayette county, Ohio, as required by law, and the clerk of said township shall draw an order upon the treasurer of said township in favor of said A. C. Lindsey for said sum of one hundred and ninety-seven dollars and seventy-six cents, with interest from April 1, 1882, to be paid out of the contingent fund of said Marion township, Fayette county, Ohio."

In his petition he states in substance that on and before September 29, 1874, and for several years thereafter, he was the treasurer of said township of Marion, and as such was ex officio treasurer of the school fund of said township. That the clerk of said township on said 29th day of September, 1874, pursuant to the order of said board of education, issued to one William Clark a warrant for the sum of $197.76, payable out of the school fund of said township, which the relator paid from said fund to the person in whose favor said order was drawn. That afterwards, when he came to settle with the county auditor, the said warrant having been lost, he was charged with the amount thereof, and that he has never been reimbursed for the same, and that when he came to settle with his successor in said office the amount of this warrant was charged to and paid by him to such successor.

Daggett v. Colgan (Cal.) 14 L. R. A. 474, most of which, however, are cases of attempted action by municipalities rather than by the legislature. For other cases as to the power of the legislature in this respect, see Waterloo Woolen Mfg. Co. v. Shanahan (N. Y.) 14 L. R. A. 481.

For constitutional restrictions on the power of the legislature in this respect, see Bourn v. Hart (Cal.) 15 L. R. A. 431; Patty v. Colgan (Cal.) 18 L. R. A. 744; Cutting v. Taylor (S. Dak.) 15 L. R. A. 601; Synod of Dakota v. State of South Dakota (S. Dak.) 14 L. R. A. 418; Institution for Education of Mute and Blind v. Henderson (Colo.) 18 L. R. A. 898; Wasson v. Wayne County Commr. (Ohio) 17 L. R. A. 795; Conlin v. San Francisco Bd. of Supra. (Cal.) 21 L. R. A. 474.

See also the following case of State v. Moore (Neb.) post, 774.

That in the year 1892 the relator found said warrant, presented the same to said board of education, together with full proof of its having been paid by him and his never receiving credit therefor, and requested that a warrant be issued to him for the sum due to him by reason of the premises, which said board refused to do, though admitting the facts to be as he claimed they were, on the ground that they had no power to go behind the settlements previously made. Whereupon he applied to the general assembly of the state and procured the act aforesaid, to be passed, and that said board have refused to levy a tax according to its requirements.

To this petition the board of education answered as follows:

"Now comes the defendant, the board of education of Marion township, Fayette county, Ohio, and for answer to the petition of the plaintiff, says:

"It denies that the said J. V. Cutright, clerk of said township, pursuant to any order or resolution of said board, issued in favor of the said William Clark the warrant mentioned in the petition. Said defendant denies that it by any order, resolution, or otherwise, authorized the said clerk to issue the said warrant. It denies that said order was ever delivered to the said William Clark, or by him presented to the said relator, as such treasurer, or that the said relator ever paid the same to the said William Clark, or to any one else. It says that at the date of said warrant, said defendant was not indebted to the said Clark, nor was the said Clark asserting any demand or claim against it.

"It denies that in paying to his successor in office the amount of school funds charged against him as such township treasurer the said relator paid said sum of $197.76, or any other sum of his own funds; but on the contrary, the said defendant charges the fact to be that the said relator became a defaulter in his said office, and was by the township trustees of said township, about the _____ day of _____, 1878, removed from his said office, and one C. C. McCray was appointed his successor, and the said relator was unable to and did not pay to his said successor the amount so charged against him of school funds; and there still remains a balance of $60 of said school funds so charged against the said relator as such treasurer, which has never been paid to the said successor or any other treasurer of said township, by the said relator or any one for him.

"Said defendant further says it is true that at some time in the year 1892, the relator presented the said warrant to the defendant and requested the defendant to order its clerk to issue a warrant for the payment of the same, and the said defendant refused so to do; but it denies that the said relator ever presented any proof of payment of the same, or the failure of the said auditor to give credit; or that they admitted the facts, as stated in the petition, but the said defendant always denied the facts to be as claimed by the relator.

"Said defendant says the facts in regard to said order are as follows:

"Prior to the 1st day of August, 1874, the said board of education of Marion township had instituted in the probate court of Fayette county, Ohio, certain proceedings to condemn lands for school-house site in said township. The awards made in said proceedings, together with the costs taxed to the said board therein amounted to the said sum of $197.76. The said board had in said proceedings incurred an expense of $15.00 for the services of H. B. Maynard, an attorney, all of which was by said board apportioned between the two school districts interested, and was paid by two orders, one for $108.48, and one for 109.83, which were on said first day of August, 1874, issued by the clerk, upon the order of said board, to said William Clark, who was at that time a member of said board, and said orders so issued to the said Clark were paid by the said relator, and the money was thereupon disbursed by the said Clark in payment of said award, costs, and attorney fee; and said orders so paid by the said relator were duly credited to him in his annual settlement with the county auditor.

"Afterward, on the 29th day of September, 1874, the said clerk by mistake issued another order for the amount of the said award and costs, being the warrant mentioned in the petition, but said warrant was not delivered to the said Clark, the payee named therein, and was not paid by the said relator, the mistake having been discovered in the mean time. But said warrant in some way unknown to the defendant came into the hands of the relator, and he has ever since retained the same, and never until the year 1892, claimed to have paid the same, or that he was entitled to credit for the same in his settlements with the county auditor.

"The defendant says the said board of education was never legally, equitably nor morally bound to pay to the relator the amount of said warrant, or any sum on account thereof. The said defendant further says: It is true that the general assembly of the state of Ohio, on the 16th day of February, 1898, passed the act mentioned in the petition; but it avers that said enactment commanding the levy of a tax, and the payment of a claim of the character of that of the relator, for which the defendant was not bound legally, equitably or morally, as appears from the facts hereinbefore set out, was not a legal exercise of the taxing power of the said general assembly, said tax ordered to be levied not being for any public purpose, and said act is for that reason wholly void and of no effect.

"The defendant further says that at the time when the act of the general assembly mentioned in the petition was passed, the defendant denied and still denies the existence of the facts which would furnish the basis for the relator's demand, or which would render the said defendant equitably and morally, if not legally, bound to pay the same; but then, as now, asserted the facts to be as set out in this answer. The said general assembly, in said enactment, did not provide any means of determining the facts on which the demand of the relator is founded, either by the trial in court, before a board of audit constituted for that pur pose, or otherwise; but said general assembly attempted, by said enactment, to pass upon the facts, to adjudge the said defendant liable on said demand, and to enforce payment by taxation, which action on the part of said general assembly was an attempt to exercise judicial and not legislative power, and said enactment is for that reason void, and can furnish no basis for the relief prayed for in the plaintiff's petition.

"Wherefore the said defendant says that a peremptory writ ought not to issue in this case, and it asks to be discharged and to recover its costs."

To this answer a demurrer was interposed by the relator and sustained by the court; whereupon a peremptory writ of mandamus was awarded commanding the board of education to levy a tax according to the provisions of the act under which the proceedings had been commenced.

This action of the circuit court the board of education brings into this court for review.

Messrs. Hidy & Patton, for plaintiff in error:

Governments are charged with the accomplishment of great objects, necessary to the safety and prosperity of the people. If a tax is levied without the existence of some of these purposes of government to which to apply it, there can be no doubt it would involve a usurpation of authority which would render it illegal.

Cincinnati, W. & Z. R. Co. v. Clinton County Comrs. 1 Ohio St. 102.

The power of taxation was delegated to be used for these purposes and these alone.

Debolt v. Ohio Life Ins. & T. Co. 1 Ohio St. 581.

It is not difficult to give the most reckless robbery for private purposes the form of constitutional action, and it is as easy to call it a tax as it was in former periods to call those exactions which were enforced by prisons and physical suffering and the quartering of a ruthless soldiery upon the people, by the gentle name of benevolences.

Cooley, Taxation, 698.

The determination of the question whether the purpose for which the tax is levied is a public one does not lie wholly in the province of the legislature.

Cincinnati, W. & Z. R. Co. v. Clinton County Comrs. 1 Ohio St. 82; Marbury v. Madison, 5 U. S. 1 Cranch, 187, 2 L. ed. 60.

The legislature cannot, by declaring the use to be public, when it is, within the constitution, a private one, authorize the property of one citizen to be taken from him and given to another.

Burroughs, Taxation, § 18.

The power of taxation exercised by legislative bodies in this country is limited to public purposes and whether the purpose is a public one is a question for the courts.

Coster v. The Tide Water Co. 18 N. J. Eq. 54; Bankhead v. Brown, 25 Iowa, 540; Loughbridge v. Harris, 42 Ga. 500; Concord Railroad v. Greeley, 17 N. H. 47; Lowell v. Boston, 111 Mass. 454, 15 Am. Rep. 89; Weisner v. Douglas, 64 N. Y. 90, 21 Am. Rep. 586; Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray, 421; Hampshire County v. 25 R. L. A.

Franklin County, 16 Mass. 84; State v. Tappan, 29 Wis. 664, 9 Am. Rep. 622; People v. Chicago, 51 Ill. 17, 2 Am. Rep. 278; Brunswick v. Litchfield, 2 Me. 28; Debolt v. Ohio Life Ins. & T. Co. 1 Ohio St. 564; Cincinnati, W. & Z. R. Co. v. Clinton County Comrs. 1 Ohio St. 77.

The legislature is not a proper auditing board as between the municipality and third persons, though it may undoubtedly prescribe the rules of liability for all cases.

Cooley, Taxation, 787.

The legislature has no right to direct a municipal corporation to pay a claim for damages for breach of contract out of the funds or property of such corporation without the submission of such claim to a judicial tribunal.

People v. Hauss, 87 Barb. 440.

The legislature has no power to compel a municipality to levy taxes for any of the foregoing purposes until the liability to pay the same has been adjudged by a court of competent jurisdiction.

State v. Tappan, 29 Wis. 687, 9 Am. Rep. 622; Mills v. Charleston, 29 Wis. 400, 9 Am. Rep. 578; People v. Saginaw County Suprs. 26 Mich. 22; Sandborn v. Rice County Comrs. 9 Minn. 278; Brunswick v. Litchfield, 2 Me. 28; Hampshire County v. Franklin County, supra.

Messrs. Mills Gardner and John Logan, for defendant in error:

If by mistake Lindsey paid with his own money a debt of the township of which he was treasurer, the taxing power may properly be exercised to reimburse him. The public has had the benefit of the payment, and the burden should not be borne by one citizen, but by the whole public.

Cooley, Taxation, 1st ed. 42; Warder v. Clark County Comrs. 88 Ohio St. 643; State v. Board of Education of Wooster, 88 Ohio St. 3; State v. Hoffman, 85 Ohio St. 435; State v. Circleville, 20 Ohio St. 362; Cooley, Const. Lim. *488; Board of Education of Seio v. McLandborough, 86 Ohio St. 227.

The legislature may conduct the inquiry to ascertain the existence of the purpose for exercising the power of taxation.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 8d ed. *488.

In some instances the levy is made contingent upon the act of persons or bodies designated to execute the legislative will, attaining the end sought indirectly and conditionally through these subordinate agencies.

Cincinnati, W. & Z. R. Co. v. Clinton County Comrs. 1 Ohio St. 77; State v. Harris, 17 Ohio St. 608; Walker v. Cincinnati, 21 Ohio St. 14, 8 Am. Rep. 24; Hill v. Bigdon, 5 Ohio St. 248, 67 Am. Dec. 289; State v. Circleville, supra.

In other instances the legislature has acted directly and absolutely without the employment of any of its subordinate agencies.

State v. Franklin County Comrs. 85 Ohio St. 458; State v. Hoffman, 85 Ohio St. 435; Board of Education of Seio v. McLandborough, 86 Ohio St. 227.

Where a statute does not impinge upon any constitutional inhibition, the legislature is the sole judge as to the form it may be made to assume.

Kumler v. Silabee, 88 Ohio St. 447; Cincinnati, W. & Z. R. Co. v. Clinton County Comrs.

supra; State v. Hawkins, 44 Ohio St. 109; Melcalf v. State, 49 Ohio St. 586; State v. Harmon, 81 Ohio St. 250; People v. Flagg, 46 N. Y. 405; 8 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, pp. 691, 692; State v. Hoffman, 35 Ohio St. 435; State v. Franklin County Comrs. 35 Ohio St. 458.

There is no remedy by judicial process for a statute which may be considered merely an abuse of the taxing power; the authority to and duty to prevent abuse is entrusted to the legislature and not to the courts.

Walker v. Cincinnati, 21 Ohio St. 14, 8 Am. Rep. 24; State v. Franklin County Comrs. supra; Lehman v. McBride, 15 Ohio St. 578.

Bradbury, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The answer of the respondent, if true, shows that the demand of the relator has no foundation, whatever, in fact or justice; that the board of education was under no obligation, legal or moral, to pay the same, and that the fund to be raised by virtue of the act of the general assembly differed in no essential particular from a mere gratuity, provided for his benefit. The demurrer admits the truth of the averments of the answer. In such a state of things the act must be held invalid unless the general assembly has authority to command a local subdivision of the state to raise by taxation a fund for the benefit of an individual to whom it is under no obligation whatever, or where in such case a dispute exists, the enacting of a statute, wherein the facts are declared to be as contended by the claimant, is to be taken to be a legislative determination of the dispute in his favor, binding upon the parties, so that the alleged debtor will be estopped from contesting the existence of the disputed facts in the courts of justice. If either of these alternatives is true, there is no constitutional limitation on the power of the legislature to levy exactions on the public as a whole, or on subdivisions of it for political or governmental purposes, for the benefit of favored individuals.

It may be true that the responsibility the individual members of the legislature are under to their constituents, or their sense of public duty is a sufficient guaranty against any great injustice in this direction, and, therefore, that unlimited power of taxation vested in that body would not be followed by vicious results generally, though it might be in exceptional instances. However this might be, we, in the present inquiry, are more concerned in determining whether such unlimited power does exist that in the question of the wisdom and expediency of granting it.

Whatever power of taxation resides in the general assembly does so as an incident of the general legislative authority delegated to that body by section 1 of article 11, of the Constitution of 1851. This court holding in Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Mayer, 28 Ohio St. 521, that the provisions of article 12, of that instrument, though they relate to finance and taxation, are limitations upon rather than grants of power of taxation; and this, too, although section 4 of this statute expressly requires the general assembly to provide revenue to defray the yearly expenses of the state and pay the interest of its public debt. The power of taxation vested in the general assembly would have been just the same without, as with, this section.

That the authority to impose taxes is in its nature legislative, is established by the uniform current of judicial opinion. Cass Trop. v. Dillon, 16 Ohio St. 38; State v. Harris, 17 Ohio St. 608; State v. Wilkesville Trop. Trustees, 20 Ohio St. 288; State v. Richland Trop. Trustees, Id. 862; State v. Circleville, 20 Ohio St. 363; 25 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law; 18-71; Cooley, Taxation, 41-53.

That the legislative branch of the government is necessarily clothed with a broad discretion in determining the character, whether public or private, of the purpose for which funds may be raised by taxation is equally well settled. Cooley, Taxation, 43; 25 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 72; Cooley, Const. Lim. 599.

In doubtful cases the courts should not interfere with the exercise of this legislative discretion, and in all cases the legislative determination is entitled to great respect. Hanson v. Vernon, 27 Iowa, 28, 1 Am. Rep. 215; Brodhead v. Milwaukee, 19 Wis. 625, 88 Am. Dec. 711; 25 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 89, 90. That the power, however, is not unlimited is, we think, clearly established by the great weight of authority as well as of reason. State v. Franklin County Comrs. 35 Ohio St. 468.

The power of taxation is given to the general assembly as an indispensable means of providing for the public welfare, government could not be carried on without such power, and the power should be commensurate with the objects to be attained, but no good reason can be assigned for vesting it with power to take portions, large or small, of the property of one or a number of persons and granting it as a benevolence to another. Where a legislature attempts this, directly or indirectly, it passes beyond the bounds of its authority, and the parties injured may appeal to the courts for protection. The same constitution which grants the power of taxation to the general assembly recognizes the sanctity of private property, and declares that the courts shall be open for the redress of injuries.

This limitation on the legislative power of taxation is generally recognized by the authorities. The rule supported by a long array of adjudicated cases is laid down in 25 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 74, as follows: "It is within the province of the courts, however, to determine in particular cases whether the extreme boundary of legislative power has been reached and passed." In Weisner v. Douglas, 64 N. Y. 99, 21 Am. Rep. 586. Folger, J., says: "But to tax A and others to raise money to pay over to B, is only a way of taking their property for that purpose. If A may of right resist this, as surely he may, how is he to make resistance effective and peaceable save through the courts, which are set to be his guardians? How may the courts guard and aid him unless they have power, upon his complaint, to examine into the legislative act, and to determine whether the extreme boundary of legislative power has been reached and passed?"

It may be conceded that the general assembly may authorize one of the political subdivisions of the state to levy a tax to pay a demand not legally enforceable, but founded upon a moral consideration, or may even command that the levy shall be made for that purpose, and yet deny to it the power to determine conclusively the existence of such obligation.

On the other hand it may be contended that if the power to levy a tax for a private purpose is denied to it, it follows as a corollary that it had no power to determine the character of a demand, for if it had the latter power it could defeat the limitation by falsely finding the claim to be founded, at least, on a moral consideration. We do not think the conclusion follows, for that would be to impute bad faith to a co-ordinate branch of the government which is not permissible.

We think, however, that whenever a contention arises between an individual and some public body respecting the existence of a claim against the latter the controversy falls within the province of the judiciary. We do not deny the power of the general assembly to inquire into the merits of any claim sought to be asserted through its agency, before granting relief to the claimant by legislative action. Not only has it such authority but its exercise should be carefully and rigidly observed.

Such investigation, subsequent determination and resulting action, however, do not estop the parties from appealing to those judicial tribunals of the country that have been established under our constitution and by it vested with the judicial power of the state, and by our laws provided with an appropriate procedure to conduct such inquiries. Cooley, Const. Lim. 115, and cases cited; 3 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 631.

If, in the case under consideration, the relator has paid out money for the benefit of the respondent, for which, by some mistake, accident, or error, he has never received credit, it is morally bound to make it good and this moral obligation is sufficient to support the statute in question. Lewis Merchants & Traders Bank Trustees v. McElvain, 16 Ohio, 855; Cuyahoga Falls Real Estate Assn. Trustees v. McCaughy, 2 Ohio St. 152; Burgett v. Norris, 25 Ohio St. 808; Bairden v. Holden, 15 Ohio St. 207; Cass Twp. v. Dillon, 16 Ohio St. 88; State v. Harris, 17 Ohio St. 608; Board of Education of Scio v. McLandborough, 36 Ohio St. 227; Cooley, Taxation, 127, 128; State v. Richland Twp. Trustees, 20 Ohio St. 363; State v. Hoffman, 35 Ohio St. 435; Warder v. Clark County Comrs. 33 Ohio St. 648; Cooley, Const. Lim. 283.

Where, however the facts, out of which a moral (or legal) obligation is claimed to arise, are disputed, the contention falls within the province of the courts, under the distribution of governmental powers prescribed by our constitution. Const. 1851, art. 4, § 1.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded with instructions to overrule the demurrer to the answer of the respondents.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Nebraska, ex rel. Edward W. SAYRE, Treasurer of Scott's Bluffs Co.,

v.

Eugene MOORE, State Auditor.

(.....Neb.....)

*1. An attorney's lien for services rendered his client cannot be successfully asserted against money appropriated to such client by an act of the legislature while such money is in the custody or under the control of the state treasurer.

2. The legislature, by an act duly passed and approved April 5, 1893, appropriated "the sum of $7,496.73 for the relief of Scott's Bluff county, and to reimburse said county for expenses incurred in the trial of one George S. Arnold upon the charge of murder." In a mandamus proceeding in this court to compel the auditor to draw his warrant in favor of the treasurer of Scott's Bluff county for the amount appropriated.—Held: (1) That the act was not in conflict with either the letter or spirit of the constitution. (2) That the appropriation of this money was in the nature of a donation, and that no inquiry or objection is admissible on the part of the auditor as to whether the appropriation was just, whether it was bestowed upon an undeserving recipient, or what motives influenced the legislature to make it; that the only duty left for the auditor, in the premises, was a ministerial one; and that he had no authority to supervise the action of the legislature by an inquiry into the actual expenditures of the county in the prosecution of Arnold.

(Normal, Ch. J., dissents from the second clause of proposition 2.)

(June 5, 1894.)

APPPLICATION for a writ of mandamus to compel defendant as auditor of public accounts to issue a warrant to relator for the amount which had been appropriated by the state legislature for the relief of the county of which relator was treasurer. Granted.

The facts are stated in the commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. M. J. Huffman, County Atty., and Field & Holmes, for relator:

There could be no such thing as an attorney's lien upon funds appropriated by the legislature.

Weeks, Attorneys at Law, p. 738, § 383; Brooke's Case, 12 Opa. Atty-Gen. 216; Flint v. Van Dusen, 26 Hun, 606; Dodge v. Schell, 30 Blatchf. 517.

*Headnotes by RAGAN, C.

NOTE.—On the question of appropriations of public money, see cases and annotation referred to in footnote to the preceding case of Board of Education of Marion Twp. v. State (Ohio) ante, 770, 25 L. R. A.

If the congress of the United States under its implied powers is authorized to pass laws of a similar character to the one in question there can be no question as to the constitutionality of such laws when enacted by state legislatures when the constitution of the state has no provision prohibiting such legislation.

This appropriation was extended by the legislature as a charity and the amount of the relief was fixed and determined by the legislature and the sole and only duty of the auditor in relation to this claim is to satisfy himself that the law was legally enacted and if so to issue his warrant for the amount fixed and determined by the legislature; the act of the auditor is purely ministerial and he has no discretion in the premises.

Moses, Mandamus, pp. 84, 85; Divine v. Harris, 7 T. B. Mon. 440, 18 Am. Dec. 194; Merrill, Mandamus, § 106; High, Extr. Legal Rem. § 84; 2 Spelling, Extr. Relief, chap. 42, §§ 1481 et seq.; 14 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, pp. 99, 147; State v. Cleveland, 22 Ohio L.J. 118; Hewitt v. Craig, 86 Ky. 23; State v. Staub, 61 Conn. 558.

A liquidated account is one the amount of which is agreed upon by the parties, or is fixed by operation of law.

Hargroves v. Cooke, 15 Ga. 321; Bull v. Bull, 43 Conn. 469; Warren v. Skinner, 20 Conn. 562.

The word "settle" when applied to a liquidated account or demand means to pay it.

Pinkerton v. Bailey, 8 Wend. 600; Stihwell v. Coope, 4 Denio, 225.

The word "adjust" when used in reference to a liquidated claim has the same meaning, though perhaps not quite so clearly.

The word "settle" when applied to an unliquidated claim or demand means its mutual adjustment between the parties and an agreement upon the balance.

Baxter v. State, 9 Wis. 89.

In reference to an unliquidated demand, the word "adjust" means "to determine what is due; to settle; to ascertain; as to adjust a claim, a demand, or a right."

Anderson, Law Dict.

When a claim is liquidated in the sense that its amount is fixed by operation of law, it is difficult to see how the comptroller can use any discretion in respect to it. When the law fixes definitely the amount of any claim, and also fixes the manner and time of payment, and the person to whom it is due, and the claim is presented to the comptroller by that person, and at that time, he has in respect to it "no discretion to exercise, no judgment to use, and no duty to perform" but to draw his order in payment of it.

State v. Bordelon, 6 La. Ann. 68; Kendall v. United States, 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 524, 9 L. ed. 1181; Rios v. State, 95 Ind. 88; Angle v. Bunyon, 88 N. J. L. 403.

Mr. George H. Hastings, Atty-Gen., for respondent.

Ragan, C., filed the following opinion:

The Legislature of 1898 passed an Act (House Roll No. 278) in words and figures as follows: "An Act for the relief of Scott's Bluff county, Nebraska, and to appropriate $7,495.73 to said county. Be it enacted by the legislature of the state of Nebraska: Section 1. That there is hereby appropriated out of any funds in the state treasury, and not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $7,495.73 for the relief of Scott's Bluff county, and to reimburse said county for expenses incurred in the trial of one George S. Arnold upon the charge of murder, at the adjourned July term, 1899, of the district court within and for said county; and the auditor is hereby authorized to draw his warrant upon the state treasurer for the above amount in favor of said Scott's Bluff county." On August 5, 1898, the treasurer of Scott's Bluff county duly demanded of the auditor of public accounts that he draw his warrant upon the state treasurer, payable to the treasurer of said Scott's Bluff county, for the amount so appropriated by the legislature. The auditor declined to comply with this request, and thereupon the treasurer of Scott's Bluff county, as relator, filed in this court an application for a peremptory mandamus commanding the auditor to draw such warrant. The auditor answered the application, and alleged the following as reasons for declining to draw his warrant: "And this respondent further says that under the provisions of the constitution and laws of the state of Nebraska the auditor of public accounts has authority to examine and adjust all claims against the state, when presented to him, and to refuse to pay the same when, in his opinion, the same are illegal or unjust. And this respondent alleges that he found said claim for said Scott's Bluff county unjust and illegal; that the act making the appropriation is contrary to the letter and spirit of the constitution of the state of Nebraska; that the said county of Scott's Bluff was put to some expense by reason of said trial, but the amount thereof, this respondent alleges, upon information and belief, was a much less sum than the sum alleged to have been appropriated by the legislature. . . . This respondent further alleges that heretofore, to wit, on the 20th day of June, 1898, one Nellie M. Richardson . . . served upon this respondent . . . a notice of an attorney's lien upon said sum . . . appropriated by the legislature of the state of Nebraska for the use and benefit of said Scott's Bluff county, which said notice is in words and figures following: 'Notice. To Eugene Moore, Auditor Public Accounts of the State of Nebraska: You will take notice that I, Nellie M. Richardson, do claim an attorney's lien upon the funds appropriated by the legislature of the state of Nebraska to reimburse Scott's Bluff county for expenses incurred in the trial of George S. Arnold, in the sum of $1,500. [Signed] Nellie M. Richardson.'" To this answer the relator demurs. We will first dispose of the question of the attorney's lien attempted to be filed against this appropriation. Section 8, chap. 7, p. 90, Comp. Stat. Neb., provides: "An attorney has a lien for a general balance of compensation upon any papers of his client which have come into his possession in the course of his professional employment; upon money in his hands belonging to his client, and in the hands of the adverse party in an action or proceeding in which the attorney was employed, from the time of the giving notice of the lien to that party." Now, this money is not in Richardson's hands. It is in the hands of the treasurer of the state of Nebraska. And neither the state nor its treasurer are, or have been, adverse parties to any action or proceeding brought or had by Scott's Bluff county, for whom, it appears, Richardson is attorney. Richardson, then, has not brought herself within this statute, and that is one reason, at least, why she can have no lien on this money. But, if Richardson has rendered services for Scott's Bluff county, she can file her claim against the county, with the county clerk thereof, and have the county authorities of that county pass upon its merits. This court cannot audit her claim against Scott's Bluff county. The law has provided ample remedies and methods of procedure for all persons having claims against a county, and these remedies must be pursued. An attorney will not be permitted to use this court, in a mandamus proceeding, for the purpose of having the merits or amount of his claim against a county adjudicated. It may well be doubted if in any case an attorney's or other lien can be successfully asserted against money appropriated by the legislature to any person or corporation, public or private, while in the hands of, or under the control of, an officer of the state. It would be contrary to good public policy, and detrimental to the due administration of the affairs of the state, to permit its officers to be harassed and hindered in the discharge of their duties by parties asserting rights, either by way of attorney's liens, attachments, or garnishment proceedings, or otherwise, to funds in the hands of, or under the control of, such officers. The claim of Richardson filed with the auditor is not a lien on the money appropriated by the legislature to Scott's Bluff county, and the auditor may disregard such lien with impunity.

The next reason assigned by the auditor for not drawing the warrant to pay the appropriation is "that the Act making the appropriation is contrary to the letter and spirit of the constitution of the state of Nebraska." We quote Cooley's Constitutional Limitations (4th ed. p. 210), as follows: "When a law of congress is assailed as void, we look into the National Constitution to see if the granting of specified powers is broad enough to embrace it. But, when a state law is attacked on the same ground, it is presumably valid, in any case; and this presumption is a conclusive one, unless, in the Constitution of the United States or of the state, we are able to discover that it is prohibited. We look in the Constitution of the United States for grants of legislative powers, but in the constitution of the state to ascertain if any limitations have been imposed upon the complete powers with which the legislative department of the state is vested in its creation. A congress can pass no laws but such as the constitution authorizes either expressly or by clear implication, while the state legislature has jurisdiction of all subjects on which its legislation is not prohibited. The lawmaking power of the state recognizes no restrictions, and is bound by none, except such as are imposed by the constitution. That instrument has been aptly termed a legislative act by the people themselves, in their sovereign capacity, and is therefore a paramount law. Its objects is not to grant legislative power, but to confine and restrain it. Without the constitutional limitations, the power to make laws would be absolute." Tested by the rule quoted from this eminent jurist, there is nothing in the constitution of Nebraska that prohibits the legislature of the state—representing, as it does, the sovereignty of the people—from appropriating money to reimburse a county for expenses incurred by it in the prosecution of criminals. True there is no legal obligation resting on the state to pay such expenses, but the power of the legislature to appropriate money is not limited by the legal obligations of the state. We quote again from Cooley's Constitutional Limitations (p. 608), as follows: "It must also be stated that the proper authority to determine what should and what should not properly constitute a public burden is the legislative department of the state, . . . and in determining this question the legislature cannot be held to any narrow or technical rule. Certain expenditures are not only absolutely necessary to the existence of a government, but, as a matter of policy, it may sometimes be proper and wise to assume other burdens, which rest entirely upon considerations of honor, gratitude, or charity. . . . There will therefore be necessary expenditures, and expenditures which rest upon considerations of policy alone, and in regard to the one, as much as to the other, the decision of that department to which alone questions of state policy are addressed must be accepted as conclusive." This appropriation may be unjust. In making it, the legislature may have acted unwisely. But of these things the legislature itself is sole judge. The courts cannot inquire into either the motive or justness of the law. Their only concern is with its legality.

Finally, the auditor alleges as a reason for his refusal to draw this warrant, that by the constitution and laws of this state he has authority to examine and adjust all claims against the state, and that, while Scott's Bluff county was put to some expense in the prosecution of Arnold for murder, the amount of such expense, he (the auditor) is informed and believes, is much less than the sum appropriated by the legislature. In other words, the auditor's contention here is that, notwithstanding the legislature appropriated a specifically named sum of money for the relief of Scott's Bluff county, and to reimburse it for the expense incurred by it in the prosecution of Arnold, yet he (the auditor) is invested by the constitution and laws with the discretion to examine into and ascertain the exact amount of money expended by the county in the criminal prosecution, and then draw his warrant for such sum only as he ascertains the county expended. If by the express words of the act, or if by any reasonable construction thereof, it appeared that the legislature intended to appropriate $7,495.78, or so much thereof as might be necessary to reimburse the county, then doubtless the auditor's position would be tenable. But no such words of limitation of the amount appropriated are in the act, nor can they be read into it by any fair or reasonable construction. What was the intention of the legislature in the premises? Doubtless, to fully reimburse Scott's Bluff county for the expense incurred by it in prosecuting Arnold for murder. The appropriation of this money—a gift, in fact—was within the power of the legislature; and no inquiry or objection is admissible on the part of the auditor as to whether the appropriation was just, whether it was bestowed upon an undeserving recipient, or what motives influenced the legislature to make it. Nor can the auditor be heard to say that the gift was too large; that the appropriation carried more money than was required to reimburse the county for what it had expended. The only duty left for the auditor in the premises is a merely ministerial one. He has no authority to supervise the action of the legislature by an inquiry into the actual expenditures of Scott's Bluff county in the prosecution of Arnold.

Section 9, art. 9, of the Constitution provides: "The legislature shall provide by law that all claims upon the treasury shall be examined and adjusted by the auditor and approved by the secretary of state before any warrant for the amount allowed shall be drawn: provided that a party aggrieved by the decision of the auditor and secretary of state may appeal to the district court." Now, what is meant in this constitutional provision by "claims upon the treasury" which the auditor must examine and adjust? We take it that it means claims which the state is or may be under legal obligation to pay, such as the salaries of its officers and employes, the costs of erecting buildings, and the expense attendant upon the maintenance of its prisons, asylums, schools, and other institutions. We do not think the appropriation of the specific sum by the legislature to a particularly-named person, as a donation, gift, or a reward, and for which the state was under no legal obligation, comes within the claims which the auditor must examine and adjust. True, "he is placed in his position as agent of the state to protect the treasury against demands not lawfully due and payable by the state; and when a claim is presented, he must ascertain whether or not there is authority of law for its payment, and if he finds such authority that should satisfy him. If the legislature has, by express enactment, directed that a certain sum shall be paid to a person, and appropriated the money for such payment, the auditor's duty in the premises becomes then merely ministerial. The power conferred upon him is not to supervise the action of the state, when, by its legislature, it has admitted and acknowledged the claim, and ordered it to be paid. Where the claim is not admitted by the state, he then stands in behalf of the state, and, as its agent, it is his duty to determine whether or not it is admissible, and justly and legally due; but when his principal, the state, whose officer he is, acknowledges the claim, and directs it to be paid, then, inasmuch as the state's regulation for the payment of money requires him to draw warrants upon the treasurer before such money can be paid, his duty is, without questioning, to conform to such direction. Finding the law for its payment to exist, he must regard that as plenary evidence that it is justly due. He cannot properly question the authority of an act of the legislature directing the payment of money by the state, or disregard its authority, however fully he may be convinced that the money is bestowed upon an undeserving recipient." Angle v. Runyon, 84 N. J. L. 403. "Whenever the money necessary to pay a particular claim against a state has been appropriated by the legislature, and the amount of the claim has been definitely ascertained in a manner prescribed by law, a refusal by the auditor of said state to draw his warrant upon the treasurer of the state for the payment of the claim will authorize the interposition of the courts by appropriate mandatory proceedings." High, Extr. Rem. § 100. True, the constitution makes it the duty of the auditor to adjust claims. "'Adjust' means to settle or bring to a satisfactory state, so that the parties are agreed in the result; as, to adjust accounts." Webster, Dict. We are aware that it was said in State v. Babcock, 22 Neb. 88, that the constitutional provision requiring claims upon the state treasurer to be examined and adjusted by the auditor applied to all claims, whether by virtue of a specific appropriation or not, and that the making of a specific appropriation by the legislature for the purpose of paying a demand against the state was in no sense the auditing of such claim. But that case should be distinguished from the one here. The appropriation considered in State v. Babcock, supra, was for paying the expenses incurred by the state in the prosecution of certain persons for crimes committed in an unorganized territory of the state. By the second section of that appropriation act it was provided, "And the auditor is hereby authorized to draw his warrant for the several amounts due to the parties named in this act," and the court said: "This language would seem to indicate that it was the purpose of the legislature that the outstanding indebtedness should be paid to the parties holding the claims, upon the ascertainment by the auditor of the amounts due to each of the parties named, but, of course, not in excess of the sum appropriated." It is also stated in State v. Babcock, supra: "The legislature has no authority, under the constitution, to audit or adjust a claim against the state; and if money is appropriated to pay an illegal claim, or one which the state does not owe, and the auditor so finds upon examination and adjustment, it is his duty to refuse to issue a warrant, notwithstanding said appropriation." But this point was not necessary to a decision of the case there decided, and the rule there announced should be restricted to such claims and demands as the state is under a legal obligation to pay, and not extended to appropriations of specific sums of money made by the legislature as a donation, gift, reward, or charity. Suppose the governor should offer a reward of $1,000 for the arrest and return to the state of a fugitive from justice, and A. should arrest and return the fugitive, and the legislature should, after inquiring and ascertaining that A. had earned the reward, appropriate $1,000 to him for having arrested and returned the fugitive. Could the auditor inquire into the value of the time and outlay of A. in arresting and returning the fugitive, and refuse to draw a warrant for only the value of A.'s time and expenses? In such a case, would there be any adjustment to be made by the auditor of A's claim? Would the auditor have any duty to perform in the premises, but a mere ministerial one? Would he have any discretion in the premises? The legislature of 1898 (House Roll No. 85) appropriated the sum of $2,000 for the payment of damages sustained by one Maurer while engaged in the public service as a private in the Nebraska National Guards. It was recited in the act that Maurer was exposed to the cold and freezing weather, and by reason thereof he contracted rheumatism, which became chronic, and from which he suffered great physical pain, and became incapacitated for work, and was prevented from following his vocation and earning a living, and that he was required to pay out large sums of money for medical care and attendance for a period of more than two years. When Maurer presents his claim to the auditor, can the latter institute proceedings to ascertain the value of the time lost by Maurer by reason of his rheumatism and sickness; the expenses paid by him for physicians, nurses, etc.? Can he call experts to testify as to whether Maurer's injury is permanent, and, if so, his expectancy of life, and the present worth of what he probably would have earned, had he not been injured? This legislative gift or donation to Maurer contains an allowance for physical suffering. Can the auditor say that too much was allowed for such suffering, and reduced the appropriation accordingly? We think not. And yet he may do all these things, in Maurer's case, if his contention here is correct, viz., that his duty as auditor requires him to ascertain the amount of actual expenses incurred by Scott's Bluff county in the prosecution of Arnold, and then draw his warrant for that sum only. Such cannot be the law. If it is, then, instead of a government of three co-ordinate departments, the legislative is subordinate to the executive department. The auditor is an able and conscientious officer, and deserving of the highest commendation for the jealous care with which he guards the public treasury, and he acts wisely in shielding himself from liability by the decisions of the courts in cases where he is in doubt; but in the case at bar he may not only legally draw the warrant demanded by the relator, but it is his duty to do so. He has no discretion in the premises.

The demurrer to the return is sustained, and the writ will issue as prayed for.
Judgment accordingly.

Norval, Ch. J., dissenting:

Upon the question of the constitutionality of the act of the legislature under consideration, I express no opinion. While I concur in the views expressed by Ragan, C., relating to the claim of Nellie M. Richardson for an attorney's lien, I am unable to agree to the proposition that the duty of the auditor in the premises is merely ministerial, and that he has no authority to examine into and determine the actual sums expended by the county in the prosecution of Arnold. I deem it proper to state the reasons for my dissent.

It is conceded by the majority opinion that mandamus would not lie "if by the express words of the act, or if by any reasonable construction thereof, it appeared that the legislature intended to appropriate $7,495.78, or so much thereof as might be necessary to reimburse the county;" and there can be no doubt of the soundness of the proposition stated. What, then, is the proper interpretation to be placed upon the statute under review? In the body of the act it is provided "that there is hereby appropriated out of any funds in the state treasury, and not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $7,495.78 for the relief of Scott's Bluff county, and to reimburse said county for expenses incurred in the trial of one George S. Arnold upon the charge of murder, . . . and the auditor is hereby authorized to draw his warrant upon the state treasurer for the above amount in favor of said Scott's Bluff county." It is argued that the legislature, by this act, appropriated a definite, specific amount to be paid the county; that the approval of this claim required of the auditor is merely formal; and that he can exercise no discretion whatever. The statute defining the duties of the auditor, as well as the constitution, requires that officer to examine and audit all appropriations; and it has been the universal practice in the auditor's office, since the adoption of the present state constitution, to do so, and that, too, in cases of appropriations as specific as is the case before us. This custom must have been known to the framers of this act at the time it was adopted, and it is fair to presume that the lawmakers intended that the claim of the county, which this appropriation was intended to pay, should be audited, as had been the custom theretofore. The object of the legislature in passing the act was to reimburse, or make whole, the county for all the legitimate expenses incurred by it in the prosecution and trial of Arnold, and nothing further. The statute regulates the costs in a criminal prosecution for a felony, and when the offense is committed in an organized county the law requires that the county where the trial is had shall pay the costs and expenses thereof. The legislature, by this act, undertook to relieve Scott's Bluff county of this burden. The appropriation reads, "For the relief of Scott's Bluff county and to reimburse said county for expenses incurred," etc. What was meant by the use of the word "reimburse?" Webster defines it thus: "To replace in a treasury a purse, as an equivalent for what has been taken, lost, or expended; to refund; to pay back; to restore; as, to reimburse the expenses of a war." In construing statutes, words should be given their ordinary meaning; and, so interpreting the language of this appropriation, it is clear to my mind that the state is only required to refund or pay to the relator the amount of costs and expenses incurred by the county in the trial of Arnold, not exceeding the sum appropriated for that purpose. The auditor was not directed by the act to draw his warrant upon the treasury for $7,495.78, but he was authorized to do so if it required that sum to reimburse the county. Was it the duty of the auditor, under the constitution and statute, without discretion, to audit this claim? By section 9, art. 9, of the state Constitution, it is provided that: "The legislature shall provide by law that all claims upon the treasury shall be examined and adjusted by the auditor and approved by the secretary of state before any warrant for the amount allowed shall be drawn, provided that a party aggrieved by the decision of the auditor and secretary of state may appeal to the district court." In accordance with the requirements of the foregoing constitutional provision, the legislature, in 1877, passed a law providing for the examination and adjustment of claims upon the state treasury. Laws 1877, p. 202, Comp. Stat. chap. 83, art. 8. I here quote the entire act:

"Section 1. All claims of whatever nature upon the treasury of this state, before any warrant shall be drawn for the payment of the same, shall be examined and adjusted by the auditor of public accounts, and approved by the secretary of state: provided, however, that no warrant shall be drawn for any claim until an appropriation shall be made therefor.

"Sec. 2. The auditor of public accounts shall keep a record of all claims presented to him for examination and adjustment, and shall therein note the amount of such claim as shall be allowed or disallowed, and in case of the disallowance of all such claims, or any part thereof, the party aggrieved by the decision of the auditor and secretary of state, may appeal therefrom to the district court of the county where the capitol is located, within twenty days after receiving official notice. Such appeal may be taken in the manner provided by law in relation to appeals from county courts to such district courts, and shall be prosecuted to effect as in such cases: provided, however, that the party taking such appeal shall give bond to the state of Nebraska in the sum of two hundred dollars, with sufficient surety, to be approved by the clerk of the court to which such appeal may be taken, conditioned to pay all costs which may accrue to the auditors of public accounts, by reason of taking such appeal. No other bond shall be required.

"Sec. 3. In case the appeal shall be taken as provided in section two of this act, and on trial thereof, the district court shall be of the opinion that the decision of the said officers was wrong, either in fact or law, the said court shall reverse the same, and by its order and mandate require the said auditor to issue a warrant, in accordance with the provisions of section one of this act, upon the treasury for such an amount as shall be determined on the trial of such appeal to be legally due thereon. If either party feel aggrieved by the said judgment, the same may be reviewed in the supreme court as in other cases.

"Sec. 4. No claim which shall have once been presented to such auditor and secretary of state, and has been disallowed, in whole or in part, shall ever again be presented to such officers or in any manner acted upon by them, but shall be forever barred, unless an appeal shall have been taken, as provided in section two of this act.

"Sec. 5. When a claim has been in part allowed by such officers, a warrant shall be drawn as in other cases where the whole claim shall be allowed."

It will be observed that we have not only a constitutional provision, but an imperative statute, which requires, before any warrant shall be drawn by the auditor upon the state treasury, that the claim must be examined, audited, and allowed by the auditor, and approved by the secretary of state; and yet it is here sought to compel by mandamus the issuance of a warrant for the full amount named in the appropriation act, when the claim of the county has not as yet been passed upon by the auditor, nor has such claim ever been presented, either to him or the secretary of state, for approval. If the duty of the auditor and secretary of state, as regards the auditing of this claim, is ministerial merely, still the performance of such act is a prerequisite to the right of the auditor to draw the warrant. This is not a proceeding to require the approval of the claim, but to compel the issuance of a warrant without any approval by either of the officers named. To grant the writ is to disregard the plain requirements of both the constitution and the statute.

It is said the claims upon the treasury which the auditor is required to "examine and adjust," in the sense in which that term is used in the constitution, are "claims which the state is or may be under legal obligations to pay, such as the salaries of its officers and employes, the costs of erecting buildings, and the expense attendant upon the maintenance of its prisons, asylums, schools, and other institutions." We are unwilling to so limit the word "claims," but conclude it was employed in its broadest sense, and embraces every claim against the state for money under an appropriation made by the legislature. The constitution reads, "all claims," and we have no right to inject words into that instrument by judicial interpretation. That it is the right and duty of the auditor to pass upon and audit the claim under consideration, we entertain no doubt. Section 1 of the Act of 1877, above quoted, speaks of "all claims of whatsoever nature." More comprehensive language could not have been employed to express the legislative will. The section is too plain to leave any room for interpretation. Even though the construction adopted by my associates is the correct one, namely, "claims which the state is or may be under legal obligations to pay," are the only ones which the auditor is required to examine and audit, it is the duty of the respondent to pass upon and determine what amount of this appropriation Scott's Bluff county is entitled to receive, since, the moment the act took effect, if it is a valid and constitutional law,—and the majority have so found and declared,—the claim of the county for expenses incurred in the prosecution of Arnold becomes a legal obligation against the state.

It is said the duty of the auditor in the premises is a ministerial one merely, and that he has no authority to inquire into the amount of money actually expended by the county in the criminal case. The constitution and the statute quoted each provides for an appeal to the district court from the decision of the auditor and secretary of state in passing upon all claims upon the state treasury. Sections 6, 7, art. 8, chap. 83, Comp. Stat., are as follows:

"Sec. 6. All persons having claims against the state shall exhibit the same, with the evidence in support thereof, to the auditor, to be audited, settled, and allowed within two years after such claims shall accrue; and in all suits brought in behalf of the state, no debt or claim shall be allowed against the state as a set-off, but such as has been exhibited to the auditor, and by him allowed or disallowed, except only in cases where it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the court that the defendant at the time of trial, is in possession of vouchers which he could produce to the auditor, or that he was prevented from exhibiting the claim to the auditor, by absence from the state, sickness, or unavoidable accident: provided, the auditor in no case shall audit a claim or set-off which is not provided by law.

"Sec. 7. The auditor, whenever he may think it necessary to the proper settlement of any account, may examine the parties, witnesses, or others, on oath or affirmation, touching any matter material to be known in the settlement of such account."

By said section 6 it is made obligatory upon all persons having claims against the state to exhibit the same, with the evidence in support thereof, to the auditor, to be audited, settled, and allowed, within a specified period after the accrual of the claim; and by the seventh section the auditor is clothed with the power to administer oaths, to take testimony, and examine witnesses and the claimant, if he deems it necessary to the proper adjustment of the claim or account. The duty enjoined upon the auditor is not merely ministerial, but, to a great extent, he exercises judicial functions; and from an order rejecting a claim, in whole or in part, an appeal lies to the district court. The conclusion is therefore irresistible, from a consideration of the several sections of the statute already referred to, and the provisions of the constitution quoted, that the duty of the auditor, in examining and adjusting claims presented against the state, requires the exercise of judgment and discretion to determine, not only whether such claim is a legal obligation, but whether the amount asked is justly due. After the auditor has passed upon and adjusted a claim, and the secretary of state has approved the same, we concede the auditor then has no discretion in the matter of drawing his warrant upon the treasury for the amount found due.

This case comes squarely within the decision in State v. Babcock, 23 Neb. 88. The Legislature of 1888 passed an act appropriating $6,824.14 to pay the expenses incurred in the trial of I. P. Olive and others for murder, which act named the persons and the amount of money each should receive, and authorized the auditor to draw a warrant for the several amounts due the parties named in the act. The relator applied for a mandamus to compel the auditor to audit his claim, and to draw a warrant upon the treasury for the same. The court denied the writ. It was insisted in that case that the duties of the auditor were ministerial, and that he had no discretion in the premises. The court, after quoting section 9 of article 9 of the Constitution says: "This language clearly implies a limitation upon the power of the legislature in the matter of auditing claims against the state. The provision is imperative. The legislature shall provide that all claims upon the treasury shall be examined and adjusted by the auditor, and approved by the secretary of state, before any 25 L. R. A. warrant shall be drawn or the money paid. These officers are, by the fundamental law of the state, made the examining board, through whose hands all claims must pass, and it is not within the power of the legislature to change this tribunal. It cannot review the decision of those officers, for the section clearly points out the reviewing court. The party aggrieved may appeal to the district court. The fact that the appropriation is specific can have no weight whatever, for section 23 of article 8 of the Constitution provides that 'no money shall be drawn from the treasury except in pursuance of a specific appropriation made by the law,' etc. All appropriations of money from the treasury are specific, and 'all claims upon the treasury shall be examined and adjusted by the auditor,' etc. This is no distinction in appropriations. It is true that, in the section [23, art. 8] above referred to, it is provided that 'no allowance shall be made for the incidental expenses of any state officer except the same be made by general appropriations,' etc.; but this provision can in no way change the fact that each appropriation contained in the general appropriation must be a specific appropriation for the purpose or officers named, and even then an account must be rendered, 'specifying each item.' Nothing can be more specific than such an appropriation. No warrant can be drawn except in pursuance of an appropriation, but the auditor may examine and adjust claims in the absence of such action by the legislature. While it is the duty of the legislature to see that no appropriations are made except for meritorious claims yet such is the character of the safeguards thrown around the state treasury that such appropriation is by no means a final adjustment or auditing of the claim. It simply places so much of the funds in a position to be used by the auditor and secretary when the claim is examined and adjusted by the auditor, and his action is approved by the secretary. While the legislature may set apart money to pay a claim, it cannot pay it out, nor order it to be done, except in the manner provided by law. It has no jurisdiction to audit claims, and it is powerless to apply the money thereon without the quasi judicial concurrence of the officers named. If money is appropriated by that body to pay a claim, such action is not an adjudication upon its validity, to such an extent as to relieve the auditor and secretary from responsibility, for their duties remain as fixed by the constitution. This construction of the constitution has been adopted by the legislature, as well as by the supreme court in its former decisions." The above decision was cited with approval, and followed, in State v. Moore, 37 Neb. 507.

Torola v. State, 8 Fla. 202, was an application for a mandamus against the comptroller of the state, to compel him to audit, allow, and pay a legal claim against the state. The circuit court awarded the writ, and the supreme court, on appeal, reversed this judgment and dismissed the action, holding the claim could not be enforced by mandamus. The statute of Florida defining the duties of the comptroller in the matter of examining, auditing, adjusting, and settling of accounts and claims against the state is substantially the same as the provisions of our statute. The third and fourth paragraphs of the syllabus in the Florida case are as follows: "Where a purely ministerial act is to be done, and there is no other specific remedy, a mandamus will be granted; but where the person against whom the mandamus is prayed is invested with judicial power, or acts in a deliberate capacity, or has the power and right of deciding, the writ will not lie, except to compel him to proceed to the discharge of his duty, by deciding according to his best judgment. The comptroller of this state, in the administration of the concerns of his office, is required to exercise judgment and discretion; and the courts cannot act directly upon him by mandamus, and thereby guide and control his judgment and discretion."

Angle v. Runyon, 88 N. J. L. 408, is relied upon as an authority in the majority opinion. In New Jersey the office of the comptroller of the treasury is created by the legislature, and in that state there is no constitutional provision relating to the auditing of claims against the state; and the statutory provision upon the subject is not, in all respects, the same as our own. There the law directs that the comptroller "shall draw all warrants on the treasury . . . for the payment of all moneys directed by law to be paid out of the treasury." It might well be held under such a provision, that when the legislature makes a specific appropriation of money the auditing officer has no discretion in the matter of his drawing his warrant in favor of the party entitled to the appropriation. I do not think that authority should control the decision in this case, but prefer to follow the former adjudications of this court, to which reference has been already made. Under the construction adopted by the majority, there is nothing to prevent future legislatures from so framing appropriation bills as to completely deprive the auditor of the constitutional power of examining and auditing claims upon the state treasury.

We are of the opinion that the relator mistook his remedy. The statute has afforded him a plain and adequate remedy at law. He should present the claim of the county to the auditor, and, if rejected, appeal from the decision. Where a party has an adequate remedy by the usual and ordinary proceedings at law, a writ of mandamus will not lie. This is the settled law upon the subject. State v. Omaha, 14 Neb. 265, 45 Am. Rep. 108; State v. Kinkaid, 28 Neb. 641. While mandamus is the appropriate remedy to enforce the performance of acts on the part of public officers strictly ministerial, it will not issue to control the discretion of a public officer (State v. Kendall, 15 Neb. 262; State v. Boyd, 86 Neb. 60), nor to compel an officer exercising judicial functions to make a particular decision. State v. Churchill, 87 Neb. 702. Mr. High, in his work on Extraordinary Legal Remedies, after stating the rule as to ministerial duties of auditing officers being controlled by mandamus, at section 102 says: "Where, however, auditing officers, intrusted by law with the duty of passing upon and determining the validity of claims against a state, are vested with powers of a discretionary nature as to the performance of their duties, a different rule prevails. In such cases the fundamental principle denying relief by mandamus to control the exercise of official discretion applies, and the officers having exercised their judgment, and decided adversely to a claimant, mandamus will not lie to control their decision, or to compel them to audit and allow a rejected claim. The remedy, if any, for such a grievance, must be sought at the hands of the legislature, and not of the courts. And, where a state comptroller is vested with certain discretionary powers in the adjusting and settlement of demands against the state, he cannot be compelled to issue his warrant for the payment of a particular sum."

Upon principle and authority, I am constrained to hold that the writ should be denied; and the importance of the question involved, and the abuses and evils, as I conceive, liable to result from the construction given the constitution and statute by my associates, prompts me to dissent from the judgment pronounced.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

RE Cancellation from Registry Lists of
The Name of Matilda Joselyn GAGE.

(.....N. Y. ....)

A school commissioner whose authority is not confined to one school district but extends to many of them with power of superintendence and control is to be classed with the town and county officers within a constitutional provision as to the election of officers restricting the franchise to male citizens.

(January 23, 1894.)

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the General Term of the Supreme Court,

NOTE.—For note on right of women to vote, see Coffin v. Thompson (Mich.) 21 L. R. A. 662.
25 L. R. A.

Fourth Department, affirming an order entered in the office of the Clerk of Onondaga County striking the defendant's name from the registry list of the third election district of the town of Manlius. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Louis Marshall, for appellant:

Chapter 214 of the Laws of 1892 permitting women to vote for school commissioners is constitutional.

For more than seventy years, during which period the constitutional qualification of voters has been defined in substantially the same terms as are now employed, the legislatures of this state have provided for other qualifications than the constitutional ones, for electors for school officers, and the manifest inference is, especially in view of the fact that the state has been divided into thousands of school districts, in each of which school officers have been annually elected without question by voters not possessing the constitutional qualifications, or at which voters possessing them have been prevented from voting for not possessing the statutory qualifications, that the constitutional provisions under consideration were not deemed applicable to such officers.

It has uniformly been held that the legislature has no power to create disabilities not existing under the constitution or to restrict the right of suffrage which the constitution has established, and it must necessarily follow that it has no right to enlarge the classes of voters specified in the constitution.

Green v. Shumway, 89 N. Y. 418; Goetschius v. Mattheuison, 61 N. Y. 430.

The practical construction given by the legislature to a constitutional provision, for many years acquiesced in and acted upon, unquestioned by the executive and administrative departments is entitled to controlling weight in its interpretation, and has almost the force of a judicial exposition.

People v. Dayton, 55 N. Y. 387; People v. Home Ins. Co. 92 N. Y. 337; Southampton v. Meoz Bay Oyster Co. 116 N. Y. 16; Sweet v. Syracuse, 129 N. Y. 345; People v. Westchester County Board of Suprs. 189 N. Y. 524; Fort v. Burch, 6 Barb. 73.

The qualifications of voters for school officers have never been identical with those of electors as defined by the constitution; hence, a statute permitting women to vote for such officers was not unconstitutional.

Belles v. Burr, 76 Mich. 1; Wheeler v. Brady, 15 Kan. 28; State v. Cones, 15 Neb. 444; Plummer v. Yost, 19 L. R. A. 110, 144 Pl. 68. See also Opinion of the Justices, 115 Mass. 608.

The right of suffrage at school elections now exists by statute in all of the New England states, in New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Kansas, Nebraska, Wyoming, Dakota, Colorado, California, and Louisiana.

Fiske's Civil Government of the United States, pp. 44, 45.

The framers of the constitution in using the phrase "all officers" intended to refer to officers of ejusdem generis with those specified in the earlier portion of the section, viz., county, city, town, and village officers, and such other officers as are referred to in the constitution.

Where general words follow specific words designating certain special things, the general words are to be limited to cases of the same general nature as those which are specified.

People v. Richards, 108 N. Y. 148; Hermanes v. Ulster County Board of Suprs. 71 N. Y. 431; People v. New York & M. B. R. Co. 84 N. Y. 565; East Oakland Twp. v. Skinner, 94 U. S. 255, 24 L. ed. 125; Thames & M. M. Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, L. R. 12 App. Cas. 484.

No constitutional right to vote for school commissioners is vested in the electors defined by art. 2, § 1. They might have been appointed under legislative authority by the boards of supervisors as in the original act; by a convocation of ministers; by an institute of female teachers; or by any authority designated by the legislature.

People v. Clute, 50 N. Y. 458, 10 Am. Rep. 25 L. R. A.

508; Sturgis v. Spofford, 45 N. Y. 446; Bo Carboy, 27 Hun. 83.

Messrs. Goodelle & Nottingham for respondent.

Finch, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question argued on this appeal is whether a woman may vote for school commissioner in her proper district within the state, and it arose in this manner: An act of the legislature (Laws 1893, chap. 214) provides that "all persons, without regard to sex, who are eligible to the office of school commissioner, and have the other qualifications now required by law, shall have the right to vote for school commissioner in the various commissioner districts of the state." The act further requires that the persons so entitled to vote shall be registered "as provided by law for those who vote for county officers;" that the county clerk shall prepare and distribute the prescribed ballots, and the inspectors of election shall count and receive the same. Acting under this authority, Mrs. Gage was duly registered in the third election district of the town of Manlius on October 21, 1893. The board of inspectors were formally requested to remove her name from the registry, but refused to comply with the demand, whereupon an application was made to a justice of the supreme court, pursuant to section 87, chap. 680, Laws 1893, to strike her name from the registry, on the sole ground that she was not a lawful voter, by reason of her sex. That application was granted, the learned judge holding that the act conferring upon her the right to vote for school commissioner was unconstitutional. The inspectors obeyed the order. Mrs. Gage appealed to the general term, where it was affirmed, and from that affirmation brings her appeal to this court.

While it is true that the election of 1893 has passed, and the possibility of voting on that occasion is absolutely gone, it does not necessarily follow that the question involved has become purely abstract, and divested of any practical results consequent upon its decision. The order made determined the status of the voter under the Act of 1892, and settled her right for future elections; and if a wrong has been done it is not easy to discover any practical remedy except through a reversal of the order which was granted. Both parties concur in seeking a final decision upon the constitutional question involved, and we are of opinion that the case presented requires of us its determination. The learned counsel for the appellant states very frankly and accurately the sole inquiry upon which the decision depends. He concedes that under article 2, § 1, and article 10, § 2, of the Constitution, no woman has the right to vote for constitutional officers, because the franchise is conferred explicitly upon "male citizens;" but he contends that school officers are not such constitutional officers, because the practical interpretation of that instrument has long and invariably been to the contrary. That is true and only true of the officers of the school district, as the fundamental unit of the school system. The trustees of such a district are the authorized business managers of the school within its boundaries, and the legislature has always assumed, and been permitted to assume, the right to determine who might vote for such trustees, and what qualifications should or should not be requisite and necessary. To that class of school officers intrusted with the government and control of the simple school district by itself alone, and within its own boundaries, the constitutional provisions have never been applied; but I have yet to find an instance in the statutory history of the state prior to the act in question where an officer whose authority was not confined to the school district, but extended over many of them, with a power of superintendence and control, has been regarded as anything other than a town or county officer, and within the constitutional provisions. Under the Revised Statutes the superintending officers were three commissioners and three inspectors of common schools. 1 Rev. Stat. p. 840, § 3. These were town officers, to be chosen by the constitutional electors (section 1), and by ballot. Id. p. 848, § 2. In 1848 these officers were abolished (chapter 183, § 1), and in their place was substituted (section 2) a town superintendent of common schools, to be annually elected in the same manner as "other town officers" are chosen, and upon whom the duties of inspection and superintendence were imposed. He also was a town officer, and chosen by the constitutional electors. In 1856 (chapter 179) the system was again changed by providing first for the appointment and then for the election of school commissioners. The terms of the statute show that they were still regarded as within the constitutional provisions, and were county officers, as their predecessors had been town officers. Where a county constituted a single assembly district the supervisors were to choose "for their county" an officer to be called "school commissioner." Section 1. Where a county had more than one assembly district, a commissioner for each of such assembly districts was to be chosen. Section 2. So far the office created pertained to the known constitutional divisions of the state, and its incumbent was clearly a county officer. The situation was not changed by the further provision allowing in a single county, constituting but one assembly district, the selection of two commissioners, and dividing the county into sections for that purpose. Section 4. No town was to be divided in the process, and the commissioner of one section could discharge his official duty in the other section upon the written request of its commissioner. Section 7. Under the Act of 1864 (chapter 555, title 2, § 11) he is required to do so upon the command of the superintendent of public instruction. Under the Law of 1856 the appointment by the boards of supervisors was but temporary. At the annual general election of 1867 the officers became elective, and it was provided that "all the provisions of law relating to the mode of voting and of canvassing the votes for the county officers shall apply to and govern the election of such commissioners." If it be a just criticism that this provision was merely modal, that may have furnished a reason why, for a plainer exposition of the intended meaning, the language was changed in the general Act of 1864. It there reads (section 8, title 2): "The laws regulating the election of, and canvassing the votes for, county officers shall apply to such elections." Who may vote for county officers is an essential part of the laws "regulating" their election, for it has been held that into those laws is to be read the constitutional definition of an elector as if it had been specially repeated therein. People v. Barber, 48 Hun, 198. It follows that there are two definite and distinct classes of school officers, which are those of the school district, the unit of the system, and those of superintendence over a larger or smaller number of such units aggregated; and that the latter are, and always have been, as clearly either town or county officers as the former have not been. I am unable to see, therefore, that any practical construction, prior to the Act of 1892, has ever been given to the constitution which takes the elective officers charged with superintendence out of the category of constitutional officers, or puts a constituency behind them having other qualifications than those necessary for the election of town and county officers.

The Constitution, in article 2, § 1, prescribes the qualifications of voters "for all offices that now are or hereafter may be elective by the people," and confines the franchise specifically to "male citizens." The office of school commissioner was one thereafter made "elective by the people" through the operation of the alternative given by article 10, § 2, which provides that "all officers whose offices may hereafter be created by law shall be elected by the people or appointed as the legislature may direct." That is, in such cases it may choose between election and appointment, and in the latter event may dictate the authority and mode of appointment. The legislature chose that the office should be elective, and, becoming such, it fell within the scope and terms of the constitutional provisions applicable to elections by the people. The only possible answer is the one which was attempted and derived from a supposed practical construction. We have seen that the facts do not justify that answer. Indeed, the cases cited from other states do not go far enough to support the appellant's argument. In Belles v. Burr, 76 Mich. 1, the question was over the election of a school-district trustee. In Wheeler v. Brady, 15 Kan. 26, the controversy concerned a school-district treasurer. In State v. Cones, 15 Neb. 444, the voting was at a school-district meeting. In Plummer v. Yost, 144 Ill. 68, 19 L. R. A. 110, the election was of members of the board of education. And the Opinion of the Justices, 115 Mass. 608, related to the right of a woman to be a member of a school committee. On the other hand, when the question arose in Kansas, not of voting at a school-district meeting, but for a county superintendent of schools, the court deemed it almost too clear for argument that a woman could not vote for the latter officer. Winans v. Williams, 5 Kan. 227. It seems to me needless to prolong the discussion. A constitutional convention may take away the barrier which excludes the claimed right of the appellant, but until that is done we must enforce the law as it is written.

The order should be affirmed, but, as stipulated, without costs.

All concur.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

Claudius BOTTOMS, by Turner Bottoms,
His Next Friend,

SEABOARD & ROANOKE R. CO., Appt.

(.....N. C.....)

1. A child twenty-two months old cannot be charged with negligence for straying upon a railroad track.
2. The negligence of a parent in permitting an infant to wander upon a railroad track will not be imputed to it so as to preclude a recovery by it for an injury there received.
3. A railroad company is liable for injuring a child of tender years upon its track, if, consistent with the attention demanded by the engine, its danger could have been discovered in time to have avoided the injury by stopping the train.

(May 9, 1894.)

NOTE.—Care required of railroad companies to prevent injuring small children upon the track.

- I. Duty of railroads to fence against children.
- II. Duty to discover child on track.
- III. Lookout for children.
- IV. Negligence after discovery.
- V. Failure to give signal.
- VI. Speed.
- VII. City.
- VIII. Foot caught.
- IX. Sudden appearance of child.
- X. Projecting timber or car.
- XI. Gross negligence.

I. Duty of railroads to fence against children.

There is some conflict of authority as to the duty required of railroad companies to fence their tracks whereby injuries to small children may be prevented, the question arising on what is known as the Stock Fence Law. Some courts hold that the failure to fence as required by statute is negligence where a small child got on to the track through such failure and was injured. (Age eight months) Schmidt v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 23 Wis. 186, 99 Am. Dec. 158; (age two years) Stuetgen v. Wisconsin Cent. R. Co. 80 Wis. 498; (age nine years) Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Grablin (Neb.) Oct. 18, 1893; Keyser v. Chicago & T. R. Co. 56 Mich. 559, 56 Am. Rep. 405; (age four years) Williams v. Great Western R. Co. L. R. 9 Exch. 159, 43 L. J. Exch. 105, 31 L. T. N. S. 124, 22 Week. Rep. 531.

And in Marcott v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co., 49 Mich. 99, where the court charged that it was negligence if the child was injured through failure to fence, the court said that nothing more could have been asked on that point.

In Morrissey v. Providence & W. R. Co., 15 R. I. 271, it was said that if the child was injured on an unguarded track there might be negligence, but that was not the question involved.

But in Prendegast v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 58 N. Y. 652, and in Robertson v. New York, 25 L. R. A.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Northampton County in favor of plaintiff, in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by negligence for which defendant was liable. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. W. H. Day, for appellant:

Contributory negligence bars a recovery, unless the defendant's negligence was wanton, willful, or reckless; or unless the defendant, by the exercise of ordinary care, after discovering the negligence of the plaintiff, could have avoided the injury.

The first proposition is true, because, in the presence of wantonness, willfulness, or recklessness, the doctrine of contributory negligence has no application.

Cooley, Torts, 674.

The second proposition is true, because, after discovering the contributory negligence of the 7 Misc. 645, it is held that it is not negligence to fail to fence the track against stock, whereby a child, having no right, comes on the track and is killed.

And in Meagher v. Cooperstown & C. V. R. Co., 75 Hun, 455, it was said that the negligence in failing to fence was a question of doubt.

But in Ditchett v. Spuyten Duyvil & P. M. R. Co. 67 N. Y. 425, where the party was not injured by a train, and was not an infant, it was said that the stock fence law was not intended to protect against personal injury.

And in Fitzgerald v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co., 20 Minn. 336, 43 Am. Rep. 212, where the statutory fence was a four-wire fence and the lowest one sixteen inches from the ground, and a child eighteen months old was injured, it was held there is no duty imposed on the railroad to fence against children.

And in McCarty v. Fitchburg R. Co., 154 Mass. 17, it was held that the duty to fence the road as required by Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 112, § 115, does not apply where the convenient use of the road would be obstructed, and a boy five years old crossed the street, passed on the track and was injured.

And in Walkenbaur v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 17 Fed. Rep. 128, 3 McCrary, 553, it was held that the Iowa Code, section 1289, rendering a railroad liable to the owner of stock killed by reason of failure to fence, does not apply so as to render a railroad negligent for failure to fence against infant children.

II. Duty to discover child on track.

On the question as to the degree of care required of railroad companies in discovering a child on the track in time to prevent injury, the cases are not all unanimous, the general rule being that ordinary care is required to discover the child and prevent the injury, and that on the failure to discover an infant in time to prevent injury that ought to have been discovered by the exercise of plaintiff, the negligence of the defendant then becomes the proximate cause of the injury, if defendant fails to observe ordinary care.

Davies v. Mann, 10 Mees. & W. 545; Butterfield v. Forrester, 11 East, 60.

In neither of the above cases was the plaintiff a trespasser so the duty in both cases was the same. Yet in Butterfield v. Forrester, supra, a recovery is denied. In Davies v. Mann, supra, a recovery is had. Why? Because, in the case of Butterfield v. Forrester there is no recklessness, wantonness, or willfulness on the part of the defendant. In Davies v. Mann the failure to anticipate, as the defendant was bound to do, the lawful presence of the ass, coupled with the fact that the driver was "fifteen steps behind his team," makes his conduct wanton and reckless and the injury inflicted in law willful.

The doctrine in Herring v. Wilmington & R. R. Co., 32 N. C. 402, 51 Am. Dec. 395, was that contributory negligence bars a recovery unless the defendant's negligence was wanton, willful, or reckless.

Manly v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 74 N. C. 658.

Yet in Deans v. Wilmington & W. R. Co., 107 N. C. 690, Judge Avery uses this language: "In delivering the opinion in Manly v. Wilmington & W. R. Co., 74 N. C. 655, Justice Bynum foreshadowed by an intimation the subsequent adoption by this court in Gunter

v. Wicker, 85 N. C. 810, of the principles stated in Davies v. Mann, 10 Mees. & W. 545, and, after it had been approved in so many well-considered opinions, it became apparent that it will be illogical and inconsistent to adhere to the rule laid down in Herring v. Wilmington & R. R. Co. 32 N. C. 402, 51 Am. Dec. 395.

The doctrine adhered to in Manly v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 74 N. C. 658, and Gunter v. Wicker, 85 N. C. 810, is not a departure from but an affirmation of the doctrine in Herring v. Wilmington & R. R. Co. and Davies v. Mann, supra.

The departure first occurs in Deans v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 107 N. C. 686.

Apply the rules in the Deans Case to the facts of the case at bar, and you charge the railroad company with the duty of anticipating the negligence of the plaintiff's father and mother, and of providing against it, and relieve them, the father and the mother, of even the exercise of ordinary care in protecting an infant twenty-two months old. This is a solecism of the law.

If the rule laid down in Deans v. Wilmington & W. R. Co., 107 N. C. 686, is adhered to, the doctrine of contributory negligence no longer obtains in this state.

Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Brown, 75 Tex. 267; O'Keefe v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 32 Iowa, 467; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Monday, reasonable care, the question of negligence is one for the jury. Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Barker, 39 Ark. 491; (age nineteen years) Mauerman v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 41 Mo. App. 848; (age sixteen months) Reilly v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 94 Mo. 600; (age two years) Frick v. St. Louis K. C. & N. R. Co. 75 Mo. 542, 595; Isabel v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 60 Mo. 475; Meredith v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 108 N. C. 618; (age nineteen months) San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Vaughn, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 196; (age eighteen months) Texas & P. R. Co. v. O'Donnell, 58 Tex. 37; (age five or six years) Galveston, H. & H. R. Co. v. Moore, 59 Tex. 64, 46 Am. Rep. 303; (age four or five years) Hyde v. Union Pac. R. Co. 7 Utah, 356.

In Donahoe v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 89 Mo. 543, 58 Am. Rep. 594, it was held that the duty of an engineer when he sees children near the track in the country is the same as if he had been running through a populous city where more caution is to be observed in running a train than in the country. (Two and one half years old.)

In Meeks v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 56 Cal. 513, 38 Am. Rep. 67, it was held that a railroad company is negligent, where the whistle was not blown or bell rung, although a child six or seven years old lay on the track within a few feet of a public crossing, and the conductor saw him four or five hundred feet ahead but did not make out that it was a child until within one hundred and fifty feet, and the child should have been discovered some three hundred feet off. In Meeks v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 56 Cal. 602, which was a former trial of the same case, the evidence was different.

But in Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Clark, 41 Ill. App. 243, it was held that a railroad company is not under greater obligation to anticipate the presence of children upon its tracks on its property, than of adults.

And in Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. v. Bowen, 40 Ind. 545, it was held that there is no willful negligence where a child five years old behind a standing car on a street near a wharf is not seen by trainmen and is injured in moving the car, although no signals were given, but the fireman and engineer were on the lookout as the train was backed.

So in Dooley v. Mobble & O. R. Co., 69 Miss. 643, it was held that a railroad company owed no duty to a youth of nineteen years wrongfully standing at the end of a switch track, and the speed of the car was about three miles an hour.

And in Woodruff v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 47 Fed. Rep. 689, it was held that the railroad company is not bound to exercise ordinary care and vigilance as against a child twenty-two months old trespassing on right of way, where the child was not seen in time to stop the train.

And in Ogden v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 23 W. N. C. 191, it was held that no negligence will be presumed because a boy ten years old was killed by some part of a train not at a crossing, at a place where the company was not bound to use unusual precautions.

So in Morrissey v. Eastern R. Co., 126 Mass. 377, it was held that a railroad company owes no duty to a trespassing child four years old using the track on its right of way as a playground, except the negative one not maliciously or with gross and reckless carelessness to run over him.

And in Meyer v. Midland Pac. R. Co., 2 Neb. 819, it was held that there was no negligence if the engineer of a train used the whistles at highways and crossings, fifty yards from each, rang the bell constantly, kept a proper lookout and did not see a child three and one-half years old in the city at a street crossing until within such distance that injury could not be prevented, where the child rose up out of a ditch in front of the train.

So in Burnes v. Staten Island Rapid Transit R. Co., 44 N. Y. S. R. 271, it was held that the failure to see a small boy on the track at a place where he could not be seen is not negligence towards a larger boy attempting to save him, when every effort is made to stop the train as he runs on the track, as an engineer is not bound to expect helpless infants on the track.

49 Ark. 257; Shearman & Redf. Neg. § 488; Pierce, American Railway Law, p. 825.

The true rule in Davies v. Mann, 10 Mees. & W. 545, is where the defendant, after having become aware of the plaintiff's negligence, fails to exercise ordinary care in avoiding the injury, then there is liability.

Smith, Negligence, Whitaker's ed. pp. 374, 375; Gunter v. Wicker, 85 N. C. 810; 2 Thompson, Neg. 1157, and cases cited (by analogy Walker v. Reidsville, 96 N. C. 882); Cooley, Torts, p. 674.

The use of ordinary care is due to a party guilty of contributory negligence when one discovers that negligence, not when he might have discovered it.

Shearman & Redf. Neg. § 98, p. 159; Philips v. Wilpers, 2 Lans. 389; State v. Manchester & L. Railroad, 52 N. H. 528; Needham v. San Francisco & S. J. R. Co. 37 Cal. 420; Robinson v. Cone, 22 Vt. 213, 54 Am. Dec. 87.

In the case at bar the plaintiff was a trespasser. The duty the defendant owed him was "a bare obligation to avoid inflicting a willful injury upon him."

Emery v. Roanoke Nav. & Water-Power Co. 17 L. R. A. 699, 111 N. C. 95; Manly v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 74 N. C. 655; McAdoo v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 105 N. C. 147; Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & O. R. Co. v. Vining, 27 Ind. 513, 92 Am. Dec. 269; Kean v. Baltimore &

O. R. Co. 61 Md. 154; Lafayette & I. R. Co. v. Huffman, 28 Ind. 287, 92 Am. Dec. 518; Mann v. Brooklyn R. Co. 88 N. Y. 455, 98 Am. Dec. 66; 2 American Corp. & R. Rep. 199, note; Roden v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 30 Ill. App. 354; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Yeamans, 86 Va. 860; Dun v. Seaboard & R. R. Co. 76 Va. 645; Carrington v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 88 Ala. 472; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Greene (Ky.) 19 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 96; Kentucky Cent. R. Co. v. Dilla, 4 Bush, 593; Paducah & M. R. Co. v. Hoehi, 12 Bush, 46; Card v. New York & H. R. Co. 50 Barb. 39; Tyler v. Siles, 88 Va. 470; Chicago West Div. R. Co. v. Ryan, 131 Ill. 474; Scoville v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 81 Mo. 434; Denman v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 26 Minn. 357; Harlan v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 65 Mo. 25; Spicer v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 11 L. R. A. 835, 34 W. Va. 514; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Black, 89 Ala. 313; Carrington v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 88 Ala. 472; Isabel v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 60 Mo. 482; Weymire v. Wolfe, 53 Iowa, 533; Morris v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 45 Iowa, 29; 2 Thompson, Neg. p. 1156; Patterson, Railway Accident Law, § 181, p. 174; 2 Greenleaf, Ev. § 222.

The doctrine I contend for is the construction put on Davies v. Mann, 10 Mees. & W. 545, by the English courts.

Radley v. London & N. W. R. Co. L. R. 10 Exch. 100. See also Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Symphkins, 54 Tex. 615, 88 Am. Rep. 632;

And in Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. v. Williams, 69 Miss. 631, it was held that an engineer is under no obligation to stop his train for a small child trespassing on the track until he had discovered that she was a human being. After discovery, willful or wanton injury will render the company liable.

So in Chrystal v. Troy & B. R. Co., 105 N. Y. 164, and Foley v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co., 73 Hun. 248 (children seventeen months and four years), it was held that an engineer of a train is not bound to expect helpless infants upon the track near a street, without ability to escape, and he could run on without being negligent until he discovered that the child was heedless of danger. All that an engineer is required to do after the discovery of the peril is to use reasonable diligence to avert injury.

See also next subhead, Lookout for children.

III. Lookout for children.

It is the duty of railroad employes in the operation of trains to keep reasonable lookout ahead for children, especially in a city, and failure to do so will be negligence. (Age six years) Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. McArthur, 10 U. S. App. 546, 53 Fed. Rep. 484; (age two years) Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Long, 75 Pa. 257.

Or where a train is backing in a city. (Tender years) Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Murray, 71 Ill. 601; (age three years) Hamilton v. Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. 42 La. Ann. 824; (age three years) Battishill v. Humphreys, 64 Mich. 494; (age two years) Frick v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 5 Mo. App. 435; (age ten years) Barry v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 82 N. Y. 290, 44 Am. Rep. 377; (age six years) Bellefontaine & L. R. Co. v. Snyder, 18 Ohio St. 399; (age eight years) Barley v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 4 Biss. 480; (age thirteen years) Whalen v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 75 Wis. 654.

Or where a train is backing and no lookout is kept as required by city ordinance. (Age eighteen years) Bergman v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 88 Mo. 678; Eckert v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (Mo.) 25 L. R. A.

4 West. Rep. 596; Mertz v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 89 Mo. 672; (age twelve years) Erwin v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 96 Mo. 290.

Or where a train is backing at other crossings. (Little child) Wiley v. Long Island R. Co. 76 Hun. 29; (age six years) Johnson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 49 Wis. 529, 56 Wis. 274; (age four years) North Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Mahoney, 87 Pa. 137.

And a lookout must be kept on train making flying switch. (Less than three years) Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Schmidt, 129 Ind. 230.

Or on a detached train. (Age nine years) Ryan v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 37 Hun. 138.

And under a Tennessee statute a vigilant lookout must be kept. (Age eight years) East Tennessee & G. R. Co. v. St. John, 524, 73 Am. Dec. 169.

And it is the duty of railroad employes to keep a proper lookout and exercise ordinary care to prevent injury to children at crossings or at such places as they may reasonably expect to find children, and after discovery to use such measures as are proper under the circumstances to avoid injury. (Age twelve years) Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Boozer, 70 Tex. 530; (age two years) Douglas v. Central Texas & N. W. R. Co. (Tex.) May 2, 1894; (age twenty-two months) Bottoms v. Seaboard & R. R. Co. (N. C.) May 9, 1894; (age nine years) Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Grablin (Neb.) Oct. 13, 1893; (age eight years) Eason v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 2 U. S. App. 272, 51 Fed. Rep. 935; (age nineteen months) Kay v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 65 Pa. 238, 3 Am. Rep. 623; (age between four and five years) Gunn v. Ohio River R. Co. 36 W. Va. 165; (age seven years three months) Heddes v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 74 Wis. 239, 77 Wis. 223.

In Georgia Pac. R. Co. v. Blanton, 34 Ala. 154, it was held that under Ala. Act February 23, 1887, and sections 1699, 1670, Code, requiring the railroad company to prove all statutory duties were performed in cases of personal injury in towns and cities, the evidence on its part where a two-year-old child was killed, must show a compliance with all the requirements of the statute, as to whistle,

Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Smith, 52 Tex. 178; 1 Shearman & Redf. Neg. § 99.

It was not negligence for the employés of the defendant not to look constantly in front of the engine at a place where there was no crossing, and where they had no reason to expect persons on or along the track.

Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Smith, 77 Tex. 179; Jones v. North Carolina R. Co. 67 N. C. 122; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Eisinger, 114 Ill. 79; Rosenberger v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 8 Ont. App. 481; Bell v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 72 Mo. 50.

A trespasser, of whose presence the defendant was not aware can no more complain of the omission to give signals than an idler who strolls unnoticed into a foundry to gratify his curiosity can complain that there was nothing to warn him of the danger he was in.

Toomey v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 10 L. R. A. 139, 86 Cal. 874; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Howard, 82 Ky. 212; Spicer v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 11 L. R. A. 885, 84 W. Va. 514; Dietrich v. Baltimore & H. S. R. Co. 58 Md. 848.

The fact that in the case at bar the plaintiff was an infant of twenty-two months does not vary the rule.

Meredith v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 106 N. C. 616.

There is no higher duty due to a negligent or trespassing child or other person non sui juris until such negligence or trespass is known to the defendant, than is due to a negligent or trespassing adult in the possession of all his faculties.

Morrisey v. Eastern R. Co. 126 Mass. 377, 80 Am. Rep. 686; Pierce, American Railway Law, 278-281.

The doctrine of imputing the negligence of the parent of the child is the doctrine in New York (Ihl v. Forty-Second Street & G. Street Ferry R. Co. 47 N. Y. 828, 7 Am. Rep. 450); in Massachusetts (Lynch v. Smith, 104 Mass. 53, 6 Am. Rep. 188); in Minnesota (Fitzgerald v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 29 Minn. 336, 43 Am. Rep. 213); in Maryland (McMahon v. Northern Cent. R. Co. 39 Md. 439; Baltimore City Pass R. Co. v. McDonnell, 43 Md. 551); in Maine (Leslie v. Lewiston, 63 Me. 468; Brown v. European & N. A. R. Co. 58 Me. 384); in Kansas (Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Smith, 28 Kan. 541); in Indiana (Evansville & C. R. Co. v. Wolf, 59 Ind. 89; Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. v. Bowen, 40 Ind. 545); in Illinois (Gavin v. Chicago, 97 Ill. 66, 37 Am. Rep. 99; Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Grable, 88 Ill. 441); in California (Schierhold v. North Beach & M. R. Co. 40 Cal. 447; Meeks v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 53 Cal. 602).

Children have no right to be upon the track of a railway, and it is contrary to all the principles underlying this branch of the law to hold that the company is bound to respond in damages for an injury to them, when they are there bell and lookout, and proper use of all means at hand to prevent injury.

But in Ward v. Southern Pacific Co. (Or.) 23 L. R. A. 715, it was held that a railroad company owes to a trespassing child six years old, no legal duty to keep a lookout or guard him against danger.

And in Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Eisinger, 114 Ill. 79, it was held that the railroad company does not owe the duty in respect to a flagman as against a little boy injured traveling laterally along and upon the railroad right of way in the city, for convenience.

In Burg v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (Iowa) Jan. 31, 1894, it was held that it is not negligence to fail to keep a vigilant lookout for a trespassing child three years old on the track. The court says that when the engineer knew such small children were on the track he had sufficient reason to know that they would remain and then he would be charged with the highest degree of care in their behalf.

In Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Smith, 28 Kan. 541, it was held that if a two-year-old child is on the railroad right of way under or behind a standing car against which gravity cars are permitted to descend, if the employés did not look and see the child, this is not culpable negligence, rendering the railroad company liable.

In Williams v. Kansas City, S. & M. R. Co., 96 Mo. 275, (age eight years), and McDermott v. Kentucky Cent. R. Co. 14 Ky. L. Rep. 437, it was held that there is no duty on the part of the railroad company to watch for a boy in their switch yards where he had no right to be.

And in Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Smith, 77 Tex. 179, it was held that it is not negligence for the employés of a train not to look constantly in front of the engine at a place where there was no crossing and where they had no reasons to expect persons on the track, and the rules of the company required employés to look back along the train.

In Cassida v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co., 14 Or. 551, it was held that although no lookout is required for persons who have no right on the track yet when 25 L. R. A.

the danger is discovered the railroad employés are required to use their best endeavor to avoid injury, and a greater duty is imposed if the employés have reasonable grounds to expect persons on the track, or known to be upon it. (Child seven years old killed on trestle near town.)

In Givens v. Kentucky Cent. R. Co., 12 Ky. L. Rep. 960, it was held that lookout is not ordinarily required from a railroad company as against a trespassing child, nine years old, on right of way, but if discovered greater care is required of the company as to children than as to adults.

See as to general duty of railroad company to have "lookout," Smith v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. (N. C.) 25 L. R. A. 227, note.

IV. Negligence after discovery.

After discovering the danger to an infant on the track the cases vary in regard to the expressions used defining the degree of care required of an engineer to prevent injury. As, if necessary, he should stop the train. (Age eleven years) Messer v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 68 Iowa, 602.

Do all in his power. Ex parte Stell, 4 Hughes, C. C. 157.

Use all means. (Age eighteen months) Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Dobbs (Ala.) April 3, 1893; (age fifteen months) Payne v. Humeston & S. R. Co. 70 Iowa, 584.

Use all the care and caution he can command. (Age two years) Walters v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 41 Iowa, 71; (age two and one-half years) Albertson v. Keokuk & D. M. R. Co. 43 Iowa, 292.

Use all effort in his power. (Age seven years) Shaw v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 104 Mo. 648; (age five years) Ross v. Texas & P. R. Co. 44 Fed. Rep. 44.

If he uses every effort there is no negligence. (Age twelve years) Rudd v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 80 Va. 548; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Schumilowsky, 8 Ill. App. 618.

He should use reasonable care. (Age four years) Foley v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 29 N. Y. S. R. 516, 78 Hun, 248; (age fifteen years) wrongfully, unless it could have prevented the injury by the exercise of such care as ought to be observed by them in view of the locality.

Wood, Railway Law, pp. 1278-1280 et seq.; Cleveland, C. & O. R. Co. v. Elliott, 4 Ohio St. 474; Brown v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 50 Mo. 461, 11 Am. Rep. 420; Macon & W. R. Co. v. Davis, 18 Ga. 679; Cooper v. Central Railroad of Iowa, 44 Iowa, 184; Cooley, Torts, 674; Trow v. Vermont Cent. R. Co. 24 Vt. 487, 58 Am. Dec. 191; Isbell v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 27 Conn. 898, 71 Am. Dec. 78; Hicks v. Pacific R. Co. 64 Mo. 430; Burnett v. Burlington & M. R. Co. 16 Neb. 832.

If a child is permitted to go alone upon a highway, when of an age at which it is unable to comprehend and avoid the perils to which the road is naturally liable, it cannot recover compensation for an injury inflicted by neglect of a mere stranger, while the child itself is acting in a manner which, in a person of mature years, would be deemed so negligent as to deprive him of the right to sue.

Shearman & Redf. Neg. § 80; Lynch v. Smith, 104 Mass. 52, 6 Am. Rep. 188; McGarry v. Loomis, 68 N. Y. 104, 20 Am. Rep. 510; O'Brien v. McGlinchy, 68 Me. 552.

The rule seems to be that the negligence of parent and guardian is imputed to a child when the negligent act is of that character that an adult could not recover under the same circumstances. This is the true and sensible rule.

Morrissey v. Eastern R. Co. 126 Mass. 377, 30 Am. Rep. 686; Fitzgerald v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 29 Minn. 386, 43 Am. Rep. 212; Meeks v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 52 Cal. 604; Holly v. Boston Gas Light Co. 8 Gray, 123, 69 Am. Dec. 283; Lynch v. Smith, 104 Mass. 57, 6 Am. Rep. 188; Wright v. Malden & M. R. Co. 4 Allen, 289; Flynn v. Hatton, 4 Daly, 552; Brown v. European & N. A. R. Co. 58 Me. 834; Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Grable, 88 Ill. 441; Hathaway v. Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. 46 Ind. 25; Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Vining, 27 Ind. 518, 92 Am. Dec. 269; Chicago v. Starr, 42 Ill. 174, 89 Am. Dec. 422; Mangum v. Brooklyn R. Co. 88 N. Y. 455, 98 Am. Dec. 66; see note to Kerr v. Forgue (Ill.) 5 Am. Rep. 148; note to Freer v. Cameron, 55 Am. Dec. 677; McMahon v. Northern Cent. R. Co. 39 Md. 438; Ill. v. Forty-Second Street & G. Street Ferry R. Co. 47 N. Y. 817, 7 Am. Rep. 450; Hartfield v. Roper, 21 Wend. 615, 84 Am. Dec. 273.

"Railroads have a right to presume those in vicinity of its track will not violate law, even children of tender years will not be there, for though irresponsible personally, they cannot be there without culpable violation of duty by parents or guardians."

Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Hummel, 44 Pa. 375.

Mr. E. C. Smith for appellee.

Fiedler v. St. Louis, L. M. & S. R. Co. 107 Mo. 645; (age eleven years) Burnett v. Burlington & M. R. Co. 16 Neb. 832.

Reasonable effort to prevent injury. (Age nine years) Duffy v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 19 Mo. App. 380; (age four years) Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Watley, 69 Miss. 145; (age four years) O'Connor v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 135 Mass. 352.

Use reasonable precaution. (Age eighteen months) St. Louis, L. M. & S. R. Co. v. Freeman, 36 Ark. 41.

Use ordinary care. Scoville v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 81 Mo. 434; Kentucky Cent. R. Co. v. Gastineau, 58 Ky. 119.

Use high degree of care. (Age fifteen years) Swift v. Staten Island Rapid Transit R. Co. 123 N. Y. 645, affirming 24 N. Y. S. R. 359.

Use greater degree of care than if the child was an adult. (Age two and one-half years) Kenyon v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. 5 Hun, 479; (age five years) Lafayette & I. R. Co. v. Huffman, 28 Ind. 287, 92 Am. Dec. 818; (age seven years) Indianapolis, P. & C. R. Co. v. Pitzer, 109 Ind. 179, 191.

Some effort to stop the train is required. (Age seven years) Jamison v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. 68 Miss. 32.

And the best brakes in use. Costello v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. 65 Barb. 92.

And in Corcoran v. New York Elev. R. Co., 19 Hun, 368, it was held that it is negligence to start an engine on an elevated track after the engineer sees a boy on the track without looking to see if he had got out of the way and without giving warning, where the engine covered all but twelve inches of the trackway.

But in McKenna v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 8 Daly, 304, it was held that where a boy in a city jumps or falls from a train onto another track, the engineer of a passing train is not guilty of wanton negligence in failing to stop the train in case they could pass the boy without injury. In this case all of the train but the last wheel of the last car passed him safely as he lay on the ground. 25 L. R. A.

And in Singleton v. Eastern Counties R. Co., 7 C. B. N. S. 287, it was held that the fact that a child three and one-half years old was injured by a train coming up an incline, and the engineer saw the dangerous position of the children but made no attempt to stop the engine, contenting himself with whistling, does not constitute negligence, there being nothing to show how the children got on the railroad. The failure to protect by statutory fence is not discussed in this case.

In Pratt Coal & Iron Co. v. Brawley, 38 Ala. 371, it was said that a railroad company would be liable to a father for the injury to a seven-year-old child trespassing on its track, caused by wanton, reckless, or intentional negligence of the employees, after discovering the peril of the child, or when they ought to have discovered the peril.

And in Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Didsoneit, 1 App. D. C. 482, it was held that although it may be negligence on the part of an engineer not to know the danger to start a train forty yards from where a boy sixteen years old is seen sitting on the platform eighteen inches from the track, which might have been known by the exercise of due care, it will not be the same as recklessness, which is necessary to impose liability in the case.

V. Failure to give signal.

The question of negligence on the part of the employees of a railroad is generally one for the jury if no signals were given for the train at a crossing, and an infant was injured by reason of such failure. (Age seven years) Philadelphia, R. & W. R. Co. v. Laver, 112 Pa. 414; (age eight years) Taylor v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 113 Pa. 162, 57 Am. Rep. 446; (age less than four years) Schwieb v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 558; (ages ten and eleven years) Johanson v. Boston & M. R. Co. 158 Mass. 57 (see 15 Hun, 672); (age twelve years) Paduach & M. R. Co. v. Hoebl, 13 Bush, 41.

And the same was held in regard to a crossing in the city. (Age eleven years) Henderson v. St. Paul Shepherd, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is unquestionably true, as argued by counsel, that in order to maintain an action for negligence, the plaintiff must not only show the existence of a duty on the part of the defendant, but he must also show that the duty is due to him. Emry v. Roanoke Nav. & Water-Power Co. 111 N. C. 94, 17 L. R. A. 699. It has been decided by this court that it is the duty of an engineer, in running a railroad train, to exercise ordinary care, by keeping a lookout on the track, in order to discover and avoid any obstructions that may be encountered thereon. This duty is due to passengers; and as a general rule the duty is likewise due to the owner of cattle running at large; to the owner of other property which, under certain circumstances, may be on the track; and also, as a general rule, to persons who may be on the same at places other than crossings. It has also been decided in many cases, and may be regarded as perfectly well settled, that the failure to exercise such ordinary care, in discovering persons or property in time to avoid a collision, cannot, except in case of cattle running at large, be made the subject of a recovery, where the plaintiff's negligence is the proximate cause of the injury. In the present case the jury have found, under proper instructions of the court, that the plaintiff was injured by reason of the negligence of defendant. The plaintiff is therefore entitled to recover, unless he was guilty of negligence, as above stated. The real questions presented, therefore, are whether the plaintiff was of sufficient age and discretion to be capable of contributory negligence, and, if not so capable, whether the negligence of the parent can be imputed to him.

It is admitted by the pleadings that the plaintiff was at the time of the accident "an infant of tender years," who had been permitted by its mother "to stray and wander" on the track of the defendant. From the language of the admission, we would, if it were necessary for the purposes of this decision, be well warranted in holding that, prima facie, the plaintiff was of such a tender age as to be incapable of negligence. Apart from this, however, it is established by uncontradicted testimony, and also admitted by counsel for the defendant, that the plaintiff, at the time of the accident, was in fact but twenty-two months old. In several of the states, it has been held that an infant of that age is, as a matter of law, incapable of contributory negligence (2 Thomp. Neg. 1181), while in others it is held, in analogy to the rule of the common law as to criminal responsibility, that an infant under the age of seven years is also incapable, but that the presumption may be rebutted by testimony, and that the question may be determined by the jury. 1 Shearman & Redf. Neg. § 78, note. Applying either rule to the present case, it is clear that the plaintiff was incapable of & D. R. Co. 52 Minn. 479; (age fifteen years) Carey v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 6 Abb. N. C. 104; (age ten years) Burger v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 112 Mo. 238; (age thirteen years and seven months) New Jersey R. & Transp. Co. v. West, 32 N. J. L. 91, affirmed, 32 N. J. L. 91; (age eleven and one half years) O'Mara v. Hudson River R. Co. 38 N. Y. 445, 98 Am. Dec. 61; (age fourteen years) Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Shipley, 31 Md. 368; (age eleven years) Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Keely (Ind.) May 11, 1894.

So in Cumberland & P. R. Co. v. State, 73 Md. 74, it was said that a railroad company is required to use reasonable effort to prevent injuring a boy seven years old if he was on the track, although trespassing, and that violation of a city ordinance as to speed or signals would be negligence, but there was no evidence where he was when hurt.

And in Reynolds v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 58 N. Y. 243, reversing 2 Thomp. & C. 644, it was said the fact that a boy thirteen years old could be easily seen at a crossing and was caught by passing trains and no signals were given, was negligence; but that was not the question involved.

But in Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Spearen, 47 Pa. 300, 36 Am. Dec. 544, it was held that the omission to whistle, by an engine close behind a train, is not an approximate cause of injury to a child five years old attempting to run across between the engine and the train at a point below the street crossing, for the engineer was under no duty to suppose any one would attempt to cross suddenly in front of the engine.

And in Collis v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 71 Hun, 504, it was held that a railroad company is under no duty to give signal of approaching train to a school-boy about eight years of age, carrying water to circus employes in an advertising car stationed on a side track on railroad grounds, and the only duty was not to do him intentional injury.

So in Malone v. Boston & A. R. Co., 51 Hun, 532, it was held that it is not lack of ordinary care to "kick" a car upon switch tracks in a yard used for storage and making up of trains without first ringing the bell or giving a signal or stationing a flagman or brakeman so as to give warning, where a child about four years old is run over by a freight car.

And in Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Porter, 73 Tex. 304, it was held that the failure to signal a crossing by bell or whistle fails to show negligence on the part of the railroad contributing to the injury of a boy walking on the track on the railroad right of way, where it is not shown that he was killed at a crossing, nor the circumstances under which he was struck by the train.

In Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Hummell, 44 Pa. 375, 34 Am. Dec. 457, it was held that the mere failure to give signal of starting of a car on the right of way is not negligence even if an infant seven years of age is injured, as ordinary care admits the presumption that they will not be on the company's land.

VI. Speed.

The question of negligence is one for the jury where a railroad train passes through a city at excessive speed or at such speed as to be incapable of control, whereby an infant on the track is injured, especially where such speed is contrary to statute or city ordinance. (Age three years) Daley v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 26 Conn. 591, 68 Am. Dec. 413; (age six years) Tobin v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. (Mo.) Nov. 23, 1891; (age sixteen months) Hoppe v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 61 Wis. 357; (age ten years) Haas v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 41 Wis. 44; (age eight years) Ewen v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 38 Wis. 613; Grethen v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 22 Fed. Rep. 609; (age six years) Central Trust Co. of New York v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 31 Fed. Rep. 246; (age eight years) Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Lewis, 79 Pa. 38; Dunseath v. Pittsburgh, A. & M.

contributory negligence, and it must follow that, unless the negligence of his mother can be imputed to him, there is nothing to bar his recovery. Conceding, only for the purposes of this discussion, that the mother was guilty of contributory negligence in going to the well, and leaving her infant child in the house, without closing the door, and also conceding, what is intimated in Manly v. Wilmington & W. R. Co., 74 N. C. 655 (and indeed is well sustained by the authorities), that, if it be contributory negligence, it would defeat an action brought by the parent, we are not prepared to accept the doctrine which obtains in some few jurisdictions, that such negligence can be so imputed to the child as to defeat an action, when brought in its own behalf. As the question has never been passed upon in this state, it may not be inappropriate to quote at length from some of the leading authorities upon the subject:

The imputation of the negligence of parents and guardians to children of tender age is, says Shearman & Redfield on Negligence (volume 1, § 74), an invention of the supreme court of New York in the leading case of Hartfield v. Roper, 31 Wend. 615, 34 Am. Dec. 278, and has been followed in many of the decisions of that state, although it is said by these authors to be founded upon a dictum which has only been assumed to be the law by the court of last resort, but never squarely presented to that tribunal for decision. And they further remark that it may well be doubted whether the question has ever been fully argued anywhere, and that the result of their examination of the cases is to satisfy them "that the last of the long series of so-called 'decisions' on this point is, like the first, a mere dictum, uttered without hearing argument and without consideration." Some of the decisions approving the doctrine are based upon the ground that the parent must, Traction Co. 161 Pa. 124; (age five years) Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Gregory, 58 Ill. 228.

And the same was held where the speed is excessive at a crossing where children were accustomed to cross and infants were injured. (Age eight years) McGovern v. New York Cent.; & H. R. R. Co. 67 N. Y. 418; (age nine years) Powell v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 23 Hun, 58; (age under fourteen years) Georgia Midland & G. R. Co. v. Evans, 87 Ga. 673.

And in Pittsburg, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Bumstead, 48 Ill. 321, 95 Am. Dec. 539, it was held that it is gross negligence for a fast train to run into a push car, wrongfully loaned to private parties by an agent, which car was plainly in sight for more than a mile, causing injury to a four-year-old boy on the road near by, where signals were given in time to stop the engine.

VII. City.

The question of care required of railroad employes to prevent injuries in cities is already mentioned under sub-heads, "Lookout," "Speed," etc., but it may be generally stated that greater care is required in running the train where children are expected to be met with than in other places, especially where crossings are blockaded; and the question of negligence is one for the jury if the crossing is unreasonably blockaded, or cars have been allowed to remain a longer time than permitted by ordinance or statute, and reasonable care is not used in moving the train. (Age seven years) Rauch v. Lloyd, 51 Pa. 353, 73 Am. Dec. 747; (age five years) Cumming v. Brooklyn City R. Co. 104 N. Y. 668; (age nine years) Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Kelly, 81 Pa. 378; (age nineteen years) Cleveland, O. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Keely (Ind.) May 11, 1894; (age nine years) Schmits v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 23 L. R. A. 250, 119 Mo. 253.

And in Bannon v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 24 Md. 103, it was held that a railroad company is required to use such diligence and care as prudent and discreet persons would use having due regard to the safety of the train where a child seven years old was injured on a Y in the city; but the infancy of the plaintiff does not change the degree of care or diligence to be used by the defendants in the management of their cars.

So in Norfolk & P. R. Co. v. Ormsby, 27 Gratt. 455, it was held that a railroad company running its cars through a populous street on which many children live must omit nothing which can be done to prevent injury to children. A child two years and ten months old was killed by the company running uncoupled cars.

In Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Welch, 118 Ill. 585, it was held that where a child seven years old was on the sidewalk and a switch engine violently pushed some cars so that they ran over the end of the track unprotected by a bumper and injured the child, the only question is, Was the defendant negligent in regard to the cause of the injury?

But in Stillson v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 67 Mo. 671, it was held that there is no negligence where a girl about nine years old was injured by attempting to cross between cars through a passage twenty inches wide not on a crossing, and the employes did not know that the child was attempting to cross.

And in Moore v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 99 Pa. 301, 44 Am. Rep. 103, it was held that a railroad company owes no greater duty to a boy ten years old than to an adult, and is not subject to take precautions against any class of persons who walk along its tracks on the bed of a public street in a city.

In New York Cent. & St. L. R. Co. v. Mushrush (Ind.) June 7, 1894, it was held that failure to keep a station platform reasonably safe is negligence, where a boy twelve years old went to meet his sister and stumbled on the platform and fell under the train and was killed.

So in Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. v. Hirsch, 69 Miss. 123, it was held that inviting passengers to approach its depot, across its tracks, imposes on a railroad company strong obligation to exercise the utmost care and caution in the movement of its trains, and the handling of its cars so as to prevent injuries to persons going to and from its offices, and this applies where two children aged respectively seven and fourteen years old were injured.

It was said in Mobile & M. R. Co. v. Orenshaw, 65 Ala. 556, that ordinary negligence as to a person of full capacity might be gross negligence as to a child, where a child between five and six years old at a depot ran up to the rear of a freight train and caught hold of the rear bumper and was injured.

But in Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Schwindling, 131 Pa. 258, 47 Am. Rep. 706, it was held that a railroad company owes no duty to a boy five years old standing on depot platform for his own amusement and there can be no negligence without a breach of duty.

See also Lookout, supra.

VIII. Foot caught.

The question of negligence is one for the jury where a child caught his foot on the track on a in law, be deemed the agent of the child, while others put it upon the ground that the child is identified with its parent or guardian,—"a legal fiction which led to the famous and now exploded decision of Thorogood v. Bryan, 8 C. B. 116," recently overruled by the English appellate court in The Bernina, L. R. 12 Prob. Div. 58; 1 Shearman & Redf. Neg. §§ 66-75. In reviewing the case of Hartfield v. Roper, supra, Mr. Beach says that the doctrine, as applied to children too young to exercise discretion, is an anomaly, and in striking contrast with the case of a donkey which is carelessly exposed in the highway, and negligently run down and injured, and also with the case of oysters carelessly placed in the bed of a river, and injured by the negligent operation of a vessel, in both of which cases actions have been maintained. And he forcibly observes that, under the principle referred to, "the child, were he an ass or an oyster, would secure a protection which is denied him as a human being of tender years." This author, in his examination of the doctrine, remarks as follows: "It is not true that an infant is not sui juris. In the sense of being entitled to maintain an action for his own benefit, he is sui juris. As far as his right of action is concerned, he is in no respect the chattel of his father. . . . The judgment [when suing by guardian or next friend], if any is recovered, is the property of the minor. It is recovered to his sole use. It is an entirely false assumption, in Hartfield v. Roper, that the parent or guardian may recover heavy verdicts for their own misconduct. Again, it is assumed in that opinion that an infant injured by the joint negligence of his parent and a third person can have legal redress against the parent. It is much more fit, says the court, 'that he should look for redress to that guardian.' If this be so,—if the right of the infant be so distinct from the duty of crossing and was injured by a train. (Age twelve years) Friess v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 97 Hun, 205; (age fourteen years) Brown v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 15 Phila. 821; (age under fourteen years) Spooner v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 115 N. Y. 22.

Or in a switch. (Age eleven years) Burnett v. Burlington & M. R. Co. 16 Neb. 832; (age seven years) Townley v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 58 Wm. 662.

Or in the track. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Morgan, 63 Pa. 124.

In Louisville, N. A. & O. R. Co. v. Red, 47 Ill. App. 662, it was held that where a statute requires a railroad company to have public crossings safe, the company will be presumed to know their condition, and if the statute has been neglected and a boy falls in front of a train from stepping in a hole in the crossing, the company will be held bound to exercise such diligence as the safety of persons at unsafe crossings demands.

But in Graham v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 15 Ky. L. Rep. 599, it was held that the failure to stop the train at a crossing as required by statute, by reason of which failure a boy twelve years old trespassing, who had caught his foot and fallen in front of the train, was injured, when the train could not have been stopped in time to save him after he tried to cross the track will not render the company liable.

IX. Sudden appearance of child.

There is no negligence on the part of a railroad company if a child suddenly appears in front of the train and receives an injury which could not have been prevented by the company. (Age sixteen years) Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Cullen, 54 Ark. 431; (age six years) Benson v. Central Pac. R. Co. 98 Cal. 45; (age twenty months) Pennsylvania Co. v. Davis, 4 Ind. App. 51; (age eleven years) Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, 71 Md. 590; (age nine years) Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Chambers, 73 Tex. 296.

In Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Becker, 75 Ill. 25, it was held that there is no negligence where the whistle was blown and bell rung as required by law and a boy about seven years old ran across in front of the train and stumbled and fell on the rail in front of the engine and the injury could not have been avoided.

But in Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Becker, 64 Ill. 433, it was held that there was negligence if the speed was unlawful.

In Barkley v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 96 Mo. 367, it was held that a railroad company is not guilty of carelessness or want of ordinary care where a boy 25 L. R. A.

six years old is between the tracks at a depot going straight forward in the same direction as the train and there is five feet ten inches between the tracks, and the boy turns, retraces his steps and stumbles, throwing an arm over the rail, and the train passes over it.

X. Projecting timber or car.

A railroad company must exercise reasonable care for the safety of persons on the track and prevent injury from projecting timbers. (Age between twelve and fourteen years) Hicks v. Pacific R. Co. 64 Mo. 430.

But in Central Railroad v. Brinson, 70 Ga. 207, where a fifteen-year-old boy in walking on a path was struck by a projecting timber, the case was reversed for error in the following charge: "If damage happen to such other person by a collision which the company by the use of ordinary care might have prevented, the company must make good the damage."

And in Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Heff, 5 W. N. C. 91, it was held that there was no negligence shown from the fact that the car axles on a double track in a narrow street extended over the sidewalk and killed a five-year-old child who was walking on the pavement in a direction opposite the train, there being no excessive speed or failure to keep lookout.

XI. Gross negligence.

Whether the degree of care was used that exempted the railroad company from the charge of gross negligence, is a question for the jury. (Age four years) Sabine & E. T. R. Co. v. Hanks, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 306. See Trinity & S. R. Co. v. Lane, 79 Tex. 642.

Prior to 1887 a railroad company was only liable for gross negligence. Sabine & E. T. R. Co. v. Hanks, 73 Tex. 624.

And in Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Whipple, 39 Kan. 531, it was held that a railroad company is liable if a boy nine years old is recklessly or wantonly run over, while wrongfully on the track.

The question of trespass of child affecting the company's duty towards such child will be fully treated in a note on contributory negligence of children and has only been referred to in the above note where made necessary.

In the preparation of this note cases turning upon the question of contributory or imputed negligence have been omitted.

The authorities upon the question of imputed negligence will be found in a note to Chicago City R. Co. v. Wilcox (Ill.) 21 L. R. A. 76. I. T.

the parent that the relation of parent and child is not an objection to the maintenance of such a suit,—then the whole theory upon which this class of cases rests falls to the ground. Again, it is falsely assumed that the parent is the agent of the child. . . . The relation of child and parent is not the relation of principal and agent. Neither is it analogous to it. The child does not appoint his father. He has no control over his acts. He cannot remove him from power, or appoint another in his stead. He has no right of action against him. Every element of agency is wanting. The want of any one of these elements is sufficient to prevent the acts or omissions of the parent from being viewed as the acts or omissions of the child, upon any analogy to be drawn from the law of agency. By the common law a child cannot appoint an agent. The authority by which the parent exercises control over the child is therefore an authority derived from the law. It is a principle of law laid down before 'the spacious days of great Elizabeth' that the abuse of an authority derived from the law shall not work harm to, or prejudice the rights of, the person subjected to it. The parent's authority is given for the protection of the child, but the principle of Hartfield v. Roper turns the shield into a sword, and uses it to deprive the child of the very protection arising from the parental relation." Beach, Contrib. Neg. 2d ed. § 128. In Wood on Railroads (section 832) it is said: "The doctrine announced in this case [Hartfield v. Roper] has been followed in some jurisdictions; but the modern tendency is to reject it, and to hold the negligent injurer liable for the consequences of his own wrongful act, regardless of the contributory negligence of the child's parent or guardian." Bishop, in his work on Noncontract Law (section 582), emphatically rejects the doctrine, and observes that it is "as flatly in conflict with the established system of the common law as anything possible to be suggested." And an examination of the leading text-books which treat of negligence will disclose that it is also disapproved, as being contrary to principle and reason, as well as the rapidly accumulating weight of authority. Whart. Neg. 812-814; Pollock, Torts, 299; Cooley, Torts, 681; 2 Thomp. Neg. 1184; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. supra; Beach, Contrib. Neg. supra.

In Tennessee the doctrine is denounced as being opposed "to every principle of reason and justice" (Whitley v. Whiteman, 1 Head, 610); and in Pennsylvania it is declared to be "repulsive to our natural instincts, and repugnant to the condition of that class of persons who have to maintain life by daily toll." Kay v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 65 Pa. 269, 8 Am. Rep. 628.

In Newman v. Phillipsburg Horse Car R. Co., 52 N. J. L. 446, 8 L. R. A. 842, Chief Justice Beasley, after exposing the fallacy of basing the doctrine on the ground of agency, demonstrates its untenableness by conducting us to the rather absurd conclusion of making an infant in its nurse's arms answerable for all the negligence of such nurse while thus employed in its service. "Every person so damaged by the careless custodian would be entitled to his action against the infant. If the neglect of the guardian is to be regarded as the neglect of the infant, as was asserted in the New York decision, it would, from logical necessity, follow that the infant must indemnify those who should be harmed by such neglect."

In Vermont the subject was examined with much care in the leading case of Robinson v. Cone, 22 Vt. 213, 54 Am. Dec. 67, in which the court denied the doctrine of imputed negligence, as laid down in Hartfield's Case, and held that, although a child of tender years may be in the highway through the fault or negligence of his parents, and so improperly there, yet, if he be injured through the negligence of the defendant, he is not precluded from redress. "All," says Judge Redfield, in delivering the opinion, "that is required of an infant plaintiff, in such a case, being that he exercise care and prudence equal to his capacity." This rule is also laid down in Washington & G. R. Co. v. Gladson, 83 U. S. 15 Wall. 401, 21 L. ed. 114, which is cited with approval in Murray v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 93 N. C. 92. "The 'Vermont rule,' as it is called," remark Shearman & Redfield, "commends itself to our judgment and is abundantly justified by the reasoning of the courts which have adopted it."

It should be fully applied to such cases, giving to defendants who suffer from its hardships the same consolation which courts administer to plaintiffs when nonsuiting them,—that their case is very hard, and deserves sympathy, but that the law must not be relaxed to meet hard cases." "If, where one of two innocent persons must suffer, the law puts the loss, as it justly does, upon the one who has, by some negligence, enabled the wrong to be done, surely, when there are two guilty persons in the transaction, the law should not leave the only innocent one to suffer, as it practically does, by referring him to his parent or guardian for an injury of which a stranger has been the principal cause." Sections 77, 78. "No injustice can be done to the defendant by this limitation of the defense of contributory negligence, since the rule itself is not established primarily for his benefit, and he can never be made liable, if he has not been himself in fault." Section 78.

The doctrine of Hartfield v. Roper has also been denied in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Connecticut, Missouri, Nebraska, Alabama, Tennessee, Texas, Georgia, Louisiana, Illinois, Iowa, Maryland, Michigan, Mississippi, New Hampshire, Virginia, and perhaps in other states, while some of the courts which have heretofore adopted the rule are subjecting it to so many qualifications, in order to escape its harshness and injustice, that but little of its original similitude remains. Pratt Coal & I. Co. v. Brawley, 88 Ala. 371; Daley v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 26 Conn. 591, 68 Am. Dec. 418; Ferguson v. Columbus & R. R. Co. 77 Ga. 102; Chicago City R. Co. v. Wilcox, 88 Ill. App. 450; Wymore v. Mahaska County, 78 Iowa, 396, 6 L. R. A. 545; Westonfield v. Lewis, 48 La. Ann. 63; Baltimore City Pass. R. Co. v. McDonnell, 48

Md. 534; Shippy v. Au Sable, 85 Mich. 280; Westbrook v. Mobile & O. R. Co. 66 Miss. 560; Winters v. Kansas City Cable R. Co. 99 Mo. 509, 6 L. R. A. 536; Huff v. Ames, 16 Neb. 189, 49 Am. Rep. 716; Bisailon v. Blood, 64 N. H. 585; Cleveland, O. C. & I. R. Co. v. Manson, 30 Ohio St. 451; Smith v. O'Connor, 48 Pa. 218, 86 Am. Dec. 583; Galveston, H. & H. R. Co. v. Moore, 59 Tex. 64, 46 Am. Rep. 265; Norfolk & P. R. Co. v. Ormsby, 27 Gratt. 455. These numerous authorities, which we have thought proper to cite, very abundantly sustain the position enunciated by the Supreme Court of the United States, and adopted by this court in Murray v. Richmond & D. R. Co. supra,—that, in the law of negligence, the degree of care and discretion required of an infant of tender years “depends upon his age and knowledge;” and they also sustain the position that where the child is too young, as in this case, to exercise any discretion whatever, the negligence of his parent or other custodian, in permitting him to escape, and place himself in a perilous position, will not be imputed to him, so as to defeat his action for damages sustained by reason of the negligence of another. There is nothing in Murray's Case, supra, which at all conflicts with this view. The plaintiff was nearly eight years of age, and of sufficient discretion to understand the danger to which he had exposed himself; and, under the circumstances, the court held that he could not recover. The authorities quoted in the opinion, so far as they have any bearing upon this case, are in support of the view we have taken. Our attention, however, was called to a part of the opinion, purporting to be founded upon a paragraph in a former edition of Shearman & Redfield, to the effect that while an infant should be held to a degree of care only as is usual among children of his age, yet, “if his own act directly brings the injury upon him, while the negligence of the defendant is only such as exposes the child to the possibility of injury,” he cannot recover. In the fourth and later edition (section 78) of the same work this passage is reproduced with the following comments: “It was held in some English cases that if a child's own act directly brings the injury upon him, while the negligence of the defendant is only such as exposes the child to the possibility of danger, the latter cannot recover damages. But these decisions have been condemned in England, and are directly opposed to the current of American cases. The law has been settled to the contrary in America by the famous series of Turntable Cases, in which railroad companies have been held liable by the federal supreme court, as well as by several state courts of last resort.” While the passage is really inapplicable to cases like the present, but only, it seems, to those in which, like the Turntable Cases, the child meddles with something which is perfectly harmless if let alone, and he thus “directly” brings the injury upon himself, we have nevertheless thought it best to show that, in the opinion of the learned authors, the proposition stated in the former edition of their valuable work is not sustained by the weight of authority. Neither is there anything in Meredith v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 108 N. C. 618, cited by counsel, which approves of the principle of imputable negligence. The question was not before us, but what was said arguendo, assimilating a child apparently too small to appreciate its danger to persons who are apparently helpless on the track, in respect to the duty of the engineer to use all available means to avert a collision, is really in support, rather than in contradiction, of the views we have expressed in this opinion.

25 L. R. A.

We commend the charge of his honor upon the first issue as a correct exposition of the duty of railroad companies in moving their trains, and especially the limitations with which it is accompanied. The use of the words “ordinary care,” unattended with explanation, would have been obnoxious to the authorities in this state. Emery v. Raleigh & G. R. Co. 109 N. C. 589, 15 L. R. A. 332. But as it is apparent, from the instructions, that they were used to indicate a vigilant lookout, and also the exercise of all efforts within the power of the engineer to stop the train, we do not see how they could have prejudiced the defendant. Indeed, no objection to the charge, in this particular, was made on the argument; and this, we suppose, for the reasons we have given. Under these instructions, it has been found that the defendant has been guilty of negligence, and as we are of the opinion, upon the admitted facts, that the plaintiff was incapable of contributory negligence, the judgment of the court below must be sustained; and it therefore becomes unnecessary to consider the learned argument of defendant's counsel upon the subject of contributory negligence, in its relation to what is commonly known as the “rule of Davis v. Mann,” 10 Mees. & W. 545.

Affirmed.

Clark, J., filed the following opinion:

I concur in the conclusion reached, but dissent from some of the reasons given. The judge charged the jury—I think, correctly—that: “If the defendant, by the exercise of reasonable care and prudence, could have discovered the child on the track in time to have stopped the train, it was its duty to have done so; or if the defendant, in the exercise of reasonable or ordinary care and prudence, could have discovered that a child of the age of 22 months, or very small, was going towards the track, or running along very near it, so as to render it probable that it would go on the track, and discovery could have been made in time to have stopped the train, it was defendant's duty to stop, and defendant would be guilty of negligence in failing to stop. The engineer has a right to suppose that an adult will leave the track, and continue the speed; but when a child, without discretion or intelligence, is seen, or could have been seen, its presence must be regarded. If the child came on the track suddenly or unexpectedly, so near ahead of the train that it could not be discovered in time to stop the train, in the exercise of ordinary care, then there is no negligence; or if it came on the track when the engineer and fireman were engaged in their necessary duties in the cab, and they were engaged long enough to prevent them from observing the child, then there was no negligence. The engineer's first duty to passengers is to keep his engine in proper condition, and also to keep a proper lookout on the track, and for objects so near it as to make their presence a probable obstruction or interruption. If the sight of the child was prevented by the necessary attendance by the engineer and fireman to matters inside the cab, and this continued until the time they reached the child, or came so near it that the engine could not be stopped, in the exercise of ordinary care, the defendant would not be guilty of negligence." And upon that instruction the jury found against the defendant. While the general underlying principles of the law do not change, their application, in the changing conditions of life, and the progress and development of the age, must change. Originally, when air brakes were unknown, and even after they were first introduced, a railroad company would not have been held liable for an injury caused by not stopping within the distance air brakes would have made possible. The law is otherwise now. So, recently, congress, by an enactment, has followed some courts, and anticipated others, by making railroad companies liable, after a given date, for all injuries caused by failure to use automatic couplers on freight as well as on passenger cars. And there are many similar instances of the progress of the law hand in hand with the progress and development of the times. So, when the speed of railway trains was a fraction of what it is now, and the population sparse, it was not recklessness to fail to keep such a lookout as is now necessary to prevent accidents. But now that the number and speed of railway trains are vastly increased, and the population of the country also, a better lookout is required. A failure to keep a lookout, which, in a given case, the jury find would have prevented an accident, notwithstanding the negligence of the plaintiff in being helpless on the track, is recklessness in a high degree. It has always been held, and by all courts, semper et ubique, that though the plaintiff has been negligent, if, notwithstanding that fact, injury by the defendant could have been avoided, but the defendant, through recklessness or wantonness, committed the injury, the defendant is liable. There is no disposition in the courts to throw restrictions around railroads in the free use of their tracks. They are becoming more and more important. Over their tracks roll daily the commerce of a people,—the transportation of a continent. But with development comes the duty of increased care to avoid injury. Air brakes, automatic couplers, Miller platforms, electric headlights, heavier rails, and other improvements, permit accelerated speed, and the public demands it. But with the increased speed comes the duty of a better lookout. It is recklessness not to have it. The company should be held liable for every injury which could be avoided by a proper lookout, whether as to passengers, children, livestock, or people temporarily disabled, and lying on the track. As to whatever it strikes, a railroad engine is as deadly as a cannon ball. When there is target firing, though due notice is given, if a drunken man wanders across the field of fire, and is lying asleep at foot of the target, but by proper lookout could be seen, yet, for want of it, he is struck and killed, I apprehend this would be deemed recklessness. The same holds true as to a drunken man down and helpless on the track, when, by keeping a proper lookout, he would be seen, and his death or injury avoided.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

PEOPLE of the State of New York, Repts.,
v.

Charlotte EWER, App't.

RE Petition of Charlotte EWER for Writs of Habeas Corpus and Certiorari.

(141 N. Y. 129.)

1. A statute prohibiting the employment or exhibition of girls under fourteen years of age as dancers or in theatrical exhibitions is not invalid as taking away from parents the right to employ their children in any lawful occupation but is an exercise of the power of the state as parens patrie to protect the physical, mental, and moral welfare of children-

2. A prohibition by the New York Penal Code, § 292, of the exhibition as a dancer or in theatrical performances of a girl under fourteen applies to all public exhibitions or shows and not merely to exhibitions which of-

NOTE.—The protection of the rights and interests of children is so fully recognized to be the duty of the state, that courts have adopted very generally the rule that a child's welfare is the controlling consideration in determining a disputed right to its custody. See Sheers v. Stein (Wis.) 5 L. R. A. 781, and note; Weir v. Marley (Mo.) 6 L. R. A. 672; Re Lally (Iowa) 16 L. R. A. 681; Nugent v. Powell (Wyo.) 20 L. R. A. 199.

In addition to this the right of the state itself to assume the guardianship of neglected or abused children is established. See Whalen v. Olmstead 25 L. R. A.

(Conn.) 15 L. R. A. 533, and note; also Van Walters v. Board of Children's Guardians of Marion County (Ind.) 18 L. R. A. 481.

The statutes which prohibit the employment of children for excessive hours, or in improper employments, as well as those which prohibit the sale to them of intoxicating liquors, all of which are closely akin to that upheld in the above case, seem to be fully acquiesced in without any challenge of their constitutionality.

As to statute prohibiting minors to enter bar-rooms, see State v. Austin, ante, 289.

send against morals or decency or endanger life or limb.

(January 30, 1894.)

APPEAL by petitioner from an order of the General Term of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming an order of the Special Term for New York County overruling demurrers to returns of writs of habeas corpus and certiorari to obtain the release of petitioner from the custody of the warden of the city prison in the city of New York, to which she had been committed for violating the statute against permitting her child to perform in a theatre. Affirmed.

Statement by Gray, J.:

Charlotte Ewer was arrested, upon a police magistrate's warrant, charged with a misdemeanor in violating section 292 of the Penal Code, by exhibiting her child, Mildred Ewer, as a dancer at the Broadway Theatre, in New York City. The examination before the magistrate sustained the charge, and showed that she was of the age of seven years and went by the stage name of "La Regal-oncita;" that she was clad in the usual style of the ballet dancer, in a low-necked, sleeveless and short dress, and wore purple tights; that she danced upon the stage to the music of an orchestra, elevating her legs, moving upon her toes and posturing with her figure. Her mother, being held upon the charge, sued out writs of habeas corpus and certiorari, to which the magistrate made return of his proceedings, etc. The prisoner demurred to the return, alleging that there were no sufficient grounds for holding her and that the statute under which she was arrested was unconstitutional. The provisions of the code under which this arrest was made read that "a person who . . . exhibits . . . a female child, apparently or actually under the age of sixteen years, . . . or who, having the care, etc., of such a child, as parent, etc., . . . in any way consents to the employment or exhibition of such a child, either as . . . a dancer . . . or in a theatrical exhibition . . . or in any exhibition dangerous or injurious to the life, limb, health, or morals of the child, . . . is guilty of a misdemeanor." At the special term the writs were dismissed and the prisoner was remanded. The order of that court was affirmed at the general term, and the defendant has appealed to this court.

Messrs. A. J. Dittenhoefer and David Gerber, for appellant:

The portions of section 292 of the Penal Code under which the appellant was held are void for the reason that they deprive a person of his natural and inalienable rights.

The parent is entitled by the law of nature to the custody of his child.

The father's duty to maintain and educate the child carries with it the right to its custody and services.

Ramsey v. Ramsey, 6 L. R. A. 682, 121 Ind. 215.

The duty of the parent extends to providing the child with a profession or trade, and it is a legitimate exercise of parental authority to compel the child to labor for his subsistence. 25 L. R. A.

Fraser, Parent & Child, 2d ed. pp. 72, 73.

This right of the parent is founded in nature and the care which it is presumed they will take of their children. If the confidence on which this presumption rests is misplaced, or if the parent is unable or unwilling to execute his duty, the state may of necessity interfere.

Fraser, Parent & Child, 2d ed. pp. 77-79; De Manneville v. De Manneville, 10 Ves. Jr. 52.

In Ex parte Skinner, 9 Moore, C. P. 278, it was held that the jurisdiction of the king as parens patriæ, vested absolutely in the court of chancery, that that court decided (Re Curtis, 28 L. J. Ch. 458) that it could not interfere with the rights of a father unless he so conducted himself as to render it essential to the safety and welfare of the child, either physically, intellectually, or morally, that it should be removed from his custody.

Re Fynn, 2 DeG. & S. 457, 12 Jur. 718.

In this country the state surely cannot have greater rights over infants than were vested in the king.

People v. Turner, 55 Ill. 280, 8 Am. Rep. 643.

This act cannot be upheld on the ground that there may perchance once in a while occur a case where acting or dancing would prove injurious to a child's health or morals.

The act is not a valid exercise of the police power of the state.

When an act does not purport to be a regulation aimed at the public health it cannot be sustained as a police law.

The provision that forbids a child from engaging in a lawful and harmless theatrical exhibition or dance clearly has no relation to the public health, comfort, or safety. The rights of persons and property cannot be invaded under the guise of a police regulation for the protection of health when it is manifest that such is not the object of the regulation.

People v. Rosenberg, 188 N. Y. 410; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 889; People v. Marz, 99 N. Y. 877, 52 Am. Rep. 84.

This statute is a violation of the right to liberty secured by the constitution to all persons—including children.

Mill, Liberty, pp. 27, 28; Smith, Wealth of Nations, B. 1, chap. 10, pt. 2; Kent, Com. pp. 1-8; 2 Story, Const. 5th ed. pp. 697, 698; People v. Gilson, 109 N. Y. 400; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 106, 50 Am. Rep. 636; Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 515, 30 Am. Rep. 823; Wynhamer v. People, 18 N. Y. 420; Live Stock D. & B. Assn. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 1 Abb. U. S. 398; Slaughter-House Cases, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 116, 21 L. ed. 421.

In Re Maguire, 57 Cal. 604, 40 Am. Rep. 125, the supreme court of California held it to be unconstitutional to prevent females from pursuing a certain business, in the pursuit of which males were not disqualified.

In Ex parte Kuback, 9 L. R. A. 482, 85 Cal. 274, the act which prohibited the employment of Chinese in certain trades was held unconstitutional as an unlawful discrimination.

Messrs. Delancey Nicoll, Dist. Atty., and Elbridge T. Gerry, for the People:

The power of the legislature to regulate the relations between parent and child has never before been questioned.

The state as parens patriæ has the absolute control and regulation of its children.

5 Rollin, Ancient History, art. 7; Maine, Ancient Law, 160; Pritchard and Nasmit's Ortolan, 602; Cary v. Bertie, 2 Vern. 842; Stanford's Exposition of the King's Prerogative, (1648); Fraser, Parent & Child, 2d ed. p. 77.

The state delegates to parents as the natural guardians of the child its primary care and education, and with a view of preserving the rights of the latter compels the parent to so educate and train the child that its health and morals will be preserved.

Browne, Dom. Rel. 78; Laws 1874, chap. 421; Cowley v. People, 21 Hun, 415, affirmed, 88 N. Y. 464, 88 Am. Rep. 464.

The laws governing theatrical exhibitions of children forbid such exhibitions under the age of sixteen as the limit of such protection, and as the legislative result of an elaborate and careful investigation into the relative physical strength of children, which established the following facts: 1. The exhibitions prohibited are physically injurious to the children.

People v. Meade, 24 Abb. N. C. 357.

Case after case has occurred where these so-called gifted children were driven to an early grave.

In the next place, when such children are exhibited in the day time, they lose their education.

Again the associations are bad for the children.

It was to protect children from being used in these theatrical exhibitions in order to make money for their parents or guardians that the law now assailed was passed, just as it forbids their use in begging, peddling, or in factories.

The power of a father at this age is conferred, not as a right of dominion, or even as a privilege for the father's own benefit or pleasure; but merely for the benefit and guidance, and comfort of the child.

Fraser, Parent & Child, 2d ed. p. 67.

There is no legal obligation resting upon a child to support a parent; while the parent is bound to supply the necessities to an infant child, an adult child, in the absence of positive statute, or a legal contract on his own part, is not bound to supply necessities to his aged parent.

Schouler, Dom. Rel. 8d ed. § 265; Field, Infants, § 48; Edwards v. Davis, 16 Johns. 281.

This court has uniformly upheld the police power of the legislature when enacting laws for the protection of the public health or morals.

Skim-milk Act (People v. West, 106 N. Y. 293, 60 Am. Rep. 452; People v. Kibler, 106 N. Y. 328); The Lottery Advertising Act (Hart v. People, 26 Hun, 896); The Clean Sidewalks Act (Carthage v. Frederick, 10 L. R. A. 178, 122 N. Y. 268); The Act Regulating the Height of Buildings (People v. D'Oench, 111 N. Y. 359).

The police power was also expressly sustained in Bertholf v. O'Reilly (Civil Damage Act), 74 N. Y. 609, 80 Am. Rep. 323; Phelps v. Racey (Game Law), 60 N. Y. 10, 19 Am. Rep. 140; People v. Gallagher (Colored Schools), 98 N. Y. 438, 45 Am. Rep. 232; People v. King (Civil Rights), 1 L. R. A. 293, 110 N. Y. 418; 26 L. R. A.

People v. Budd (Grain Elevator Charges), 5 L. R. A. 559, 117 N. Y. 1; Lawton v. Steele (Fishing Law), 7 L. R. A. 184, 119 N. Y. 236; People v. Arensburg (Oleomargarine), 105 N. Y. 128, 59 Am. Rep. 483; People v. Rosenberg (Fat Rendering), 188 N. Y. 410.

Even in the cases where enactments were held unconstitutional, this court has been uniformly consistent in disclaiming any right to question the discretion of the legislature as to the methods and expedients adopted to protect the public health or morals, when legislating upon those subjects.

Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 889; People v. Marz, 99 N. Y. 877, 53 Am. Rep. 84; People v. Rosenberg, 188 N. Y. 410.

The law whose validity is here assailed is fairly, clearly, and wholly within the subject of the public health and morals, and so within the power of the legislature to enact.

People v. King, 1 L. R. A. 293, 110 N. Y. 427.

The courts of this state have uniformly held all acts intended for the prevention and punishment of wrongs to children to be constitutional. They are in the nature of public regulations to prevent as well as to punish crime.

People v. Forbes, 4 Park. Crim. Rep. 611; Duffy v. People, 1 Hill, 355, 6 Hill, 75; Re Donohue, 1 Abb. N. C. 1.

Gray, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question we shall determine upon this appeal is, whether the statute under which the appellant was arrested violates any just and personal rights secured to her by the constitution of the state. If it is such an interference with the legal relation of parent and child as exceeds the limits within which the legislature, exercising the sovereign power of the state, may regulate and control that relation, then it is the duty of the courts to declare its unconstitutionality. But if it is within a proper and legitimate exercise of legislative functions the courts may not interfere.

This question falls within those which are classified under the head of the police power of the state. The extent of the exercise of that power with which the legislature is invested, and which it has so freely exerted in many directions within constitutional limits, is a matter resting in discretion; to be guided by the wisdom of the people's representatives. It is difficult, if not impossible, to define the police power of a state; or, under recent judicial decisions, to say where the constitutional boundaries limiting its exercise are to be fixed. It is a power essential to be conceded to the state in the interest and for the welfare of its citizens. We may say of it that when its operation is in the direction of so regulating a use of private property, or of so restraining personal action as manifestly to secure or to tend to the comfort, prosperity or protection of the community, no constitutional guaranty is violated, and the legislative authority is not transcended. But the legislation must have some relation to these ends; for, to quote the expressions of Mr. Justice Field in the Slaughter-House Cases, 89

U. S. 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394, "under the mere guise of police regulations personal rights and private property cannot be arbitrarily invaded." In People v. King, 110 N. Y. 418, 1 L. R. A. 293, it was well observed by Judge Andrews: "By means of this power the legislature exercises a supervision over matters affecting the common weal. . . . It may be exerted whenever necessary to secure the peace, good order, health, morals, and general welfare of the community, and the propriety of its exercise, within constitutional limits, is purely a matter of legislative direction, with which courts cannot interfere." The assumption of the exercise of this extraordinary and very necessary power has been the subject of severe criticism in the opinions of judges when it has been sought thereby to regulate and control, in the interest of the public, the conduct of corporate or individual business transactions. Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 118, 24 L. ed. 97, may be referred to as starting a current of authority in this country. But no such criticism can find just grounds for cavilling at legislation whose ends clearly tend to promote the health or moral well-being of the members of society. To that class of legislation this statute belongs. By preventing the exhibition of children of tender and immature age upon the theatrical or other public stage, the legislature is exercising that right of supervision and control over the child, which, in every civilized state, inheres in the government, and which nothing in the legal relations of parent and child should be deemed to forbid. The proposition is indisputable that the custody of the child by the parent is within legislative regulation. The parent, by natural law, is entitled to the custody and care of the child, and, as its natural guardian, is held to the performance of certain duties. To society, organized as a state, it is a matter of paramount interest that the child shall be cared for, and that the duties of support and education be performed by the parent or guardian, in order that the child shall become a healthful and useful member of the community. It has been well remarked that the better organized and trained the race the better it is prepared for holding its own. Hence it is that laws are enacted looking to the compulsory education by parents of their children, and to their punishment for cruel treatment; and which limit and regulate the employment of children in the factory and the workshop to prevent injury from excessive labor. It is not, and cannot be disputed, that the interest which the state has in the physical, moral, and intellectual well-being of its members warrants the implication and the exercise of every just power which will result in preparing the child in future life to support itself, to serve the state, and in all the relations and duties of adult life to perform well and capably its part.

In the brief of the able counsel who appears for the people, and whose earnest efforts in behalf of the cause of humanity and of mercy have so distinguished him, the discussion of the subject upon these lines is quite full and interesting. Indeed, the learned counsel for the appellant does not, in the main, contest the right and the duty of the state to protect and to promote by adequate legislation the health and morals of its citizens, but bases his arguments here upon the proposition, substantially, that the legislature cannot take from parents the right to employ their children in any lawful occupation, not indecent or immoral, or dangerous to life, limb, health and morals. That proposition may be readily conceded. It is true enough that if the court could say that this legislation was an arbitrary exercise of the legislative power, depriving the parent of a right to a legitimate use of his child's services; that, while ostensibly for the promotion of the well-being of children, in reality, it strikes at an inalienable right, or at the personal liberty of the citizen and but remotely concerned the interests of the community, it would be its duty so to pronounce and to declare its invalidity. But this legislation has no such destructive effect or tendency. It does not deprive the parent of the child's custody, nor does it abridge any just rights. It interferes to prevent the public exhibition of children, under a certain age, in spectacles or performances which, by reason of the place or hour, of the nature of the acts demanded of the child performer and of the surroundings and circumstances of the exhibition, are deemed by the legislature prejudicial to the physical, mental, or moral well-being of the child, and, hence, to the interests of the state itself. Take the facts of this case and they seem sufficiently to warrant the interference of the law. It is not necessary to reason upon them. The scanty dress of the ballet dancer, the pirouetting and the various other described movements with the limbs and the vocal efforts cannot be said to be without possible prejudice to the physical condition of the child; while, in the glare of the footlights, the tinsel surroundings and the incense of popular applause, it is not impossible that the immature mind should contract such unreal views of existence as to unfit it for the stern realities and exactions of later life. The statute is not to be construed as applying only when the exhibition offends against morals or decency, or endangers life or limb by what is required of the child actor. Its application is to all public exhibitions or shows. That any and all such shall be deemed prejudicial to the interests of the child, and contrary to the policy of the state to permit, was for the legislature to consider and say.

The right to personal liberty is not infringed upon, because the law imposes limitations or restraints upon the exercise of the faculties with which the child may be more or less exceptionally endowed. The inalienable right of the child, or adult, to pursue a trade is indisputable; but it must be not only one which is lawful, but which, as to the child of immature years, the state or sovereign, as parens patriæ, recognizes as proper and safe. It is not the strict moralist's view, dictated by prejudice, but the view from the standpoint of a member of the body politic, which ranges the judgment in support of legislative interference to restrain the parent from permitting an employment of the child under circumstances deemed unsuited to its proper mental, moral, or physical development. In the judgment of the legislature it was deemed as unsuitable for the youth of the community, under a certain age, to dance or to perform in public exhibitions in the ways mentioned, as it was deemed unsuitable for them to work in the factory, except under certain limitations as to age, hours, etc.

We have not overlooked certain cases, referred to by the appellant's counsel, to show the invalidity of this legislation as an exercise of the police power of the state, or to show a violation of constitutional rights. They establish that the legislature has no right, under the guise of protecting health or morals, to enact laws, which bearing but remotely, if at all, upon these matters of public concern, deprive the citizen of the right to pursue a lawful occupation. Such were the cases of Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 93, 50 Am. Rep. 636; People v. Marz, 99 N. Y. 877, 52 Am. Rep. 84; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 889; People v. Rosenberg, 138 N. Y. 410.

We are referred to some cases in Illinois, but they are neither applicable nor authoritative upon the question before us.

Further discussion is unnecessary. We might have remained satisfied with the able and clear exposition of his views by the learned justice at the special term, had not the range taken by the arguments of counsel seemed to call for a brief expression by us of our view of the principle of state interference.

The order should be affirmed.

All concur.

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

RE Succession of Louise Marie REISS.

(.....La.....)

*Plaintiff, the mother-in-law, appeals from a judgment ordering her son-in-law to send his children, aged respectively six and eight years, issue of the marriage with her late daughter, to visit her, and directing, further that she shall visit the grandchildren at their father's home in alternate weeks, on such days as the parties may agree. She complains of the judgment in so far as she is to visit the children, and asks that it be limited to the imperative duty of the children to visit her. There is very little difference in principle between the parties as disclosed by the evidence. The husband does not deny the filial piety that is due by the children. Differences and incompatibilities have arisen shaking to the grandparent and that may prove painful, in course of time, to the children. The question is of first impression in the courts of this state. In France, under similar laws, the courts and commentators greatly differ upon the subject. There are well-considered decisions holding that the precept, "Honor thy father and thy mother," as embodied in the civil code, includes the grandmother or grandfather as a legal obligation. Other courts and certain writers lay down the principle that under a law of nature the child is under the authority of the father or mother alone, and that the law has conformed to natural law and that the judge has no authority to intervene. The court of the first instance has pronounced judgment based upon the principles that the parties in their testimony admit are correct, but which they have not followed. On appeal to this court it does not appear that there is cause for judicial intervention.

(February 12, 1894.)

*Headnote by BREAUZ, J.

NOTE.—The duty of parents to permit their children to visit grandparents, which is held in the above case "to be moral and not legal," is a question which seems to be here presented for adjudication for the first time in this country.

That the custody of children will be awarded with reference to the interests of the children, rather

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the District Court for the Parish of Orleans providing conditions upon which plaintiff, grandmother of the children of Louise Marie Reiss, should have the privilege of visiting with such children, the exercise of which privilege had been obstructed by Henry J. Rolling, Jr., the father of the children. Judgment annulled for want of jurisdiction in the court.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Aristee L. Tissot for appellant.

Mr. Bernard McCloskey for appellee.

Breaux, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The father and tutor of two minor children, one eight and the other six years of age, is defendant in a rule issued at the instance of their maternal grandmother to compel him to send his children to visit her at her residence and domicile on such days and at such hours as the court may deem proper to determine. She alleges that he arbitrarily, wantonly, maliciously, and cruelly denies her the privilege of seeing her grandchildren, thus abusing parental authority, controllable by the courts. The defendant denies that he has refused to move in rule the privilege of visiting his children, and avers that he is willing that she shall visit his children. The judgment of the court a quo makes the rule absolute, and orders the father to send the children to visit their grandmother, and further orders that the grandmother shall visit the children at their father's home, in alternate weeks, on such days as the parties may agree, provided the visits do not in any manner interfere with the schooling of the children. Before this court the appellant asks that her rule be made absolute, commanding the defendant to send the children to visit her, without reference to any visit by her.

than to any absolute right of parents, is shown by Sheers v. Stein (Wis.) 5 L. R. A. 781, and note; Weir v. Marley (Mo.) 6 L. R. A. 672; Whalen v. Olmstead (Conn.) 15 L. R. A. 598 (with note as to state guardianship); Re Lally (Iowa) 16 L. R. A. 681; Van Walters v. Marion County Childrens' Guardians (Ind.) 16 L. R. A. 481; Nugent v. Powell (Wyo.) 20 L. R. A. 198.

The appellee, in his answer to the appeal, prays for a dismissal of the rule. The mother of these children has been dead about six years. They live with the father. The relations between the son-in-law and mother-in-law are not only strained, but acrimonious. More than three years have elapsed since he has sent his children to visit their grandmother. She has requested him she testifies, to send them, but he failed to comply with the request. The defendant's household consists of his father and other members of his family. They and the children live at the same residence. The relations of plaintiff with the members of the son-in-law's family are not, it seems, of the most pleasant character. The plaintiff by her testimony, creates the impression that the coolness and feeling existing would render the visit anything but pleasant. Moments with her grandchildren while on such visits, which, under other circumstances, would be highly enjoyed, at this time would possibly only cause irritation and bad blood. The differences are, we are led to believe, of an entirely personal character, and have no reference to the standing of the parties, in regard to which there is not the most remote suggestion. The plaintiff states as a witness that she does not entertain any objection on that score. The witness testifies: "Q. Have you visited those children at the house of their father? A. No, sir. Q. Why not? A. Why not? Because I thought they should be sent to see me, and not to go there to see them. Q. Why not call upon these children at the home of their father, to see them? A. Because I thought it was proper to send them to me. Q. Is that the only reason? A. That is my reason that I wish to give. Q. Do I understand you, then, as refusing to visit those children at the house of the father? A. No, sir, I don't refuse; but I have other reasons. I may be wrong, but at the same time I have never visited the Rolling family; and I did not think it was my place to go and see those children there, as I think their place was to come and see me." When examined as a witness, the son-in-law, in answer to the question: "Don't you think that there is a law of nature that children should visit their grandparents? A. I think that's right." Manifestly the difference between these parties is considerable, and would not be sufficient to arrest attention, were it not that it affects the good relation and intimacy that should prevail between these little children and their grandmother. While we appreciate the affection that moves her to seek the occasional company of the offspring of her daughter, this court's jurisdiction does not include the cause pleaded. The issue is not incidental to any other cause. However disinclined we are to discountenance causes of action such as the one under consideration,—for they are inspired by a true and commendable impulse,—we find no authority in law to entertain jurisdiction of the issue presented. The question involved is res nova in this state.

In interpreting articles of the civil code in France similar to ours on the subject, the courts and commentators greatly differ. There is respectable authority listed in favor of the precept of Deuteronomy, "Honora patrem tuum et matrem" embodied in the civil code as including also the grandfather and grandmother. They construe under the articles of this code that the obligation involved in the case at bar, legal in so far as relates to the father and mother, is legal also in so far as relates to the grandfather, and the grandmother, and that the court can intervene for its enforcement without regard to the will of the father or mother. Other courts hold, and other commentators state, that under the law of nature the child is under the authority of the father or mother after the death of either. We translate from 4 Laurent, p. 862, who propounds the question, can the ascendant demand that the authority of the father and mother be limited? In truth, the ascendants have certain rights that the law in accord with nature gives them; but only when the father and mother are dead, or are incapable of manifesting their will. During the existence of the father and mother, the law properly accords them no authority over the children. To permit them to intervene would occasion embarrassment and annoyance; even more, it would injuriously hinder proper paternal authority by dividing it. The authority sought is said to be in the interest of the children. Are the children interested in anything in the nature of a conflict of authority? Without doubt it is desirable that the ties of affection that nature creates between the ascendants and their grandchildren be strengthened and unceasing, but, if there is a conflict, the father alone or the mother should be the judge. The law gives no right of action to the grandparents. The father may have good reason to avoid all contact between his children and their grandparents,—either that he fears that they may inculcate bad principles, or that they will unsettle the respect and affection due him. He owes no account to any one for his motives. They may be so intimate that the honor of the family requires that they shall remain a secret. Shall we say that the judge shall be the arbitrator between the grandparent and the father? The court of Bordeaux replies that the intervention of the tribunals would, as a consequence, render the dissensions of the family more pronounced by delivering them to the public. Other views than these above expressed, says the commentator, would be proper on the part of the legislator. We do not understand them when emanating from interpreters of the present laws. We refer approvingly to the French authorities only so far as they lay down the principles that there is not a vinculum juris; that the obligation ordinarily to visit grandparents is moral, and not legal. There may be cases of downright wrong and inhumanity demanding judicial intervention, even to the extent of dismissing the father and tutor from his trust. The case at bar does not disclose so grave an issue. Ill feeling and bad blood separate the father and grandmother. The former admits the respect due to the latter by his children. The ties of nature will prove more efficacious in restoring kindly family relations than the coercive measures which must follow judicial intervention.

It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the judgment of the court a qua be annulled and avoided, and that the rule be dismissed, at plaintiff's costs in both courts.

Rehearing denied March 12, 1894.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

Frank I. RIDGELY, Appt.,

v.

Charlotte RIDGELY et al.

(.....Md.....)

1. A court of equity has no inherent jurisdiction to annul a marriage in the absence of fraud or duress.
2. The annulment of an invalid marriage cannot be decreed upon the application of a third party on the ground that he is the lawful husband of the woman by a prior marriage, which is still in force.

(June 19, 1894.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the Circuit Court No. 2, for Baltimore City in favor of defendants in an action brought to nullify a certain marriage contract. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Joseph P. Merryman, for appellant:

The determination that the marriage relation was a contract by the civil tribunals, resulted in their obtaining concurrent jurisdiction with the ecclesiastical courts over this relation—the civil courts maintaining and controlling finally jurisdiction of marriages absolutely void, restraining the spiritual courts whenever they attempted to extend their authority over marriages which did not fall within the law of canonical disabilities, and from the time of 39 Henry VIII. the civil tribunals have had jurisdiction over void marriages, and asserting the civil character of this relation. The chancery court is the proper forum for relief from illegal and fraudulent contracts.

The jurisdiction of this tribunal became a part of our inheritance after the separation of the colonies and it has jurisdiction over these causes (Fornhill v. Murray, 1 Bland, Ch. 483, 18 Am. Dec. 348; LeBrun v. LeBrun, 55 Md. 496; Helms v. Francisus, 3 Bland, Ch. 544, 20 Am. Dec. 402; Stewart, Mar. & Div. § 419), and accepted and recognized in other states.

Carris v. Carris, 24 N. J. Eq. 516; Wightman v. Wightman, 4 Johns. Ch. 343, 1 L. ed. 861; Ferlat v. Gejon, Hopk. Ch. 479, 2 L. ed. 493, 14 Am. Dec. 554; Orump v. Morgan, 38 N. C. 91, 40 Am. Dec. 447; Clark v. Fidd, 13 Vt. 460; Ravdon v. Ravdon, 28 Ala. 565; Cook v. Cook, 56 Wis. 195, 43 Am. Rep. 706; Reed v. Reed, 52 Mich. 117, 50 Am. Rep. 247.

By Code, vol. 2, art. 62, § 12, jurisdiction in nullity suits is conferred upon the superior court of Baltimore city, and the circuit courts of the county. This statute does not interfere with the jurisdiction of the equity court. The original common-law jurisdiction of the equity court is not disturbed by it.

Barnes v. Orain, 8 Gill, 398; Bridges v. Mc-

NOTE.—Jurisdiction of chancery to decree nullity or dissolution of marriage.

Inasmuch as the dissolution of marriages was in England within the exclusive jurisdiction of ecclesiastical courts while they existed, the jurisdiction of chancery in such cases if it could be upheld at all in this country must be based on its expansive character and the necessities of the case. The result of the examination of the question is to find that there is a substantial agreement of the courts in the doctrine which is declared in Griffin v. Griffin, 47 N. Y. 124 (which was a case as to an allowance), that some recognized ground of equitable jurisdiction in case of other contracts must exist to create a case for equity in respect to a marriage contract. This, it will be observed, is recognized as the true doctrine in RIDGELY v. RIDGELY, and not inconsistent with the decision in KELLEY v. KELLEY, post, 800.

An apparent exception in Georgia is not really in conflict with the other cases.

Under a statute making mental incapacity a ground of divorce, the claim was made in a Georgia case that the marriage was void and not merely voidable, and that therefore the decree should not make provision for the wife and offspring. But the court refused to approve this theory and held that under such a statute no power existed in a court of equity to give a sentence of nullity but that the divorce laws furnished the only remedy. Brown v. Westbrook, 27 Ga. 102. This merely construes the statutory remedy to be exclusive and does not conclude a case where no statute exists.

But following a statement in Rhame v. Rhame, 1 McCord, Eq. 305, 16 Am. Dec. 597, that jurisdiction of chancery in such case could extend only to alimony, the same court in Mattison v. Mattison, 1 Strobb. Eq. 387, 47 Am. Dec. 541, denied the jurisdiction of equity to decree the nullity of a marriage, denying any difference between the authority to grant a divorce and to pass sentence of nullity. This case is contrary to some which follow.

In Wright v. Wright, 6 Tex. 3, the court says: "Whatever diversity of opinion may be entertained as to the authority of a district court to annul a marriage for causes antecedent to its celebration other than that of incurable impotency, it will be conceded that for cause subsequently arising the power of the court is restricted to the grounds prescribed in the statute."

In Le Brun v. Le Brun, 55 Md. 496, the court says: "The power of a court of equity to declare a marriage null and void when a proper case is made out cannot be questioned. The authority of the court, however, to act in such cases is not derived by the powers conferred by the divorce laws, although a divorce a vinculo may be decreed upon some of the same grounds upon which a marriage may be declared a nullity."

In this case a prior existing marriage was alleged, but not established, and the language quoted is clearly too broad under the decision of the same court in RIDGELY v. RIDGELY, while the Massachusetts court decided a precisely similar case against the alleged jurisdiction in KELLEY v. KELLEY, post, 800.

That jurisdiction to decree the nullity of a marriage is merely statutory, is affirmed in Peugnet v. Phelps, 48 Barb. 566, where the marriage was attacked on the ground that it was entered into in another state in evasion of a decree of divorce from a former marriage of the wife, prohibiting her to remarry, and the case was dismissed for lack of jurisdiction.

But in Kansas in the case of Fuller v. Fuller, 23 Kan. 582, a suit for nullity was sustained because of the wife's incapacity to contract a legal marriage as she was already married, and her claim to alimony or an allowance of property was denied.

In Fornhill v. Murray, 1 Bland, Ch. 483, 18 Am.

Kenna, 14 Md. 270; Schroeder v. Loeber, 75 Md. 195.

A marriage void for fraud, mistake, etc., is within the inherent jurisdiction of equity.

2 Bishop, Mar. & Div. § 291; Stewart, Mar. & Div. § 122; Pingree v. Goodrich, 41 Vt. 49; Rawdon v. Rawdon, 28 Ala. 565; Crump v. Morgan, 38 N. C. 91, 40 Am. Dec. 447; Tefft v. Tefft, 85 Ind. 50; Carris v. Carris, 24 N. J. Eq. 516.

Marriage procured by fraud is within the jurisdiction of the equity court.

Fornhill v. Murray, 1 Bland, Ch. 488, 18 Am. Dec. 848.

Any one who can exhibit his libel for divorce can institute a nullity suit.

Pingree v. Goodrich, supra.

The appellant unable to have his status determined, is in conflict with every equitable principle. Equity courts are the forum for relief in such cases. It has paramount jurisdiction.

Schroeder v. Loeber, supra.

Every state has the undisputed right to determine the status and the domestic and social condition of its own citizens.

Strader v. Graham, 51 U. S. 10 How. 92, 18 L. ed. 341.

This status is fixed in the state where domicil exists.

Garner v. Garner, 56 Md. 127.

And is therefore, the country which has control over the status of husband and wife.

Keel v. Keel, 34 Md. 21.

There being no domicil or residence of the appellee Charlotte in the state of South Dakota, a condition precedent of jurisdiction by the courts of South Dakota in a divorce suit, the decree of the court of South Dakota is absolutely void for want of jurisdiction of the parties and their status.

Barber v. Barber, 62 U. S. 21 How. 582, 16 L. ed. 226; Stewart, Mar. & Div. § 221.

The decree of the court of South Dakota being void for want of jurisdiction of the parties and their status, it is not within the provision of art. 4, § 1, Constitution of the United States. Full force and credit is given only to those judgments rendered where the state has jurisdiction over both person and thing.

Strader v. Graham, 51 U. S. 10 How. 92, 18 L. ed. 337; Cheever v. Wilson, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 108, 19 L. ed. 604.

This decree being void for want of jurisdiction is not recognized by this state under the comity existing between nations. Nor has it any force under the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, art. 4, § 1.

Strader v. Graham, Cheever v. Wilson, and Barber v. Barber, supra; Barrett v. Failing, 111 U. S. 528, 28 L. ed. 505; Cheely v. Clayton, 110 U. S. 701, 28 L. ed. 298; Borden v. Fitch, 15 Johns. 121, 8 Am. Dec. 326.

The validity of a decree absolutely void for want of jurisdiction can be impeached, in any court, at any time directly or collaterally.

Windsor v. McVeigh, 93 U. S. 274, 23 L. ed. 914; United States v. Walker, 109 U. S. 258, 27 L. ed. 927; Sevall v. Sevall, 122 Mass. 156, 23 Am. Rep. 299; Williamson v. Berry, 49 U. S. 8 How. 495, 13 L. ed. 1170; Glenn v. Williams, 60 Md. 121; Ex parte Sawyer, 124 U. S.

Dec. 348, the court says it would seem that chancery could declare a marriage void as a mere civil contract for abduction, terror, and fraud, and to this nearly all authorities have agreed.

The jurisdiction of the court of chancery to relieve against a marriage contract, or annul a contract solemnized before a magistrate or minister of the gospel, if obtained by force, fraud, or imposition, or under a mistake as to the legal effect of such solemnization by one of the parties, if the other party knew the legal effect and also knew that the party was under such mistake, at least when such ceremony has not been followed by consummation or cohabitation, is upheld in Clark v. Field, 13 Vt. 460.

In upholding the power of a court of equity to declare a marriage null for fraud, the court says in Ferlat v. Gojon, Hopk. Ch. 478, 2 L. ed. 493, 14 Am. Dec. 554: "If this court has not the same jurisdiction where the contract has been procured by fraud, it is the only case of a fraudulent contract to which its jurisdiction does not extend." In that case statutory power to grant divorce for certain specified causes was held not to exclude this power by implication.

In holding the marriage of an insane person void and granting sentence of annulment, the court in Wightman v. Wightman, 4 Johns. Ch. 343, 1 L. ed. 661, said: "There must be a tribunal existing that was competent to investigate such a charge and to afford the requisite relief, and the power, I apprehend, must reside in this court which has not only an exclusive jurisdiction over cases of lunacy but over matrimonial cases." This is further defined as a sole jurisdiction over the marriage contract in certain specified cases. The doctrine here broadly stated is limited by the later decisions of the same court especially by Burtis v. Burtis, Hopk. Ch. 557, 2 L. ed. 522, 14 Am. Dec. 563, infra. 35 I. R. A.

In True v. Ranney, 21 N. H. 52, 58 Am. Dec. 164, a suit for nullity on account of the imbecility of the wife, which renders her incapable of contracting marriage, was sustained by the superior court of judicature. The court said no mode is prescribed either in the constitution or the statutes, in which proceedings shall be instituted and carried on for the purpose of procuring a decree of nullity of marriage, but that the power to make the decree and regulate the mode of procedure existed beyond doubt, as the revised statutes made allusion to such a decree.

Again the same court decided that chancery jurisdiction in cases of fraud includes a suit to annul a marriage for insanity of one of the parties fraudulently concealed from the other. Keyes v. Keyes, 22 N. H. 553.

In a suit for nullity of marriage on the ground of insanity, the jurisdiction is sustained in Rawdon v. Rawdon, 28 Ala. 565, although relief is denied on the merits; but no discussion of the question of jurisdiction is made and no statement as to the existence of any statute on the subject.

So independently of the provisions relating to divorce, it is held in Powell v. Powell, 18 Kan. 371, 26 Am. Rep. 774, that the district court of that state has full jurisdiction of a suit to annul a void marriage on the ground of the insanity of one of the parties.

And in Ohio it was held that jurisdiction at the suit of an imbecil's guardian to declare his marriage a nullity belongs to the court of equity like that to order the surrender and cancellation of a forged or otherwise void instrument. Waymire v. Jetmore, 22 Ohio St. 271.

A suit to annul a marriage for lack of mental capacity of one of the parties is held to be within a statutory provision giving jurisdiction in all cases of applications for divorce, both to superior 200, 81 L. ed. 402; Leith v. Leith, 39 N. H. 20; Hoffman v. Hoffman, 46 N. Y. 80, 7 Am. Rep. 299; Hickey v. Stewart, 44 U. S. 8 How. 761, 11 L. ed. 818.

Mr. Thomas C. Weeks also for appellant.

Messrs. William A. Fisher and Charles W. Field, for appellees:

How can a court of one state directly set aside a decree of a court of another state.

The power to annul such decree directly exists alone in the court that passed it.

2 Bishop, Mar. & Div. § 1556; 1 Black, Judgments, § 297; 2 Wait, Act. & Def. p. 618; Parish v. Parish, 9 Ohio St. 534, 75 Am. Dec. 482; DeGraw v. DeGraw, 7 Mo. App. 121; Allen v. Macdellan, 12 Pa. 328; Edson v. Edson, 108 Mass. 596, 11 Am. Rep. 398; Holmes v. Holmes, 68 Me. 420.

The Code, art. 62, § 12, says the superior court of Baltimore city "may, upon petition of either of the parties, inquire into, hear, and determine the validity of any marriage."

The "parties" here referred to are the parties to the alleged void marriage.

Independently of the statute, a proceeding for nullity of a marriage could only be taken by a party to it.

2 Bishop, Mar. & Div. §§ 296, 804.

A court of equity will not undertake an unnecessary or fruitless inquiry. If the facts alleged in the bill are true, the marriage would be void without the action of the court.

18 Law Library, 156; Gathings v. Williams, 27 N. C. 498, 44 Am. Dec. 49; Harrison v. State, 23 Md. 484, 85 Am. Dec. 658.

McSherry, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In October, 1881, Frank I. Ridgely married the appellee, Charlotte, and they resided in Maryland continuously until October, 1892, when the said Charlotte left the state without the consent of her husband, and went to South Dakota, where in January following, she instituted proceedings against her husband for divorce, which culminated in a decree of divorce a vinculo on April 18th, 1893. A few days thereafter she returned to Baltimore, and in May following she married the appellee, Hyatt. It is alleged in the bill of complaint filed by Frank I. Ridgely against his former wife, Charlotte, and her present husband, Hyatt, that she went to South Dakota for the purpose of procuring a divorce; that he was ignorant of her whereabouts durcourts of law and to courts of equity. Johnson v. Kincaid, 37 N. C. 470.

The power of equity to decree a marriage null when performed in jest is upheld in New Jersey by a liberal construction of a statute authorizing chancery to grant divorces and annul marriages in other specified cases. The court says that the constitution by taking away from the legislature this power may be inferred to intend to leave the power with chancery, upon which jurisdiction over most cases of divorce is directly conferred. McClurg v. Terry, 21 N. J. Eq. 226.

Intoxication of a person at the time of marriage, which was not followed by cohabitation, is held to give a court of equity power to declare the marriage void, although the case is not one enumerated in the statute conferring jurisdiction to grant divorce for certain specified causes. Selah v. Selah, 23 N. J. Eq. 185.

In this case the court says of McClurg v. Terry, supra: "Nor does the decision in that case hold that the court has power to dissolve a marriage actually entered into, but only that it has power to declare that such contract was never legally made."

A marriage under a license procured by the husband's fraud and false swearing as to the age of the wife was declared void on her petition in Robertson v. Cole, 12 Tex. 356, although it appears that the statute made no provision for such a case but only provided for divorce for causes arising after marriage. It was regarded as a fraud upon her in procuring her consent illegally, and the jurisdiction of the district court to grant divorce was extended to this case.

In case of a marriage of a girl of twelve years, on a bill by her next friend she was placed under the protection of the court of chancery as a ward thereof, and the husband prohibited to correspond with her so long as the order was in force, but without any discussion of jurisdiction. Aymar v. Roff, 3 Johns. Ch. 49, 1 L. ed. 588. This case evidently belongs to a different class than nullity of marriage cases, and is merely an exercise of the jurisdiction of chancery over infants.

The equitable jurisdiction over infants does not extend to the granting of a divorce to a wife who is a minor in any case where it would not be 26 L. R. A.

granted if she were of full age,—especially if the marriage had been consummated before the chancellor acquired jurisdiction over the person of the infant. Maguire v. Maguire, 7 Dana, 181.

Fraud in inducing a marriage with a pregnant woman was held ground for its annulment in equity, under the general power of the court to annul fraudulent contracts. Carris v. Carris, 24 N. J. Eq. 518. The court says: "It is a case of fraud in the consent and is akin to that in a case of lunacy, idiocy, or infancy, which all have to do with the consent."

A similar case in New York was similarly decided on the ground of fraud. Scott v. Shufeldt, 5 Paige, 43, 3 L. ed. 620.

In Teft v. Teft, 35 Ind. 51, the court says the circuit court having jurisdiction in all civil actions, except when otherwise provided, has jurisdiction to declare a contract void in a direct proceeding in a proper cause independent of any provisions in the divorce law. This was a case in which a former existing marriage was alleged and a fraudulent concealment of the fact.

Under a statute authorizing divorce but designating no tribunal, it was held in Cast v. Cast, 1 Utah, 112, that a suit for divorce was virtually a suit in chancery, to be brought on the equity side of the district court, and that the territorial legislature could not confer such jurisdiction on the probate courts. The court in this case recognized the ecclesiastical law as part of the common law and declared that ecclesiastical jurisdiction was derived from the common law.

But the annulment of a marriage for impotence was refused by the New Jersey court of equity in Anonymous, 24 N. J. Eq. 19, there being no statutory provision therefor.

To the same effect it had been decided in Burtis v. Burtis, Hopk. Ch. 557, 3 L. ed. 522, 14 Am. Dec. 568, and the court said the case was different from one of fraud, as the power of the court to vacate a contract obtained by fraud was an unquestioned branch of its jurisdiction.

So it was held that chancery had no jurisdiction to give a divorce for cruelty, in the absence of a statute provision. Perry v. Perry, 2 Paige, 501, 3 L. ed. 1008.

In holding that consent to a divorce cannot dising her absence; that she was without means of her own to defray her expenses, and that her conduct in this matter resulted from the influence of Hyatt, who fraudulently and illegally aided her in attempting to destroy the plaintiff's marital rights. The bill charges that the divorce procured in South Dakota is void, and prays that the "so-called ceremony of marriage between Hyatt and the said Charlotte Ridgely may be declared null and void." To this bill a demurrer was filed, and upon a hearing thereof circuit court No. 3 sustained the demurrer and dismissed the bill. From that decree this appeal was taken.

The jurisdiction of a court of equity to pass a decree of the character prayed for, upon the application of a person not a party to the marriage alleged to be null and void, is directly presented. Treating, for the purposes of this discussion, the concessions of the demurrer as admitting the invalidity of the South Dakota divorce, how can a Maryland court of equity, at the instance of Mr. Ridgely, annul a subsequent marriage of his wife to another person, upon a bill filed exclusively for that purpose and asking no other relief? That is the distinct question which this record brings before us for decision.

If such a power be possessed by a court of equity it must have been acquired either as a part of its original, inherent jurisdiction or by statute. But upon tracing the history of the English court of chancery prior to the American Revolution no such power will be found to have been asserted or exercised by that tribunal. In point of fact as early as the reign of Edward, the Confessor, the clergy assumed to decide all matters relating to marriage; but somewhat later the ecclesiastical courts took jurisdiction both in respect of annulments for canonical disabilities and dissolutions by limited divorces for superadventitious causes; and acting on the ground that marriage was a sacrament held to be indissoluble. But inasmuch as adultery was a flagrant breach of the marriage vow, it was soon found necessary to devise some means to punish the offending party and to relieve the innocent one from the ties of a contract so uncontestedly violated. Accordingly the ecclesiastical courts, but not the court of chancery, began to decree separations on the ground of adultery—such separations giving pense with proof of the facts required by statute, it is said in Palmer v. Palmer, 1 Paige, 276, 3 L. ed. 645, that a court of chancery cannot, even with consent of the parties, decree an absolute or partial dissolution of the marriage contract, except in cases provided for by statute.

That chancery jurisdiction to grant a divorce is purely statutory is declared also in Jarvis v. Jarvis, 3 Edw. Ch. 482, 6 L. ed. 728, where the question was as to jurisdiction as affected by residence of the parties.

The jurisdiction of equity to grant a limited divorce is also declared to be statutory in Klein v. Klein, 48 How. Pr. 166.

Dicta.

In respect to a question as to the title to property, the court said in Weber v. Weber, 16 Or. 163, that it was conceded that the power to grant a divorce and such other relief as is truly incident thereto, is purely statutory.

Likewise in discussing the rights of children on divorce, it is said in Hopkins v. Hopkins, 39 Wis. 166, that courts, either of law or of equity, possess no powers except such as are conferred by statute.

In Rose v. Rose, 9 Ark. 507, the court said: "It is altogether safe to assume that the chancery courts of this state have rightfully, as to divorce and alimony, all the powers of the English ecclesiastical courts, as well as additional powers conferred by statutes," but the case involved merely the construction of the statute of the state.

In Stebbens v. Anthony, 5 Colo. 343, the court says the weight of authority is in favor of the jurisdiction of equity over divorce suits in the absence of statutes as well as under them, and that where the grounds of a separation are fixed by statute the litigation is necessarily one of equitable cognizance, but the case did not involve the necessity of deciding that an equity court could entertain such a suit in the absence of statute.

Character of proceeding.

That divorce is the special creature of statute and not a proceeding in equity, although the proceeding is commenced by petition, is declared by the Connecticut court in Steele v. Steele, 35 Conn. 48, 25 L. R. A.

A statute giving concurrent jurisdiction of "civil cases" to circuit courts and courts of common pleas was held to include actions for divorce. Herron v. Herron, 16 Ind. 122; Ellis v. Hatfield, 20 Ind. 101; Ewing v. Ewing, 24 Ind. 483.

The provision in the Georgia constitution of 1885, authorizing divorce "upon legal principles" is held to permit a divorce only for the causes recognized at common law. Head v. Head, 2 Ga. 191.

The superior court in Georgia, having exclusive jurisdiction under the constitution and code of divorce cases and also in equity, it is held to have power in a divorce case to exercise all its powers, whether those of a court of law or equity, so far as is necessary to maintain and carry out its jurisdiction over the subject-matter, so a prayer for an injunction as to property may be joined in a petition for divorce. Schooler v. Schooler, 77 Ga. 601.

In holding that a decree for alimony payable in installments does not constitute a lien on real estate, unless made so by the decree, in Olin v. Hungerford, 10 Ohio, 268, the court declared that it was a statutory proceeding and not within a statutory provision that decrees in chancery should operate as judgments at law.

A statute regulating appeals from decrees in chancery is held applicable to a bill for divorce, where the statute has given the court of chancery jurisdiction of such cases. Fulton v. Fulton, 38 Miss. 517.

In Montana, divorce proceedings being of chancery jurisdiction, under Rev. Stat., § 508, verdicts or special findings of the jury are merely advisory. Beck v. Beck, 6 Mont. 318.

In deciding that reasonable legal precision is necessary in the pleadings on a petition for divorce, it was declared in Stokes v. Stokes, 1 Mo. 220, that the proceedings under the Missouri statute were not generis neither chancery nor ecclesiastical, but that the rules of the ecclesiastical courts should govern so far as applicable where the statute made use of terms used in the ecclesiastical courts.

Cases on the jurisdiction of chancery to decree alimony, or separate maintenance are not here included, but a very extensive discussion of that question appears in the case of Edgerton v. Edgerton, 16 L. R. A. 94, 12 Mont. 122. B. A. R.

to the parties all the rights of celibacy, except that of contracting a new marriage. Gradually the grounds of such separations were extended, and cruelty and some other causes were allowed as just and proper reasons to support them. Thus much having been conceded, men began to look forward to these separations with a view to the formation of other and more desirable ties. Apparently to meet this growing desire, but at all events contemporaneously with it, the ecclesiastical law expanded far beyond their original limits the degrees of consanguinity and affinity within which it was declared unlawful to contract marriage.

"And not only was it held that relations of the blood of the sixth and seventh degree were incapable of contracting matrimony, but that if either party to the marriage had been pre-contracted to another the marriage was voidable; and eventually it was declared that if it happened to any man to have carnal connection with a woman, the same relations in regard to affinity were thereby created between them as if an actual marriage had taken place. Upon these grounds of pre-contract, affinity and carnal knowledge, the ecclesiastical law, still upholding the doctrine of the sacramental indissolubility of marriage, . . . and declaring such marriages to have been null and void ab initio, separated the parties 'pro salute animarum,' lest they should endanger their souls by living in a state of known sin." 2 Broom & Hadley's Com. *394. Thus matters stood until the reformation, when the views of the reformers, including Cramer, was that a more extended system of divorce should be allowed, and that a second marriage should be permitted after a divorce for adultery. A digest of ecclesiastical law, compiled under 8 & 4 Edward VI., chap. 11, having failed to receive the imprimatur of the law by reason of the death of the king, there was no judicial authority in the realm which had jurisdiction to make such a decree as would enable a man or woman to marry again, and recourse was then had to the supreme power of the state—the king, lords and commons in parliament assembled—to legislate upon the particular circumstances of each case. 2 Broom & Hadley's Com. *395. These applications to parliament became precedents and after 1701 became more numerous. No steps, however, were taken to reduce the practice there to any form 'till 1798, when Lord Loughborough's orders were adopted. These, with some modifications, continued to control the method of procedure until, in 1857, the court of divorce and matrimonial causes was created by 20 & 21 Vict. chap. 95.

It will thus be seen from this rapid and imperfect sketch that from the very earliest times the jurisdiction to annul a marriage in England when void, or voidable, on account of pre-existing impediments or to dissolve it for supervenient causes, was vested in other tribunals than the court of chancery (Shelford, Mar. & Div. *459); and consequently when Maryland was separated from the mother country the Maryland court of chancery did not acquire from the English chancery any power over such cases, though in 25 L. R. A.

this state the courts of equity independently of any statute, but in virtue of their general jurisdiction to vacate contracts procured by fraud, have exercised the power to annul a contract of marriage when the marriage induced or procured by fraud or coercion, but of this later on. The sole jurisdiction in divorce and matrimonial causes being at the time of the revolution vested in the ecclesiastical courts and in parliament, and no ecclesiastical court having been established in Maryland, the legislature in 1777, passed an Act, chap. 12, by the 15th section of which it was provided: "That the general court may inquire into, hear, and determine, either on indictment or application of either of the parties, the validity of any marriage, and may declare any marriage contrary to the table in this act, or any second marriage the first subsisting, null and void. . . ." The legislature in thus providing for judgments of nullity in certain instances including both canonical and civil disabilities, did not confer jurisdiction upon the court of chancery in the premises but upon the general court and when the latter court was abolished this power was transferred said Chancellor Bland in Fornhill v. Murray, 1 Bland, Ch. 488, 18 Am. Dec. 344, to the county courts. Under the Constitution of 1851, art. 4, § 11, the superior court of Baltimore city was given equity jurisdiction in that city. When therefore, the Code of 1860, was adopted and the Act of 1777, chap. 12, § 15, was codified therein it gave to the courts exercising equity jurisdiction at that time, viz.: the superior court of Baltimore city and the circuit courts for the counties, the authority to decree the nullity of marriages for the causes set forth in the old Act of 1777.

The Constitution of 1867 deprived the superior court of all equity jurisdiction and conferred that jurisdiction exclusively upon the circuit court of Baltimore city. The organic and the statute law stood thus in February, 1881, when the case of LeBrun v. LeBrun, 55 Md. 496, was decided by this court. In that case it was said: "Suits for nullity of marriage have been very rare in this state, but the power of a court of equity to declare a marriage null and void when a proper case is made out, cannot be questioned. The authority of the court, however, to act in such cases, is not derived from the powers conferred by the divorce laws. . . . If the marriage be procured by abduction, terror, fraud, or duress, the court, in declaring it a nullity, acts in virtue of its general jurisdiction in matters of fraud affecting contracts, and by the marriage act (Code, art. 60, § 8) the Act of 1777, chap. 12, § 15, express authority is given to the courts to inquire into, hear, and determine the validity of any marriage, and may declare any marriage within the prohibited degrees of kindred or affinity, or any second marriage, the first subsisting, null and void. These are the two sources of jurisdiction. This court was strictly right when in the case just cited it referred to the Act of 1777, as codified in section 8 of article 60 of the Code of 1860 as one of the two sources of an equity court's authority to nullify a marriage as contradistinguished from granting a divorce. But in 1886, by chapter 497, the legislature repealed section 8 of article 60 of the Code of 1860, and then re-enacted it, and as re-enacted, it, in express terms, conferred upon the superior court, which then was and still is, under the Constitution of 1867, a court of law, and not a court of equity, the authority to annul a marriage contract within the prohibited degrees, and a second marriage contracted whilst a first one is still subsisting. This Act of 1886 was re-enacted in 1888, when the code of that year was adopted.

The legislature had the undoubted right to confer this power upon either a court of law, or a court of equity, or on both, as it had in fact done by including the criminal court. By virtue of this recent legislation the authority to annul a marriage for any of the causes set forth in the Act of 1777 is, so far as the courts of Baltimore city are concerned, confined to the superior and criminal courts. This must be so unless we hold that when the legislature said in 1886, superior court, they did not mean that court, but a court of equity. It would scarcely be permissible to do this when we are dealing with a statute conferring a special jurisdiction not inherently belonging to either a court of law or a court of equity, but created solely by the statute now being considered. Nor could we treat the Act of 1886 as giving the superior court concurrent jurisdiction with the circuit court in this particular—but conceding to the latter the possession of this special power outside of and apart from any statute at all.

But besides the difficulty which the Act of 1886 presents as to the right of a court of equity in Baltimore city to pass a decree of nullity for any of the causes set forth in the Act of 1777, which, as amended by the Act of 1886, is now section 12 of article 62 of the Code of 1888, the language of that section specifically limits the right to make the application to one of the parties to the marriage whose validity is assailed, and gives to no third person the authority to invoke its provisions. In construing the Act of 1777, this court, in Harrison v. State, 22 Md. 486, 85 Am. Dec. 658, said: "No ecclesiastical court existed here; and instead of destroying it the Act of 1777 erected a jurisdiction with power, upon petition of either of the parties, or on indictment, to inquire into, hear, and determine the validity of any marriage," etc. With the exception of cases falling within the Act of 1777, as now codified, and marriages procured by fraud, no marriage was or could be declared null in Maryland, save by the general assembly until 1841, when, for certain specified causes, now set forth in art. 16, §§ 85, 86, 87, of the Code, the courts of equity were empowered to decree divorces upon the application of one of the parties to the marriage. Speaking with strict technical precision, a decree of nullity is widely different from a decree of divorce, for the one is founded on the theory that there never was a marriage at all, whilst the other concedes that a valid marriage did exist, but dissolves it, though a decree for a divorce may, under our code, be passed for causes which would sustain a decree of nullity. See notes to Lewis v. Lewis (Minn.) 9 L. R. A. 505.

25 L. R. A.

But the case before us does not fall either within the Act of 1777 or the above cited sections of the code. It is not within the Act of 1777, as amended by the Act of 1886 and codified in article 62, section 12, because, first, that act, as now codified, confers power upon the superior court, a court of law, and not upon a court of equity, in Baltimore city, to act in cases covered by it and instituted under it; and secondly because the act can only be invoked by one of the parties to the alleged null marriage, and not by some one else. The proceeding before us is not by Mr. or Mrs. Hyatt to annul their marriage, but by Mr. Ridgely to annul it for them and against their wishes. Nor is the pending case within either of the above cited sections of the code, because the bill sets forth no one of the causes for which the injured party to a contract of marriage may seek to have it set aside; and furthermore, it is not filed by such a party, but by a person not a party to the alleged invalid marriage at all.

Just here we may observe that there is some conflict in the authorities as to the right of a third party to inaugurate proceedings in the ecclesiastical courts to procure a sentence of nullity. In the flexible forms of the ecclesiastical courts, whenever during the lives of both of the parties any inquiry into the validity of a marriage arose, it took at once the character of a suit for nullity, since this suit need neither be instituted nor carried on by one of the parties to the marriage, it being equally maintainable by any other person having an interest therein. 1 Bishop, Mar. & Div. sec. 265; Sherwood v. Ray, 1 Moore, P. C. 353. There are some instances given in Shelford, Mar. & Div. 8 Law Lib. *179. But the complaining party must have some interest in the marriage, and generally the interest must be of a pecuniary character. Except in criminal cases, this right of third parties seems to be very doubtful. Stewart, Mar. & Div. § 328; Cropey v. McKinney, 30 Barb. 47. Whatever may have been the practice in the ecclesiastical courts we have not succeeded to it nor imported it into our courts of equity and nullity decrees except for fraud or coercion, are pronounced solely under the Act of 1777 as now codified, which in terms, as we have said, is confined to an application by one of the parties.

But it is insisted that the general jurisdiction of a court of equity is broad enough to embrace this case. Whilst Chancellor Bland in 1828, did not regard the Act of 1777, as clothing the court of chancery with authority to determine the validity of a contract of marriage; yet he held in Fornhill v. Murray, supra, that "by virtue of its general jurisdiction in matters of fraud affecting contracts, it would seem, that considering marriage as a mere civil contract it (a court of chancery) may at the instance of either party, declare a marriage to be null and void which has been procured by abduction, terror, and fraud." He cited Portsmouth v. Portsmouth, 1 Hagg. Eccl. Rep. 355; Re Fust, 1 Cox, Ch. 418; Ex parte Turing, 1 Ves. & B. 140; Ferlat v. Gojon, Hopk. Ch. 478, 2 L. ed. 493, 14 Am. Dec. 554. And we may add LeBrun v. LeBrun, supra;

Clark v. Field, 13 Vt. 460; Keyes v. Keyes, 22 N. H. 553; Wightman v. Wightman, 4 Johns. Ch. 343, 1 L. ed. 861.

Undoubtedly in the eye of the law marriage is a civil contract, differing from other contracts in the circumstance that it cannot be rescinded by the mere consent of the parties. Being then a contract, it seems to follow, that where it has been procured by fraud or duress it may be set aside by a court whose inherent jurisdiction gives it authority to annul any ordinary contract procured in the same way; provided the application be promptly made and before a consummation of the marriage by voluntary cohabitation, Clark v. Field, supra; Robertson v. Cole, 12 Tex. 356. In general either party may complain, but obviously in this as in other instances the party guilty of the fraud cannot allege and rely on his own misconduct to avoid a contract procured by that means. Stewart, Mar. & Div. §§ 46, 150, 151; Browne, Div. & Al. 860.

The case made by the pleadings does not come within these principles, for the bill of complaint does not allege the marriage between Mrs. Ridgely and Mr. Hyatt to be fraudulent at all, or to have been procured by fraud or coercion. It does allege, though, that the South Dakota divorce is fraudulent and void, and inferentially, by no direct charge, that the subsequent marriage was illegal and null. But the marriage might well be illegal and null to the extent of subjecting one of the parties to indictment for bigamy, without having been procured by fraud; and as this relief, if granted at all, must depend upon some fraud or force practiced by one party to the impeached marriage upon the other party to the same marriage, there must be appropriate averments to that effect in the complaint as well as proper parties to the proceeding. It is upon the bald allegation of the invalidity of the Dakota divorce that the annulment of the Maryland marriage is asked. There is no charge that any rights of property are involved, and there is no injury complained of for which the law, either through the criminal courts or through the civil tribunals by actions for damages, does not give the appellant ample remedy and redress.

The bill before us asks us to declare the marriage of Mrs. Ridgely and Mr. Hyatt void, not because it was procured by fraud, but because a valid prior marriage between her and the plaintiff is still in force. But the application is not made by either of the parties to the second marriage, and under the Act of 1777, as now codified, which is the only source from which any court in Maryland derives the power to pass such a sentence or judgment for that cause, no third person can institute such a proceeding. It follows, therefore, as the court below had no jurisdiction to pass the decree prayed for, that its decree dismissing the bill must be affirmed.

Decree affirmed with costs above and below.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

Ellen KELLEY

v.

John B. KELLEY.

(.....Mass.....)

1. There is no presumption that the statutes or local laws or usages of another state are like those of the forum.
2. Statutes and decisions of another state not put in evidence at the trial cannot be used for the first time at the argument of a case on report to the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts.
3. A court of chancery has no authority to annul a marriage independently of statutory authority on the ground merely that one of the parties was incapable to marry because of a prior existing marriage.
4. The assumption by a court of general jurisdiction in another state of the exercise of jurisdiction to annul a marriage on the ground of a prior existing marriage of one of the parties, and a dismissal of the complaint for failure to prosecute the suit, with a judgment for alimony and costs in favor of the defendant, which jurisdiction must depend on statute, is not sufficient to create a presumption that such jurisdiction existed.

(March 27, 1894.)

NOTE.—For chancery jurisdiction to decree nullity or dissolution of marriage, see note to Ridgely v. Ridgely, ante, 800.

25 L. R. A.

REPORT by the Superior Court for Essex County for the opinion of the Supreme Judicial Court of an application for an execution to enforce a judgment rendered by the Supreme Court of the State of New York in favor of plaintiff and against defendant annulling their marriage and awarding her alimony. Decree for defendant.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion. Mr. Clifford Brigham for plaintiff.

Messrs. Henry F. Hurlburt, Eugene T. McCarty, and Daniel N. Crowley for defendant.

Allen, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In this commonwealth, no power exists in any court to pass an order for the payment of alimony pendente lite, or of permanent alimony, in a matrimonial cause of any description, except under provisions of statute conferring such power. By the Constitution of Massachusetts (part 2, chap. 8, art. 5) it was provided that "all causes of marriage, divorce, and alimony . . . shall be heard and determined by the governor and council until the legislature shall by law make other provision." By Stat. 1785, chap. 69, § 2, it was enacted that "all marriages where either of the parties shall have a former wife or husband living at the time of such marriage shall be absolutely void;" and, by section 8, "divorces from the bond of matrimony shall be decreed in case . . . either of them [the parties] had a former wife or husband alive at the time of solemnizing such second marriage." In section 5, certain provisions for alimony are made but none in case of such void marriage. In section 7, "all questions of divorce and alimony shall be heard and tried by the supreme judicial court." It is not necessary to make special reference to later statutes, which have always, since 1785, contained such provisions upon these subjects as seemed expedient to the legislature; and the authority of the court to decree alimony and counsel fees has always been considered to rest exclusively upon the statutes. Shannon v. Shannon, 2 Gray, 285; Baldwin v. Baldwin, 6 Gray, 341; Coffin v. Dunham, 8 Cush. 404, 54 Am. Dec. 769; Davol v. Davol, 18 Mass. 264; West v. West, 2 Mass. 228, 227; Orrok v. Orrok, 1 Mass. 341.

In the absence of anything to show the contrary, there is a presumption that the common law of another state is like that prevailing here; but this presumption does not extend to the statutes of another state. Harris v. White, 81 N. Y. 532, 544; Wilcox Silver Plate Co. v. Green, 72 N. Y. 17. In the case now before us, it appears that, in 1877, a husband brought, in the supreme court of the state of New York, a complaint against his wife, seeking to have his marriage annulled and declared void on the ground that at the time of the marriage she had a former husband living. She answered to the complaint, admitting her former marriage, but averring that it was invalid and void, because her former husband was then married to another woman, and that these facts were known to the present husband at the time of his marriage to her. The complaint contained no charge of fraud, force, mistake, or lunacy. In 1888 an order was passed, reciting the pleadings, and reciting that it appeared satisfactorily to the court that subsequently thereto an order was made, among other things, that the husband pay to the wife $10 a week alimony, commencing October 22, 1877; that it also appeared that he had wholly failed to do so from November 5, 1877, though due demand had been made; and that he had failed to prosecute his action, and had departed from the state,—and an order was made that the complaint be dismissed with costs, that her attorney have an extra allowance of $100, and that the wife recover of and have judgment against her husband for $6,114, being the amount of alimony due and owing to her under said order, and also for costs and the above allowance; and judgment was entered accordingly on April 17, 1888. It is also recited that counsel appeared for the husband at the time of this order in 1888. Judgment was entered accordingly, and, the husband having removed to this commonwealth, the wife now brings a suit in equity here, praying the superior court to order execution to issue upon said judgment. In defense, no direct charge is made that the entry of the judgment was procured by fraud or imposition upon the court, but it is set up, and the court has found as a fact that on April 27, 1887,—about a year before the entry of the judgment in New York,—the husband obtained in this commonwealth a decree annulling his marriage, his wife having been served with process, and defaulted for nonappearance. There is nothing to show that this decree of nullity made here was known to the supreme court of New York at the time when the judgment there was entered. The order for the payment of alimony pendente lite is not set forth in the record, and does not appear otherwise than by the recital in the final order.

The principal question which we have to consider is whether it appears that the supreme court of New York had jurisdiction, in the suit for nullity, to pass an order for the payment of alimony pendente lite, and, at the time of dismissing the suit, to pass an order for the payment of the arrears of alimony down to the date of the order, and of an allowance for counsel fees and for costs, and to enter judgment thereon. Jurisdiction may always be inquired into, and a judgment entered without jurisdiction will not be enforced. Simmons v. Saul, 138 U. S. 439, 34 L. ed. 1054; Thompson v. Whitman, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 457, 468, 21 L. ed. 897, 901; Cumington v. Belchertown, 149 Mass. 223, 4 L. R. A. 181; Cross v. Cross, 108 N. Y. 628.

Ordinarily, and where the proceedings of a court of general jurisdiction are according to the course of the common law, there is a presumption in favor of the regularity of its proceedings, and it will be presumed to have had such jurisdiction as it has assumed to exercise, unless the contrary is shown. Galpin v. Page, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 350, 365, 21 L. ed. 959, 962. In the present case, the justice of the superior court reports that the defendant among other defenses, contended that the judgment alleged had not been proved; and he declined to enforce the judgment rendered in New York, but the special ground of his refusal is not stated. So far as appears, no evidence was introduced, on the one side or on the other, to show the jurisdiction and authority of the court in the matter. No evidence of the law of New York, by statutes or decisions of courts, or otherwise, appears to have been presented; and there was nothing to sustain the jurisdiction except the fact that the supreme court, which was a court of general jurisdiction, assumed to exercise it. The question is whether this is enough in a proceeding of this kind. In the argument before us, certain statutes and decisions have been referred to which are supposed to bear upon the authority and jurisdiction of the court, and the fact is thus brought to our attention that there are statutes and decisions which relate to the subject. As already mentioned, the common law of another state is presumed to be the same as that which is established here, unless shown to be otherwise; but there is no such presumption in relation to statutes or to local laws or usages. These must be proved as facts at the trial, and, where a question of the law of another state is in controversy, the party upon whom the burden lies will fail unless evidence is produced to sustain his view; and statutes and decisions which were not put in evidence at the trial cannot be used for the first time at the argument of the case before us for the purpose of proving the law of such state. Hunt v. Johnson, 44 N. Y. 27, 4 Am. Rep. 631; Hull v. Mitcheson, 64 N. Y. 639; Hackett v. Potter, 135 Mass. 849, 850; Murphy v. Collins, 121 Mass. 6; Ufford v. Spaulding, 156 Mass. 65, 69. We, therefore, are not at liberty to place our decision upon the result of such examination as we might now be able to make, even with the aid of the citations by counsel of the statutes and decisions in New York in respect to marriage and divorce, nullity of marriage, and alimony, except so far as such decisions may throw light upon the rules of common law existing independently of the statutes.

We have then to consider, in the first place, whether it falls within the general jurisdiction of a court of chancery, without statutory authority, to entertain a suit for nullity of marriage in a case where no fraud, duress, mistake, or lunacy is explicitly charged, and where, accordingly, no such ground is alleged as would enable such a court to annul an ordinary contract. The complaint of the husband in the present case, as presented to the supreme court of New York, only charged, as a ground for avoiding his marriage, that, at the time when it was entered into, his wife had a former husband living, and that her marriage to such former husband was in full force and validity. It did not charge that he was led to marry her through deception, or even through ignorance of the facts. No doubt instances sometimes occur where a man and a woman who wish to live together go through a form of marriage, for social or other purposes, taking the chance of subsequent disturbance or trouble, though well knowing that the marriage is void for the reason that one of them has a former husband or wife living, or that they are within prohibited degrees of kin. Both real life and fiction furnish illustrations of this. Such marriages are of course void, and may be declared so under the authority of statutes like those which have long existed in this commonwealth. Stat. 1785, chap. 69, § 3; Rev. Stat. chap. 76, § 3. But, in our opinion, a court of chancery would decline to act in such a case by virtue of its own inherent jurisdiction, and without the authority of a statute enabling it to do so. The chief aid which we have derived in determining this question comes from the carefully considered decisions in New York, where the court has assumed jurisdiction to declare a marriage void for lunacy (Wightman v. Wightman, 4 Johns. Ch. 848, 1 L. ed. 861), and fraud (Ferlat v. Gojon, Hopk. Ch. 478, 2 L. ed. 493, 14 Am. Dec. 554), but has declined, for want of jurisdiction, to do so for impotence, Burtis v. Burtis, Hopk. Ch. 557, 2 L. ed. 522, 14 Am. Dec. 563. In the last case the chancellor said: "The cases in which this court can annul marriages in virtue of its powers as a court of equity must be few and very peculiar, and they must appertain to the jurisdiction of equity." In Griffin v. Griffin, 47 N. Y. 135, the same question was incidentally discussed as follows, in a learned and elaborate opinion delivered by Rapallo, J.: "The court of chancery of this state has in some instances entertained bills to declare the nullity of marriages, independently of any statute conferring jurisdiction; but these were cases in which the marriage was sought to be declared void for some cause for which chancery had power to cancel or avoid all contracts, such as lunacy or fraud; and it was held that the marriage contract was not excepted from the operation of this general jurisdiction. In all other cases it must be conceded that the jurisdiction of the court of chancery of this state in actions for divorce, either on the ground of nullity or for any cause arising subsequent to the marriage, is founded wholly upon the statutes." Page 188. The court expressed no definite opinion on the question whether the particular case then before it, which was an action brought by a husband to have the marriage declared void by reason of her former marriage, would be cognizable by the court, independently of the statutes (page 140); and it does not appear in the report of the case whether or not there was any fraud or mistake. The same doctrine above stated was reiterated in the recent case of Erkenbrach v. Erkenbrach, 96 N. Y. 456, where the court, by Ruger, Ch. J., says: "The courts in this state have no common-law jurisdiction over the subject of divorces, and their authority is confined altogether to the exercise of such express and incidental powers as are conferred by the statute. Previous to the revision of the statutes, it was, however, held that the court of chancery had authority, by virtue of its general equity jurisdiction, to entertain suits to annul marriage contracts upon the same grounds which authorized them to annul contracts generally. . . . Beyond this, however, the court of chancery refused to go." Page 468. Then, after quoting a portion of the passage above cited from the judgment in Griffin v. Griffin, the court adds: "The provisions of the revised statutes constitute a comprehensive and detailed scheme for the treatment of matrimonial and domestic differences, framed with great care to define the rights and liabilities of the respective parties and the power and duties of the court." Pages 465, 466. This leaves the impression that, at the time of rendering the decision in 1884, the whole subject was deemed to be covered by legislation, to which the courts must look for their powers and authority; and, so far as we know, the same is the case since the adoption of the present code of that state. See also, 2 Bishop, Mar. Div. & Sep. 801-809, where the question is treated of, but no definite opinion expressed. We have come to the conclusion that it does not fall within the general jurisdiction of a court of chancery, independently of authority by statute, to annul a marriage for the reasons set forth in the complaint made by the present defendant against the present plaintiff in the court of New York, and also that no such jurisdiction existed in that court at the time of entering the judgment now under consideration, or was asserted by it; and that whatever the court did it assumed to do under the express or incidental powers conferred upon it by statutes of that state.

25 L. R. A.

We are brought, then, to consider more directly the question whether, in a case of this kind, where the court acted under statutory authority, jurisdiction should be presumed merely from the fact that the court assumed to exercise it. In Galpin v. Page, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 850, 21 L. ed. 959, the court says: "The presumptions indulged in support of the judgments of superior courts of general jurisdiction are also limited to jurisdiction over persons within their territorial limits,—persons who can be reached by their process,—and also over proceedings which are in accordance with the course of the common law." Page 867. A passage is quoted with approval from Morse v. Presby, 25 N. H. 299, 302, as follows: "The jurisdiction in such cases, both as to the subject-matter of the judgment and as to the persons to be affected by it, must appear by the record; and everything will be presumed to be without the jurisdiction which does not distinctly appear to be within it." And a little further on the court adds: "Where the special powers conferred [by statute] are exercised in a special manner, not according to the course of the common law, or where the general powers of the court are exercised over a class not within its ordinary jurisdiction upon the performance of prescribed conditions, no such presumption of jurisdiction will attend the judgment of the court. The facts essential to the exercise of the special jurisdiction must appear in such cases upon the record." Galpin v. Page, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 871, 21 L. ed. 964. It is also said, in Sabariego v. Maverick, 124 U. S. 261, 31 L. ed. 480, that the presumption in favor of regularity of proceedings does not apply to give jurisdiction in proceedings not according to the common course of justice. In Holmes v. Broughton, 10 Wend. 75, 25 Am. Dec. 536, it was held that where a claim was founded upon a proceeding in Vermont, unknown to the common law, but authorized by a statute of that state, the statute must be set forth, so that the court might see that the proceedings were conformable thereto; and that a general averment that the proceedings were according to the laws of Vermont, and fully authorized thereby, was not enough; and that the court could not take judicial cognizance of laws of sister states at variance with the common law. This decision was cited with apparent approval in Harris v. White, 81 N. Y. 532, 544. In Embury v. Conner, 3 N. Y. 511, 523, 53 Am. Dec. 325, and in Striker v. Kelly, 7 Hill, 9, it was held that the supreme court of New York exercised its powers under the New York street law as a court, but that, as its powers in such matters were wholly derived from the statutes, and did not belong to it as a court of general jurisdiction, its decisions must be treated like those of a court of special and limited jurisdiction. A similar rule was applied in the surrogate's court to a decree of divorce, granted by the proper court, but not shown to be within the conditions and limitations prescribed by the statutes. Lawrence's Case, 18 Abb. Pr. 847. See also, Cullen v. Cullen, 18 N. Y. S. R. 381. For an application of similar doctrine to different subjects, see Morse v. Presby, supra, which is cited and approved in Galpin v. Page, supra; Bradley v. Jamison, 46 Iowa, 68; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Parish, 6 Ind. App. 89; Furgeson v. Jones, 17 Or. 204, 8 L. R. A. 620; Northcut v. Lemery, 8 Or. 816; Heatherly v. Hadley, 4 Or. 1, 14; Gray v. Larrimore, 2 Abb. U. S. 542, Fed. Cas. No. 5,721; Belcher v. Chambers, 53 Cal. 635; Neff v. Pennoyer, 3 Sawy. 274, 299, 300, Fed. Cas. No. 10,083; Denning v. Corwin, 11 Wend. 647.

The rule is uniform, in the case of inferior courts, that their jurisdiction, when brought into question, must be clearly shown. Thomas v. Robinson, 8 Wend. 267; Sheldon v. Hopkins, 7 Wend. 435; McLaughlin v. Nichols, 13 Abb. Pr. 244. The same rule prevails in Massachusetts. The decision in Com. v. Blood, 97 Mass. 538, was placed solely upon this ground, the document produced being treated as if it were a record, though, strictly speaking, it was not entitled to be so treated; and it was held that the jurisdiction of a court of record in California over the subject of divorce is a special authority not recognized by the common law, and its powers must be shown, and must appear to have been strictly pursued. A similar decision was made in respect to the jurisdiction of a court of record of another state to decree an absolute and final dissolution of a corporation at the suit of an individual in Folger v. Columbian Ins. Co., 99 Mass. 267, 274, 96 Am. Dec. 747, and in respect to a question of the adoption of a child in Foster v. Waterman, 124 Mass. 592. The rule on which these decisions rest is not peculiar to Massachusetts, but, as has been seen, it has a wide recognition elsewhere. The proceedings which resulted in the judgment in the supreme court of New York in the case now before us were not in accordance with the course of the common law. 1 Bishop, Mar. Div. & Sep. §§ 71, 128. Jurisdiction to entertain them has not been shown. If the court had jurisdiction over the general subject, and if it should be assumed from the final order that an interlocutory order was actually passed for the payment of alimony pendente lite, it has not been shown that the court had authority to pass such order, or, at the conclusion of the suit, to order payment of arrears of such alimony, or to enter a judgment for such arrears, which should stand as a valid judgment, enforceable in other courts. We do not know whether it would possess such authority in respect to alimony, even if it had jurisdiction over the general subject of the suit, or whether such a judgment for arrears of alimony could be enforced in New York by issue of an execution thereon without further proceedings in court. Knapp v. Knapp, 134 Mass. 353. And see Hoffman v. Hoffman, 55 Barb. 269; Galinger v. Galinger, 4 Lans. 478. The jurisdiction in such cases is usually special, and the remedies special; and we are satisfied that this judgment depends for its validity upon statutes which are not before us, or usages or a course of practice which we are not familiar with, and we have not the means of knowing what faith and credit would be given to such a judgment in the courts of the state of New York. 1 Bishop, Mar. Div. & Sep. § 128; Allen v. Allen, 100 Mass. 878. The justice of the superior court rightly refused to issue an execution upon the judgment for the amount of the alimony and counsel fees.

The judgment for costs of suit must rest on the same basis. The proceedings being special, the right to costs must depend upon the statutes or upon the inferences to be drawn from them. In Stevens v. Stevens, 1 Met. 279, it was held, under our statutes then in force, that, where a husband voluntarily discontinued a libel against his wife for a divorce, she was entitled to a judgment and execution against him for costs. There was, however, an express statute providing that the court might hear and determine all matters relating to divorce according to the course of proceedings in ecclesiastical courts and in courts of chancery. Rev. Stat. chap. 76, § 38. The court was therefore authorized to allow costs, unless there was something in the relation of husband and wife to prevent; and the court held that there was not, and costs were allowed. The authority of the court in New York in respect to costs in a proceeding like that before us for nullity of marriage is not shown. We suppose it depends directly or indirectly upon the statutes, which have not been put in evidence. 2 Barb. Ch. Pr. 250; 2 Bishop, Mar. & Div. 5th ed. § 366.

For these reasons, without considering other objections, the entry must be, decree for the defendant.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

STATE of North Carolina, Appt.,
v.

W. C. GORHAM.

(.....N. C.....)

1. A license tax on the business of putting up lightning rods is not a tax on interstate commerce, in case of a person who puts up no rods except those which he sells and which are brought from another state, although he puts them up without extra charge.
2. The sale of lightning rods, constituting only a part of the original package in which they were brought from another state, is not interstate commerce.

(October 16, 1894.)

APPEAL by the State from a judgment of the Superior Court for Wilson County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover the statutory penalty for putting up lightning rods without paying the required license tax. Reversed.

The jury returned a special verdict as follows:

"Cole Brothers were, on and prior to October 1, 1891, and up to the 4th day of June, 1894, and still are, citizens and residents of the town of Greencastle, in the state of Indiana. They were on said 1st day of October, 1891, and now are manufacturers of and dealers in lightning rods, fixtures, ornaments, etc., and prosecuted said business in the several states through their agents, selling and delivering rods and fixtures, by attaching the same to dwellings and other houses and buildings of their customers. In the department of selling and delivering they employ soliciting agents in the several states, who travel on railroads and in buggies from place to place, and house to house, for the purpose of soliciting and taking orders for lightning rods by samples thereof, and catalogues illustrating the same. That when orders are received from persons desiring to purchase rods the same are delivered or forwarded by such soliciting agent to the said Cole Brothers, and the same are filled by the shipment of rods so ordered to some convenient and accessible point, from which they are delivered to the person ordering the same. The said Cole Brothers have no place of business in North Carolina. The said Cole Brothers, on the 1st day of October, 1891, for the purpose of introducing their goods into the state of North Carolina, entered into a contract with the defendant, W. C. Gorham, whereby they appointed him their agent and manager to conduct for them in said state the business of selling by sample and delivering lightning rods so manufactured by them. That such sale and delivery included the putting up of said rods whenever the purchaser so requested, for which no extra charge was to be made. That the said defendant, W. C. Gorham, was authorized to and did employ salesmen and others to assist him in the prosecution of said business. That all orders taken by the defendant, W. C. Gorham, for lightning rods and fixtures were in the form of Exhibit A, hereto attached. That on the _____ day of _____, 1893, the said W. C. Gorham, acting as the agent of Cole Brothers, at and in the town of Wilson, county aforesaid, took from Jas. E. Rountree an order in accordance with a sample for rods to be attached to his dwelling house in said town, in the form and language of Exhibit A, hereto attached. That said order, together with other orders of like character, taken from

NOTE.—The invalidity of a license tax imposed on a traveling salesman for nonresident dealers, although without any discrimination against non-residents, is established by Brennan v. Titusville, 158 U. S. 289, 38 L. ed. 719, reversing the opinion of the supreme court of Pennsylvania in Titusville v. Brennan (Pa.) 14 L. R. A. 100.

35 L. R. A.

For other decisions as to the rights of such salesmen, depending on the interstate character of their business, see note to Re Spain (Fed. Rep.) 14 L. R. A. 97.

The present case makes an interesting distinction between the license tax on the business of putting up lightning rods and that of selling them.

See also 29 L. R. A. 468, 531; 35 L. R. A. 497; 41 L. R. A. 501; 47 L. R. A. 416, 583; 48 L. R. A. 417.

other persons, was forwarded by the said defendant to said Cole Brothers at their said place of business in the state of Indiana, and the same was filled by shipment of the rods so ordered. That said rods were received by the said W. G. Gorham, and by him, through his servants and employes, attached to the dwelling house of the said Jas. E. Rountree in accordance with the terms of said order. That the shipment of said rods was made at the same time, and as a part of a shipment of other rods to fill other orders so taken by the said defendant and forwarded to the said Cole Brothers. That the defendant had not, at the time of taking said order and delivering said rods, paid the tax in Wilson county imposed by section 27, chap. 294, Acts 1893, and had not, at the time of the issuing of the warrant herein, paid said tax.

"Exhibit A. Order for Lightning Rods: Mess. Cole Bros.—Sirs: Erect or deliver at your earliest convenience your improved lockscrew lightning rods, manufactured by your Franklin Lightning Rod Co., at or on my ———, in the county of ———, state of ———, viz., ——— points, ——— ground rods, in accordance with the scientific rules as printed on the back of this order, and I agree to settle for the same by cash, or note due ———, at 47½ cents per foot for the rod, and the price of five feet of rod for each brace, $3.50 for each point, $2.50 for each ball, and $4.00 for each arrow; no extra charge for putting up rods. If this order is revoked by me, or if through any fault or refusal on my part the rods are not erected, I agree to pay as liquidated damages therefor a sum equal to one half of the costs of material necessary for the work, at prices quoted in the order. It is expressly understood by the signer of this order that he signs the same on his own judgment, after due deliberation by him, without any undue influence having been used, or relying on any representation made by any agent or person other than what is written or printed on this blank. Given the ——— day of ———, 189—."

Messrs. Frank J. Osborne, Atty-Gen., and W. J. Peele, for the State.

Mr. H. G. Connor, for appellee:

The facts found by the jury in the special verdict come directly within the principle announced by the Supreme Court of the United States in Brennan v. Titusville, 153 U. S. 289, 38 L. ed. 719.

No tax can be imposed by the state upon the lightning rods manufactured by Cole Brothers, in the state of Indiana, and sold in this state until they have become attached to the dwelling of the purchaser, or in some other way mingled with the common mass of property within the state.

Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 36.

Until delivery in the manner agreed upon, the rods continue to be articles of interstate commerce, and beyond the taxing power of the state.

Brown v. Maryland, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 419, 6 L. ed. 678; Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 36.

Cole Bros. could send agents, drummers, 25 L. R. A.

or itinerants into the state to solicit orders for their rods, and to deliver them when sent upon such orders, and such agent, etc., could not be required to pay a license tax before engaging in the business for which they were employed.

Robbins v. Shelby County Taxing Dist. 120 U. S. 497, 30 L. ed. 697, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 45; Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U. S. 640, 32 L. ed. 811, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 134; McCull v. California, 136 U. S. 104, 34 L. ed. 392; Orutcher v. Kentucky, 141 U. S. 47, 35 L. ed. 649; Brennan v. Titusville, 153 U. S. 289, 38 L. ed. 719.

Mr. Perrin Busbee also for appellee.

McRae, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Section 27 of chapter 294 of the Acts of 1893, being a part of Schedule B, the taxes in which are imposed as license taxes for the privilege of carrying on business or doing the act named, is as follows: "On every itinerant who puts up lightning rods, $50 annually for each county in which he carries on business." There is nothing in the words of the statute to indicate a purpose to levy a tax in any form upon, or to impose a restriction in any manner upon, citizens or inhabitants of other states from engaging in business connected with the commerce between the states, which is protected from state legislation by the Constitution of the United States. The right of a state legislature to tax trades, professions, and avocations within the borders of the state has never been disputed. It is earnestly contended, however, by the learned counsel that the defendant was not an itinerant engaged in the business of putting up lightning rods, but that his business was that of selling, in which, of course, is included the delivery, an article manufactured in another state; that it appears by the special verdict that such sale and delivery included the putting up of said rods whenever the purchaser so requested, and for which service no extra charge was to be made; and therefore that the imposition of a license tax upon defendant for putting up the rods so sold by him "is an attempt to impose a tax on the business of carrying on interstate commerce." We are not disposed to question the principle so often laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States from Brown v. Maryland, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 419, 6 L. ed. 678, to Brennan v. Titusville, 153 U. S. 289, 38 L. ed. 719, that no state has a right to lay a tax on interstate commerce in any form; neither have we any disposition to extend the application of this doctrine any further than we find it. Unless, then, there is something in this special verdict which so connects the act of defendant in putting up the lightning rods sold by him with the business of interstate commerce, it will be our duty to uphold the law of this state, and apply it to the case before us. The whole matter is in a nutshell. After finding the fact that Cole Bros. were manufacturers in another state, and defendant was their agent in this state for the sale of their wares, it further finds "that such sale and delivery included the putting up of said rods whenever the purchaser so requested, for which no extra charge was to be made." Under these circumstances, is the defendant liable for the license tax? It will be seen that quantities of said goods were shipped to the agent, at some convenient point in this state, in original packages, and were, after bulk broken, distributed and delivered by him to the different purchasers; that the sale was not completed by delivery until after such breaking of bulk in this state: and that the quantity of the article was not determined in the order, as will appear by reference to Exhibit A, and was to be determined after the importation of the original package. The consideration of these facts leads us to the conclusion that the present case may easily be distinguished from any of the numerous adjudications on the subject. In Brennan's Case, supra, the pictures were delivered, framed, direct to the purchaser. Of necessity, the goods, if many of them had been shipped to the agent for delivery, were separate and distinct from all other goods of the same character. It was not obnoxious to the interstate commerce clause of the constitution when a license tax was laid "on all peddlers of sewing machines, without regard to the place of growth or produce of material or of manufacture," because the test is "whether there is any discrimination in favor of the state which enacted the law." Howe Machine Co. v. Gage, 100 U. S. 676, 25 L. ed. 754. "When goods are sent from one state to another for sale, or, in consequence of a sale, they become part of its general property, and amenable to its laws, provided that no discrimination be made against them as goods from another state, and that they be not taxed by reason of being brought from another state, but only taxed in the usual way as other goods are." Robbins v. Shelby County Taxing Dist. 120 U. S. 489, 30 L. ed. 694, citing Howe Machine Co. v. Gage, supra, and Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 622, 29 L. ed. 257.

If this license tax upon itinerants putting up lightning rods could in the slightest degree affect the sale and delivery of the article, its effect upon interstate commerce would be so incidental and remote as not to amount to a regulation of such commerce, as in Ficklen v. Shelby County Taxing Dist., 145 U. S. 1, 36 L. ed. 601, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 79.

Again, as said in McCall v. California, 136 U. S. 104, 34 L. ed. 392, where an agent of a railroad running from another state was soliciting business, but not selling tickets, in California: "The test is, Was the business a part of the commerce of the road? Did it assist or was it carried on with the purpose to assist in increasing the amount of passenger traffic on the road?" In our case the business which could not be taxed was the sale of, or the solicitation of persons to purchase, the lightning rods manufactured in another state. The avocation requiring a license is that of an itinerant putting up lightning rods. The sale and delivery of the article is not inseparable from the erection of it, any more than the shoeing of horses is from their importation into the state, or the shipping here of wheat is from its sowing in the fields. Indeed, it appears by the contract that the agent was only to put up the rods when requested so to do by the purchaser. The inference is that the purchaser might choose to employ some one else to put them up, and that a sufficient margin is allowed upon the price to fully pay the expenses of erection, and make it to the interest of the purchaser to require the seller to put it up. One who goes through the country putting up rods is none the less liable to be taxed for the privilege of exercising his avocation because he adds to this business that of soliciting the purchase of the articles to be so put up by him. If such is the law, it will not be difficult for persons whose avocations are taxed to ingraft upon their business a branch for the sale of some article of foreign manufacture, which is a necessary part of the business in which they are engaged. We may distinguish the manner of delivery of the articles named in Spain's Case, 47 Fed. Rep. 208, 14 L. R. A. 97, if we were bound by the opinion delivered in that case. Certain specified articles, lamps, lamp shades, etc., manufactured in West Virginia, were sold by the agent traveling in North Carolina for his principal. Many of the articles ordered were shipped in the same box to the agent, who took out the separate articles, and completed the sale by delivery of the same to the purchasers. But here a sufficient quantity of the lightning rod material is shipped to the agent from which to fill orders therefore taken. He selects from the bulk enough to fill the order of his customer, and delivers it. The bulk was broken, and the same became a part of the general property in the state before delivery, when the package was opened, and a part thereof, until then undistinguishable from the balance, was set apart to be delivered to a particular purchaser. The latest, as far as we have been able to ascertain, of the very numerous deliverances of the highest court of this country upon the subject we have under consideration is that of Brennan v. Titusville, supra. The defendant was the agent of a manufacturer of picture frames and maker of portraits, residing in Illinois. The defendant's business was to travel in Pennsylvania, and to solicit orders for said pictures and frames. The orders were forwarded by the defendant to his principal in Chicago, who shipped the goods direct by freight or express to the purchaser. The price of the goods was sometimes paid to the express company and sometimes to the agent. An ordinance of the city of Titusville had attempted to lay a license tax upon "all persons canvassing or soliciting within said city orders for goods, books, paintings, wares, or merchandise of any kind, or persons delivering such articles under orders so obtained or solicited." This was so clearly within the rulings of the cases of Robbins v. Shelby County Taxing Dist., 120 U. S. 489, 30 L. ed. 694, and Asher v. Texas, 128 U. S. 129, 32 L. ed. 368, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 241, that it scarcely requires an elaborate opinion. Its simple statement will show the particulars in which it differs from ours. We conclude then that his honor was in error in Holding that the defendant was not guilty upon the special verdict, because: (1) The defendant was an itinerant putting up lightning rods. (2) The connection between the pursuit of this avocation and the sale of articles manufactured in another state was so remote in its effect as to impose no burden upon the business of interstate commerce. (3) The manner of sale and delivery of the lightning rods was such as to divest it of any feature of interstate commerce, the original packages being necessarily broken before the sale was completed by delivery.

There is error, and the judgment is reversed.

Patsy Ann GASKINS, Appt.,

v.

Henry C. DAVIS.

(.....N. C.....)

1. In trespass for cutting timber against one who acted in the honest but mistaken belief that the trees were his, the measure of damages is their value in the woods from which they were taken, together with the injury incident to their removal.
2. The true owner is entitled to regain possession of a log cut and removed from his land by a good faith trespasser either by recapture or by any other remedy provided by law and whatever additional value may have been imparted to it by transporting it to a better market or by any improvement in its conditions short of actual alteration of species.
3. The enhanced value given to logs cut wrongfully but in good faith by their removal to a place where the true owner recaptures them belongs to him and cannot be recouped against the damages assessed against the trespasser in an action for other logs cut with them but not recaptured.

(October 16, 1894.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Craven County in favor of defendant in an action of trespass brought to recover damages for the alleged wrongful cutting and carrying away of certain timber trees. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. W. W. Clark for appellant.

Messrs. F. M. Simmons and P. M. Pearson for appellee.

Avery, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff's complaint is in the nature of a declaration for trespass in the entry by the defendant upon her land, after being forbidden, and cutting, carrying away, and converting to his own use valuable timber that was growing thereon, to her damage $500. The logs, after being severed, were

NOTE—One of the counsel in the above case states that the case makes clear a principle that he has failed to find clearly decided in any court. The authorities on the subject, some of which are in harmony with the present case, are presented in a note to Bailey v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (S. Dak.) 19 L. R. A. 633.
25 L. R. A.

transported to Newbern in two lots, one of which lots was seized by plaintiff after reaching that city, where it was much more valuable than at the stump, and was sold by her for the sum of $112. The other lot was converted into boards and sold by the defendant. The defendant, for a second defense, sets up by way of counterclaim the seizure of the logs by the plaintiff; and though the counterclaim may be a defective statement of the defendant's cause of action, in that it fails to aver an unlawful taking, the defect is cured, if the counterclaim can be maintained at all, by the reply, which, by way of alder, raises the question of the rightfulness of the seizure. The well-established rule is that in such cases the injured party is entitled to recover of the trespasser the value of the timber where it was first severed from the land and became a chattel, Bennett v. Thompson, 85 N. C. 146, together with adequate damage for any injury done to the land in removing it therefrom. As long as the timber taken was not changed into a different species, as by sawing into boards, the owner of the land retained her right of property in the specific logs as fully as when by severance it became her chattel, instead of a part of the realty belonging to her. Potter v. Mardre, 74 N. C. 40. The value of the material taken indicates the extent of the loss, where there are no circumstances of aggravation or willfulness shown, and is the usual measure of damages. Where the trespasser has converted the property taken into a different species, under the rule of the civil law which we have adopted, the article, in its altered state, cannot be recovered, but only damages for the wrongful taking and conversion, when the change in its form is "made by one who is acting in good faith, and under an honest belief that the title was in him." In Potter v. Mardre, supra, Rodman, J., delivering the opinion of the court, says: "The principle of equity [applied in that case] is supported by the analogy of the rule established in this state by the decisions which hold that a vendee of land by a parol contract of sale, who takes possession and makes improvements, and is afterwards ejected by the vendor, may recover the value of his improvements. Albee v. Griffin, 22 N. C. 9. So if one who has purchased land from another, not having title, enters and improves, believing his title good, and is ejected by the rightful owner, he is entitled to compensation. In both cases one who is morally innocent has confused his property with that of another, and he is held entitled to separate it in the only way it can be done, viz., by being allowed the value of his improvements in the raw material." The judge laid down correctly the rule as to the damage that the plaintiff was entitled to recover of the defendant for the original trespass,—the value of the logs when severed at the stump, and adequate damage for injury done to the land in removing them. Potter v. Mardre, supra; 5 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 86; Ross v. Scott, 15 Lea, 479.

The character of the logs had not been changed by cutting and transporting to Newbern, but the value had probably been greatly enhanced. The approved rule, where the plaintiff is asking damage for the trespass, seems to be that the owner is entitled to recover the value of the logs when and where they were severed, and without abatement for the costs of severance. Franklin Coal Co. v. McMillan, 49 Md. 549, 88 Am. Rep. 280. But, if he prefers to follow and claim the timber removed, he is entitled to do so, as long as the species remains unchanged. The plaintiff was entitled to recover in a claim and delivery proceeding the logs that she seems to have acquired peaceful possession of without action. Was the defendant entitled, by way of recoupment, to the benefit of the enhanced value imparted to the property by transporting it to market? Had they been sawed up in planks, and used to construct a boat, the plaintiff would not have been entitled to recover the boat, or the material used in its construction. But if the plaintiff had then unlawfully seized and lost or destroyed the boat, and the defendant had been thereby driven to an action to recover compensation for his loss, he might have recovered the value of the boat, together with the damage, if any, done to his land in removing it therefrom; but the present plaintiff would have been entitled "to deduct or recoup, by way of counterclaim, the value of the timber which was manufactured into the canoe, just after it was felled and converted into a chattel." Potter v. Mardre, supra. It seems to have been conceded that the defendant cut and carried away the logs under the honest but mistaken belief that the land upon which they were growing was his own. Where a trespasser acts in good faith under a claim of right in removing timber, though he may not be allowed compensation for the cost of converting the tree into a chattel, may he not recoup, in analogy to the equitable doctrine of betterments, for additional value imparted to the property after its conversion into a chattel, and before it is changed into a different species? The judge below, in allowing the defendant, by way of recoupment, the benefit of the enhanced value imparted to the logs by removal from the stump to the Newbern market, seems to have acted upon the idea that the defendant, by reason of his good faith, was entitled to the benefit of the improvement in value imparted by his labor and expense. In Ross v. Scott, supra, where it appeared that the defendant had entered upon land to mine for coal, and, under the honest but erroneous belief that he was the owner, had built houses thereon, it was held that the plaintiff might recover the cost of the coal in situ, subject to reduction by an allowance for permanent improvements put upon the land. See also Re United Merthyr Collieries Co. L. R. 15 Eq. 46; Hilton v. Woods, L. R. 4 Eq. 482; Forsyth v. Wells, 41 Pa. 291, 80 Am. Dec. 617.

The weight of authority, it must be conceded, sustains the rule that, where the action is brought for damages for logs cut and removed in the honest belief on the part of the trespasser that he had title to them, the measure of damages is the value in the woods from which they were taken, with the amount of injury incident to removal, not at the mill where they were carried to be sawed. Tilden v. Johnson, 52 Vt. 628, 36 Am. Rep. 769, and note, 770; Herdie v. Young, 55 Pa. 176, 93 Am. Dec. 730; Hill v. Canfield, 56 Pa. 454, Moody v. Whitney, 38 Me. 174, 61 Am. Dec. 239; Cushing v. Longfellow, 26 Me. 806; Geller v. Fett, 80 Cal. 482; Hoote v. Merrill, 54 N. H. 494, 20 Am. Rep. 151; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Hutchins, 82 Ohio St. 571.

In the absence of any evidence that would justify the assessment of vindictive damages, there is only one exception to the rule, as we have stated it, and that is where the trees destroyed are not the ordinary timber of the forest, but are peculiarly valuable for ornament, or as shade trees.

It being settled in this state that the right to the specific chattel, which vests on severance from the land in the owner of the soil, remains in him till the species is changed, we are constrained to go further, though it may sometimes subject a mistaken trespasser to hardship, and hold that the true owner is entitled to regain possession of a log cut and removed from his land, either by recapture or by any other remedy provided by law, whatever additional value may have been imparted to it by transporting it to a better market, or by any improvements in its condition short of an actual alteration of species. In Weymouth v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 17 Wis. 550, 84 Am. Dec. 763, the court says: "In determining the question of recapture the law must either allow the owner to retake the property, or it must hold that he has lost his right by the wrongful act of another. If retaken at all, it must be taken as it is found, though enhanced in value by the trespasser. It cannot be returned to its original condition. The law, therefore, being obliged to say either that the wrongdoer shall lose his labor, or the owner shall lose the right to take the property wherever he may find it, very properly decides in favor of the latter. But where the owner voluntarily waives the right to reclaim the property itself, and sues for damages, the difficulty of separating the enhanced value from the original value no longer exists. It is then entirely practicable to give the owner the entire value that was taken from him, which it seems that natural justice requires, without adding to it such value as the property may have afterwards acquired from the labor of the defendant. In the case of recapture the law does not allow it, because it is absolute justice that the original owner should have the additional value. But where the wrongdoer has by his own act created a state of facts, when either he or the owner must lose, then the law says the wrongdoer shall lose." Id. 26 Am. Rep. 529, note. When, therefore, the plaintiff recaptured the one lot of logs that had been enhanced in value by transportation from the stump to the city market, she but exercised the right given her by law to peacefully regain possession of her own chattels wherever found. She was guilty of no infringement of the rights of the defendant, for which an action would lie. It is familiar learning that a defendant can only maintain successfully a counterclaim when it is of such a nature that he could recover upon it in a separate suit brought against the plaintiff.

The defendant could not recover, therefore, either in a distinct action for the taking of the logs, or by way of counterclaim. When the plaintiff recaptured the logs she was guilty of no wrong, and the question of title to the property so rightfully taken was eliminated from all possible future controversy. Her remedy by act of the law remained as to so many of the logs as she had not regained possession of by her own act. After she had recaptured one lot the property in them in their altered state, and at the new situs, re-vested in her, with the absolute jus dis- ponendi, as in the case of her other personal property. Nothing remained to be adjusted in the courts, except her claim for damages for the taking of the other lot and the injury to the land, if any, incident to the removal of both lots. It was error, therefore, to instruct the jury that the enhanced value imparted by removal to the one lot of logs might be allowed the defendant as a counterclaim, so as to set off the damages assessed for injury to the land and for the value at the stump of the other lot, and the plaintiff is entitled to a new trial.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

GRAND RAPIDS ICE & COAL CO., Plff. in Err.,
v.
SOUTH GRAND RAPIDS ICE & COAL
CO.

(.....Mich.....)

The relative rights of shore owners on a small inland lake navigable for small steamers, which is so large that the lines of the subsections or subdivisions of the tracts held by such owners will, if extended, not include the whole of the lake, are to be determined without reference to the extension of such lines but by the principles governing the rights of riparian proprietors, depending upon their frontage and the form, length, and breadth of the lake.

(September 27, 1894.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Kent County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged trespass of defendant in entering upon plaintiff's premises and cutting and carrying away a quantity of ice. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Taggart, Wolcott & Ganson, for plaintiff in error:

If the rule laid down in Clute v. Fisher, 65 Mich. 48, is adhered to by this court, there is no doubt about the right of plaintiff to recover.

Clute v. Fisher, supra, followed the former decisions of this court, and particularly that of Palmer v. Dodd, 64 Mich. 474.

The rights of riparian owners are settled according to state not United States law.

Webber v. Pere Marquette Boom Co. 62 Mich. 627; Burroughs v. Whitwam, 59 Mich. 279.

The riparian rights to inland lakes having been settled by the decisions of this court, they should not be unsettled, even though the United States Supreme Court in one instance has changed its former rulings.

Palmer v. Dodd, supra, while citing Wilson v. Hoffman, 54 Mich. 246; Keyser v. Sutherland, 59 Mich. 455, and also Brown v. Clements, 44 U. S. 8 How. 650, 11 L. ed. 767,—establishes another principle than that necessarily involved in the cases cited, and the same, which is recognized in Clute v. Fisher, supra, that sales of fractional subdivisions of land upon the small inland lakes, included all land within the section or subdivision lines extended. Nor has this rule been overruled by Wilson v. Hoffman, or the Supreme Court of the United States in Gazzam v. Phillips, 61 U. S. 20 How. 372, 15 L. ed. 958.

Clute v. Fisher was expressly recognized approvingly in Jones v. Lee, 77 Mich. 40.

See also Blodgett & D. Lumber Co. v. Peters, 87 Mich. 498; Stoner v. Rice, 6 L. R. A. 387, 121 Ind. 51, and State v. Portsmouth Sav. Bank, 106 Ind. 486; Edwards v. Ogle, 76 Ind. 802.

The general rule, that as to inland lakes, private, not public ownership prevails and extends to the beds of the lakes, and ordinary use of their waters, will not be controverted. The rule is the same, even if they are navigable for certain purposes.

Gouverneur v. National Ice Co. 18 L. R. A. 695, 134 N. Y. 855. See also Cobb v. Davenport, 82 N. J. L. 369; Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 871, 35 L. ed. 428; Smith v. Rochester, 92 N. Y. 463, 44 Am. Rep. 898; Ledyard v. Ten Eyck, 86 Barb. 102.

Ice forming over the bed of a lake or stream belonging to private parties belongs to and becomes the property of such parties.

Peoples' Ice Co. v. Steamer Excelsior, 43 Mich. 836, 44 Mich. 229, 38 Am. Rep. 246; Lorman v. Benson, 8 Mich. 18, 77 Am. Dec. 435; Clute v. Fisher, 65 Mich. 48; Bigelow v. Shaw, Id. 341; Higgins v. Kusterer, 41 Mich. 818, 32 Am. Rep. 160; Washington Ice Co. v. Shortall, 101 Ill. 54, 40 Am. Rep. 196; Mill River Woolen Co. v. Smith, 84 Conn. 462; State v. Pottmeyer, 38 Ind. 402, 5 Am. Rep. 224; Edgerton v. Huff, 26 Ind. 85; Bates v. State, 81 Ind. 72; Brown v. Cunningham (Iowa) 12 L. R. A. 583, and note.

Mr. J. W. Champlin, for defendant in error:

Clute v. Fisher, 65 Mich. 48, does not sustain the plaintiff's contention.

At the time Clute v. Fisher was decided I was a member of the court, and I concurred in the opinion filed. It is, therefore, with the greatest diffidence, that I am compelled to assert that the reasons given as the basis of the conclusion reached were based upon errors of my own.

I take my full share of the blame in putting the court in a wrong position in the case of

NOTE.—The above decision does much to promote unity in the doctrine of the courts as to riparian rights on small inland lakes. The whole array of authorities on the subject is found in a note to Gouverneur v. National Ice Co. (N. Y.) 13 L. R. A. 695.

25 L. R. A.

See also 26 L. R. A. 609; 33 L. R. A. 146.

Wilson v. Hoffman, 54 Mich. 246, and freely admit that I followed the decision in Brown v. Clements, 44 U. S. 8 How. 665, 11 L. ed. 774, and that I was unaware that it had been expressly overruled in Gazzam v. Phillips, 61 U. S. 20 How. 372, 15 L. ed. 958. The court followed Wilson v. Hoffman, supra; in Keyser v. Sutherland, 59 Mich. 455, and in Palmer v. Dodd, 64 Mich. 474, and Clute v. Fisher. Before the question came before the court again, the case of Gazzam v. Phillips, supra, was brought to the attention of the court, and in Wilson v. Hoffman, 54 Mich. 553, these cases were overruled, and Gazzam v. Phillips, supra, followed.

See also Hartford Iron Min. Co. v. Cambria Min. Co. 80 Mich. 491; Jones v. Pashby, 62 Mich. 614; Heyer v. Lee, 40 Mich. 353, 29 Am. Rep. 587; Dart v. Barbour, 32 Mich. 271.

But if Clute v. Fisher were sound law, and is to be adhered to, then this case is plainly distinguishable from that.

This is a much larger body of water. The lake is of such dimensions and consequence that its waters are navigated by iron steamers, and other steamers and sail boats, conveying passengers for pleasure.

As well could the section corner have been located in Teal lake, in Hartford Iron Min. Co. v. Cambria Min. Co. supra, and the sections called full and equal divisions made, as to do so in this.

Clute v. Fisher was never intended to apply to any but those small lakes where there would be no difficulty in extending the line, so as to do substantial justice between all parties.

Jones v. Lee, 77 Mich. 40.

McGrath, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a controversy over the right to cut ice in Reed's lake, plaintiff insisting upon ownership of the bed of the lake within the lines of the fractional subdivisions extended, and defendant insisting upon a division of the center line proportionate to the shore line, so as to give to each riparian owner an equitable share. The accompanying diagram will best explain the situation:

By the meanders, the south shore line is 177.65 chains, and the north shore line is 117 chains. The center line of the lake is about 488 rods. The circuit judge finds that the plaintiff's lessors took all the upland on the N.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 34, under a government conveyance, which described the land taken as "the north-east fraction of section 34, . . . containing one 25 L. R. A.

hundred and nine acres and ninety-hundredths of an acre; . . . that what is now known and called 'Reed's Lake' is a body of water lying in five different sections, and by the United States government survey was meandered, and the lands adjoining platted by the United States, and sold as fractions; that the lake has an outlet which extends to grand river, and is called 'Cold Brook'; that its greatest length of clear water, according to the United States plat, is 440 rods. On the east and west quarter line, if extended through the lake, it is 360 rods. If the quarter line north and south were extended through, the distance across the lake would be 193 rods. The distance across the water on the west section line of section 34 is 226 rods. The greatest width across the lake is 220 rods, and the least width is 96 rods. The waters of the lake cover over 370 acres of land. It is a pleasure resort, having four steamboats, drawing from two to four feet of water, and for carrying passengers during the summer months, and numerous smaller craft. The defendants are riparian owners of a piece of land situated on the south fraction of section 34, commencing at the section line between sections 33 and 34, extending eastwardly, and having a frontage on the margin of the lake of 818 feet, being a part of the southwest fractional quarter of section 34, town 7, north, of range 11 west, as described in the original purchase from the government in the same chain of title. They also had a verbal lease from the owners of the land, at the time of the cutting of the ice, lying next westerly from said section line, having a margin on the lake of 23 rods, and of the right to take ice in front thereof, so far as the same belonged to said riparian owners. The defendant, during the early part of the year 1893, entered upon the ice in front of the lands so leased and so owned by it, and cut and removed the ice in front of said lands, and between the shore and the middle of the lake, between lines which would be formed by running them at right angles from the center line of said lake to the shore line, so that defendant would have the same proportionate share of the center line of the waters of the lake as they have of the whole shore line on the south side of said lake."

Plaintiff relies upon Clute v. Fisher, 65 Mich. 48. The following diagram will illustrate the situation in that case:

Clute owned the southern portion of the S. E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of 14, and the northern part of the N. E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of 23. The meander lines were almost wholly, and the water lines were wholly, within the subdivisions owned by Clute. The ice was cut at the point A. Defendant was not the owner of the N. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of 24 nor of that portion of 23 adjoining Clute's land. No claim was made that an apportionment would give the right to cut the ice to some one other than Clute, but the sole contention was that the title to the bed of all the lands within the meandered lines was in the state. It was that question that the court was dealing with. Mr. Justice Morse in that case says: "It has been held in this state that the soil under the water of the inland lakes in this state does not belong to the general government or to the state. . . . It has also been repeatedly decided in this state that private ownership of lands bounded on navigable fresh water is not restricted to the meander line. . . . We have also held, in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, that the land described as the fraction of any subdivision—as for instance, the southeast fractional quarter—cannot be extended beyond the lines of said southeast quarter as they would run if extended."—citing, Wilson v. Hoffman, 54 Mich. 246; Keyser v. Sutherland, 59 Mich. 455; Brown v. Clements, 44 U. S. 8 How. 685, 11 L. ed. 774; Palmer v. Dodd, 64 Mich. 474.

In Wilson v. Hoffman, supra, 117 acres of the S.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 28 lay south of Black river. Plaintiff brought ejectment to recover seven acres lying on the extreme west point, and within the lines of the S. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  if the lines had been extended. The description in the patent to plaintiff's grantor was: "The southeast fractional quarter of fractional section 28, . . . containing 117 acres, according to the official plat of the survey of the said lands returned to the general land office by the surveyor general." The map was not introduced. The court held that all subdivisional lines of a section must be straight lines running from the proper corner in one exterior line to its corresponding corner in the opposite boundary of the section, and that the patent and deed thereunder, through which plaintiff claimed, did not embrace within their description the lands in controversy, since no part thereof was within the S. E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of the section. The case came up again, and is reported in 70 Mich. 552, and the court there says: "In granting patents for lands, it is usual for the government to add, immediately after the statement of the number of acres which the tract contains, if it be fractional, these words: 'According to the official plat of the survey of said lands returned to the general land office by the surveyor general.' Such language, when used, constitutes a part of the description of the premises conveyed, and limits the purchaser to the tract as marked upon the plat of the surveyor general. This was so held in Gazam v. Phillips, 61 U. S. 20 How. 872, 15 L. ed. 958, which overruled the same case in 44 U. S. 8 How. 650, 11 L. ed. 767, under the title of Brown v. Clements. This was the language used in the patent to 'Tingley.' The record then showed that the premises described in the declaration were embraced in what the government denominated the S. E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of 28. "It might, perhaps, have been more accurate," says the court, "to describe it as that portion of section 28 lying south of Black river; but as the fraction contained less than 160 acres, and the law required it to be sold entire, the description contained in the patent, in connection with the official plat, was sufficient, and is quite a customary method of description in the general land office."

In Keyser v. Sutherland, 59 Mich. 455, a dispute arose respecting a strip of land on the west line of section 29, in the S. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of the N. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of that section, which extended around the west and south sides of the S. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of the section. Defendant claimed title under a conveyance from the government describing this his land as the south fraction of section 29. Plaintiff's deed called for a full subdivision, to wit, the S. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of the N. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of 29. Brown v. Clements, supra, and Wilson v. Hoffman, 54 Mich. 246, are cited.

In Palmer v. Dodd, 64 Mich. 474, defendant was the owner in fee of the E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of the N. W. fractional  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 28, described in the United States patent as containing 57 acres. Plaintiff was the owner in fee of the S. W. fractional  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 28. The section was made fractional by a lake and marsh which was meandered by the United States survey. The trespass was committed within the boundaries of the S. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$ , if the quarter lines should be extended. The lake, which is surrounded by the marsh, was mostly located upon the S. E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of the S. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of the section. Defendant claimed to own to the center of the lake. The court says: "But no grantee by such patent, granting a legal subdivision of land, can derive title to land upon another legal subdivision. This we have decided in the cases of Wilson v. Hoffman, 54 Mich. 246, and Keyser v. Sutherland, supra, which were based upon the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in Brown v. Clements, supra. The principles which govern the rights of riparian proprietors do not apply to defendant's grant. No part of the land granted to him in the description contained in his patent was bounded by a lake or other water. His grant extended no further south than the east and west quarter line of the section, and this line did not touch or intersect the shore of any lake. Indeed, the lake is nearly 40 rods south of this line." In the Palmer Case the court recognized the principles which govern the rights of riparian owners, but held that they did not apply.

The question before the court in the other cases was the significance of meander lines. In none of them did the question arise as to the rights of shore owners as between themselves. It was held in Clute v. Fisher, supra, that the rule that private ownership of lands bounded on navigable fresh water is not restricted to the meander line must also apply to the small inland lakes by analogy, whether they can strictly be termed "navigable" or not; and it was also conceded that in case of a body of water so large that the lines of the sections or subdivisions of sections held by the shore owners, if extended, do not embrace the whole of said lake, then the rule of riparian ownership may be extended to the center line of said lake. It would seem to follow that the extent of the qualified ownership in the bed of the river or lake must depend upon the shore ownership, rather than upon the distance from the shore to the parallel subdivision line. The rule laid down in Olute v. Fisher, that the owner of a fractional subdivision owns the soil which is included within the extended subdivision lines, is inconsistent with the rule repeatedly laid down in this state, that the shore proprietor owns to the thread or center of the stream. It is also inconsistent with the rule laid down in Clark v. Campau, 19 Mich. 328, and Bay City Gas-Light Co. v. Industrial Works, 28 Mich. 182, that side lines are to be governed by the course of the stream and the submerged land bounded by lines drawn at right angles with the central thread, rather than at right angles with the shore at the point of departure. The application of the rule of the Olute Case to the one before us would leave the W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of the N. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 84 without the lines of any subdivision, and would apportion that area upon the basis of imaginary subdivision lines, without reference to shore proprietorship. Again, the rule that a conveyance of a fractional subdivision actually conveys the entire subdivision is inconsistent with the rule laid down in Au Gres Boom Co. v. Whitney, 26 Mich. 42; Dart v. Barbour, 32 Mich. 271; Jones v. Pashby, 62 Mich. 614; Hartford Iron Min. Co. v. Cambria Min. Co. 80 Mich. 491. In each of these cases part of a parcel of land having a water frontage was conveyed, describing it as half of the lot or parcel; and it was insisted that the conveyance was of half of the water frontage, but the court held that the words "half of the lot" meant half in quantity of the upland. A correct result was reached in the Olute Case, but the reasons given are without support. That case and those upon which it relies were based upon Brown v. Clements, 44 U. S. 3 How. 665, 11 L. ed. 774, which was expressly overruled in Gazam v. Phillips, 61 U. S. 20 How. 372, 15 L. ed. 958. See also, Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 371, 35 L. ed. 428. In any event, we think that this case is governed by the rule laid down in Jones v. Lee, 77 Mich. 85.

Unless the contrary appears, a grant of land bounded by a watercourse conveys riparian rights (Richardson v. Prentiss, 48 Mich. 88); and the title of the riparian owner extends to the middle line of the lake or stream of the inland waters (Webber v. Pere Marquette Room Co. 62 Mich. 626, and cases cited at page 636). A boundary line may be so described as to preclude the extension of the grant, by construction, to the center of the stream. When it is said that meanders have no significance as boundaries, what is meant is that meanders do not preclude such extension of the grant. In Luce v. Carley, 24 Wend. 451, 35 Am. Dec. 637, among the courses in the description of the premises were those to a hemlock stake "standing on the east bank of the river; from thence down the river, as it winds and turns, 24 chains and 94 links, to a hard maple tree." The court says: "It is never thought that monuments mentioned in such deed as occupying the bank of the river are meant by the parties to stand on the precise water line. They are used to fix the termini of the line which is described as following the sinuosities of the stream. . . . When the grant is so framed as to touch the water of the river, and the parties do not expressly except the river, one half of the bed of the stream is included by construction of law." Child v. Starr, 4 Hill, 375; Seneca Nation of Indians v. Knight, 23 N. Y. 498; Rix v. Johnson, 5 N. H. 520, 22 Am. Dec. 472; Gouverneur v. National Ice Co. 134 N. Y. 355, 18 L. R. A. 695.

The shore proprietor takes by virtue of shore ownership. His interest in the bed of the stream he acquires as appurtenant to the grant, and the extent of that interest depends upon his frontage, and the form, length, and breadth of the body of water upon which he abuts. That a lake may be of such form as to render the designation in it of the boundaries of the several riparian owners somewhat difficult is not an objection to the application of the rule. Mr. Justice Campbell says in Lincoln v. Davis, 53 Mich. 390, 51 Am. Rep. 116: "In carrying out lines of ownership in narrow streams, it is easy to find the general course of the stream, and to draw lines perpendicular to that course from the terminal shore lines. But on lakes all lines from the shore tend to converge in some central part of the lake; and, while irregularity of shape prevents drawing them to a common center, they must all, if protracted, cross each other in a perplexing way. The rule adopted in such waters, where the whole surface could be appropriated, has always been to divide the water area in proportion to the shore frontage, and never to attempt any division by lines run from the shore, except over such parts of the lakes as are substantially adjacent to the shore. In some cases, by a fair partition, a shore owner would, by his extent of shore line, obtain a share beyond the center. But it seems impossible, if the whole water is to be regarded as divided up, to reach a division without some proceeding, in the nature of a partition, which will fix the various possessions." Again, in Jones v. Lee, supra, Mr. Justice Campbell says: "It appears clearly enough in the present case that while there is a considerable frontage facing northwest or southeast, the lake being longest in that direction, there must also be large end frontages, which look up or down the lake perpendicularly, or nearly so, to any line across from bank to bank, at most places along the shores. If this body of water were not navigable, and if all its waters could in any way be apportioned among the riparian proprietors for any lawful purpose, it is evident that it could not be done by reference to any filum aquæ or middle thread, but must be done by some rule of proportion, which probably could only be got at by some partition proceeding, inasmuch as such waters are common for all ordinary uses." In Blodgett & Davis Lumber Co. v. Peters, 87 Mich. 498, the question arose as to the proper apportionment between several shore owners in a cove on Green bay. In Hardin v. Jordan, supra, the court says: "If there should arise any question between the plaintiff and other riparian owners of lands situated on the margin of the lake as to the conveyance of the side lines of the plaintiff's land in the lake, it can be disposed of by the parties themselves, by a resort to equity or to such other form of procedure as may be proper." See also Gouverneur v. National Ice Co. supra.

In the present case it is practically conceded by plaintiff that, unless the rule contended for by it is applicable, the judgment below was correct.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

The other Justices concurred.

COIT & CO.

v.

ELI R. SUTTON, Plff. in Err.

(.....Mich.....)

Foreign corporations selling through itinerant agents and delivering goods manufactured outside of the state are not, in view of the commerce clause of the United States Constitution affected by state statutes requiring foreign corporations to file their articles of association with the secretary of state and pay a franchise fee as a condition of doing business within the state.

(October 16, 1894.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Wayne County to review a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action brought to recover the contract price of certain lead alleged to have been sold and delivered by the plaintiff to the defendant. Affirmed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Mr. R. B. Wilkinson, for plaintiff in error:

A state may exclude a corporation of any other state from doing business therein, or may prescribe such terms and conditions for such foreign corporation as it may think proper.

Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Raymond, 70 Mich. 501; Paul v. Virginia, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. ed. 357.

The true test of the matter is whether the burden of the tax falls on the thing which is the subject of the tax.

General Interest Ins. Co. v. Ruggles, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 419, 6 L. ed. 677.

The tax here falls upon the actual capital stock of the foreign corporation. It is paid from the money actually in the corporation before any of the goods are imported, and is not directly or indirectly paid out of the proceeds of the goods imported or sold.

Philadelphia & S. Mail S. S. Co. v. Com. 104 Pa. 109.

A law imposing a license on all sewing machine peddlers is not void as interfering with commerce between states, and this is so without regard to whether the machines are manufactured outside the state or not.

Howe Mach. Co. v. Gage, 100 U. S. 676, 25 L. ed. 754.

NOTE.—The validity of contracts of a foreign corporation which has not complied with statutory conditions of the right to do business in the state is considered with a review of the authorities in a note to Edison General Electric Co. v. Canadian Pac. Nav. Co. (Wash.) 24 L. R. A. 815. But the cases there considered were chiefly in construction of the statutes as indicating an intent of the legislature in respect to making such contracts illegal. In the 25 L. R. A.

There is no tax upon the thing which is the subject of commerce, nor is there any way in which the tax falls on the buyer of the article.

Horn Silver Min. Co. v. New York, 143 U. S. 815, 36 L. ed. 168, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 57.

The plaintiff in the court below did not seem to be able to distinguish between a franchise tax and a tax upon the capital stock of a corporation.

Beach, Priv. Corp. p. 799; Desty, Taxn. § 76, and cases cited; State v. Stonewall, 89 Ala. 388; 4 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 272d, and cases cited in note.

Mr. A. A. Ellis, Atty-Gen., also for plaintiff in error:

I am willing to rest the validity of this act upon the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of Horn Silver Min. Co. v. New York, 143 U. S. 805, 36 L. ed. 164, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 57, which sustained the validity of a similar statute.

Under a statute of Ohio, requiring corporations filing their articles with the secretary of state to pay a fee based on the capital stock of the company, a statute very similar to the one under discussion, it was held that it did not impose any charge on interstate commerce or prohibit foreign corporations from engaging in interstate commerce within its confines.

Ashley v. Ryan, 153 U. S. 486, 38 L. ed. 778.

Messrs. Bowen, Douglas & Whiting, for defendant in error:

The act is unconstitutional and void because it is in conflict with that portion of the Federal Constitution which provides that congress shall have the power to regulate commerce among the several states.

If by a stretch of the imagination the act could be said to be a police regulation, yet it cannot be sustained because it interferes with the exclusive authority of the federal government to deal with questions of interstate commerce.

New Orleans Gas Light Co. v. Louisiana Light & H. P. & Mfg. Co. 115 U. S. 650, 29 L. ed. 516.

Though it is a well settled principle that a state may prescribe any conditions which it chooses to prescribe, under which foreign corporations must act if they act at all, within that state.

Home Ins. Co. v. Davis, 29 Mich. 240; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Raymond, 70 Mich. 501; Paul v. Virginia, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. ed. 357.

This principle is subject to some exceptions, and one of these is that any restriction or regulation imposed upon foreign corporations which interferes with interstate commerce is invalid because contrary to the "commerce clause" of the Federal Constitution.

Paul v. Virginia, supra; Pensacola Teleg. Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 96 U. S. 1, 24 L. ed. 708; Cooper Mfg. Co. v. Ferguson, 113 U.

present case the statute expressly declares void the contracts of a corporation which has not paid the tax, and the question is as to its application to interstate commerce. For the decisions as to the power to exclude foreign corporations as affected by the constitutional provision as to commerce, see note to Kindel v. Beck & P. Lithographing Co. (Colo.) 24 L. R. A. 811.

S. 727, 28 L. ed. 1187; Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 125 U. S. 465, 81 L. ed. 700, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 828; Pembina Consol. Silver Min. & Mill. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 190, 81 L. ed. 654, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 24; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 25, 85 L. ed. 617, 8 Inters. Com. Rep. 595; Horn Silver Min. Co. v. New York, 148 U. S. 814, 86 L. ed. 168, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 57; Gunn v. White Sewing Mach. Co. 18 L. R. A. 206, 57 Ark. 24; Bateman v. Western Star Mill. Co. 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 260, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 90; Simmons Hardware Co. v. McGuire, 89 La. Ann. 848.

The states have no power to impose restriction or regulation upon interstate commerce.

Brown v. Maryland, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 419, 6 L. ed. 678; Paul v. Virginia, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. ed. 857; Cooper Mfg. Co. v. Ferguson, 118 U. S. 727, 28 L. ed. 1187; Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 622, 29 L. ed. 257; Robbins v. Shelby County Taxing Dist. 120 U. S. 489, 30 L. ed. 694; Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. and Pembina Consol. Silver Min. & Mill. Co. v. Pennsylvania, supra; Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U. S. 640, 32 L. ed. 311, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 134; Asher v. Texas, 128 U. S. 129, 32 L. ed. 868, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 241; Stoutenburgh v. Hennick, 129 U. S. 141, 32 L. ed. 637; Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128; Lyng v. Michigan, 135 U. S. 161, 34 L. ed. 150, 8 Inters. Com. Rep. 143; McCall v. California, 138 U. S. 104, 34 L. ed. 391, 8 Inters. Com. Rep. 181; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, supra; Crutcher v. Kentucky, 141 U. S. 58, 35 L. ed. 652; Horn Silver Min. Co. v. New York, Gunn v. White Sewing Mach. Co., and Bateman v. Western Star Mill. Co. supra; Lyons-Thomas Hardware Co. v. Reading Hardware Co. (Tex.) 82 Am. L. Reg. 661; Ware v. Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co. 92 Ala. 145; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Hardee, 4 N. M. 175; Re Kimmel, 8 Inters. Com. Rep. 114, 41 Fed. Rep. 775; Re White, 11 L. R. A. 284, 8 Inters. Com. Rep. 531, 43 Fed. Rep. 918; Re Spain, 14 L. R. A. 97, 47 Fed. Rep. 208; Re Nichols, 48 Fed. Rep. 164; Re Rozelle, 57 Fed. Rep. 155; Wrought Iron Range Co. v. Johnson, 8 L. R. A. 273, 8 Inters. Com. Rep. 146, 84 Ga. 754; State v. Agee, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 21, 83 Ala. 110; Simmons Hardware Co. v. McGuire, supra; McLaughlin v. South Bend, 10 L. R. A. 857, 126 Ind. 471; Overton v. Vicksburg, 70 Miss. 558; Waterbury v. Egan, 8 Misc. 855; Brennan v. Titusville, 153 U. S. 289, 38 L. ed. 719.

Hooker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, a corporation of the state of Illinois, recovered a judgment in the Wayne county circuit court, from which the defendant appeals. The finding of facts shows that plaintiff was engaged in the business of shipping from Illinois goods manufactured in that state, to its customers in Michigan, on orders given it by mail, or taken by its agents in Michigan; that on January 28, 1894, the plaintiff, through its duly authorized agent, entered into a written contract with the defendant, in the city of Detroit, Mich., for the sale to him of a quantity of white lead at a specified price, 25 L. R. A.

to be paid for upon delivery; that on January 27, 1894, delivery of the lead was tendered at Detroit. The defendant refused to receive the lead, claiming the contract to be void. At the time of making such tender the plaintiff had not filed articles of association in this state, and had not paid to the secretary of state a franchise fee, as provided by No. 79 of the Laws of 1893. Counsel for plaintiff seek to avoid the effect of said act, contending that it is in conflict with the provision of the Federal Constitution that "congress shall have power to regulate commerce among the several states." Article 1, section 8. The defendant relies upon the familiar rule that states may impose conditions upon the right of foreign corporations to do business within their limits. This rule has been recognized by the federal courts where it does not conflict with the power of congress to regulate commerce. See Paul v. Virginia, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. ed. 857. But, where the effect is to restrain or obstruct commerce among the states, it cannot be applied; the federal decisions, to which we must look for a construction of the constitution, holding that it is the right of persons residing in one state to contract and sell their commodities in another, unrestrained except where restraint is justified under the police power, by states, or by act of congress, and that this right extends to corporations. Paul v. Virginia, supra; Brown v. Maryland, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 425, 6 L. ed. 680; Walton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 23 L. ed. 347; Pensacola Teleg. Co. v. Western Union Teleg. Co. 96 U. S. 1, 24 L. ed. 708; Webber v. Virginia, 103 U. S. 344, 26 L. ed. 565; Cooper Mfg. Co. v. Ferguson, 118 U. S. 727, 28 L. ed. 1187; Pembina Consol. Silver Min. & Mill. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 81 L. ed. 650, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 24; Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 125 U. S. 465, 81 L. ed. 700, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 828; Moran v. New Orleans, 112 U. S. 69, 28 L. ed. 653; Pickard v. Pullman Southern Car Co. 117 U. S. 84, 29 L. ed. 785; Robbins v. Shelby County Taxing Dist. 120 U. S. 489, 30 L. ed. 694, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 45; Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U. S. 640, 32 L. ed. 312, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 134; Fargo v. Stevens, 121 U. S. 230, 30 L. ed. 890, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 51; Philadelphia & S. Mail S. S. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 123 U. S. 326, 30 L. ed. 1200, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 308; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 35 L. ed. 618, 8 Inters. Com. Rep. 595; Brennan v. Titusville, 153 U. S. 289, 38 L. ed. 719.

The law in question imposes a tax upon corporations for the privilege of doing business in Michigan. It is a tax upon the occupation of the corporation, with a provision that all its contracts shall be void until the tax is paid, which, if enforced, would embarrass plaintiff in its commerce with inhabitants of Michigan. It must therefore be held that the act in question does not apply to foreign corporations whose business within this state consists merely of selling through itinerant agents, and delivering, commodities manufactured outside of this state.

The judgment of the Circuit Court will be affirmed.

The other Justices concurred.

NEW HAMPSHIRE SUPREME COURT.

Henry J. CRIPPEN

v.

Harry A. ROGERS et al.

(.....N. H.....)

A sale to a resident by a nonresident of notes against another nonresident at a discount and with a guaranty against loss or expense in collection, which is made to avoid the insolvent law of the state where the other parties reside, will not give the transferee as an attaching creditor a position superior to that of his nonresident assignor, but his rights will be subject to such insolvent law.

(July 29, 1892.)

ON demurrer to a bill filed to enjoin the prosecution of certain attachment proceedings which had been instituted by defendants against property of the insolvent Massachusetts firm of Potter, White & Bayley. Bill dismissed.

On May 25, 1891, the firm of Potter, White & Bayley, doing business in the state of Massachusetts, after consultation with one of the members of the firm of Rogers, Wood, Loring & Co., decided to make an assignment to Dunn, Allen & Bullens for the benefit of its creditors. The firm of Rogers, Wood, Loring & Co. after consultation, decided to attach property of the insolvent firm located in New Hampshire, for the benefit of all creditors of the insolvent firm who should be willing to share ratably in the assets. Subsequently they consulted Messrs. Dunn and Allen, two of the assignees, and the latter signified their assent to such a proceeding. In accordance with this agreement or understanding an attachment was levied on the evening of May 25th, and the assignment by Potter, White & Bayley was executed and delivered early on the following day. On or about May 26 or 27, 1891, the National Bank of Redemption in Boston, which held notes of Potter, White & Bayley to the amount of something over $9,000, learned that the firm had failed and made an assignment. Thereupon it sent its attorney to the plaintiff who resided in New Hampshire, and offered to sell to him at a discount one of the notes held by it against the insolvent firm, giving at the same time the following guaranty:

"Whereas, the National Bank of Redemption has sold this day to H. J. Crippen, of Concord, N. H., a note signed by Potter, White & Bayley to their own order and indorsed by them, dated November 26, 1890, on six months, for forty-four hundred and ninety dollars, now, therefore, in consideration of the purchase of said note by said H. J. Crippen, the National Bank of Redemption hereby agrees to pay H. J. Crippen any deficit which the said Crippen may sustain by reason of his inability to recover the full amount of said note against said Potter, White & Bayley, and also to pay said Crippen a sum equal to all his costs, charges, and expenses incurred in any attempt to collect the same, including interest.

"The National Bank of Redemption, Boston,
"E. A. Presbrey,

"June 1, 1891.

"Cashier."

[Seal of the bank on agreement.]

The same agreement was subsequently made to cover all of the paper which the National Bank held against the insolvent firm and it was all turned over to Crippen, who drew his checks for the amount, the funds to meet which were raised by the discount of his notes. On June 4, 1891, Crippen levied an attachment upon the property which had been previously attached by Rogers, Wood, Loring & Co., and on or about October 1, 1891, he filed this bill to enjoin further proceedings by Rogers, Wood, Loring & Co. under their attachment. A few days prior to the filing of the bill he had been allowed to appear as subsequent attaching creditor in the prior attachment suit. On August 24, 1891, a petition in insolvency was filed in Massachusetts against Potter, White & Bayley, and on September 24 a warrant was issued against their joint and separate estate, a messenger was appointed, and after commencement of this suit Dunn, Allen & Bullens were appointed their assignees in insolvency.

Further facts appear in the opinions.

Messrs. M. F. Dickinson, Jr., and Hollis R. Bailey, for defendants, in support of the demurrer:

After the goods were attached and taken into the custody of the sheriff, on the writ of Rogers, Wood, Loring & Co., they were not subject to attachment by trustee process.

See Olapp v. Rogers, 88 N. H. 485.

The common-law assignment was by its terms made for the benefit of those creditors who should become parties to it by executing it within a certain time. It provided for a discharge of the debtors and a return of any surplus to the debtors. It was conditioned to become void in case insolvency proceedings should be instituted by or against the debtors. It conveyed the debtors' property as it was on the date of the assignment, subject to whatever mortgages, liens, or attachments then existed. It was necessary for a creditor to execute the assignment in order to become entitled to a dividend under it.

First Nat. Bank of Easton v. Smith, 139 Mass. 26.

In Hurd v. Silsby, 10 N. H. 108, 84 Am. Dec. 142, a creditor who had become a party to a common law assignment in New Hampshire was allowed to afterwards attach.

The effect of the agreement with other creditors and with trustees as to the proceeds of attachment did not take away or diminish the right to attach either the person or the property of the debtor.

Cameron v. Little, 18 N. H. 28.

Certainly this court, as a court of equity, will not wish to lend its aid to a creditor (either Mr. Crippen or the Bank of Redemption) who is seeking to gain a preference. It will desire rather, if possible, to aid in an equal distribution of the assets in accordance with the maxim that equality is equity.

NOTE.—For recognition of insolvency transfers in another state, see note to Long v. Forrest (Pa.) 28 L. R. A. 33.

25 L. R. A.

Eddy v. Winchester, 60 N. H. 68.

Rogers, Wood, Loring & Co., have not proved their claim or in any way submitted themselves to the jurisdiction of the insolvency court, and are entirely at liberty to proceed with their suit and attachment in New Hampshire, especially as their suit was begun long before the insolvency proceedings.

Lawrence v. Batcheller, 181 Mass. 504; Chipman v. Manufacturers Nat. Bank, 156 Mass. 147.

They are entitled to the same privileges in New Hampshire, as attaching creditors, that citizens of New Hampshire have.

U. S. Const. art. 4, § 2: Sturtevant v. Armsby Co. (N. H.) July 31, 1891.

Rogers, Wood, Loring & Co., although citizens of Massachusetts, have a right to sue and attach in New Hampshire.

Kidder v. Tufts, 48 N. H. 121; Lawrence v. Batcheller, and Chipman v. Manufacturers' Nat. Bank, supra; Proctor v. National Bank of the Republic, 9 L. R. A. 122, 152 Mass. 228; Sturtevant v. Armsby Co. supra; Batcheller v. National Bank of the Republic, 157 Mass. 88.

Messrs. Streeter, Walker & Chase, for plaintiffs, contra:

A party must recover according to his legal rights at the commencement of the action, and according to the legal character in which he sues.

Tappan v. Tappan, 80 N. H. 50.

At the time Rogers, Wood, Loring & Co. brought their writ, and as a material part of the transaction, it was understood and agreed that they should prosecute it, not for their individual benefit, but for the benefit of the creditors of Potter, White & Bayley; that the proceeds of the suit should be practically turned over to the so-called common-law assignees, Dunn, Allen & Bullens; that in legal effect the nominal plaintiffs in that suit should hold whatever they might recover as trustees for the assignees or for such creditors as should prove their claims under the assignment, which was executed on the following day.

If allowed to obtain the money on their own account by a judgment of this court they would succeed in defrauding the assignees, who might have prevented such an inequitable diversion of the debtor's assets by obtaining a mandatory order from the court of Massachusetts directing them (citizens of that state) to prosecute their suit for the benefit of the estate.

Dehon v. Foster, 4 Allen, 545; Ounningham v. Butler, 142 Mass. 47, 56 Am. Rep. 657.

Rogers et al. are estopped from claiming to prosecute their suit for their own benefit.

Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 157, § 80; Perley v. Mason, 64 N. H. 6; Carbes v. Mason, Id. 10; Norris v. Atkinson, Id. 87.

Can assignees in insolvency appointed under the laws of another state sue in this state to the prejudice of resident creditors; or in other words, are the insolvency laws of another state enforceable here as a matter of legal right?

It must now be considered as part of the jurisprudence of this country, that a prior assignment in bankruptcy, under a foreign law, will not be permitted to prevail against a subsequent attachment by an American creditor, of the bankrupt effects found here.

Saunders v. Williams, 5 N. H. 218; Dalton v. Currier, 40 N. H. 287; Dunlap v. Rogers, 47 N. H. 281, 98 Am. Dec. 433. See also Perley v. Mason, Carbes v. Mason, and Norris v. Atkinson, supra; Eddy v. Winchester, 60 N. H. 68; Fall River Iron Works Co. v. Croade, 15 Pick. 11; Blake v. Williams, 6 Pick. 285, 17 Am. Dec. 872; Ingraham v. Geyer, 13 Mass. 146, 7 Am. Dec. 182; Faulkner v. Hyman, 142 Mass. 58.

If Rogers et al. brought their suit for the assignees in order to accomplish indirectly what the assignees could not do directly, if it was done, as appears from the case, for the express purpose of preventing New Hampshire creditors from availing themselves of their legal rights with reference to property of the debtors located here, when attacked by foreign assignees, the whole proceeding on the part of the defendants was fraudulent and void, and should be set aside by a court of equity on the application of a resident creditor.

Tappan v. Evans, 11 N. H. 811; Bay State Iron Co. v. Goodall, 89 N. H. 233, 75 Am. Dec. 219; Alden v. Gibson, 63 N. H. 12; Hale v. Nashua & L. Railroad, 60 N. H. 833.

Smith, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

If the Bank of Redemption had brought a suit in its own name for the collection of the notes transferred nominally to Crippen, the case would present no superior equity entitling the bank to appropriate the property attached in this state exclusively to its own debt. Equity, as well as comity, would require the application of the property to the payment of all the creditors of the insolvents, under the insolvency laws of the state of the domicile of the bank. Kidder v. Tufts, 48 N. H. 121; Eddy v. Winchester, 60 N. H. 68. The plaintiff offers to prove that the transfer of the notes "was an absolute and bona fide sale of the same, giving to him the absolute ownership and control of the same." But it is clear that the finding of such a fact would have to be set aside, as being in direct and irreconcilable conflict with the admitted facts in the case, from which the only conclusion is that the transfer of the notes was a mere cover to enable the bank to gain a preference over other Massachusetts creditors. The plaintiff cites Proctor v. National Bank of the Republic, 152 Mass. 228, 9 L. R. A. 122, in support of the right to maintain his suits for the collection of the notes. But the reasons which controlled the majority of the court in that case, in refusing to compel a Massachusetts creditor who had obtained an advantage over the other creditors by his proceedings in another state to restore the property, or its value, to the assignee of a Massachusetts insolvent debtor, do not exist in this case. There is no want of jurisdiction of the property, or of the proper parties; and equity requires that the bank, under cover of suits in the name of a New Hampshire citizen, should not obtain an advantage over the other creditors in Massachusetts. The leave given the plaintiff to defend the Stratford suits should be revoked.—Levy v. Woodcock, 68 N. H. 418; Martin v. Wiggin (N. H.) 29 Atl. Rep. 450,—and the temporary injunction dissolved.

Bill dismissed.

Allen, J., did not sit; the others concurred.

A rehearing was subsequently asked for after which the following opinion was handed down:

"Personal property has no locality, but is subject to the law which governs the person of the owner, except in cases which directly militate against the particular laws of the country in which it happens to be located." Saunders v. Williams, 5 N. H. 218, 214. "The general rule is that a transfer of personal property, which is valid by the law of the owner's domicile, will operate to convey the property wherever it may be situate." Sanderson v. Bradford, 10 N. H. 260, 263. "In the absence of ancillary administration or statutory prohibition, the domiciliary administrator or executor has authority to take possession of and remove the goods or effects of the decedent in another jurisdiction, or to collect a debt due from a debtor residing therein, if voluntarily given up or paid, and give a good acquittance and discharge therefor. . . . So, too, he may sell and assign stock in a foreign corporation; and the corporation may voluntarily consent to its transfer by accepting the outstanding certificate, and issuing a new one to the purchaser." Lucas v. Manchester & L. Railroad, 68 N. H. 588, 590. "It has long been the policy of commercial states not to embarrass the free transmission of the title to personal property. And it has been very justly considered as discourteous and illiberal policy in one state to abridge and fetter the operation of foreign contracts within its limits, or to refuse to enforce them by suits maintained in its courts, or to embarrass foreign owners of personal estate within its limits, in the free enjoyment of its beneficial use, or its ready and unrestricted conveyance. . . . In the law, personality is generally regarded as having no situs. Its title, mode of transfer, and other incidents connected with its use and transmission, are regulated according to the law of the place of the domicile of the owner. This is confessedly true in regard to the requisite formalities in the execution of a will of personality, although essentially departing from the requirements of the law of the state, where such property happens to be situated at the time of the decease of the owner. It is the law of the place of the domicile of the owner which must control these incidents as to the operation of wills upon personal estate, and also the distribution of intestate estates, according to the general rules of international comity among civilized and commercial states. . . . But it is claimed that, in regard to the distribution of one's effects (while living) among his creditors, a different rule, to some extent, has prevailed." Hanford v. Paine, 82 Vt. 442, 452, 15 L. R. A.

454, 78 Am. Dec. 586. "It is said that the laws of a state or country do not have any extraterritorial operation suo vigore, but that such operation is only granted ex comitate. This is the common language of the opinions, but it is an extremely unsatisfactory ground on which to place a decision, for the fact is that the laws of one state or country are recognized by other states and countries continually, and in many different ways; and in cases in which it is stated on the principles of that branch of jurisprudence known as 'Private International Law,' or the 'Conflict of Laws,' that foreign law should apply, such law is applied as a matter of course by the courts without the exercise of any vague or irresponsible discretion.

. . . In regard to rights under contracts, the law of the place of the contract governs, although the law of the forum controls in all questions as to the remedy. So also, it is a settled rule, with regard to succession to personal property by will or intestacy, that the law of the domicile shall govern, even as to property in a foreign jurisdiction. . . . We therefore feel justified in saying that it is not generally a safe reason to assign for the decision of any of these questions that foreign laws have no extraterritorial operation." 15 Am. L. Rev. 254, 255.

A general rule that a transfer of personal property, which is valid by the law of the owner's domicile, will convey the property wherever situate, may clash with a general rule that law has no extraterritorial operation. It seems to be immaterial which is called the rule, and which the exception. The property in controversy in this case should be applied to the payment of debts under the insolvency laws of Massachusetts, unless this disposition of it would infringe the right of a citizen of this state. If the Bank of Redemption had not gone through the form of selling its notes to the plaintiff, and brought suit upon them in this state, and attached the debtors' chattels and land, the land, as well as the chattels, might become assets in the hands of the Massachusetts assignees, notwithstanding the attachment; and, as between the bank and the assignees, the justice of the case and the law of this state would require such procedure as would enable the assignees to apply the attached property to the payment of debts under the law of Massachusetts. Eddy v. Winchester, 60 N. H. 63, 64. Our law does not unnecessarily allow its process to be used by a Massachusetts creditor to avoid the just operation of the insolvency law of that state. The view of the agreed facts most favorable to the plaintiff is that the transaction between him and the bank is what it appears to be on the face of the writings. Upon that view, the plaintiff will make a profit of about $1,000, if he prevails in this suit, and will lose nothing if he fails. If he prevails, the bank will get or keep $8,000, less expenses of suits, which it is to pay in any event. The guaranty given him by the bank makes the bank the principal plaintiff in interest. The practical effect of the whole transaction is the use of the plaintiff's name in New Hampshire litigation, instituted and carried on in behalf of the bank, and at its expense, to enable it to defeat the just law of its own state. If the bank succeeds in this enterprise, it pays him a commission of about $1,000. If it does not succeed, it pays him nothing. The speculative interest which this arrangement gives him does not entitle him to set up a New Hampshire right as a cover under which a Massachusetts creditor can avoid the Massachusetts law. In some sense, and for some purposes, he could be regarded as the owner of the notes. But he is not the owner in any equitable sense that would give him a position superior to that of the bank in an effort to prevent the application of the attached property to the payment of debts under the law of Massachusetts. The equity of the case is with the assignees. If they had taken and held possession of the goods, their title would have been upheld against the plaintiff. The attachment made by the defendants Rogers, Wood, Loring & Co. was not necessary for the protection of the assignees' rights against the suits brought by the plaintiff chiefly for the benefit of a Massachusetts creditor, and for his own benefit, merely as a claimant of a bonus to be paid by the Massachusetts creditor for the use of his name in litigation. The plaintiff's leave to appear in the suit brought by the defendants in Strafford county will be revoked at the next trial term in September. To prevent delay that might be caused at that term from the pendency of this action in this county, the decree dissolving the injunction and dismissing the bill is rendered at the present law term.

Bill dismissed.

Allen, J., did not sit; the others concurred.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, THIRD CIRCUIT.

Robert M. YARDLEY, Receiver of the Keystone National Bank,

v.

George PHILLER et al., Appts.

(62 Fed. Rep. 645.)

1. The equities and rights arising from express agreement or implied from the nature of dealings between a national bank and a clearing-house association or the other members thereof prior to the closing of the bank must be preserved and enforced in settling its affairs by a receiver.

2. The appropriation on its own claims by a clearing house after the closing of a national bank by an examiner, of money paid by other banks on a call by the clearing house to take up drafts and checks on the insolvent bank.

NOTE.—Clearing-house business.

- a. Origin and description.
- b. Rights and liabilities of clearing houses.
- c. Clearing-house loan certificates.
- d. Clearing-house due-bill.
- e. Presentation and payment through clearing house.
- f. Return of paper not good after receiving it through clearing house.
- g. Effect of clearing-house rules and customs.
- h. Agency of clearing house members.
- i. Gold clearing house.
- j. Country clearing house of London.
- k. Miscellaneous.

a. Origin and description.

The business of clearing houses, like much of the other business of banking, has been a growth without any statutory sanction or regulation and the law of which has been developed from general principles and the usages of the business.

In respect to the origin of clearing houses, the court says in Crane v. Clearing-House, 82 W. N. O. 858: "The clearing-house system appears to have originated in Edinburgh, at least the bankers of that place claim the credit of establishing the first clearing house; but the earliest one of whose transactions we have any record is that of London, which was founded in 1775, or perhaps earlier, as the record is not altogether clear on the subject. The clearing-house was in those times, as it still is, the general resort of persons about starting new enterprises, and it was there that the messengers or clerks first held their meetings; but as the system grew to such utility as to make it indispensable, the association procured rooms in Lombard street, for the convenience of exchanging checks and other securities, and reducing the amount of actual money used in the settlement of their accounts. This was the beginning of the clearing-house system. The New York clearing house was established 25 L. R. A.

in 1858, Boston established one in 1858, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Cleveland in 1858, Worcester in 1861, Chicago in 1865, and since that date the system has spread throughout the country, so that it is said by Mr. Bolles, in his book on Practical Banking, published in 1884, page 217, there were then thirty-one clearing houses known to exist in this country; and they also exist in Australia, France, Germany, Switzerland, Italy, and generally throughout the continent of Europe."

While all, or nearly all, the clearing-house associations in the United States are unincorporated, a statute has been passed in Minnesota (March 4, 1890) to provide for the incorporation of such organizations.

The clearing-house system of Philadelphia described in the above case represents in most particulars that adopted generally in this country. In New York, and, we believe, in all other American banking centres, the clearing-house balance is merely prima facie or provisionally subject to the correction of errors up to an hour named by the rules, and the exchanges at the clearing house are very quickly made.

The clearing-house system of London is essentially different from that of New York and other American cities.

In London the work of the clearing house goes on for nearly, if not quite the whole day, and is described in Warwick v. Rogers, 5 Mann. & G. 343, 6 Scott, N. R. 1, 12 L. J. O. P. 112; as follows: "The clerks from the different banking houses using the clearing house assemble there daily at 11 o'clock in the forenoon, and remain, or go backwards and forwards as the case may be, until half past five, when the clearing house is closed. Each banker has a separate drawer, into which drawer the bills, notes, and checks then due, and which are payable at such bankers, are put by the respective bankers' clerks holding the same on arrival at 11 o'clock, and so from time to time through the day. Up to four which they had surrendered to its clerk in due course of business, in an exchange at the clearing house before the bank suspended, and which had been left there as security for a balance due from it to the clearing house, is not an unlawful preference, as the subsequent transactions do not rescind the exchange of securities made while the bank was doing business and gives no right of action to the receiver of the bank against the clearing-house committee for the amount of the drafts and checks on other banks which it surrendered on the exchange.

See also 28 L. R. A. 361; 30 L. R. A. 155; 48 L. R. A. 122.

(Green, District Judge, dissents.)

(July 12, 1894.)

APPEAL by defendants from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover money which was alleged to have been received by defendants as a committee of the Philadelphia Clearing House to the use of plaintiff upon certain checks and drafts against the Keystone National Bank which had come into the possession of the clearing house committee and been returned to other banks, members of the clearing house, upon their delivery to the clearing house committee of cash to the amount of the face value of the checks and drafts. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. A. T. Freedley and John G. Johnson, for appellants:

The practice and machinery of clearinghouse associations will be found fully stated in—

Bolles, Practical Banking, 217-278; Gibbons' Banks of New York, 292-342.

And have been further explained and judicially recognized—

In England:

Chambers' Encyclopedia, title Clearing House; Walker, Banking Laws, 68-70; Grant, Bankers, 52; Warwick v. Rogers, 5 Mann. & G. 348; Boddington v. Schlenker, 4 Barn. & Ad. 758.

In the United States:

Morse, Banks & Banking, 2d ed. 450-457; Johnson's Encyclopedia, title Clearing House; Bolles, Banks and their Directors, §§ 420-426, pp. 412-428; Fowler v. New York Gold Each. Bank, 67 N. Y. 188; Crane v. Clearing House, 82 W. N. C. 858.

The sole security for the payment of the daily balances due at the morning exchange was the agreement of the Keystone Bank that its messenger, after receiving the packages from the creditor banks, should leave these packages with the clearing-house manager until the debtor balance due on that settlement should be paid by the Keystone Bank in cash before 12 o'clock; and this agreement was acted on daily from the date it was made until the suspension of the bank.

In retaining the packages the manager was obviously acting as agent for the creditor banks at each settlement.

National City Bank v. New York Gold Each. Bank, 101 N. Y. 595.

o'clock (but not later) bills, notes, and checks are put into the drawers as they arrive. Shortly after eleven o'clock the clearing clerk of each banker takes out of his drawer all the bills, notes, and checks which have then been put into it by the other bankers' clerks claiming payment, and takes or sends the same to his principal's banking house in order that the banker may examine them and determine as to the payment of them respectively; and the same course is pursued again at three o'clock in the afternoon, and from time to time afterwards during the remainder of the day, until four o'clock. Each banker examines the bills and checks so sent or taken to him by their respective clerks and the customers accounts to which they refer, and such bills or checks as are at the time intended to be paid are canceled by drawing lines along and across the name of the party for whom such payment is intended to be made. Such of the bills and checks as the bankers determine not to pay are returned by them to be deposited in the drawer at the clearing house of the bankers by whom the same were that morning brought to the clearing house . . . each banker's clerk makes up his account from time to time during the day as may suit his convenience until five o'clock, correcting it by the addition of such subsequent receipts and payments as may be necessary, according to the items which afterwards come in."

b. Rights and liabilities of clearing houses.

A suit against the clearing-house committee, growing out of the transactions involved in the main case of YARDLEY V. PHILLER, was brought by a firm which had made a deposit in the Keystone Bank of a draft on one of the other banks in the association. The plaintiffs contended that the clearing-house committee by receiving from the other banks the full sum of $11,785.21, which was due by the Keystone Bank, had received from one of them on which their draft was drawn the payment of that draft. The court said: "In case the plaintiff's draft was paid by the Fourth National Bank in the larger sum it paid into the clearing house, where it was distributed among the creditor banks to pay the balances due to them by the debtor banks, including the Keystone, but which bank or banks got the money it is impossible to trace in the confusion of moneys and accounts, the plaintiffs . . . cannot compel the clearing-house committee to pay them, because its manager never had their draft, or its proceeds in his possession with knowledge of their rights, or of the existence of the draft, until demand was made upon it. Crane v. Clearing-House, 82 W. N. C. 858.

For suits by clearing-house committee, see infra, c. as to loan certificates.

Where a bill which had been accepted payable at a bank was received through the clearing house and canceled while unincumbered funds of the drawee were in the bank applicable thereto, but payment thereof was ordered by the drawee to be stopped about 12:30 P. M., whereupon the bank wrote "Canceled by mistake: orders not to pay." and returned it to the clearing house, it was held that this cancellation of the acceptance did not make the bank at which it was payable liable to the holder. Warwick v. Rogers, 5 Mann. & G. 348, 6 Scott, N. B. 1, 12 L. J. C. P. 118.

In German Nat. Bank of Pittsburgh v. Farmers' Deposit Nat. Bank, 118 Pa. 204, the court says: "The clearing-house association is not responsible for anything except the proper distribution of the money paid to settle balances, its purpose being to provide a convenient place where checks may be presented and balances adjusted." The rules of the association which were involved in that case provided that errors in exchanges should be adjusted by the banks, and that checks not good should be returned to the bank depositing them

The status of the Keystone Bank's debits and credits was fixed at the time the examiner closed the bank and took charge of its affairs, and every check and note charged off or credited after closing would have been a direct and unlawful preference against the statute.

There are two daily exchanges between the banks—one at 8:30 A. M., known as the morning exchange, and one at 11:30 A. M., known as the runners' exchange. Balances due at the morning exchange are paid in cash; balances due at the runners' exchange are paid by runners' due bill, which is deposited by the manager of the clearing house in the depository bank and paid out of the exchanges of the debtor bank at the next morning exchange.

On December 1, 1890, the fundamental articles of association were amended to meet the payment of this runners' due-bill.

The amendment of the constitution was: "Provided that the amount of the due-bill given by the defaulting bank in settlement of its debit balance in the runners' exchange of the previous day and deposited by the clearing house in its depository bank shall be deducted from the total charge of such bank and shall be the first claim against the securities deposited by the defaulting bank under article 17."

This was a perfectly valid agreement for the bank to make, and the receiver, of course, takes subject to the agreement.

Casey v. La Société de Credit Mobilier de Paris, 2 Wood, C. C. 77; Scott v. Armstrong, 146 U. S. 499, 36 L. ed. 1059.

If the Keystone Bank had not given the due-bills it would have had to give cash the preceding day, or if it had not the cash it would have been obliged to realize so much of the $70,005.46 which it presented to the clearing house the next day as would have been necessary to obtain this amount of cash. Hence just so much more cash passed into the receiver's hands; and if the Keystone Bank had not the cash, just so much less of the $70,005.46 would that bank have been enabled to present at the clearing house the next morning.

Dutton v. Merchants Nat. Bank, 16 Phila. 94.

It is impossible to deal with the balance of $70,005.46 on the footing of a pledge. That sum, whether arising by reason of packages having been presented against the Keystone Bank, or by reason of packages having been presented by the Keystone Bank, was simply a general credit of $70,005.46 due the Keystone Bank. The Keystone Bank owed the appellants at this time the sum of $385,000. It owed the association the sum of $23,390.42. It owed other banks, members of the association, the sum of $17,806.84.

The set-offs existed prior to the time of insolvency. The transfer of packages had been made before the Keystone Bank was closed. The liens, equities, and rights of the various parties entitled in and to the clearing house settlements occurred at the very time the exchange was made.

The appellants would have been entitled to have applied the entire $70,005.46 in re-before one o'clock P. M., adding "the association not to be responsible in any case."

c. Clearing-house loan certificates.

Loan certificates issued to a bank by a clearing-house committee to keep up its credit at the clearing house on the security of certain collateral are recognized as valid in Philler v. Woodfall, 22 W. N. C. 128, in which the clearing-house committee are held entitled to recover on notes included in such collateral. The court held that the securities pledged in accordance with the articles of the corporation which provided for applying the deposits of any defaulting bank to the payment of balances due at the clearing house, or reimbursement pro rata of banks furnishing said balance, and the surplus, if any, for other indebtedness to members of the association, covered not only the amount due on daily balances, but other indebtedness to the clearing-house committee which included such loan certificates.

In an action by a clearing-house committee on a promissory note, which they had taken in substitution for other negotiable securities on their maturity, held as a pledge for loan certificates issued to the bank which transferred the note, a rule to open a judgment by default was denied. No opinion is published, but the basis of the decision seems to be that the clearing-house committee were bona fide purchasers, and the decision necessarily involves the validity of the loan certificates. Philler v. Field, 29 W. N. C. 129.

In a later case brought by the clearing-house committee on notes taken by the clearing house from the same bank, the Keystone National Bank, Thayer, Ch. J., citing Philler v. Field, supra, said: "We have already decided that the plaintiffs had the right to acquire promissory notes in the manner in which it is averred in the affidavit that they received them, and that they hold the legal title thereto." Philler v. Esler, 29 W. N. C. 258.

25 L. R. A.

d. Clearing-house due-bill.

A clearing-house due-bill, so named on its face, the body of which is as follows: "Due by the merchants' National Bank to Banks one thousand nine hundred dollars. This due-bill is only good when signed by one and countersigned by another authorized person, and is payable only in the exchange through the clearing house the day after issued,"—is held to be a negotiable instrument so as to require indemnity in order to recover after it has been stolen, and not to be a mere certificate of deposit on special terms. Dutton v. Merchants Nat. Bank, 16 Phila. 94.

e. Presentation and payment through clearing house.

In an action on a bill of exchange accepted payable at Messrs. Harrison & Co's, Lord Ellenborough said: "I think a presentation to the banker's clerk in the clearing house was a presentation at Messrs. Harrison & Co's within the meaning of the acceptance." Reynolds v. Chettle, 2 Campb. 506.

The drawer of a check is not discharged by the failure of bankers to present it at the clearing house, although the custom, as between the bankers and their customer, makes it imperative on them to so present it, where the holder has paid it to the bankers in time for them to obtain payment by such presentation. Boddington v. Schlenger, 4 Barn. & Ad. 752, 1 Nev. & M. 541.

The custom of banks not to pay a draft after certain hours, but to mark it and permit it to be paid the next day at the clearing house, makes such marking an acceptance, and there is no laches in presenting it at the clearing house the next day although the drawee suspends business that mornduction of the $335,000 due them by the Keystone Bank. No unlawful preference is created by such set-off.

Scott v. Armstrong, 146 U. S. 499, 38 L. ed. 1059; Yardley v. Clothier, 17 L. R. A. 462, 31 W. N. C. 214, 51 Fed. Rep. 506.

Section 5242 only applies to transfers (1) made after commission of an act of insolvency, or in contemplation thereof; (2) made with a view to prevent the application of bank assets in the manner prescribed by the statute, or with a view to the preference of one creditor to another.

The transfer must be made with a view to giving preference.

Tuttle v. Frelinghuysen, 38 N. J. Eq. 12; Casey v. La Société de Crédit Mobilier de Paris, 2 Woods, C. C. 77; Yardley v. Clothier, supra.

Banking transactions have been invariably sustained unless the bank was actually closed or had decided to close, and payments resulting from such transactions are not unlawful.

Citizens Nat. Bank v. Dowd, 85 Fed. Rep. 340; Armstrong v. Chemical Nat. Bank 6 L. R. A. 226, 41 Fed. Rep. 237.

Transfers made in good faith, with the expectation that by so doing the person will continue his business, will be upheld, and exchanges of value may be made at any time, though one of the parties to the transaction be insolvent.

Tiffany v. Lucas, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 410, 21 L. ed. 198; Cook v. Tullis, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 382, 21 L. ed. 938; Clark v. Iselin, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 360, 22 L. ed. 568.

ing without appearing at the clearing house. Robson v. Bennett, 2 Taunt. 388.

The sending of notes to a bank through the clearing house is not equivalent to a formal demand at the bank for payment forthwith, but is equivalent to leaving them at the bank for collection from the maker on or before the close of banking hours. National Exch. Bank v. National Bank of North America, 182 Mass. 147.

The failure to present a check at the clearing house in accordance with mercantile usage, even if it would have been paid had it been thus presented, is not material, if the check was duly presented at the proper counter, since the usage merely provides a substitute for, or a waiver of, ordinary presentation, and, if the latter is made, the usage has no force. Kleekamp v. Meyer, 5 Mo. App. 444.

The relation between the payee of checks, certified or uncertified, and the bank in which deposits have been made to meet the checks, is declared in People v. St. Nicholas Bank, 77 Hun, 159, to be controlled by rules of law and not by any supposed custom which may affect members of a clearing house. In that case where deposits of checks were made in a bank on the last day that it was open, and checks drawn against the deposit, some of which the bank certified, it was held that these deposits, made in the ordinary way, were not by any clearing-house rules appropriated to these checks, whether certified or not, and that no trust existed in the deposits for the payment of the checks drawn against them. A refusal of the clearing house to effect the exchange after the suspension of the bank was held not to give the depositors any right against the receiver, either to preferred payment out of the assets of checks drawn on the last day of the bank's business nor to a return of the securities deposited on that day.

25 L. R. A.

The appellants act solely as agents for known principals.

Howler v. New York Gold Exch. Bank, 67 N. Y. 188; National City Bank v. New York Gold Exch. Bank, 101 N. Y. 595.

The action, if maintainable, lies against the particular principal benefited by the individual transaction.

Reynolds v. Chettle, 2 Campb. 596; Crane v. Clearing House, 32 W. N. C. 358.

Mr. Silas W. Pettit for appellee.

Acheson, Circuit Judge, delivered the following opinion:

Upon a bill brought by Robert M. Yardley, receiver of the Keystone National Bank, against seven individuals, constituting the managing committee of the Philadelphia Clearing House Bank Association, the court below rendered a decree for $70,005.46, with interest from March 20, 1891, against the defendants, who are here the appellants, upon the ground that, after the known insolvency of the named bank, they applied (as was charged) its funds in their hands or under their control to the payment of its debts to the clearing-house association, and to members thereof, with a view of giving them an unlawful preference over other creditors.

The clearing-house association of the city of Philadelphia is a voluntary, unincorporated association, composed of the national banks of that city; its main object being to effect at one common meeting place, called the "clearing-house," the daily exchanges between the associated banks. Its affairs are Under clearing-house rules requiring exchanges at 9 A. M., and adjustment of errors before 11 A. M., the sending of managers' checks for balances at 11:30 A. M., and that any bank not able to pay its balances must inform the manager and the other banks of that fact before 10 A. M. and hold in trust all checks received at the morning exchange, a bank which failed to pay the manager's check because it had gone into possession of the sheriff, but did not give notice of its inability according to the rule, cannot be allowed, in a suit by its liquidating commissioners, to recover on checks drawn on one of the other banks and held by it on that day, where in consequence of its failure to give the required notice the drawee bank had credited its customers with the amount of checks deposited with it against the insolvent bank. Blaffer v. Louisiana Nat. Bank, 35 La. Ann. 251.

On the suspension of a bank which had taken a check as payment of a draft which it held for collection and placed it in its cash drawer with a memorandum to show that it belonged to the transmitting bank, and afterwards received payment thereof through the clearing house, keeping such memorandum with its cash assets to indicate that the amount of that check was the property of the other bank, it was held that the fund was not so mingled as to defeat its identification, and that the sender could recover the amount from the receiver. First Nat. Bank of Montgomery v. Armstrong, 36 Fed. Rep. 59.

1. Return of paper not good after receiving it through clearing-house.

Marking a check as canceled at a clearing-house by mistake will not prevent its return with a memorandum of the mistake within the time allowed by clearing-house usage (which in this case was until 5 P. M.) Fernandey v. Glynn, 1 Campb.

under the general supervision of a committee of seven bank presidents, selected by a majority of the associated banks, and serving without compensation. This committee appoints a manager, who has immediate charge of the conduct of the business at the clearing house. All exchanges, however, are made directly between the banks themselves, through clerks representing them respectively. All the checks, drafts, and other evidences of indebtedness to be exchanged are brought to the clearing-house in sealed packages, which are never opened there. The gross amount of the alleged contents of each package is indorsed upon the envelope, but not the items. The clerk of each sending bank delivers directly to the clerk of the receiving bank the sealed package of checks and other obligations held by the former against the latter bank. Receipts pass directly between the clerks of the sending and receiving banks. After the exchanges are thus made, the gross totals only are reported to the clearing-house manager, who upon this information, makes up a sheet of differences to be adjusted and settled between the various banks. Upon this sheet each debtor bank settles the amount due by it to the creditor banks by paying the same to the clearing-house manager, who immediately distributes it to and among the creditor banks.

The Keystone National Bank of Philadelphia was a member of the clearing-house association. On March 20, 1891, at 8:30 o'clock A. M., the hour fixed for the morning exchange, the messenger of that bank appeared at the clearing-house with sealed packages purporting to contain exchanges against other banks, members of the association, amounting to $70,005.46. These packages he delivered directly to the clerks of the other banks, and received from them receipts therefor. At the same time the messengers of other banks members of the association, delivered to the clerk of the Keystone National Bank sealed packages of exchanges against it, purporting to amount to the sum of $117,085.21, and took from him receipts therefor. Thus there was a balance of $47,029.75 against the Keystone National Bank on that morning's exchange.

After receiving the sealed packages of checks and other exchanges purporting to amount to $117,085.21, the clerk of the Keystone National Bank left those packages in the custody of the manager of the clearing-house until the bank should pay the $47,029.75 difference, which it was bound to do by 12 o'clock of that day. The reason for the deposit was this: Article 17 of the constitution of the clearing-house association required each bank to deposit with the clearing-house committee collateral security for the payment of its daily balances. In December, 1890, however, at the instance and for the benefit of the Keystone National Bank, a special arrangement was entered into between it and the clearing-house committee whereby all the security held under article 17 to secure its daily balances was transferred to its loan-certificate account with the clearing-house, so as to enable it to receive upon 428, nota. See also Warwick v. Rogers, 5 Mann. & G. 348, 6 Scott, N. R. 1, 12 L. J. C. P. 118.

Under a clearing-house rule allowing return of checks not good before 1 P. M. a bank which had received a check and placed it on file and entered it in the journal, but had not carried it forward into the ledger, was held entitled to return the check on being notified to stop payment because of the failure of the payee bank, against which the drawer claimed a defense. The court said that the cut in the check made by putting it on file and the entry in the journal were shown to be made merely for the convenience of the drawee bank, but did not constitute payment before the right to return it under the rules had expired. German Nat. Bank of Pittsburgh v. Farmers' Deposit Nat. Bank, 118 Pa. 294.

"The right of return secured by the rules of the clearing house is a special provision in compensation for payment without inspection. Instead thereof the rules give opportunity for subsequent inspection. When that has been had the special rules cease to govern; and the rights of the paying bank rest upon the general principles of law." This is the language of the court in National Bank of North America v. Bangs, 108 Mass. 441, 8 Am. Rep. 349. In that case a forged check had been presented at the clearing house and allowed and paid in the usual manner of settling the daily balances of banks at the clearing house, and without any neglect there had been a failure to return the check within the time allowed by the rules of the clearing house, so that, as the court said, "the rights of the paying bank rest on the general principles of law," and the drawee, under the facts of the case was allowed to recover.

To the same effect it was held in Merchants Nat. Bank v. National Eagle Bank, 101 Mass. 281, that, if by any mistake of fact, a check paid through the clearing house was not returned before 1 o'clock, as allowed by clearing-house rules, the payment, as between the two banks, should be treated as made under a mistake of fact precisely to the same extent and with the same right to reclaim which would have existed if the payment had been made by the simple act of passing the money across the counter directly to the payee on the presentation of the check. The clearing-house rules provided for exchange at 10 A. M., for payment of balances to the manager of the clearing house at noon, and to distribution by him at half past twelve, with other provisions for the return of checks which are not good as soon as that fact is discovered, and that "in no case shall they be retained after 1 o'clock, and also that 'errors in the exchanges and claims arising from the return of checks or other cause are to be adjusted directly between the banks which are parties therein, and not through the clearing house.'"

The same rule was applied in Boylston Nat. Bank v. Richardson, 101 Mass. 287, but in that case the check, which had been held after the hour for return under the clearing-house rules, was held not to have been paid under any mistake of fact.

There being no change of circumstances consequent on the failure to return a check paid through the clearing house before 1 o'clock according to clearing-house rules which would subject the bank which had been credited therewith to loss, or render it unjust to recover back the amount, the mere fact that such bank had given credit to the depositor of the check will not prevent the bank which had paid it through the clearing house from recovering in case of payment through a mistake. Merchants Nat. Bank v. National Bank of Com. 128 Mass. 512.

On the other hand, the rule of the Chicago clearing house that "all checks received in the morning that security further advances of loan certificates, and it was agreed that thereafter, at the morning exchange, the clerk of the Keystone National Bank, after receiving the packages of checks and other exchanges from the creditor banks, should leave the packages with the clearing-house manager as security that any debtor balance due by it on that settlement should be paid by the bank before 12 o'clock of the same day.

The Keystone National Bank did not pay its debtor balance of $47,029.75 due at the morning exchange of March 20, 1891, by 12 o'clock that day, and that balance has never been paid or tendered. Shortly after 10 o'clock on the same day, by virtue of an order made by the comptroller of the currency, the Keystone National Bank was closed by William P. Drew, bank examiner, and thereafter Robert M. Yardley was appointed receiver thereof. After 12 o'clock on the same day (March 20, 1891), the clearing-house manager, acting under the instructions of the clearing-house committee, notified the banks which had presented the packages containing the checks, drafts, and other evidences of indebtedness against the Keystone National Bank for $117,035.21, that they must make those packages good by paying into the clearing house that amount of money, and accordingly, in compliance with this demand, these banks forthwith paid to the clearing house manager $117,035.21 in cash, and took away the packages.

After the morning exchange on that day, the state of accounts between the Keystone

National Bank and the clearing-house association was this: The debtor balance of the bank on that morning's settlement, as we have seen, was $47,029.75. Its debtor balances on the exchanges of the preceding day amounted to $41,197.86, for which it had issued its clearing-house due-bills,—two thereof, amounting to $23,890.52, to the clearing-house association, and several others amounting to $17,806.84, directly to certain banks of the association. These due-bills were in the form prescribed by the rules of the association, bore date March 19, 1891, and by their terms were "payable only in the exchanges through the clearing-house the day after issue." Then, in addition to its debtor balances on these exchanges, the Keystone National Bank owed $335,000 on clearing-house loan certificates which had been issued to it previously by the clearing-house committee, agreeably to the provisions of a written agreement between all the associated banks. To secure the payment of this last-mentioned indebtedness for $335,000, the bank had deposited with the clearing-house committee collateral securities; but the other banks were ultimately responsible for that debt in case of a deficiency in the collaterals, for by the terms of the written agreement referred to any loss caused by the nonpayment of clearing-house loan certificates issued by the committee to any member of the association was assessable upon all the other banks in the ratio of capital.

The money, namely, the $117,035.21, which the other banks, upon the call of the exchanges not found good are to be returned the same day, before 1:30 P. M., to the member from whom received, who shall immediately reimburse the holder of the same," construed with a clause of the constitution of the clearing house making the articles of association operative and binding on the members, is held by the district court of the United States in Preston v. Canadian Bank of Commerce, 23 Fed. Rep. 179, to constitute a contract limiting the time within which mistakes could be corrected, and the right to recover back the payment made on a check by mistake was denied, where the mistake was discovered after 1:30 and payment demanded fifteen minutes before 2 o'clock P. M. The court disapproves the Massachusetts case of Merchants Nat. Bank v. National Eagle Bank, 101 Mass. 281, as overlooking the rule that parties may agree to limit the time for correcting mistakes.

Where a promissory note was sent through the clearing house for payment, and the bank at which it was payable by mistake stamped it "paid," when there were no funds there for payment, but the mistake was discovered before the close of banking hours and the note duly protested, with notice to the indorsers, in an action by this bank, which had paid the amount of the note to the discounting bank, brought against the indorsers the dispute was as to the obligation to return the note by the hour fixed under clearing-house rules, but this was held not to be a condition of recovery. Manufacturers Nat. Bank v. Thompson, 129 Mass. 428.

In the absence of any rule of the clearing house in regard to the return of notes payable at a bank sent through the clearing house, and the amount of which is included in settlement with the clearing house by the bank at which they are payable, and in the absence of any uniform custom or usage to treat notes the same as checks in this particular, the payment of such a note made at a clearing house is provisional, to become complete when the note is paid in the usual and ordinary course of business, and if not so paid, the payment at the clearing house is treated as if made under a mistake of fact to the same extent and subject to the same right of reclamation as if made without the intervention of the clearing house. National Exch. Bank v. National Bank of North America, 182 Mass. 147.

In such a case, the bank at which notes are payable, and which has paid them through the clearing house, is entitled to recover the amount through the bank to which they were paid, if, before the close of the day's business, after discovering that the notes will not be paid, it demands return of payment from such other banks, with a tender of the notes. The return of the notes before 1 o'clock, in accordance with the clearing-house rule as to checks is not a condition of the recovery. National Exch. Bank v. National Bank of North America, supra.

A bank sending through a clearing house, without any notice of the fact that it was received on deposit from a stranger, a check on another bank, is not thereby guilty of negligence so as to be liable as a guarantor of the genuineness of the check, if the drawee bank on receiving it through the clearing house passes it as genuine and fails to return it or discover that it is a forgery for several days afterwards. Commercial & F. Nat. Bank of Baltimore v. First Nat. Bank of Baltimore, 80 Md. 11, 96 Am. Dec. 554.

The waiver of a clearing-house rule requiring a check paid by mistake to be returned on the same day is held to be established, where on a subsequent day the bank which had received the payment repaid it on its return through the clearing house, even if the waiver was induced by the clearing-house committee, paid on March 20, 1891, to the clearing-house manager, he immediately appropriated, by the direction of the committee, in manner following: To make good the balance due by the Keystone National Bank on that morning's exchanges, $47,029.75; to the payment of the due-bills given by the bank for its debtor balances on the exchanges of the preceding day, $41,197.86; and the residue, $28,808.10, he applied towards the cancellation of the clearing-house loan certificates which had been issued to that bank. Has the receiver of the bank any just reason to complain of that appropriation, or of the transaction in any respect?

The receiver of an insolvent national bank takes its assets subject to all just claims and defenses that might have been interposed against the corporation itself; and all liens, equities, and rights arising by express agreement, or implied from the nature of the dealings between the parties, or by operation of law, prior to insolvency, and not in contemplation thereof, remain unimpaired. Scott v. Armstrong, 146 U. S. 499, 510, 36 L. ed. 1059, 1068. The morning exchange on March 20 between the Keystone National Bank and its clearing-house associates, in itself, was unimpeachable. It took place before the bank examiner acted. The clearing-house association had no reason to suspect the impending failure. On the part of the bank itself the transaction was in the regular course of its business, and with a view to continued operations. It did not act in contemplation of insolvency, nor with a purpose to give one creditor a preference over another, or to prevent the application of its assets in the manner prescribed by law in case of insolvency. The rights of the parties were fixed when the bank was closed. As between the Keystone National Bank and the other banks, the morning exchange had been already consummated. The packages of exchanges on the one side and the other had been delivered and receipted for. The exchange itself was an accomplished fact. What remained to be done was the payment by the Keystone National Bank of its debtor difference of $47,029.75 to the clearing-house manager. To insure this payment by 12 o'clock, the bank, under its arrangement with the clearing-house committee, left its sealed packages in the hands of the clearing-house manager. The bank, however, defaulted, and what afterwards occurred in the clearing-house was in consequence. The situation was unprecedented. The bank had been closed by the government officer. The pledge was not an ordinary one. The sealed packages on temporary deposit with the clearing-house manager did not contain assets of the bank, but checks and drafts drawn upon it, and other evidences of its indebtedness. As the packages contained commercial paper, prompt action might be necessary to hold indorsers and drawers. In the emergency, occasioned wholly by the default of the Keystone National Bank, whose supposed equity is the foundation of this bill, the clearing-house committee made the call upon the other banks already mentioned. Whether those banks were bound to comply with that demand to its full extent we need not inquire. Under the stress of the situation they saw fit to do so, and paid into the clearing-house, of their own moneys, $117,- threatened refusal of the other bank to make further exchanges. Stuyvesant Bank v. National Mechanics Bkg. Asso. 7 Lans. 197. The effect of the rule if it had not been waived is not decided.

A bank which is not a member of a clearing house association which sends to another bank which is a member checks for presentation through the clearing house is bound by the act of the latter bank in returning payment made by mistake on on the checks, which were forged. Stuyvesant Bank v. National Mechanics Bkg. Asso. supra.

A bank of Hoboken, N. J., is not bound by the rules of the New York clearing house as to the time for returning checks not good in case of a check drawn upon it which the payee deposits in a New York bank and which is passed through the clearing house, although the Hoboken bank has an agent in New York, another bank which is a member of the clearing house. This does not make the Hoboken bank a member of the clearing house, and its obligation as to returning a check which its New York agent has received through the clearing house depends on the ordinary principles applicable to such cases instead of the clearing-house rules. Overman v. Hoboken City Bank, 81 N. J. L. 563, affirming 80 N. J. L. 61.

Proof of a usage of the New York clearing house to return checks drawn on banks within the city of New York in a certain limited period is not sufficient to show that a check drawn on a bank in Hoboken, N. J., is governed by that rule. Overman v. Hoboken City Bank, 81 N. J. L. 563.

The temporary custom, not usually followed by banks belonging to a clearing house, to return checks before noon, will not relieve a bank from liability to receive a check, for which there were no funds, on the day of its presentation, and which was not returned until 8 P. M. Banque Nationale v. Merchants Bank, Mont. L. Rep. 7 Sup. Ct. 233.

g. Effect of clearing-house rules and customs.

The clearing-house rules are declared by the court to have the force of law, as between the associated banks. German Nat. Bank of Pittsburgh v. Farmers Deposit Nat. Bank, 116 Pa. 294. See also People v. St. Nicholas Bank, 77 Hun. 150; Overman v. Hoboken City Bank, and other cases in preceding division.

h. Agency of clearing-house members.

In Overman v. Hoboken City Bank, 81 N. J. L. 563, the court says: "The entire system on which the business of the clearing house is transacted is inconsistent with the theory that any of the members in their transactions with each other are the agents of parties who are not members. They trust each other as principals, and hence the facility with which that immense business is transacted."

See also Stuyvesant Bank v. National Mechanics Bkg. Asso. 7 Lans. 197.

i. Gold clearing-house.

In case of the department of a banking corporation known as the "clearing house," which was for the business of the general clearance of contracts for the purchase and sale of gold, in which the bank acted as the common agent of dealers in gold in settling their contracts, it was held that all the transactions of the day must be regarded as one for the purpose of clearance of a dealer who presented two statements for clearance on the same day contrary to the usage of the business, and that the failure of a firm which affected one of the state

085.21, and relieved the manager of his custody of the packages. Did this work an annulment of the morning exchange? We cannot so conclude. That deduction would be highly unreasonable. That the banks which paid in this money intended such a result is incredible. The whole transaction negatives the idea of intended rescission. Indeed, the other banks had no right to undo the morning exchange without the concurrence of the Keystone National Bank. Nor was it to their interest to disturb what had taken place. Why should they pay this large sum of money into the clearing house in relief of the debtor bank? Assuredly, this money was not paid for the benefit or use of the Keystone National Bank. The other banks made the payment in promotion of their own interests as members of the association, primarily in order that they might make settlements inter se. This they were at liberty to do without relinquishing any of their rights or equities as against their defaulting associate. The obligation of the Keystone National Bank to pay its debtor balance remained in full force. Without the payment of the $47,029.75, the bank was not entitled to the return of the deposited packages. Hence those packages were rightfully withheld from the bank. Nothing is better settled than the right of a transferee of a pledge to hold it until the debt for which it was given is paid. Story, Bailm. § 327; Donald v. Suckling, L. R. 1 Q. B. 585; Talty v. Freedmans' Sav. & T. Co. 98 U. S. 321, 23 L. ed. 886. This principle is peculiarly applicable here, for the clearing-house manager held the deposited packages for the benefit of the creditor banks. It is our judgment that the morning exchange between the associated banks was valid, and was not avoided, or the rights thereunder of the clearing-house association or of the creditor banks impaired, by what subsequently occurred.

It is quite plain that the court below proceeded upon views radically different from those we have expressed. The decree, it will be perceived, entirely overlooks the default of the Keystone National Bank, and puts the receiver in a far better position than the bank would have been in had it fulfilled the terms of its pledge. Had it done that, it would have paid into the clearing house $47,029.75, whereas, without paying anything, the receiver has a decree requiring the defendants to account to him for the whole $70,005.46. We are unable to accept that result as just. The principle of the decision of the supreme court in the case of Scott v. Armstrong, supra, requires that the equities and rights arising from the express agreements or implied from the nature of the dealings between the Keystone National Bank on the one side and the clearing-house association or the other members thereof on the other side, prior to the closing of the bank, shall be preserved and enforced.

Was anything done prejudicial to the rights of the Keystone National Bank or its receiver? As already stated, the clearing-house due-bills, amounting to $41,197.86, which the bank had given for its balances on the exchanges of the preceding day, were paid out of the fund claimed by the receiver. Can the rightfulness of that appropriation be gainsaid? On the face of each due-bill it was stipulated that it was "payable only in the exchanges through the clearing-house the day after issue." Those due-bills were actually in the morning exchange on March 20, ments was ground for denying a clearance of the other statement, although it was also held that the failure affected both statements. National City Bank v. New York Nat. Gold Exch. Bank, 101 N. Y. 506.

Such a bank, being the common agent for dealers in gold, employed in the settlement of their contracts, which furnished and delivered the gold to fulfill the contract of a dealer who was in default, was held estopped from denying the right of such dealer to the benefit of the contract on tendering to the bank the amount of gold so delivered with a demand for the currency received, but that the bank was entitled to retain as an indemnity for furnishing it so much of the currency received as the gold was actually worth at the time, and that the dealer was only entitled to the surplus. Fowler v. New York Gold Exch. Bank, 67 N. Y. 138. This case is decided on the principles governing brokers, and, although it involves the business of a so-called clearing house, seems to have less relevancy to the subject of clearing houses for banks than to the general business of stock and produce exchanges, and their system of mutual cancellations and adjustment of differences.

1. Country clearing-house of London.

The business of a clearing house for country banks, recognized in London, has been recognized in several cases. In Bailey v. Bodenham, 16 C. B. N. S. 288, it was assumed to be proper to send a check on a country bank to London for presentation at the country clearing-house, but the question actually involved was as to diligence, after the refusal of the check at the clearing house because the drawee had ceased to have any correspondent in London.

In Hare v. Henty, 10 C. B. N. S. 65, a check was sent by a bank to its correspondent in London for presentation at the country clearing house to the correspondent of the drawee bank, and it was held, on the question of negligence, in presenting it toward the depositor of the check that, as it was presented through the clearing house and reached the drawee as soon as the rules required if there had been no clearing house, there was no negligence.

k. Miscellaneous.

The following cases are of interest in this connection although they involve clearing house only incidentally.

Payment of the amount of a statement sent by a bank as representing paper taken up at a clearing house, but which in fact includes the amount of a forged certificate of deposit which had been deposited in the bank for collection and not sent through the clearing house, and failure to discover the forgery until after the close of business hours, was held not to prevent remedying the mistake. Allen v. Fourth Nat. Bank of New York, 59 N. Y. 12.

A bank which has obtained an accommodation note for use at the clearing house, by solicitation of its president and sole managing officer, was held estopped to deny its own want of legal capacity to take it for that purpose. Simons v. Fisher, 20 L. R. A. 554, 55 Fed. Rep. 905.

For note on exceptions to the prohibition of preferences by insolvent national banks, see Elmira Sav. Bank v. Davis (N. Y.) ante, p. 546. B. A. R.

1891. They were in the packages amounting to $117,035.21, delivered to the clerk of the Keystone National Bank. They were entitled to payment out of the bank's credit of $70,005.46 in that morning's exchanges. The application of the $41,197.86 to those due-bills was therefore right, even upon the receiver's hypothesis as to the origin of the fund which the clearing-house manager disbursed. The due-bills were extinguished. By no possibility can they come against the funds in the hands of the receiver.

Is the receiver in any position to question the application of the $28,808.10 to the indebtedness of the Keystone National Bank as a member of the clearing-house association on its loan-certificate account? That liability arose from the course of dealings between the bank and the clearing house, and under an express agreement between all the members thereof, whereby the other associated banks were chargeable with any loss occasioned by the failure of the Keystone National Bank to pay. The other banks, therefore, had a prevailing equity to have applied to that debt money of their own which they paid into the clearing-house under the circumstances as disclosed. How can the receiver object that, as the outcome of the settlement between the other banks, a balance from funds which they provided was applied to the reduction of the debt due by his bank? Then, again, the receiver, who has no higher rights than his bank, is in a court of equity. Here he is met by the default of the bank in not paying into the clearing-house the $47,029.75 it was bound to pay. He has not deemed it to be for the interest of his trust to pay that money. He does not propose to do so. How, then, can he ask a decree against the defendants for the $28,808.10? Obviously, to the extent of his bank's default, he is without equity.

For the reasons stated, we hold that the receiver has no good ground upon which to challenge the transactions in the clearing-house. We add a single observation: As the right of set-off existed between the banks, Scott v. Armstrong, supra; Yardley v. Clothier, 51 Fed. Rep. 506, 11 L. R. A. 462, it is by no means clear that the other creditors of the Keystone National Bank would have fared better if the exchange had not taken place. With claims aggregating $117,035.21 as against claims for $70,005.46, it would seem improbable that anything would have been recoverable by the receiver.

Finally, the receiver does not show himself to be entitled here to equitable relief of any nature. The due-bills for $41,197.86 are entirely out of the way. It does not appear that any items in the packages for $117,035.21 have been proved against the funds in the hands of the receiver, or have been presented to him for payment, or that any suit thereon has been brought or is threatened. If the receiver has the right to insist upon the formal cancellation of $28,808.10 of those items (which is the utmost he can claim), the present bill is not available to him to secure such decree. No such relief is here sought. The bill is not framed for that purpose. It is not apparent that the receiver needs the aid of a court of equity; but, if he is entitled to equitable relief, it is as against the other banks. Those banks are not parties to this suit.

The decree of the Circuit Court is reversed, and the case is remanded to that court with directions to dismiss the bill of complaint.
Green, District Judge, dissents.

Butler, District Judge concurs:

While I believe the foregoing opinion sufficiently vindicates the conclusion reached, I desire, in view of the dissent expressed, to add a few lines. It must be kept in mind that the suit is against certain individuals as the clearing-house committee, and not against the banks involved in the exchange. If the latter did anything by which the plaintiff is aggrieved we cannot consider it here. The defendants are only liable for their own acts. These acts are those connected with the exchange of March 20, 1891. What were they? On the morning of that day the Keystone Bank delivered to their manager a package of its own obligations (received from other banks for cancellation) to be held as security for the payment of $47,000, which it had undertaken to pay by 12 o'clock that day. It did not pay; and as the value of the security depended upon holding the indorsers, the committee, on being indemnified by the receipt of an equal sum of money from the other banks, handed the obligations over to them. On this state of facts what claim has the receiver on the committee? Until the $47,000 are paid by the Keystone or the receiver, neither has any right to the obligations; nor can either complain of the disposition made of them. When the money for which they are pledged is paid the receiver will be entitled to them, and the committee must then produce them, or account for their value. The bank did not pay the money, and the receiver will not, because it greatly exceeds the value of the obligations—which consist of promises of the broken bank, comparatively worthless. Their value is just the amount of the dividends they will draw if not redeemed. If the receiver redeems them he, or rather the creditors of the bank, will be benefited to the extent of the dividends thus saved—nothing more.

The fundamental error of the plaintiff consists in the assumption that the exchange of obligations was annulled by the subsequent transaction between the committee and the other banks—respecting which nothing need be added to what is said in the foregoing opinion. But if we concede this assumption the plaintiff will not be helped. The annulment of the exchange, if it bound the Keystone, might and doubtless would entitle the latter to a return of the $70,000 of obligations, which it had previously held. But it would not render the committee liable for their return. The committee never had nor saw them. But even conceding the committee's responsibility for their return, the assumption that it became liable to pay $70,000 for failure to return them is clearly erroneous. In such case the measure of damages would be the amount the receiver lost by such failure. This would be the value of the obligations to him and the creditors. Let us see what this is. The banks owing the obligations, held $117,000 of the Keystone's liabilities, which were a valid set-off. The receiver could not therefore recover a cent. The obligations nevertheless had some value, as they would extinguish $70,000 of the Keystone's liabilities, thus diminishing the claims against its assets that much; saving to the creditors the dividends which the $70,000 of obligations would draw if not canceled. This, then, is the loss from failure to return them. If the assets will pay 80 per cent (which is very improbable), the dividends on $70,000 would be $21,000. Thus we see, even assuming that the exchange was annulled, and that the committee became responsible for the obligations, the receiver is not entitled to $70,000, as claimed and awarded. As the dividend rate is not ascertained we cannot know what (in this view) the receiver's loss is.

But the plaintiff further assumes that the clearing-house received $70,000 for the Keystone Bank, in its transaction with the other banks, after the Keystone's failure. This assumption is wholly unwarranted. Nothing I think can be plainer than that the other banks did not pay any money to the committee for the Keystone, or its receiver. Why should they? What object could they have in doing so? They owed that bank nothing. On the contrary it owed them. Why therefore should they volunteer to pay the obligations it had held against them while they held its obligations (which were an available set-off), exceeding the amount in $47,000? In doing so they would simply throw away $70,000, (saving the inconsiderable sum that might be recovered back in dividends). It is clear that none of the money paid to the committee was intended for the Keystone, or inured to its benefit. It gave up nothing. Its rights under the exchange remain intact. When it pays its debt the obligations must be returned or their value accounted for. The object of the other banks in paying money to the committee is not clear, and we are not called upon to ascertain it. Why it was paid and what was done with it is unimportant. It was their own, to do with as they pleased. It was probably paid to settle balances among themselves. But whatever the object was, it is clear that it was not to benefit the Keystone Bank, and did not interest it. It is conceded that the object was to benefit themselves, alone.

The erroneousness of the decree may be illustrated by another statement. The Keystone Bank cannot claim to be placed in a better position than it occupied at the date of its failure, or to be benefited by its refusal to keep its contract and the action forced on the other banks thereby. Yet it is indisputable that the decree does place it in an infinitely better position—gives it, in effect, over $80,000 as a premium for its faithlessness. Let us see if this cannot be demonstrated. If the bank had kept its contract, it would have paid out $47,000, which would have been lost to the receiver and creditors—by diminishing the assets for distribution that much. It would then receive $117,000, not of money, but of its own nearly worthless obligations, for cancellation. The receipt of these obligations would have benefited the receiver and creditors just to the extent of the dividend the obligations would draw if not canceled. Now supposing the dividend rate to be 80 per cent (which is doubtless much too high) the dividends on the $117,000 of obligations would be $35,100. To redeem and cancel them costs $47,000; deducting the $35,100 from this shows a loss to the receiver and creditors of $11,900, as the result of carrying out the contract. The receiver acted wisely therefore in not carrying it out; he saved $11,900. But because he did not carry it out and the committee and the other banks entered into the subsequent transaction on their own account, and for their own exclusive benefit, he is given an additional sum of $70,000; and is thus made a gainer in $81,900 by the failure to keep the contract. If the banks had intended to annul the exchange of obligations (which they could not do after the receiver's rights attached), they would of course have returned the obligations received by them from the Keystone, and set off against them the obligations of that bank which they held. To pay it, or for it, $70,000 in money, as it is alleged they did, would have been an act of folly incompatible with sanity. Of course nothing of the kind was intended or done.

Reversed, 167 U. S. 844, 42 L. ed. 192.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

ST. LOUIS, IRON MOUNTAIN & SOUTHERN R. CO., Plff. in Err.,

v.

Mrs. D. L. NEEDHAM et al.

(68 Fed. Rep. 107.)

1. The duty of opening and closing a switch in the ordinary operation of a railroad is not one of the personal duties of the master which cannot be delegated to a servant so as to bring negligence in respect to it within the rule as to fellow servants.

2. The negligence of the conductor of a construction train in leaving open a switch, which a rule of the company makes it his duty to attend to in person is the negligence of a fellow servant of a fireman on a passenger train who is injured in consequence of the open switch.

NOTE.—The above case is a valuable contribution to the law of fellow servants in its discussion and denial of the application of the rules as to a master's absolute duties to the closing of a switch.

25 L. R. A.

The relation of superior and inferior servants is discussed carefully in notes to Dixon v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (Mo.) 18 L. R. A. 792, and Relyea v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. (Mo.) 18 L. R. A. 817.

(July 16, 1894.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Arkansas to review a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries resulting in death and alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Before Caldwell and Sanborn, Circuit Judges, and Thayer, District Judge.

Messrs. George E. Dodge and B. S. Johnson, for plaintiff in error:

All persons who are in the employment of the same master, working in the same common service, or engaged in the same general business, though it may be in different grades or departments of it, are fellow servants who take the risk of each other's negligence.

Gravelle v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 3 McCrary, 352; Vallas v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 85 Ill. 500.

Common employment is service of such kind where employes belong to one master, are paid from the same source, and are engaged in the same business. The following employes have been held to be fellow servants.

Brakeman and engineer.

Randall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 109 U. S. 483, 27 L. ed. 1005; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Texas & P. R. Co. 31 Fed. Rep. 527.

Brakeman and fireman.

Kersey v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 79 Mo. 362; Batterson v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 49 Mich. 192.

Brakeman and conductors.

Hodgkins v. Eastern R. Co. 119 Mass. 419.

Conductors and firemen.

Slater v. Jewett, 85 N. Y. 61, 39 Am. Rep. 627.

Brakeman and yardmaster.

Beal v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 70 N. Y. 171.

Conductors and surveyors.

Ross v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 5 Hun, 488.

Engineers and yardmasters.

Union Pac. R. Co. v. Young, 8 Kan. 658; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Milliken, Id. 647.

Engineers and switch tenders.

Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Henry, 7 Ill. App. 322; Daub v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 18 Fed. Rep. 625; Naylor v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 33 Fed. Rep. 802.

Engineers and track repairers.

Van Wickle v. Manhattan R. Co. 32 Fed. Rep. 278; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Murphy, 53 Ill. 336, 5 Am. Rep. 48; Rohback v. Pacific Railroad, 48 Mo. 187.

Station agent and brakeman.

Toner v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 69 Wis. 188; Gaffney v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 15 R. I. 456.

Yardmaster and car coupler.

Webb v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 97 N. C. 887.

Trainmen on different trains are fellow servants.

Van Avery v. Union Pac. R. Co. 35 Fed. Rep. 40; Central Trust Co. v. Wabash St. L. & P. R. Co. 34 Fed. Rep. 616; Easton v. Houston & T. O. R. Co. 32 Fed. Rep. 898; McKaig v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 42 Fed. Rep. 288; Ken- 25 L. R. A.

tucky Cent. R. Co. v. Ackley, 37 Ky. 278; Master v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. 65 Miss. 264; Miller v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 20 Or. 285; St. Louis, I. M. & S. Railway v. Shackelford, 42 Ark. 420.

In Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. ed. 787, the only point the supreme court decided is, that the negligence of the conductor of a railway train is, as regards the other train hands upon the same train over which he has control, the negligence of the master.

Mealman v. Union Pac. R. Co. 37 Fed. Rep. 189; Howard v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 26 Fed. Rep. 840; Garraty v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 25 Fed. Rep. 262, note; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 379, 37 L. ed. 778; Randall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 109 U. S. 478, 27 L. ed. 1003; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Andrews, 17 L. R. A. 190, 6 U. S. App. 75, 50 Fed. Rep. 728; Minneapolis v. Lundin, 58 Fed. Rep. 525; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Cavanaugh, 10 U. S. App. 197, 51 Fed. Rep. 517; Enright v. Toledo A. A. & N. M. R. Co. 98 Mich. 409; Kerlin v. Chicago, P. & St. L. R. Co. 50 Fed. Rep. 185.

It was not the master's duty to see that the switch was kept closed.

Miller v. Southern Pac. R. Co. supra.

Messrs. James P. Clarke, J. C. Marshall, and C. T. Coffman, for defendants in error:

The court instructed the jury that it was the duty of the railroad company to have that switch in proper order. If the testimony shows that it was not in proper order by reason of not having a target that could be seen by the engineer, and for that reason the injury was caused and the man came to his death, then it was the negligence of the company.

There was no exception to this declaration by the court, and it stands as the unchallenged law of the case, defining the duties of the master in respect to the switch.

Under these circumstances the jury could reach but one conclusion. This being true, any error the court might have made in any instruction relating to any other aspect of the case became immaterial.

Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Charles, 51 Fed. Rep. 562; St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Triplett, 11 L. R. A. 773, 54 Ark. 289; West v. Camden, 135 U. S. 521, 34 L. ed. 258.

There was no error in that part of the charge of the court which defined the relationship of the conductor, Fertime, to be that of vice-principal.

Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. ed. 787, establishes the representative character of the conductor as the fixed status of that official.

Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 379, 37 L. ed. 778, concedes the soundness of this decision by saying that as to the duties properly pertaining to the position of a conductor, his representative character could not be changed by any rule or other action of the corporation master.

It is said that this representative character of the conductor is confined to subordinates on his own train. The principle which underlies the whole decision does not justify any such conclusion.

Ragsdale v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 42 Fed. Rep. 888; Daniel v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 36 W. Va. 897; Jenkins v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 89 S. C. 507; Mase v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 57 Fed. Rep. 283; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Callaghan, 56 Fed. Rep. 988; Coleman v. Wilmington, C. & A. R. Co. 25 S. C. 446, 60 Am. Rep. 516; Woods v. Lindvall, 48 Fed. Rep. 62.

Sanborn, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

Is a railroad company liable under the general law for the injury of an employé on one train caused by the negligence of the conductor of another train in leaving a switch open that it was his duty to close?

The writ of error is brought to reverse a judgment recovered by the defendant in error Mrs. D. L. Needham against the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Company, the plaintiff in error, for the death of her husband. The action was brought under sections 5225 and 5226 of Mansfield's Digest of the Statutes of Arkansas, which permit the personal representatives or heirs-at-law to recover for the death of a person caused by any wrongful act, neglect, or default that would have entitled the party injured to have recovered if death had not ensued. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Needham, 10 U. S. App. 889, 3 C. C. A. 129, and 52 Fed. Rep. 871.

A rule of the company provided: "That conductors of all trains, when approaching meeting points where they are to take the siding, must go to the forward part of trains, and attend to the switch in person. On train leaving the siding, they must set up switch for the main track in person. Conductors must not assign this duty to any one, but must attend to it in person in every instance."

The decedent was a fireman on a passenger train running south from Little Rock, Ark., December 16, 1889. About two hours before this passenger train arrived at Alexander (a station ten miles south of Little Rock), the conductor of a construction train of the railroad company caused the switch of the spur track at that place to be opened, ran his train upon that track, and then ran it north to Little Rock, and left the switch open, when it was his duty to close it. The passenger train ran into the open switch, and Mr. Needham was killed. The counsel for the company requested the court to charge the jury that the negligence of the conductor of the construction train was the negligence of a fellow servant of the deceased, on account of which the defendants in error could not recover. The court refused to grant this request, and charged the jury that, if the injury was caused by the carelessness of the conductor of any train in opening the switch and leaving it without being closed properly, then the negligence of that man was not the negligence of the fellow servant, but the negligence of the company, and that, if the death of Needham was caused by that negligence, the defendants in error could recover.

In Minneapolis v. Lundin, 7 C. C. A. 844, 58 Fed. Rep. 525, 527, this court held that a servant might become the vice-principal of his master, either on account of the character of the duties the performance of which was intrusted to him, or on account of the position of general supervision and control of the entire business or a great department of the business of his master in which he might be placed. An effort is made to sustain the ruling below on both these grounds. It is contended—First, that the duty of keeping the switch in proper position for the passage of trains is an absolute personal duty of a railroad company, and that it cannot so delegate it as to relieve itself from liability for negligence in its performance (the learned judge who tried this case below has expressed his views upon this question in Mase v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 57 Fed. Rep. 288); second, that the conductor of a railroad train is the head of a distinct department, and hence is a vice-principal for all of whose derelictions of duty the railroad company is responsible.

Prima facie all persons engaged in a common employment in the service of the same master are fellow servants. A servant who enters with others upon a common employment in the service of the common master assumes the ordinary risks of that service. One of these ordinary risks which he thus assumes is the risk of injury from the negligence of his fellow servants.

It is the duty of the master to use ordinary care to employ fit and reasonably careful co-workmen to assist in the common service. It is his duty to use ordinary care to furnish reasonably safe machinery and instrumentalities with which the servant may perform his work, and a reasonably safe place in which he may render his service, and to use ordinary care and diligence to keep the machinery, instrumentalities, and place in a reasonably safe condition. These are absolute personal duties of the master, and cannot be so delegated as to relieve him from liability for their negligent performance.

But is the timely opening and closing of switches in the ordinary operation of a railroad one of these absolute duties?

The quarryman who uses due care to furnish to competent servants, and to keep in repair, a strong and sound derrick, in a reasonably safe place, to handle the product of his quarry, has performed his duty as a master. He is not responsible to one of his servants because another so negligently operates the ropes or the pulleys that the safe place that the master furnished is made unsafe, and the strong derrick dangerous, so that injury results.

The manufacturer of lumber who uses due care to furnish and to keep in repair, in a reasonably safe place, suitable machinery to transform trees into the myriad forms the uses of man demand, has performed his personal duty when he has placed this machinery in the hands of reasonably competent servants to be operated. The risk that the place in which it is operated will become unsafe, or the machinery dangerous, by the negligence of some of the servants in operating it, is assumed by the servants themselves, because upon them rests the duty of careful operation.

In other words, the line of demarkation here between the absolute duty of the master and the duty of the servants is the line that separates the work of construction, preparation, and preservation from the work of operation. Is the act in question work required to construct, to prepare, to place in a safe location, or to keep in repair the machinery furnished by the employer? If so, it is his personal duty to exercise ordinary care to perform it. Is the act in question required to properly and safely operate the machinery furnished, or to prevent the safe place in which it was furnished from becoming dangerous through its negligent operation? If so, it is the duty of the servants to perform that act, and they, and not the master, assume the risk of negligence in its performance.

The roadbed, ties, tracks, stations, rolling stock, and all the appurtenances of a well-equipped railroad together constitute a great machine for transportation. It is the duty of the railroad company to use ordinary care to furnish a sound and reasonably safe machine, to use due diligence to keep it in proper repair, and to use ordinary care to employ reasonably competent servants to operate it; but, when this duty is performed, the duty rests upon the servants to operate it carefully. In the case before us there is no evidence that the conductor who negligently left the switch open was not selected with reasonable care. There is no claim that there was any defect in the switch that hindered or prevented the conductor from closing it. The company furnished a switch sufficient to move the rails, and used due care in selecting the servant to operate it. Before this servant commenced to operate it, the switch was closed, so that the passenger train on which the decedent was killed might have passed in safety. It became the duty of the conductor, in the operation of the railroad, to open this switch, and to run his train through it upon the spur track. He did so. It then became his duty to take his train off the spur track, and to close the switch. He took his train off, and proceeded south, but carelessly left the switch open. His negligence was not in the construction, preparation, or repair of the railroad, but in its operation. The railroad was safe before he made it unsafe by his negligence in operating it, and he was discharging none of the personal duties of the master, but one of the duties of the servant, when he became guilty of the fatal negligence. Any other holding would annihilate the now settled rule of liability for the negligence of fellow servants. It will not do to say that the timely movement and fastening of a switch in the ordinary operation of a railroad is requisite to provide a safe place for the next train to be operated in, and hence is one of the personal duties of the master. Under such a rule, it would become the absolute duty of the master to so operate all switches, all turntables, the levers of all engines, all brakes, all cars, and every appurtenance of the railroad that every place upon it should at all times be safe, and no negligence of any employé could ever cause an injury to another servant for which the master might not be held liable. At the instant of the injury, every place in which an injury is inflicted is unsafe. The test of liability is not the safety of the place nor of the machinery at the instant of injury, but the character of the duty, the negligent performance of which caused the injury. Was it a duty of construction, preparation, or repair, or was it a duty of operation of the machine?

25 L. R. A.

In our opinion, the duty of opening and closing a switch in the ordinary operation of a railroad is not one of the personal duties of the master, but a duty of operation,—a duty of the servant,—for negligence in the discharge of which another servant of the same master, engaged in operating a train over the same railroad, cannot recover. And so are the authorities.

In Randall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 109 U. S. 488, 27 L. ed. 1005, a brakeman working a switch for his train on one track in a railroad yard was held to be a fellow servant with the engineer of another train of the same corporation. Mr. Justice Gray, in delivering the opinion of the court said: "The general rule is now firmly established that one who enters the service of another takes upon himself the ordinary risks of the negligent acts of his fellow servants in the course of the employment. . . . Persons standing in such relations to one another as did this plaintiff and the engineman of the other train are fellow servants, according to the very great preponderance of judicial authority in this country, as well as the uniform course of decision in the house of lords and in the English and Irish courts, as is clearly shown by the cases cited in the margin;" and he cites numerous authorities.

In Naylor v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 88 Fed. Rep. 801, an engineer who came to his death by the carelessness of a switchman in leaving a switch open was held to be a fellow servant of the latter.

In Roberts v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co., 83 Minn. 218, a train ran off the track in consequence of a misplaced switch, negligently left open by the switchman, and caused the death of the baggage master on the train. The court held that the switchman and baggage master were fellow servants, within the rule exempting the company from liability.

In Harvey v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 88 N. Y. 481, 484, the fireman on an engine which was thrown from the track by a misplaced switch, left open by the negligence of a switchman, was held to be a fellow servant of the latter. The court said: "This is a plain case. It is evident that the primary cause of the injury was the neglect of the switchman Baldwin to properly adjust the switch after using it to pass the local freight back upon track number three. As Baldwin must be deemed to have been the coservant of the plaintiff's intestate, the plaintiff cannot recover, unless some neglect of the defendant, as principal, also contributed to produce the injury."

In Slattery v. Toledo & W. R. Co., 23 Ind. 81, a brakeman on a train and one whose duty it was to attend to the switch were declared to be engaged in the same general undertaking, and it was held that the company was not liable to one for an injury caused by the negligence of the other.

In Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Henry, 7 Ill. App. 822, the court held that an engineer running a switch engine and a switch tender were engaged in a common employment, and were fellow servants.

In Walker v. Boston & M. Railroad, 128 Mass. 10, an engineer and fireman were killed by a misplaced switch, which had been negligently left open; and, upon an action to recover damages from the company, the court below directed a verdict for the defendant, and this verdict was sustained.

In Miller v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 20 Or. 285, the engineer and fireman upon one train were injured through the negligence of the conductor and brakeman of another, who had failed to properly close a switch. The court held them all to be fellow servants with each other, and refused to permit a recovery against the company. In the opinion in this case the authorities are carefully reviewed, the reasoning is conclusive, and the most satisfactory and exhaustive consideration of this subject we have found in the books is presented.

See also Farwell v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 4 Met. 49, 38 Am. Dec. 839; Gilman v. Eastern R. Corp. 10 Allen, 233, 87 Am. Dec. 635; Columbus, C. & I. Cent. R. Co. v. Troesch, 68 Ill. 545, 18 Am. Rep. 578; Tinney v. Boston & A. R. Co. 62 Barb. 218; McKinney, Fellow Servants, § 188.

But it is said that the conductor whose negligence caused the injury occupied such a position of authority, control, and supervision that he was a vice-principal of the company, for whose derelictions of duty it was responsible, whatever might be the character of the duty he engaged to perform. In support of this proposition are cited Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. ed. 787; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Callaghan, 6 C. C. A. 205, 58 Fed. Rep. 988; Garrahy v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 25 Fed. Rep. 258; Ragsdale v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 42 Fed. Rep. 383; and Mass v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 57 Fed. Rep. 283.

The first two cases are easily distinguishable from that before us. In the Ross Case the engineer on a freight train recovered from the company for the joint negligence of the conductor of his own train and the conductor of a gravel train. The court drew a distinction "between servants of a corporation exercising no supervision over others engaged with them in the same employment, and agents of a corporation clothed with the control and management of a distinct department, in which their duty is entirely that of direction and supervision." 112 U. S. 390, 28 L. ed. 792, and rested its decision on a ground that has no application to this case, viz., that the person injured was under the direct authority and control of the person whose negligence caused the injury. Moreover, the decision in the Ross Case has been so limited and restricted by the subsequent decisions of the supreme court that it cannot now be treated as authority in any case which does not present substantially the same state of facts.

In Union Pac. R. Co. v. Callaghan, supra, the plaintiff was not the direct subordinate of the conductor. But he was riding, by direction of the company's superintendent, on a train that was under the entire control and management of the conductor, who directed at what time it should start, at what speed it should run, at what stations it should stop, and for what length of time, and everything essential to its successful movements; and it was by the negligence of this conductor in discharging his duty of supervision and control over the operation of this train, viz., in driving it too fast, and in failing to stop at proper stations, that he ran it into a defective bridge, and caused the injury.

The opinion in Mass v. Northern Pac. R. Co., supra, rests upon the proposition that the character of the work of a switchman makes him a vice-principal,—a proposition that we have already discussed and disapproved.

So far as the cases of Garrahy v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., supra, and Ragsdale v. Northern Pac. R. Co., supra, hold that under the general law a conductor or employé on one train, whose negligence causes the injury of an employé of the same master on another train, is not the fellow servant of the latter, it is sufficient to say that they have now been so universally disapproved by repeated decisions of the national courts and by the late decisions of the supreme court that they are no longer authority.

Thus, in Randall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 109 U. S. 483, 27 L. ed. 1005, which was decided in 1883, the brakeman engaged on one engine was injured while turning the switch for his train, by the negligence of the engineer of another engine, who ran the latter upon him. This engineer had absolute control of his engine and of all its movements at the time, but he was held to be a fellow servant of the injured brakeman, and the company was declared to be exempt from liability.

In Quebec S. S. Co. v. Merchant, 133 U. S. 375, 33 L. ed. 656, which was decided in 1889, the stewardess of a steam vessel was injured through the negligence of the porter and carpenter of the same vessel. The latter failed to properly secure a railing across the gangway, and the stewardess leaned over it, and fell into the water. The persons composing the ship's company were divided into three departments—the deck department, the engineer's department, and the steward's department. The carpenter and porter were in the deck department, and the stewardess in the steward's department; but she was held to be a fellow servant of the carpenter and porter, and was denied a recovery against the steamship company.

In Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Andrews, 1 C. C. A. 636, 50 Fed. Rep. 728, 17 L. R. A. 190, 6 U. S. App. 75, decided by the circuit court of appeals for the sixth circuit in 1892, a brakeman on one train was held to be the fellow servant of the conductor and engineer of another train, by whose negligence a collision was caused in which the brakeman was killed.

In Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 379, 37 L. ed. 778, decided in 1893, the supreme court held that an engineer who, under the rules of the company, was "regarded as conductor," and who had the direction and control of his engine and of his fireman upon it, was not a vice-principal of the company, and that the latter was not liable for an injury to the fireman, caused by the engineer's negligent disregard of his orders.

And, finally, in Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Hamby, 154 U. S. 849, 38 L. ed. 1009, decided May 26, 1894, the supreme court held that the conductor and engineer of a passenger train who negligently drove their train upon and injured a common laborer, employed under a section foreman in repairing the railroad, were fellow servants of the laborer, and that he could not recover of the company for their negligence.

So far as the national courts are concerned, these authorities conclude the discussion, and establish the proposition that, in the absence of statutory regulation, conductors, as well as other employes, whether they are charged with the duty of handling switches or of driving trains, are, so far as actions against the common master for negligence are concerned, the fellow servants of all other employes engaged in the common object of securing the safe passage of trains; and it conclusively follows that the conductor who left open this switch in the case before us was the fellow servant of the fireman on the train who was carried through it to his death.

But it is said that, if the court erred in its charge upon the subject we have been considering, that error did not prejudice the company, because there was uncontradicted testimony that there was no target on the switch; and the court charged the jury that if the switch was not in proper order because it had no target upon it, and for that reason the injury and death were caused, the company was liable.

This position cannot be successfully maintained. The testimony was such that the jury might well have found that the injury was neither caused nor contributed to by the absence of the target, and that it resulted solely from the negligence of the conductor, who left the switch open. The defendants in error charged two acts of negligence upon this company,—the failure to provide the target; and the failure of the conductor to close the switch. Issues were raised and submitted to the jury to determine whether either of these acts caused or contributed to the injury. The verdict was general, and its generality prevents us from discovering upon which of these acts of negligence charged it was founded. A general verdict cannot be upheld where there are several issues tried, and upon any one of them error is committed, in the admission or rejection of evidence, or in the charge of the court, because it may be that the jury founded their verdict upon the very issue to which the erroneous ruling related, and that they were controlled in their finding by that ruling. What Cheer Coal Co. v. Johnson, 6 C. C. A. 148, 151, 56 Fed. Rep. 810; Maryland v. Baldwin, 112 U. S. 490, 492, 28 L. ed. 822, 823.

The judgment below must be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to grant a new trial; and it is so ordered.

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

Terrence MARTIN, Appt.,

v.

Evan S. TYLER et al., Respts.

SAME, Appt.,

v.

George E. NICHOLS, Treasurer, et al.,
Respts.

SAME, Appt.,

v.

H. L. STAFFORD et al., Respts.

(.....N. Dak.....)

*1. A statute was entitled "An act to provide for establishing, constructing, and maintaining drains in this state." Laws 1893, chap. 55. It provided, inter alia, for the appointment of a drain commission, and vested in it the powers of the act. It provided for levying special assessments to pay for the cost of constructing drains. It provided for the issuance of county bonds to meet such expenses, and for the creation of a sinking fund to pay such bonds. Held, not vulnerable to the constitutional objection that the bill embraced more than one subject, or that the subject was not expressed in the title.

*Headnotes by BARTHOLOMEW, Ch. J.

2. Creating such drain commission, and vesting in it the powers of the act, did not violate section 172 of the Constitution, which declares that the "fiscal affairs" of the county shall be transacted by a board of county commissioners.

3. Under section 14, article 1, of the Constitution of North Dakota, which reads: "Private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having been first made to, or paid into court for the owner, and no right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any corporation, other than municipal, until full compensation therefor be first made in money or ascertained and paid into court for the owner, irrespective of any benefit from any improvement proposed by such corporation, which compensation shall be ascertained by a jury, unless a jury be waived."—Held, that private property cannot be taken for public use for right of way without just compensation in money being first made to, or paid into court for, the owner, even though it is sought to be taken by a municipal corporation.

4. Further, payment by an order drawn by the drain commissioners upon the NOTE.—The above case presents some very important questions, especially as to provisions for payment in taking property by condemnation. 25 L. R. A.

See also notes to Alloway v. Nashville (Tenn.) 8 L. R. A. 123, and Miffin Bridge Co. v. Juniata County (Pa.) 18 L. R. A. 431, on these questions.

See also 34 L. R. A. 439.

drainage fund, which order the statute declares "shall be deemed a sufficient security for the amount thereof," was not such payment as the constitution required.

5. Further, that since the statute failed to provide compensation, as required by the constitution, the power of eminent domain could not be exercised under the statute; and, shorn of the provisions relating to the exercise of the right of eminent domain, the statute becomes so incomplete and ineffectual that we cannot presume that the legislature would have passed it as thus emasculated; hence the entire statute would fail.

6. Further, that a provision in the statute that the warrant for damages, in case the owner was unknown, should be deposited with the county auditor for his use, was a violation of the constitutional provision that required compensation to be paid into court.

7. Further, that, when a municipal corporation sought to take plaintiff's property for public use, he was not entitled to have the compensation ascertained by a jury.

8. The drainage statute provides that the cost of the drain shall be apportioned by the drain commissioners between the cities and townships and property benefited by the drain, and provides, further, that such cost, so apportioned, shall be entered upon the tax list, and collected in one year; but the county commissioners may issue bonds of the county, running not more than twenty years, in sufficient amount to cover cost of drains in such county, the proceeds of the bonds to go direct to the drain fund, to pay the costs of such drains. In that event the assessment must be divided into as many parts as the bonds have years to run, and one part only be collected in each year, the collections so made to constitute a sinking fund to reimburse the county for the principal and interest paid on such bonds. Held, that such transaction constitutes a loan of the credit of the county to the corporations and individuals primarily and ultimately liable, and, as such, is a violation of section 185 of the Constitution, and the law is to that extent void.

(September 11, 1894.)

APPEALS by complainant from judgments of the District Court for Cass County overruling demurrers to the answers in three actions against the Drain Commissioners, Treasurer and County Commissioners of Cass County to enjoin the construction of a ditch, the payment of a warrant issued for a debt incurred in such construction, and the issuing of bonds to be used in the prosecution of the work. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Miller & Resser and Newman, Spalding & Phelps, for appellant:

The act is in conflict with section 60 of the Constitution.

State v. Smith, 85 Minn. 257; Tingue v. Port Chester, 101 N. Y. 294.

The title of the act is not comprehensive enough to include its provisions.

State v. Nomland (N. Dak.) Dec. 7, 1893.

The act is in conflict with sections 170, 171, and 172 of the Constitution, in that it devolves the duties imposed on the county commissioners upon a special commission known as county drain commissioners.

25 L. R. A.

It is in conflict with section 14 of the Constitution.

The provision for levying special assessments is void. Section 176 is the only constitutional provision for the levy of taxes. Article 6 permits the levy of special assessments, but this provision does not extend to counties.

Noonan v. Stillwater, 88 Minn. 198, 53 Am. Rep. 28; Stinson v. Smith, 8 Minn. 866.

Messrs. Charles A. Pollock and Robert M. Pollock, for respondent:

The language of section 88 shows clearly that the legislature, after fully expressing the subject, "establishing, constructing, and maintaining," went on to "create the means and instrumentalities required for its own accomplishment."

State v. Woodmanse, 11 L. R. A. 420, 1 N. Dak. 246; State v. Haas, 2 N. Dak. 202; State v. Nomland (N. Dak.) Dec. 7, 1893.

When property is taken by the state, or by any municipal corporation, by state authority, as in this case, it has been repeatedly held not essential to the validity of a law for the exercise of the right of eminent domain, that it should provide for making compensation before the actual appropriation.

Cooley, Const. L. 694; Rogers v. Bradshaw, 29 Johns. 785; Bloodgood v. Mohawk & H. R. R. Co. 18 Wend. 9, 31 Am. Dec. 318.

It is not essential that the public of a whole state or community should be benefited. A local use is public. The number enjoying the use is immaterial. It is the right of the public to the use that constitutes the public use.

Beekman v. Saratoga & S. R. Co. 22 Am. Dec. 690, note.

There can be no doubt that the legislature has power to authorize the condemnation of private property for the purpose of promoting the public health.

Ibid.

The power exercised, where the chief object was to improve the land and render it fit for human habitation and cultivation, is constitutional.

Ibid.; Tide-Water Co. v. Coster, 18 N. J. Eq. 518, 90 Am. Dec. 634; Re Application for Drainage in Passaic, Essex and Morris Counties, 85 N. J. L. 497; Hartwell v. Armstrong, 16 Barb. 166; Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray, 417; Norfleet v. Cromwell, 70 N. C. 634, 16 Am. Rep. 787.

The public to be benefited then in this case is in the county.

As such the county has a perfect right, when authorized by the legislature, to issue its bonds in aid of its own public improvements.

6 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 11, note.

Section 176 of the Constitution does not exempt the property of the state from the payment of assessments for benefits accruing to its property, hence section 16 is constitutional.

Hassan v. Rochester, 67 N. Y. 528.

There is a well-established and marked distinction between the words "tax" and "assessment" as generally used in statutes and constitutions.

1 Desty, Taxn. p. 5; Hagar v. Yolo County Suprs. 47 Cal. 234.

Laws for the purpose of draining land, thereby reclaiming and improving such land, and preserving the public health, have been enacted by the legislatures of most of the states of the Union, and the courts of the several states have held such laws to be within the legitimate exercise of legislative authority, and the expense is usually provided for by special assessments.

Ibid.; 6 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, pp. 2-14.

The appointment of drain commissioners falls within the police power.

State v. Stewart, 6 L. R. A. 894, 74 Wis. 620. See also Daley v. St. Paul, 7 Minn. 890; Bryant v. Robbins, 70 Wis. 258.

Where the legislature makes provision for taking private property for public use, and there is anything in the act from which the court can spell out an intention that just compensation shall be made, and by whom it shall be made, and there is a mode given for ascertaining the amount, it must give a construction to the act that will sustain it.

Woodruff v. Glendale, 26 Minn. 78.

If the funds are in the county treasury, and set apart for the purpose, it is sufficient.

Tehama County v. Bryan, 68 Cal. 57.

The Constitution of Georgia is practically the same as ours.

Charters and Constitution, 65, p. 403; Moore v. Atlanta, 70 Ga. 612, following Stetson v. Chicago & E. R. Co. 75 Ill. 74.

California and Washington statutes are the same as ours. In Brown v. Seattle, 18 L. R. A. 161, 5 Wash. 85; and Lewis v. Seattle, 5 Wash. 741, the courts seem to hold that the money must be first paid—but in Lewis v. Seattle, supra, the court distinctly held that “where the warrant is accepted it is a waiver of first payment.”

None but owners can raise an objection when property is taken by the state without fair compensation.

Waterloo Woolen Mfg. Co. v. Shanahan, 14 L. R. A. 481, 128 N. Y. 845.

Nor is it any objection to the law that benefits are to be offset.

Pacific Coast R. Co. v. Porter, 74 Cal. 261; Butte County v. Boydston, 64 Cal. 110.

Bartholomew, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These cases have been submitted together. They are brought by the same plaintiff against different defendants, but to accomplish one purpose, and that purpose is to relieve plaintiff from the payment of a certain assessment laid upon his land, under the drainage law hereafter mentioned. The first action is against the drain commissioners of Cass county, and asks that they be perpetually enjoined from constructing a certain drain in said county, which they had caused to be established and partially constructed, and had assessed a certain per cent of the cost of said drain against the property of plaintiff, which said commissioners declared to be benefited by the construction of such drain. The second action is against the treasurer of said county and the holder of a certain warrant issued by the drain commissioners in payment of damages sustained by the construction of said drain. An injunction is sought perpetually restraining the payment of such warrant. The third case is against the county commissioners of said county, and seeks to enjoin them from issuing bonds of said county to pay for the construction of the drain in question and other similar drains, which it was alleged they were about to do. The answers in the several cases alleged, in substance, strict compliance with the provisions of chapter 55, Laws 1893. A general demurrer to the answers was overruled, and the plaintiff appeals.

25 L. R. A.

The case turns exclusively upon the question of the constitutionality of said chapter 55. The act is a general drainage law, and is largely copied from the Michigan drainage laws. From a financial standpoint, it is one of the most important statutes ever enacted in the state. Thousands of dollars have already been expended under the law, and the drains now in process of construction and in contemplation throughout the state will, if completed, cost many thousands more. It is of importance to the taxpayers that the validity or invalidity of the law be definitely settled, and at once. Many objections are urged against the law, and we deem it our duty to notice each of them. The statute is too long for reproduction here, but a synopsis of it, with quotations of portions, is absolutely necessary to an understanding of the rulings that we are required to make.

The act is entitled “An act to provide for the establishing, constructing, and maintaining drains in this state.” The first part of section 1 reads: “Watercourses, ditches, and drains for the drainage of swamps, marshes, and other low lands may be established, constructed, and maintained in the several counties and townships of this state whenever the same shall be conducive to the public health, convenience or welfare, under the provisions of this act.” The balance of the section defines a drain. Section 2 provides for the appointment by the county commissioners of three drain commissioners in each county, fixing their term of office at two years, and providing for their removal and for filling vacancies. Section 3 provides for their oath and official bond. Section 4 relates to drains in more than one county, and need not be further noticed here. Section 5 provides for the application by five or more freeholders, residing within proper limits, to the drain commissioners, for the establishment of a drain, and for an inspection of the ground by the said commissioners, and, if they so order, a preliminary survey by a competent surveyor, and for maps, with plans, specifications, and estimates, to be filed by said surveyor with the county auditor. Section 6 makes applicants liable for costs when drain not necessary, but, if commissioners determine drain to be necessary, they shall proceed to establish the same. Section 7 reads as follows: “If, within twenty days after such determination, all of the persons on whose lands the proposed drain is to be placed shall not have executed a release of right of way and all damages on account thereof, the board of county drain commissioners shall appoint a time and place of hearing upon the application, which shall not be less than ten nor more than twenty days thereafter, and shall immediately make application to the district court of the county to ascertain the necessity for such drain and for taking private property for the use and benefit of the public for the purpose thereof, and the just compensation to be made therefor. Such application shall be made in writing, and shall describe the drain and the route and dimensions thereof, according to the survey, and shall state the facts which constitute the public necessity therefor and shall also state the time and place of hearing upon the application for such drain. The court to whom such application is made shall at once appoint a time for hearing and considering the same, and shall issue a citation to all persons whose lands are traversed by such drain to appear at the time appointed and be heard with respect to such application, if they desire to do so, which citation shall be annexed to a copy of the commissioners' application to the court and served in like manner with other process of the said court." Section 8 provides for personal service of citation upon owner or occupant of lands traversed by the drain, and service by posting in exceptional cases. Section 9 provides for the hearing in court upon the application, and requires the jury to determine—First, "whether such ditch will be conducive to the public health, convenience, or welfare;" second, "whether the route thereof is practicable;" third, "amount of damage allowed to any person or persons or corporations." The section then proceeds: "And the court shall enter the proper judgment thereon. The damages allowed shall be irrespective of the benefits which the particular parcel of land will receive by the construction of such ditch, but such land shall be assessed for such benefits. The costs of all such proceedings shall be paid out of the fund raised for the purpose of constructing such ditch if the construction of the same be ordered. If no ditch is established such costs shall be paid by the county. Any party aggrieved may appeal from the judgment of the district court as in civil cases, and upon such appeal costs may be awarded in the discretion of the court." Section 10 reads: "An order drawn by the board of county drain commissioners on the treasurer of the proper county for the amount of any damages awarded from the location and construction of the said drain and tendered to the person entitled to such damages shall be deemed a sufficient security for the amount thereof. If the owner of any lands upon which any damages may be awarded be unknown, and such lands be not occupied, an order for the amount therefor shall be drawn, payable to the owner of the description of land upon which such damages were awarded, describing such lands by their legal subdivision in such order, which order shall be delivered to the county auditor to be held by such auditor, to be delivered to the owner of such lands when called for, or otherwise lawfully demanded, and the same shall thereby be deemed lawfully tendered to the owner of the lands: provided, the amount chargeable against such lands on account of the cost of construction of the drain, if less than the damages, shall apply in payment of the damages, and if equal to or more than such damages, the same shall apply to the full amount thereof, and for the purpose of accuracy in keeping the account the board of county drain commissioners shall furnish to the county treasurer, or other officer having the collection of the drain tax, a memorandum of the amount of the damages, and such treasurer or other officer shall credit the amount thereof upon the tax when he receives the tax roll, or so much thereof as may be equal to the tax, and such memorandum shall be a voucher for so much money as paid by such treasurer, and shall be allowed him on settlement." Section 11 reads: "Upon the release of the right of way the board of county drain commissioners shall make their order establishing the drain, and they shall give the same a name by which it shall be recorded and indexed; they shall also assess the per cent of the costs of construction and maintenance of such drain which any township, city or village shall be liable to pay by reason of the benefit of such drain to the public health, or as to the means of improving any public highway, and they shall assess the benefits to accrue to the roadbed of any railroad or turnpike by reason of the construction of such drain, and they shall assess proportionately the benefits to accrue, either directly or indirectly, to any piece or parcel of land by reason of the construction of such drain, whether such lands be immediately drained by the said ditch, or whether they can be drained only after the construction of other and connecting ditches, but such assessment shall be subject to review by the commissioners upon the request of parties in interest, at or before the time of letting the contracts for the construction of such drain." Section 12 provides that commissioners shall make full returns, after drain is established, to county auditor; and the auditor shall make and preserve a record thereof. Section 13 provides for letting contracts for the construction of the drain. Section 14 provides for a hearing upon the rate of assessments and the letting of the contracts. Section 15 reads: "Upon the letting of such contracts the commissioners shall make a computation of the cost of such drain, which shall include all the expense of locating and establishing the same, including the drain commissioners' fees, cost of survey, and fees and expenses of the special commissioners, advertising and all other expenses, the amount of damages awarded by the special commissioners and the amount of contracts, and in case contracts shall not have been let for the construction of the whole of such drain, the board of county drain commissioners shall estimate the cost of the unlet portion, predicated their estimate so far as may be upon the cost of those portions that have been let. They shall add the whole in a gross sum, and shall add thereto ten per cent to cover contingent expenses, delinquencies, and any extra charges that may accrue, and the sum thus ascertained shall be the cost of construction of such drain." Section 16 reads: "The board of county drain commissioners shall apportion to each township, city, or village benefited by such drain from sanitary or other considerations, the amount chargeable against such municipality on account of the construction of such drain, according to the per cent which, by section 12 [11] of this act, they are required to fix and determine, and they shall apportion the balance of the cost of construction upon the lands to be benefited by such drain, and assess the amount to be paid on each description of land in proportion to the benefits it receives from such drain. They shall make a list showing such apportionment and assessment and shall serve a copy thereof upon the clerk of each township or upon the clerk of any city or village against which any sum is assessable or in which any lands are situated that are assessable under such apportionment, and the amount assessable upon any such township, city, or village shall be levied as part of the township tax for the year, and the amount assessable upon any description of land shall be assessed and levied against such land by the assessing officer as drain taxes, naming the particular drain for the construction of which the same is assessed. Within two days after the service of such notice as aforesaid, the board of county drain commissioners shall appoint a time and place of such apportionment and assessment and shall give notice thereof by a notice which with such apportionment list, must be published once in each of two consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation printed and published in said county, and on the day mentioned in such notice such commissioners shall meet and hear all complaints on such apportionment and assessment and correct and confirm the same, and the said list shall thereupon be filed in the office of the county auditor in which such lands, cities, towns and townships are located, and shall constitute the assessment roll of such drain. Said commissioners may adjourn from day to day and if a quorum be not present less than a quorum may adjourn such meeting." Section 17 reads: "In case of drains established by the board of county drain commissioners, the drain taxes, when collected, and all moneys received on account of state lands shall be returned to the county treasurer, and all moneys so collected or returned shall be credited to the drain fund to which they belong, and such county treasurer shall be the treasurer of such drain fund. Orders drawn by the drain commissioners in payment for the construction of any drain shall be payable from the proper drain fund and shall be receivable for the taxes levied for the construction of such drain by the county treasurer or by the state treasurer, as the case may be." Upon that portion of the statute from sections 18 to 37, inclusive, no point is raised. Section 38 reads: "The board of county commissioners of each county wherein such ditch or ditches are proposed to be located and established are hereby authorized to issue the bonds of said county, in such sums as may be necessary for the purpose of defraying the expenses incurred or to be incurred in locating, constructing, and establishing the same, said word 'expenses' to be construed to mean and cover every item of costs of said ditch, from its inception to its completion, and the said counties to be reimbursed as hereinbefore provided. Said bonds shall bear interest at a rate not exceeding 7 per cent and shall be payable not exceeding twenty years from the date thereof, and the said commissioners shall provide a sinking fund for the payment of said bonds at maturity and for the payment of the annual interest on the same. The bonds issued under the provisions of this act shall be signed by the chairman of the board of county commissioners of said county, and countersigned by the county auditor, who shall keep a record of the bonds issued under the provisions of this act. The said board shall have the power to negotiate said bonds as they shall deem best for the interest of said county: provided, that they shall not negotiate the same at less than par value. All such bonds shall contain a recital that the same are issued in accordance with the provisions and pursuant to the authority of this act. Whenever such bonds shall be issued the tax and assessment hereinbefore provided for shall not be collected all in one year, but shall be divided into as many parts as such bonds have years to run, and one of such parts shall be extended upon the tax roll by the county auditor against the proper parcel of land in each and every year and collected in such year, and such fund shall constitute the sinking fund provided by this section, and the board of county commissioners shall in each year, at the time of levying the taxes, levy a tax sufficient to pay the annual interest on said bonds." Section 39 provides for the repeal of certain specified acts and all other acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

In passing upon the constitutionality of any statute, there are certain elementary principles of which courts must ever be mindful. These principles render that certain which otherwise might be uncertain; that simple which otherwise might be complex; that safe which otherwise might be dangerous. We must remember that legislative power is primarily plenary, and that constitutions are not grants of, but restrictions upon, that power. Hence he who would challenge a legislative enactment must be able to specify the particular constitutional provision that deprived the legislature of the power to pass the enactment. We must remember that it is the duty of courts to reconcile statutes with the constitution when that can be done without doing violence to the language of either, and in all cases of doubt the doubt must be resolved in favor of the constitutionality of the statute. Thus much deference the judicial department of government owes to the legislative. But we must remember, also, that the constitution is the shield which the state, in its sovereign capacity, has provided for the protection of private rights. This protection is necessary. Every period in civilized history, however remote or however recent, but emphasizes the fact that unrestrained legislation is inimical to individual rights. Having provided the shield, the state has created its courts, and charged them with the special duty of seeing that every legislative blow improperly aimed at the life, liberty, happiness, or property of the individual falls harmlessly upon that shield. The court that fails in this duty fails in the purposes of its creation, and should be barred from further participation in governmental affairs. With these general guides, let us examine this statute.

It is first urged against this statute that it violates section 61 of the Constitution of North Dakota, which reads: "No bill shall embrace more than one subject, which shall be expressed in its title, but a bill which violates this provision shall be invalidated thereby only as to so much thereof as shall not be so expressed." It is claimed that this provision is violated (1) in the creation of a special drainage commission, and vesting in it the powers of the act; (2) in the levying of special assessments to pay the costs of constructing drains; (3) in providing for the issuing of bonds and a sinking fund to pay the same; and (4) in the repealing provisions of section 39. This constitutional provision has been passed upon by this court in State v. Woodmanee, 1 N. Dak. 246, 11 L. R. A. 420; State v. Haas, 2 N. Dak. 202; State v. Noland, 3 N. Dak. —, 57 N. W. Rep. 85. We do not wish at this time to add anything to what was said in those cases upon this point, but, applying the principles as there announced, it is clear to us that this objection cannot be sustained. The title to the act in question is very broad: "An act to provide for the establishing, constructing, and maintaining drains in this state." It covers the entire subject. Whatever means and instrumentalities are necessary or usual and proper for effectuating the purposes of the act may be provided in the act. The objections go only to the means and instrumentalities. Upon the provision relating to the issuance of bonds, counsel cite us to the cases of Nashville v. Ray, 86 U. S. 19 Wall. 468, 22 L. ed. 164; Claiborne County v. Brooks, 111 U. S. 400, 28 L. ed. 470; and Merrill v. Monticello, 138 U. S. 673, 34 L. ed. 1069. These cases hold that authority to a municipality to make improvements or incur indebtedness does not carry with it, by implication, the power to issue negotiable paper. This proposition may be granted. The question here is different. It is not what power passes by implication, but what power may be expressly granted under a title authorizing internal improvements. We think authority to pay for such improvements in some manner other than the ordinary taxation, particularly when, as in this case, the limit of ordinary taxation might be totally inadequate to meet the expense, is entirely germane to the title, and the issuance of bonds is perhaps the most common means known to the law for meeting such expenses. It is claimed that the repeals contained in the thirty-ninth section of the Act violate this constitutional provision, under the rulings in State v. Smith, 35 Minn. 257, and Tingue v. Port Chester, 101 N. Y. 294. The cases are not applicable. In the Minnesota case the act was entitled "An act to amend chapter 1 of the General Laws of 1878 to provide for the assessment and collection of taxes, being chapter 11, General Statutes of 1878." This title was restrictive, and, by its terms, confined to an amendment of chapter 1 of the General Laws of 1878, yet the legislature under that title, proceeded to repeal another statute which the court held might coexist with the amendment. The principle of the case from New York is very similar. But here we have a new enactment,—a statute complete in itself, and requiring in its operation no aid from other provisions. Being the latest expression of the legislative will, it might, by implication, repeal all inconsistent statutes. But repeals by implication are not favored in law; hence it was highly proper that inconsistent statutes be repealed in express terms. It was the proper means of placing the new enactment in successful operation.

The second objection urged against the statute is that it violates section 172 of the Constitution, which declares that the fiscal affairs of the county shall be transacted by a board of county commissioners. If we carefully consider sections 170, 171, and 172 of our state Constitution, we are forced to the conclusion that the words "fiscal concerns," "fiscal affairs," and "affairs," and "government" are used interchangeably. Section 170 authorizes the legislature to provide by general law for township organizations under which any county may organize; and, when such organization is adopted in any county, "so much of this constitution as provides for the management of the 'fiscal concerns' of said county by the board of county commissioners may be dispensed with by a majority vote of the people voting at any general election, and the 'affairs' of said county may be transacted by the chairmen of the several township boards of said county." But it cannot be claimed for a moment that the duties of the township chairmen, when in charge of the "affairs" of the county, would differ in any manner from the duties of the commissioners when in charge of the "fiscal concerns" of the county. Section 171 reads: "In any county that shall have adopted a system of government by the chairmen of the several township boards, the question of continuing the same may be submitted to the electors of such county at a general election in such a manner as may be provided by law, and if a majority of all the votes cast upon such question shall be against said system of government, then such system shall cease in said county and the affairs of said county then be transacted by a board of county commissioners as is now provided by the laws of the territory of Dakota." Here the conduct of the county business by the township chairmen is called a "system of government," and it is provided in what manner this system shall cease; "and the affairs of the county shall then be transacted by a board of county commissioners as is now provided by the laws of the territory of Dakota." But the board of county commissioners provided for by the territorial laws was identical with the board provided for by the next section of the constitution, and the duties of that board were specifically fixed by the statute section 592, Comp. Laws. This statute is continued in force by section 2 of schedule to constitution. These duties are such as are common to all the counties in the state; such as they ordinarily and usually perform as a part of their permanent functions. Section 172 of the Constitution then provides that, until the change is made to the township system, the "fiscal affairs" of the county shall be transacted by a board of county commissioners, consisting of not less than three or more than five members. We fully agree with the learned counsel for appellant that the words "fiscal affairs," as here used, are not limited to matters pertaining solely to public revenue, as they doubtless are in some connections. They mean rather the business transactions of the county,—the performance of such duties as the law has defined and placed upon county commissioners, or such as uniformly pertain to that office. In Bryant v. Robbins, 70 Wis. 258, Chief Justice Cole, for the full court, said: "It may admit of doubt, as argued by the counsel of the appellants, whether the power to construct drains, etc., given to town and county officers under the general law, is, strictly speaking, a part of the 'system of government' belonging to those political corporations, within the meaning of the constitution. It is rather a special authority, conferred for a special purpose, calculated to promote the public health and welfare. The powers and duties of county and town officers are those which they ordinarily and usually exercise as a part of the regular and permanent administration of the town and county governments. It is a significant fact in this discussion that no drainage law was enacted for several years after the adoption of the constitution, nor was any such power as is now conferred given to town and county officers to execute such work. There is therefore strong reason for saying that the power to construct drains is in no proper sense a part of the usual powers belonging to town and county governments, but is a special authority, given for a particular purpose, and which may be conferred upon any persons or body upon which the legislature may see fit to confer it." Surely, this language is applicable to this case. It will not be contended for a moment that, under their general powers, the county commissioners could engage in the work of constructing drains; that they could for that purpose exercise the power of eminent domain,—assess benefits and institute proceedings to ascertain damages. This was a special purpose, and its accomplishment required special legislative authority, which might be placed where the legislature saw proper. See also, Sheboygan County Supra. v. Parker, 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 93, 18 L. ed. 83.

Section 14, article 1, of our Constitution reads as follows: "Private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having been first made to, or paid into court for the owner, and no right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any corporation, other than municipal, until full compensation therefor be first made in money or ascertained and paid into court for the owner, irrespective of any benefit from any improvement proposed by such corporation, which compensation shall be ascertained by a jury, unless a jury be waived." 25 L. R. A.

It is very forcibly pressed upon us by learned counsel that the drainage act violates this provision, in the following particulars: (a) Because section 10 of the Act provides that damages may be paid by warrants drawn by the drain commissioners upon the drainage fund, while there might be no money in that fund until the drain was established, the benefits assessed, the tax levied and collected, hence the property would be taken without just compensation being first made, and without payment in money. (b) Said section 10 also provides that such warrants may be delivered to the county auditor for unknown owners, while the constitution requires the compensation to be made to or paid into court for the owner. (c) Because the compensation is not ascertained by a jury. Under section 9, the jury determines the "amount of damages allowed to any person," but the damages allowed shall be "irrespective of benefits." The benefits are assessed by drain commissioners. The "just compensation" is the amount of damage, if any, remaining after benefits have been deducted. This balance the jury is not permitted to find. Section 14 of the Constitution of North Dakota was copied literally from section 14, article 1, of the Constitution of California adopted in 1879. The California Constitution of 1849 simply reads: "Nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation." Section 8, article 1. Under the old constitution, it was held that taking private property for public use without making compensation at the time, or, in case of a municipal corporation, providing a fund certain from which payment should be made upon the termination of condemnation proceedings, was a violation of the constitutional provision (McCann v. Sierra County, 7 Cal. 121; Colton v. Rossi, 9 Cal. 595; Johnson v. Alameda County, 14 Cal. 106); and that property was "taken," within the meaning of the provision, when it passed from the possession and control of the owner, and not when the title ultimately passed to the corporation. Davis v. San Lorenzo R. Co. 47 Cal. 517, overruling Fox v. Western Pac. R. Co. 31 Cal. 538; and Sanborn v. Belden, 51 Cal. 266. In this latter case it is purposely left undecided whether or not precedent payment or tender of payment must not be made even when the property is taken by a municipal corporation. These decisions were all rendered prior to the adoption of the Constitution of 1879, and enable us the better to understand what was sought to be accomplished by the new provisions upon that subject introduced into that instrument. Section 14 of our Constitution divides naturally into two parts. The first reads: "Private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having been first made to, or paid into court for the owner." As originally reported by the judiciary committee of the California Constitutional Convention of 1879, the section contained nothing more. See Constitutional Debates, 346. At that time the provision as thus introduced existed substantially in the constitutions of a large number of the states. See note on pages 659, 697, Cooley, Const.

Lim. 5th ed. The term "just compensation" had already been defined in California to be that compensation which was based upon damages sustained and benefits received. San Francisco, A. & S. R. Co. v. Caldwell, 81 Cal. 368; California Pac. R. Co. v. Armstrong, 46 Cal. 85; and to the same purport are Nichols v. Bridgeport, 23 Conn. 189, 60 Am. Dec. 636; Trinity College v. Hartford, 32 Conn. 452; State v. Graves, 19 Md. 851; Page v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 70 Ill. 324; Harlow v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. 41 Mich. 836. These cases make it reasonably certain that the words "just compensation," as used in the California constitution, and later in our own constitution, mean the excess of damages sustained over benefits received. For cases that reject this definition of "just compensation," see Carpenter v. Jennings, 77 Ill. 250; Isom v. Mississippi Cent. R. Co. 86 Miss. 300; Penrice v. Wallis, 37 Miss. 172; Robbins v. Milwaukee & H. R. Co. 6 Wis. 636.

Under constitutional provisions declaring that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation, and silent as to the time of payment, it has generally, if not universally, been held, when property was thus taken by a private corporation, that payment must precede the taking; but, where the property was taken directly by the state or a municipality of the state, it has generally been held a sufficient compliance with the provision if the compensation was definitely ascertained, and made a charge upon a municipal fund for which the credit of the municipality was pledged. Rogers v. Bradshaw, 20 Johns. 744; Bloodgood v. Mohawk & H. R. R. Co. 18 Wend. 9, 81 Am. Dec. 813; Chapman v. Gates, 54 N. Y. 182; Brock v. Hishen, 40 Wis. 674; Long v. Fuller, 68 Pa. 170; Orr v. Quimby, 54 N. H. 590. The same ruling has been made in Minnesota and Michigan, where the constitution requires the compensation to be first paid or secured. See State v. Messenger, 27 Minn. 119; State v. Bruggerman, 81 Minn. 493; People v. Michigan Southern R. Co. 3 Mich. 496. But we are cited to no case (and, if such a case existed, we are sure the tireless industry of counsel would have found it) arising in those states having the constitutional provision as thus reported to the constitutional convention of California, and as found in the first part of section 14 of the Constitution of this state, where it has been held that the state or any municipality acting for the state could take private property for public use unless just compensation therefor accompanied or preceded the taking. The point does not seem to have arisen. Indeed, the language is so plain and express that judicial construction would be superfluous. It has sometimes been asserted broadly that private property could not be so taken, as in the Mississippi cases supra. In New Jersey, where practically the same provision is found, but limited to individuals or private corporations, the chancellor, in discussing the meaning of the word "first," in Redman v. Philadelphia, M. & M. R. Co., 83 N. J. Eq. 165, said: "Its meaning, to my mind, is perfectly obvious; indeed, it is its own expositor. When this is the case, reasoning and illustration have no office. The provision under consideration plainly ordains that compensation shall precede appropriation; and, if the legislature in this enactment have not observed this direction, they have transcended their power." The fact that the provision is, in this state, unlimited in its application, cannot change the clear meaning of the words used. It becomes clear, then, that, under the provision as originally reported to the California constitutional convention, the owner of private property, when the same was taken for public use, could in no case demand more than "just compensation,"—i. e. such compensation as represented the excess of damages sustained over benefits received; but in all cases such just compensation should be paid to, or paid into court for, the owner, before the property could be taken.

We may now proceed to analyze the amendment which was offered and adopted, and which constitutes the balance of section 14 of the Constitution of this state, and reads: "And no right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any corporation, other than municipal, until full compensation therefor be first made in money or ascertained and paid into court for the owner, irrespective of any benefit from any improvement proposed by such corporation, which compensation shall be ascertained by a jury, unless a jury be waived." We notice that this provision relates to the appropriation of right of way. If private property be taken for any other public use, it falls within the first provision in the section. This right of way must be appropriated to the use of a corporation "other than municipal." If a municipal corporation appropriate a right of way, it still falls within the first provision. For this right of way, thus appropriated by a corporation other than municipal, full compensation must be made in money; that is, a compensation "irrespective of any benefits." Strictly speaking, full compensation is required in every case; but, except in cases of the appropriation of a right of way by a corporation other than municipal, this full compensation may be paid in benefits received to the extent of such benefits, leaving the balance only, or the just compensation, to be otherwise paid. From the fact that the constitution directs that, for right of way appropriated to the use of a private corporation, full compensation shall be paid in money, learned counsel argue that, for right of way appropriated to the use of a municipal corporation, just compensation need not be paid in money, but may be paid in warrants; and it is claimed that this is a recognition of the fact that municipalities habitually pay by warrant. To this we cannot assent. The word "money" is used to exclude benefits. Just compensation, when ascertained, must always be paid in money. Money is the measure of compensation. Compensation represents the money value of property taken or damaged. Just compensation can be made in no other medium. Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 612; Cooley, Const. Lim. 963; State v. Ravine Road Sewer Comrs. 39 N. J. L. 665; Com. v. Peters, 2 Mass. 125; Cheapeake & O. R. Co. v. Halstead, 7 W. Va. 801; Van-

Arno v. Dorrance, 2 U. S. 2 Dall. 804, 1 L. ed. 891; Mills, Em. Dom. § 135. Further, the statute does not treat the warrant as payment. It says the order "shall be deemed a sufficient security for the amount thereof. Security negatives payment. It is that which is given to insure payment at some future time. The manner in which this provision found its way into our statute is entirely clear. It was the result of a literal copy of the Michigan drainage act. But in Michigan the constitution requires the compensation to be paid or secured. Our constitution requires payment. Security is wholly inadmissible. It is clear to us that there is no such provision for compensation contained in said chapter 55 as our constitution imperatively requires; hence the act will not warrant the exercise of the power of eminent domain. Thacher v. Dartmouth Bridge Co. 18 Pick. 501; Boston & L. R. Corp. v. Salem & L. R. Co. 2 Gray, 1-87; Mount Washington Road's Petition, 35 N. H. 184; Eastman v. Amoskeag Mfg. Co. 44 N. H. 143-160, 82 Am. Dec. 201; Weaver v. Mississippi & Rum River Boom Co. 80 Minn. 477; Watkins v. Walker County, 18 Tex. 586, 70 Am. Dec. 298; Foster v. Stafford Nat. Bank, 57 Vt. 128.

We here meet another question that is not without difficulty in this case. It is this: Granting that the power of eminent domain cannot be exercised under this statute, and that the provisions upon that subject are unconstitutional and void, must the whole statute for that reason fail? If there were no attempt in this statute to provide for compensation, then the law would conclude that it was not the legislative intent to exercise the power of eminent domain, but that the right of way was to be acquired by private contract. Mills, Em. Dom. § 128, and cases cited. But we cannot so treat this statute. There was a clearly expressed intent to provide for compensation, but therein the law was unconstitutional; and whether or not the law can stand with such portions eliminated depends, nakedly stated, upon whether or not there remains a complete enactment capable of enforcement, and one that it may reasonably be presumed the legislature would have passed shorn of its unconstitutional features. It is our duty to sustain statutes in their entirety when possible, and to that end we must indulge all reasonable presumptions in favor of their constitutionality. But, when a statute has been once emasculated, these presumptions no longer obtain in support of the remainder. It should then be manifestly clear that the remaining portion can stand by itself, and that the legislature did not intend that such portion should be controlled and modified in its construction and effect by the rejected part. See note to page 218, Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. In many cases where provisions for compensation in statutes authorizing the exercise of the power of eminent domain have been held unconstitutional, the entire statute has been treated as void. Eastman v. Amoskeag Mfg. Co. supra; People v. Leow, 89 Hun, 490; Bloodgood v. Mohawk & H. R. R. Co. 18 Wend. 9, 81 Am. Dec. 818; Thacher v. Dartmouth Bridge Co.; Watkins v. Walker County, and 25 L. R. A.

Weaver v. Mississippi & Rum River Boom Co., supra. While this holding is not entirely uniform (see Lewis, Em. Dcm. § 452), and while, perhaps, a uniform rule would not be desirable in all cases where the exercise of this power of eminent domain fails, yet we are convinced that in this case the entire statute should be held void. When we eliminate from the statute the power of eminent domain, we take out, bodily, sections 7, 8, and 9, and various clauses in other sections. We have left only a weak, inefficient statute, incapable of enforcement. Enforcement carries with it the idea of execution without consent. That which is done by consent, and can only be done by consent, is not enforced. With the right to exercise the power of eminent domain gone, it might be possible to construct a drain under the statute if every landowner through or along whose land it was sought to establish the drain would voluntarily release the right of way and damages; but it is inconceivable that the legislature would have placed upon the statute book an important and far-reaching statute dependent for its effectiveness upon the whim of any one man whose land might be needed for right of way. We cannot, in support of a fragmentary statute, indulge a presumption so unreasonable, and must therefore hold the entire statute nugatory. The provision which requires the warrant for damages, where the owner is unknown, to be deposited with the county auditor, is a clear violation of the provision of the constitution which requires the compensation to be made to or paid into court for the owner. It need only be stated to be understood, and renders the statute, to that extent at least, void. National Docks & N. J. Junction & Connecting R. Co. v. United New Jersey R. & Canal Co. (N. J.) 28 Atl. Rep. 678.

We do not think that the manner in which compensation is ascertained under the statute is any violation of section 14 of the Constitution. It is true that the ascertainment of just compensation is a judicial proceeding, but a party has no inherent right to have such compensation fixed by jury. This has been repeatedly held. Kohl v. United States, 91 U. S. 875, 28 L. ed. 459; United States v. Jones, 109 U. S. 518, 27 L. ed. 1015; Great Falls Mfg. Co. v. Garland, 25 Fed. Rep. 531; Ames v. Lake Superior & M. R. Co. 21 Minn. 241; People v. Smith, 21 N. Y. 595. The original provision in said section 14 of the Constitution, as reported to the California convention, contained no reference to a jury. That was added in an amendment which created an exceptional class of cases, and, in the connection in which it was placed, we think it applied only to such exceptional cases. The entire section speaks of two different characters of compensation. First it speaks of "just compensation" as applied generally. It then creates the exceptional class, and for that class it demands "full compensation," and adds "which compensation shall be ascertained by a jury." Ordinarily, these words would not include both characters of compensation, but would include that last under discussion, to wit, full compensation; and such we think was the intention. If we are correct in this, it follows that under our constitution, whenever private property is appropriated for right of way by a corporation other than municipal, the compensation must be ascertained by a jury, while in all other cases a jury is unnecessary. But it would not follow that a provision for a jury in such other cases would be unconstitutional. The legislature may not curtail the rights of the citizen below the limit fixed by the constitution, but they may properly expand such rights. We see no violation of any constitutional provision, and no possibility of injustice to the property owner, in having the total damages, in cases of this character, ascertained by a jury, and having the benefits assessed and the balance struck by the other tribunal, to wit, the drain commissioners. This principle was involved and sustained in Cleveland v. Wick, 18 Ohio St. 803.

We ought to remark in this connection that the right of plaintiff to raise the questions we have been discussing under section 14 of the Constitution has not been denied. The questions have been fully discussed on their merits by both parties, and plaintiff's right to raise the same has thus been conceded, and, being conceded, a ruling upon the questions became necessary to a decision of the case.

Section 88 of the statute does not appear in any drainage law that we have examined. We believe it to be new in this connection. It provides for the issuance and sale of county bonds, running for a series of years, and drawing interest at a rate not to exceed 7 per cent. The proceeds of these bonds are to be passed to the drainage fund, and used to meet the expenses of establishing and constructing drains. Provision is made by which the county is to be repaid, certainly to the amount of the principal, and, as we construe it, the interest also, by the municipalities and persons upon whom special assessments are laid under the law. It is urged upon us that this violates section 185 of our state Constitution, which prohibits any county from loaning or giving its credit or making donations to or in aid of any individual association or corporation except for necessary support of the poor. An analysis of other provisions of this statute shows that the special assessments upon the corporations and persons benefited, and which assessments must equal the entire estimated cost of the drain, with 10 per cent added, to cover contingencies, must be levied and collected in one year. This might often prove a hardship, and, to avoid it, section 88 was enacted. When bonds are issued by the county under that section, then the special assessment, which otherwise must be paid in one year, must be divided into as many parts as the bonds have years to run, and only one part is to be extended upon the tax roll and collected in any one year; and the sums thus collected constitute the sinking fund for the payment of the bonds at maturity, and of the annual interest on the same. By this means the payment, which must otherwise be made in one year, may be extended over twenty years. This indulgence to the corporations and persons benefited and specially assessed is obtained by means of the credit of the county. Its bonds are issued under the drainage act, and must so state on their face. The proceeds of the bonds go, not into the control of the county commissioners, but at once into the drainage fund, controlled exclusively by the drain commissioners. The county has its compensation in the provisions which enable it to collect the special assessments out of which to reimburse itself. But, however much or however little may be realized from the special assessments, the county, as such must pay the bonds at maturity, as well as the annual interest thereon. No refinement of construction or technical rule of law can make this transaction less than a loan of the credit of the county to the parties primarily liable for the costs of the drain. Judge Cooley, speaking for the court in People v. State Treasurer, 23 Mich. 499, said: "The legislature can neither compel the taxation of municipalities in aid of railroad companies, nor empower them, in order to give such aid, to tax themselves, or to contract indebtedness which must be paid by taxation,"—citing People v. Salem Twp. Board, 20 Mich. 452. It is true that the Supreme Court of the United States in Pine Grove Twp. v. Talcott, 86 U. S. 19 Wall. 666, 22 L. ed. 227, a case which went up from the western district of Michigan,—refused to follow the Michigan court; but it was on the ground that the Michigan prohibition against loaning credit extended to the state only, and did not in terms include counties and townships. See also, upon this point, Webb v. Lafayette County, 67 Mo. 353; Thomas v. Port Huron, 27 Mich. 320.

But it is urged that draining swamp and overflowed lands, when it will conduce to the health and welfare of the community and benefit the highways, is a public service, for which it was within the power of the legislature to make the county originally liable, and that power must include the power to make the county temporarily liable. The conclusion is not warranted under our constitution. It was within the power of the legislature to designate the localities that would be benefited by the drains, and that should bear the burdens thereof. Stone v. Charlestown, 114 Mass. 214; Com. v. Plaisted, 148 Mass. 375, 2 L. R. A. 142; King v. Portland, 2 Or. 146; Williams v. Cammack, 27 Miss. 209, 61 Am. Dec. 508. This determination of the legislature is, of course, final. In this case, by placing the benefits and burdens elsewhere, the legislature has declared that the county, quoad hoc, is not benefited. The whole burden is thrown upon other corporations and persons. The obligation rests entirely upon them, and they are never relieved. All the county can do is to obtain for them an extension of the time of payment by the loan of its credit. This the constitution prohibits; and the plaintiff, being a property owner and taxpayer within the county of Cass, is entitled to a writ against the said county commissioners perpetually enjoining them from the issuance of bonds of the county under the provisions of said section 88 of said Drainage Act.

One more objection is urged against the statute. It is claimed that it violates the provisions requiring uniformity in taxation, found in section 176 of the Constitution. It is first claimed that the provision for special assessments is void. We think not. Section 180 of the Constitution directs the legislature to provide by law for the organization of municipal corporations, restricting their powers as to levying taxes, assessments, etc. It is said this does not apply to counties. It is immaterial. It does not authorize a grant of power to make assessments. It simply recognizes the existence of such power, and directs its restriction. The rule "expressio unius," etc., does not apply. We understand counsel to admit—granting the existence of the power to levy special assessments—that such assessments differ radically in their nature and purpose from ordinary taxation, and that the rule which requires uniformity in taxation has no application whatever to special assessments. This has now become so elementary that citations are unnecessary. The real difficulty lies deeper. It is claimed that under this law the special assessments must equal the total cost of establishing and constructing the drain, without regard to the benefits received; that, while the assessments must be in proportion to the benefits received, as between the parties benefited, yet the assessment in each case may exceed the individual benefit, and in the aggregate exceed the total benefits. It is then claimed that special assessments are based upon, and must be measured by, benefits received; and that, when a special assessment exceeds the benefits received, it ceases as to such excess to be a special assessment, but is to that extent taxation proper; and that, under the statute, such taxation is laid upon particular property belonging to particular taxpayers, while, under the rule of uniformity required by the constitution, it should be paid upon all property within the taxing district. The constitutional question thus raised is of much importance, and its solution is not without difficulty. It is not entirely clear from the reading of the statute that it was the legislative purpose to permit special assessments to exceed actual benefits; and, as we hold the entire statute unconstitutional upon other grounds, we decline at this time to pass upon this question; but, in view of the possibilities of future legislation, it may not be improper for us to say that courts seem to view with disfavor any attempt on the part of the legislature to charge property with special assessments for improvements in excess of the actual benefits received by such property by reason of such improvements. See Tide Water Co. v. Coster, 18 N. J. Eq. 518, 90 Am. Dec. 634; Creighton v. Manson, 27 Cal. 614; Crawford v. People, 82 Ill. 557; Nichols v. Bridgeport, 23 Conn. 189, 60 Am. Dec. 636; Stephani v. Catholic Bishop of Chicago, 2 Ill. App. 249; Chamberlain v. Cleveland, 84 Ohio St. 551; State v. Ramsey County Dist. Ct. 29 Minn. 62; State v. Seymour, 35 N. J. L. 49; Dyar v. Farmington, 70 Me. 515. But, contra, see Keith v. Boston, 120 Mass. 108; Kingman, Petitioner, 153 Mass. 566, 12 L. R. A. 417; Spencer v. Merchant, 100 N. Y. 585, affirmed in 125 U. S. 345, 31 L. ed. 763.

In closing, we wish to acknowledge our obligation not only to the able counsel in these cases, but also in the case following and ruled by this, infra, and to W. J. Kneeshaw, Esq., who filed a brief in support of the law in behalf of Pembina county.

The district court will reverse the judgment in each case, and sustain plaintiff's demurrer to the answer, and enter judgment as prayed for in the complaint.

Reversed.

All concur.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

CONSOLIDATED COAL AND MINING CO., Plff. in Err.,

v.

John M. FLOYD, Admr., etc., of George D. Clay, Deceased.

(.....Ohio.....)

*1. Where, in the course of a jury trial, objection is made to the giving of one *Headnotes by the Court.

NOTE.—Statutory regulations for the protection and safety of workmen in mines.

- I. Props.
- II. Cage and signals.
- III. Shafts and fences.
- IV. Escape and ventilation shafts.
- V. Miscellaneous.

I. Props.

Under Ill. Rev. Stat., chap. 93, § 16, providing that mine owners must have suitable prop timbers, it is the duty of the miners themselves to inspect the roof from day to day and set the props, 25 L. R. A.

See also 26 L. R. A. 435; 27 L. R. A. 266; 29 L. R. A. 808; 32 L. R. A. 435, 800; 47 L. R. A. 52, 597.

of a series of seven special charges by the court to the jury, a special exception should be made to the giving of the objectionable proposition. An exception to the giving of the entire series is too general to bring the objection before a reviewing court.

2. Section 6871 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that "any miner or other person, employed in any mine governed by the statute, who intentionally and willfully neglects or refuses to securely prop the roof of any working place unif there is no timberman. St. Louis Consol. Coal Co. v. Scheller, 42 Ill. App. 619.

But a mining company neglecting to supply timber props after notice that such are needed is liable under Mo. Act March 23, 1881, giving a right of action for willful failure of mine owners to keep a supply of timber for props when required, even where another party is operating the mine, if the owner has any proprietary interest. Leslie v. Rich Hill Coal Min. Co. 110 Mo. 31.

The failure of a coal mining company to furnish and use props does not violate Ill. Rev. Stat., chap. 93, § 16, which provides that timber for props shall be kept when required and sent down when der his control," etc., shall be guilty of an offense, is intended, in connection with the other provisions of the act regulating coal mines and the working thereof, to protect the lives and limbs of those engaged in a perilous business. It imposes an obligation to perform a duty to others, and anything which tends to operate in opposition to that obligation violates the policy of the statute. Hence a custom which imposes upon another employé the work of posting and propping the roof of a room in which coal is to be mined, cannot have the effect to exonerate the miner from the duty enjoined by the statute, nor to shift the risk undertaken by himself over upon the company.

3. In an action against a coal mining company to recover for death caused by the negligence of one of its employes, the result of his incompetency, it appeared by evidence of the plaintiff that the deceased was killed by the falling upon him of a portion of the roof of the room in which he was engaged in operating a machine in the mining of coal, which falling was due to insufficient support, and that, by reason of a custom prevailing at the mine, the work of posting and propping the roof was imposed on an employé called "a filler," whose principal business was that of filling coal, and who had no control over the miner, no relation of subordination or subjection existing between them, but both were under the orders of a common superior called "a mine boss." Held:

(a.) Such a state of facts does not make a case where the appliance or place is furnished by the master for the work in which the employes are to be engaged, but a case where the furnishing and preparation is itself a part of the work which they are employed to perform in order to effect a common object, viz.: the digging of coal, and the relation of the filler to the miner is that of a fellow-servant.

(b.) In such case the liability of the master is governed by the law applicable to the relation of fellow servant. Hence, in order to attach liability to the company for the negligence of the filler in not properly posting and propping the roof, the plaintiff must show that the company had knowledge, before the accident, of the incompetency of the filler to perform the duty of posting and propping, or, by the exercise of due care, might have known it, and that he was himself ignorant of such incompetency, and could not, by the exercise of ordinary diligence, have learned it.

(c.) And where, by the plaintiff's evidence, it is shown that the deceased knew of the incompetency of his fellow servant, if it existed, or, being an experienced miner had equal opportunity with the company of knowing, and could have known by the use of ordinary care, and was aware, also, of the danger of working in a room insufficiently propped, and continued his work without complaint, such a case of contributory negligence is shown as will prevent a recovery.

(October 16, 1894.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Hocking County to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injury which resulted in the death and were alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

required. Consolidated Coal Co. of St. Louis v. Yung, 24 Ill. App. 255.

And where a statute imposes liability for willful failure to keep sufficient supply of props, the question of willful failure should be kept prominently before the jury. Hawley v. Dailey, 18 Ill. App. 391.

II. Cage and signals.

Pa. Act March 8, 1871, providing for health and safety of persons employed in coal mines, requiring signal system and cage covering and brakes, is constitutional as within the police power of the state. Com. v. Bonnell, Jr., 8 Phila. 534.

And Ill. Rev. Laws 1874, chap. 70, § 14, providing liability for willful failure to comply with the act requiring a covering for a cage, applies where a person was injured while upon the cage, for the purpose of being hoisted, and a lump of coal fell down the shaft killing him, the cage not being covered. Litchfield Coal Co. v. Taylor, 81 Ill. 590.

So under Mo. Act March 23, 1881, requiring the cages in shafts to be kept covered, a cager working at the bottom of the shaft who is injured by a lump of coal falling from an uncovered cage, may recover. Durant v. Lexington Coal Min. Co. 97 Mo. 62.

And the owner of a mine is liable for failure to provide the kind of cage required by Mo. Act March 23, 1881, when he is to furnish and operate the machinery, although he has engaged another to open the coal mine. Fell v. Rich Hill Coal Min. Co. 23 Mo. App. 216.

And a mine owner is liable for failing to perform his statutory duty as required by Illinois statute of furnishing safe means of hoisting and lowering the cage, although the injured party was guilty of contributory negligence. Illinois Fuel Co. v. Parsons, 25 Ill. App. 182.

25 L. R. A.

Ill. Rev. Stat., chap. 93, § 14, requiring a brake to prevent accidents in case the machinery gives out, applies where such brake would have prevented an injury, although no part of the machinery was broken. Beard v. Skeldon, 18 Ill. App. 54, affirmed in 118 Ill. 584.

Under the Illinois act for safety of miners it is the duty of the company to provide safe hoisting apparatus, sufficient brake, sufficient light, and not to place incompetent engineer or boy under eighteen years of age in charge, and a recovery was allowed where the company willfully failed to comply with the statute. (Consolidated Coal Co. of St. Louis v. Maehl, 180 Ill. 551. See also Niantic Coal & Min. Co. v. Leonard, 126 Ill. 216.

And the owners of a mine are liable where the men were drawn up a shaft in a bucket without guides, under Eng. Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act 1872, § 23, subsec. 10, 35 & 36 Vict. 77.

Where a shaft of a lead mine was completed and a tunnel had been driven from the bottom for ore, although no ore had been taken out. Foster v. North Hendre Min. Co. [1891] 1 Q. B. 71.

But the failure of deceased to put catches on the cage at the top of the shaft as required by statute, is such contributory negligence as bars a recovery for his death caused thereby. Beaucoup Coal Co. v. Cooper, 12 Ill. App. 372.

And although Pennsylvania Act, April 18, 1877 (Pub. Laws, 56, § 6), requires a traveling way at the bottom of the shaft for miners to pass, yet if a miner fails to look and listen before stepping under a descending cage, he cannot recover. McDonald v. Rockhill Iron & Coal Co. 185 Pa. 1.

Ill. Rev. Stat., chap. 93, § 8, providing for signals, applies to all coal mines without reference to the motive power. Sangamon Coal Min. Co. v. Wiggerhaus, 25 Ill. App. 77, 123 Ill. 272.

Satatement by Spear, J.:

The action below was brought to recover for the unlawful killing of George D. Clay, a coal miner, whose death occurred October 10, 1891, in a coal mine operated by the defendant company, by reason of the falling upon him of a portion of the roof of the room in which he was working. Negligence was alleged against the company in not keeping a supply of timber on hand at the place Clay was working for the proper propping and support of the roof, and in failing to properly post, prop, and support the roof, which duty to prop did not devolve upon Clay, but, by reason of a custom existing at the time at that and other mines, did devolve upon the company, and also in imposing upon one Dalton, who was in the employ of the company in a different capacity from Clay, and over whom Clay had no control, the work of propping, he, Dalton, being wholly incompetent to perform the duty, and who negligently failed and refused to do and perform the same, of all which the company at the time had knowledge, but of which said Clay was ignorant.

A demurrer to the petition being overruled, an answer was filed which took issue upon the averment as to custom, and alleged that if it existed it was in direct violation of section 6871 of the Revised Statutes, and upon all charge of negligence of the company, and of Dalton, and averred that the death of Clay was caused by his own want of care.

Reply was filed denying that the custom was in violation of the statute, and denying negligence on the part of the deceased.

III. Shafts and fences.

A mine owner willfully violating Illinois Laws 1879, p. 207, requiring the top of each shaft and entrance to a vein to be fenced, is liable for employes' death notwithstanding contributory negligence. Catlett v. Young, 143 Ill. 74.

So under Illinois Act 1872, requiring the top of each shaft to be fenced, if the company was not prepared to comply at once, it should suspend operations. Bartlett Coal & Min. Co. v. Roach, 68 Ill. 174.

But Pa. Act March 3, 1870, Pamph. Laws, 3, providing for fencing off dangerous machinery in mines, does not impose liability where proper protection was made and the plank was removed by a coemployé. Honor v. Albrighton, 98 Pa. 475.

So Mo. Acts 1881, p. 168, providing for liability for failure to fence the shaft opening does not dispense with the rule that contributory negligence bars a recovery where a fence would not have prevented injury. Spiva v. Osage Coal & Min. Co. 88 Mo. 68.

IV. Escape and ventilation shafts.

Where an old mine has the statutory outlets and is then worked further several hundred feet along the seams, it then becomes a new mine and an outlet for ventilation and escape is required by Pennsylvania Act 1870. Com. v. Wilkesbarre Coal Co. 15 Mining Rep. 31, 29 Phila. Leg. Int. 213.

And in an action for death by negligence the question whether a manway required by Pa. Act April 18, 1870, was sufficient, is one for the jury. Cambria Iron Co. v. Shaffer (Pa.) Feb. 14, 1887.

The Illinois Act of 1879, § 3, in regard to escapement shafts repealed the Act of 1877, except such portions of the act as were retained and kept in force by the proviso that nothing in this section shall be construed to extend the time allowed by 25 L. R. A.

Upon trial verdict and judgment were given for the plaintiff below, which was affirmed by the circuit court. To reverse these judgments the present proceeding in error is prosecuted. A summary of the material facts will be found in the opinion.

Mr. E. W. Kittredge, for plaintiff in error:

Wherever there are two or more employes of one master, who are engaged in carrying out a common object, they are fellow servants; and a master, whether an individual or a corporation, is responsible to his servants for his own negligence, but not for that of their fellow servants.

Pittsburg, Ft. W. & O. R. Co. v. Lewis, 33 Ohio St. 198; Manville v. Cleveland & T. R. Co. 11 Ohio St. 417; Chicago & O. Railroad v. Margrat, 31 Ohio L. J. 247, 51 Ohio St. —; Chicago & O. Coal & Car Co. v. Norman, 49 Ohio St. 598.

Where the place that an employé is to work in is a room in a coal mine, this place is provided in the progress of the work by the employes themselves. It is made secure or otherwise by the way in which they perform their respective duties. It is just like the scaffold upon which painters or builders stand in prosecuting their labor.

Waddell v. Simson, 112 Pa. 573.

The excavation of the coal being the primary object, the creation of the room in the mine from which the coal is taken, and the protection of it from danger, is itself the very work which those engaged in this common service are employed to perform. And the employer law for constructing escapement shafts. Hamilton v. State, 102 Ill. 387.

And the Illinois Act, May 23, 1879, providing for escapement shafts in coal mines was intended for protection of employes and not for the purpose of requiring mine owners to construct escapement shaft for other owners. Loose v. People, 11 Ill. App. 445.

Under Illinois Act, July 1, 1872, providing for liability for willful failure to provide two outlets to mines where more than fifteen miners are employed, the company is liable where the second shaft is not provided and at an alarm of fire a miner fell down a shaft, in the effort to escape, for fear his outlet would be cut off, although if he had remained at his post there would have been no danger. Wesley City Coal Co. v. Healer, 84 Ill. 121.

So a mining company willfully neglecting to prevent accumulation of gas as required by Illinois Act July 1, 1887, is liable for injuries to an employé caused thereby. Muddy Valley Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Phillips, 39 Ill. App. 376.

And that the ventilation as required by 35 & 36 Vict., chap. 73, would have cost an outlay of £300 will not excuse the agent unless he pointed out the alterations required to the owners and demanded the same. Hall v. Hopwood, 15 Mining Rep. 42, 49 L. J. M. C. 17, 41 L. T. N. S. 797.

Under 18 & 19 Vict., chap. 108, § 4, requiring ventilation constantly if colliery "be worked," the suspension of actual work from Saturday to Monday will not suspend the requirements as to ventilation during that time. Knowles v. Dickinson, 3 El. & El. 705, 29 L. J. M. C. 125, 6 Jur. N. S. 678, 9 Week. Rep. 411.

And under 23 & 24 Vict., chap. 151, an act for the regulation and inspection of mines, so much of the mine must be kept ventilated as to render the cannot, under any principle applicable to the relation of master and servant, be held liable to one of these employes for the negligence of his fellow servant in the performance of this work.

Armour v. Hahn, 111 U. S. 818, 28 L. ed. 440; Chicago & O. Coal & Car Co. v. Norman, supra.

Mr. L. D. Vickers also for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Price & Wright, for defendant in error:

The workman takes upon himself the risks ordinarily incident to the employment he engages in; and those include the results of negligence upon the part of others engaged in the same service.

On the other hand, the master is bound to use ordinary care in providing suitable structures and engine and proper servants to carry on his business, and is liable for any negligence in this respect. If he knows, or in the exercise of due care might have known, that his servants are incompetent, or his structures or engines insufficient either at the time of procuring them, or at any subsequent time, he fails in his duty.

Arkerson v. Dennison, 117 Mass. 412; Wood, Mast. & S. 830, 416-418, 430, 441; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Henderson, 37 Ohio St. 549; Smith v. The Wm. Powell Co. 28 Ohio L. J. 436, and authorities there cited; Wright v. New York Cent. R. Co. 25 N. Y. 562; Warner v. Erie R. Co. 39 N. Y. 471; Laylor v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 52 Ill. 401; Columbus, O. & I. Cent. R. Co. v. Troesch, 68 Ill. 545; Connolly v. Poillon, 41 Barb. 366; Shearm. & Redf. Neg.

working places safe. Brough v. Humfray, 15 Min. Rep. 6, L. R. 3 Q. B. 771, 37 L. J. M. C. 177, 16 Week. Rep. 1123, 9 Best & S. 492.

The word "mine" in Illinois Sess. Laws 1883, p. 114, providing for examination for fire damp, with safety lamp, applies to a place where the miners are working in a mine although not actually mining coal at the time. Coal Run Coal Co. v. Jones, 19 Ill. App. 385, reversed in 6 West. Rep. 500.

And under Pa. Mining Act 1870, requiring mining boss to have main doors attended and guarded to prevent their being left open, he has no discretion. Com. v. Reynolds, 1 Luzerne Legal Reg. 218.

But under Pa. Act 1885, regulating the employment of mine bosses, it is no part of the boss's duty to employ or discharge men; his duty is to look out for ventilation and drainage and props, etc. If he has the power to employ men and was negligent, he is not a coemploye and there can be a recovery for death caused by his wrongful act in absence of contributory negligence. Weaver v. Iselin, 161 Pa. 386.

Pa. Act March 3, 1870, prohibiting the working of mines not having two shafts for every seam of coal worked, with a proviso that this shall not apply to opening a new mine nor making communications between shafts so long as not more than twenty persons are employed in such new mine, the operating of the first and third seams simultaneously with the opening of the fifth which had but one outlet is not within the prohibition as the fifth seam was simply in preparation for working. Haddock v. Com. 103 Pa. 243, reversing 1 Luzerne Legal Reg. 320.

A superintendent of a mine is not criminally liable for failing to make safety holes and to keep the same free from obstructions at the bottom of all slopes and planes under Pa. Min. Act, June 30, 25 L. R. A.

§§ 180, 191, 204, and note 2, p. 348, § 823; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 642, 29 L. ed. 755; Ford v. Fitchburg R. Co. 110 Mass. 240, 14 Am. Rep. 598.

Negligence in employing the servant is the test, and willfulness is not an essential element.

Wabash R. Co. v. McDaniels, 107 U. S. 454, 27 L. ed. 605; Blake v. Maine Cent. R. Co. 70 Me. 60, 35 Am. Rep. 297; Tyoon v. South & North Ala. R. Co. 61 Ala. 554, 32 Am. Rep. 8; Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Carroll, 89 Pa. 374; McDonald v. Hazeltine, 53 Cal. 35.

The master is bound to inquire as to the servant's qualifications for the service.

Gilman v. Eastern R. Corp. 10 Allen, 232, 87 Am. Dec. 635; Wright v. New York Cent. R. Co. 28 Barb. 80; Laning v. New York Cent. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 521, 10 Am. Rep. 417; Alabama & F. R. Co. v. Waller, 48 Ala. 459; New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co. v. Hughes, 49 Mass. 258.

The duty imposed upon the master in this respect is substantial and absolute. He must at his peril exercise reasonable care in the selection of the appliances of the business and of coservants, and whether he has done so or not is essentially a question for the jury.

Gilman v. Eastern R. Corp. and Wright v. New York Cent. R. Co. supra; Walker v. Bolting, 23 Ala. 294; Griszle v. Frost, 8 Fost. & F. 622.

Proof of the unfitness of a servant at the time of employment makes out a prima facie case against the master, and throws upon him the burden of disproving negligence, in the selection.

Orandall v. McIlrath, 24 Minn. 127; Beach,

1885, where no inspection had been made for over a year and written request had not been made by the inspector. Com. v. Waddell, 6 Kulp, 96.

And a mining company providing a competent boss as required by Pa. Act March 3, 1870, is not liable for death of a miner from an explosion caused by the negligence of such boss in failing to ventilate, as he was a fellow servant. Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Carroll, 89 Pa. 374.

And the same was held under Act April 23, 1877. Redstone Coke Co. v. Roby, 115 Pa. 364.

Where the men had worked at the place some two or three hours, with an open lamp, before the accident occurred, this showed that the failure to examine the place with a safety lamp in the morning as required by statute in no manner contributed to the accident. Coal Run Coal Co. v. Jones (Ill.) 6 West. Rep. 500.

The ventilation law of Pennsylvania of March 3, 1870, does not apply to an air shaft until a communication is formed between it and the mine, where such shaft is being constructed by an independent contractor and the mine owner only supervised to see if it was according to contract. Welsh v. Lehigh & W. Coal Co. (Pa.) 8 Cent. Rep. 386.

Where a miner was killed by explosion of fire damp the question as to the applicability of 23 & 24 Vict., chap. 151, requiring ventilation was not decided. Wilson v. Merry, L. R. 1 H. L. 341.

Workmen stopping up an airway of a mine for their employer, who is contesting the right of property with another, are not guilty of felony under 7 & 8 Geo. IV., chap. 30, if they did not know that the act of their master was malicious. Reg. v. James, 8 Car. & P. 181.

Under Pa. Act 1870, for ventilation of mines where a competent superintendent and proper machinery were provided, the company was not liable for the death of one boss through act of an-

Contrib. Neg. § 853, and note 2, pp. 454, 455, see also § 854; Pittsburgh, O. & St. L. R. Co. v. Adams, 105 Ind. 151; Wright v. New York Cent. R. Co. 25 N. Y. 562.

It is the duty of those who use hazardous agencies to control them carefully, to adopt every known safeguard, and to avail themselves from time to time of every improved invention to lessen the dangers to others. An omission in any of these respects is negligence.

Frankford & B. Turnp. Co. v. Philadelphia & T. R. Co. 54 Pa. 345; Cleveland v. Spier, 16 C. B. N. S. 399; 4 Wait, Act. & Def. 653, 654.

The company owed to Clay, under the custom existing, and also the law, the personal duty to provide a safe working place for him.

A personal duty cannot be delegated so as to exempt the employer from liability.

Beach, Contrib. Neg. p. 85, and notes, pp.

414, notes, p. 419, § 328, note 3; Mobile & M. R. Co. v. Smith, 59 Ala. 245; Wilson v. Madison & C. R. Co. 18 Ind. 226; Colorado Cent. R. Co. v. Martin, 7 Colo. 592; Johnson v. Boston Tow Boat Co. 135 Mass. 209, 46 Am. Rep. 458; McGee v. Boston Cordage Co. 139 Mass. 445.

One may be a fellow servant concerning a certain employment, although he has other duties in exercising which he is the alter ego of the master.

Brick v. Rochester, N. Y. & P. R. Co. 98 N. Y. 211; Borgman v. Omaha & St. L. R. Co. 41 Fed. Rep. 667; Orinwell v. Pittsburg, O. & St. L. R. Co. 30 W. Va. 798; Taylor v. Evansville, & T. H. R. Co. 6 L. R. A. 584, 121 Ind. 124; Clotworthy v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 80 Mo. 221; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Williams, 75 Tex. 4; Anderson v. Bennett, 16 Or. 515; Slater v. Chapman, 67 Mich. 523; Peterson v. Chicago &

other boss in slowing down the ventilator causing fire damp, as this is the act of a fellow servant. Lehigh Valley Coal Co. v. Jones, 86 Pa. 432, 10 Mining Rep. 80.

Under the 7th section of the Illinois Act for "health and safety" of miners, a mining company which employs an incompetent engineer or one under eighteen years of age, is liable for all injuries caused thereby to a miner. Niantic Coal & Min. Co. v. Leonard, 126 Ill. 216. See also Consolidated Coal Co. of St. Louis v. Maehl, 180 Ill. 551.

And a charter master cognizant that more than the number allowed by 23 & 24 Vict., chap. 151, were being lowered down in a coal pit at the same time is liable under that act. Howells v. Wynne, 15 C. B. N. S. 2, 82 L. J. C. P. 241, 9 Jur. N. S. 1041, 11 Week. Rep. 807.

But a mining boss for each opening does not have to be employed under Pa. Act, June 30, 1885, requiring the employment of a competent boss, as a coal mine means such territory, whether one or more drifts, as lies compactly adjacent, and in its working constitutes but a single operation. Com. v. Wigton, 2 Pa. Dist. Rep. 51.

No recovery can be had for injury caused by negligence of mining boss to coemployee, if the company complies with the statute in obtaining a competent boss. Reese v. Biddle, 112 Pa. 72; Waddell v. Simson, 112 Pa. 567; Howells v. Landore Siemens Steel Co. Limited, L. R. 10 Q. B. 62, 44 L. J. Q. B. 25, 82 L. T. N. S. 19, 23 Week. Rep. 335; LincoSKI v. Susquehanna Coal Co. 157 Pa. 153; Lehigh Valley Coal Co. v. Jones, 86 Pa. 432, 10 Mining Rep. 80; Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Carroll, 89 Pa. 374; Redstone Coke Co. v. Roby, 115 Pa. 364.

And the fact that a mining boss has no certificate of competency as required by Pa. Act 1885 (Pub. Laws, 217, § 15), will not render the company liable under such act, where the lack of the certificate had nothing to do with the accident. Christner v. Cumberland & E. L. Coal Co. 146 Pa. 67.

V. Miscellaneous.

The Tennessee Statute of 1881, prohibiting the use of a furnace inside a mine where the coal brakes and chute buildings are built directly over and covering the top of the shaft for the purpose of producing a hot up cast of air, does not apply to a mine where the coal is removed through an entry and not a shaft, although suffocation was caused by buildings at the entrance of the intake being burned. Coal Creek Min. Co. v. Davis, 90 Tenn. 711.

Under Ill. Act May 11, 1877, providing a penalty if the person in charge of the mine does not at once report an accident to the mining inspector, the mine owner is not the responsible party unless he was personally in charge. Sholl v. People, 98 Ill. 121.

Pa. Act April 12, 1867 (Pub. Laws, 76), for the better protection of person, property, and life in the mining region, providing for the appointment of police officers to preserve the peace, is constitutional as the creation of the officers is not prohibited by the constitution. Northumberland County v. Zimmerman, 75 Pa. 26.

A mine owner is not relieved from compliance with the Pennsylvania statute by the fact that in a particular mine certain requirements are unnecessary. Am. v. Kingston Coal Co. 6 Kulp, 241.

In order to convict the contractor of a mine for employing women in mines, under 5 & 6 Vict., chap. 99, where two women had been seen lowering parties into the pit, it was held that this is insufficient to impute knowledge to the contractor, but it would be different if the evidence had showed that such was the habit or custom. Dreg. v. Handley, 9 L. T. N. S. 827.

Pa. Act of March 3, 1870, providing for the health and safety of persons employed in mines and requiring inspection, etc., takes effect at once. Com. v. Conyngham, 66 Pa. 90.

A miner is liable for attempting to ascend the shaft when the hooker-on forbids exit at that time, under 35 & 36 Vict., chap. 76, authorizing miners to establish rules, and a rule prohibited a miner from going down or up into the pit contrary to the direction of the banksmen or hooker-on, and a miner wanted to quit the employ before the hour for ascent. Higham v. Wright, L. R. 2 C. P. Div. 397, 48 L. J. M. C. 223, 87 L. T. N. S. 187, 10 Mining Rep. 21.

A mandamus was granted compelling justices to hear complaint against part of the owners of a mine who failed to provide a boiler with a proper steam gauge as required by 18 & 19 Vict., chap. 103, § 11, as the act renders any owner, agent, or viewer liable for neglect to observe the rules. Reg. v. Brown, 7 El. & Bl. 767, 26 L. J. M. C. 182, 3 Jur. N. S. 745.

The Regulation Miners' Statute 1877, sections 4, 11, and 16, in regard to liability of persons in charge of machinery in connection with the working of a mine, does not apply to the erection of machinery at a mine. Dunstan v. Stewart, 6 Vict. Law Rep. 175.

In an action by a miner for injuries received by the fall of a piece of timber placed in the sides of a shaft, and the complaint was under the Regulation of Mines Statute of 1877, (No. 588), the fact that plaintiff had been aware of the fact that such timber was loose for a long time, and did not notify some one in authority is not conclusive evidence of contributory negligence so as to bar a recovery. Eureka Ext. Co. v. Allen, 9 Vict. Law Rep. 341.

L. T.

W. M. R. Co. 64 Mich. 621; Hussey v. Coger, 39 Hun, 639; Reddon v. Union Pac. R. Co. 5 Utah, 344; Little Miami R. Co. v. Stevens, 20 Ohio St. 425; Krans v. Long Island R. Co. 123 N. Y. 1.

If the person in question is employed to perform any of the personal duties of the master that a master alone may properly do, then is the person no longer a mere servant, but is at once and ipso facto, the agent, the alter ego of his employer.

Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 328, p. 419; Gunter v. Graniteville Mfg. Co. 18 S. C. 262, 44 Am. Rep. 573; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 4th ed. § 230; Lindvall v. Woods, 4 L. R. A. 793, 41 Minn. 212; Loughlin v. State, 105 N. Y. 159; Fluke v. Boston & A. R. Co. 53 N. Y. 549 13 Am. Rep. 545; Crispin v. Babbitt, 81 N. Y. 516, 37 Am. Rep. 521; McCooker v. Long Island R. Co. 84 N. Y. 77; William Bros. v. Carter, 52 Mo. 373; Corcoran v. Holbrook, 59 N. Y. 517, 17 Am. Rep. 369; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Fox, 31 Kan. 586; Fones v. Phillips, 39 Ark. 17, 43 Am. Rep. 264; Lanning v. New York Cent. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 521, 10 Am. Rep. 417; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 642, 29 L. ed. 755; Shearman & Redf. Neg. §§ 204, 205; Booth v. Boston & A. R. Co. 73 N. Y. 38, 29 Am. Rep. 97.

It is the duty of the employer to select and retain servants who are fit and competent for the service, and to furnish safe and sufficient materials, machinery, or other means by which it is to be performed, and to keep them in repair and order. This duty he cannot delegate to a servant so as to exempt himself from liability for injuries caused to another servant by this omission.

Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Herbert, supra; Ford v. Fitchburg R. Co. 110 Mass. 240, 14 Am. Rep. 598; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Jackson, 55 Ill. 492, 8 Am. Rep. 661; Cooper v. Pittsburg, O. & St. L. R. Co. 24 W. Va. 87; Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. 100 U. S. 213, 220, 25 L. ed. 612, 616; Fuller v. Jewett, 80 N. Y. 46, 36 Am. Rep. 475; Benzing v. Steinway & Sons, 101 N. Y. 547; Pittsburgh, O. & St. R. Co. v. Adams, 105 Ind. 151; Collyer v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 49 N. J. L. 59; Brazil Block Coal Co. v. Young, 117 Ind. 520; Sanborn v. Madera Flums & Trading Co. 70 Cal. 261; Kelly v. Erie Teleg. & Teleph. Co. 34 Minn. 321; Gunter v. Graniteville Mfg. Co. 18 S. C. 262, 44 Am. Rep. 573; Pantzar v. Tilly Foster Iron Min. Co. 99 N. Y. 368; Krans v. Long Island R. Co. 123 N. Y. 1; Krueger v. Louisville, N. A. & O. R. Co. 111 Ind. 51; Wood, Mast. & S. § 334; Lawler v. Androscoggin R. Co. 62 Me. 466, 16 Am. Rep. 492.

The claim that the opportunity of Clay to know the condition of the roof of said room was equal to that of the defendant, is nonsense.

Whatever Dalton knew or ought to have known, the company knew or ought to have known.

The company's knowledge was superior to that of Clay; and Clay had a right to rely upon that superior knowledge.

Faren v. Sellers, 39 La. Ann. 1011; Boyce v. Fitzpatrick, 80 Ind. 526; Wood, Mast. & S. 2d ed. § 366, pp. 750, 751; Patterson v. Pittsburg & C. R. Co. 76 Pa. 389, 18 Am. Rep. 412; Wood, Mast. & S. 2d ed. § 358, p. 736.

25 L. R. A.

The rule that plaintiff in an action for negligence, must himself be free from negligence, requires only that he should have used such care as a man of ordinary prudence would employ under the circumstances.

He does not forfeit his redress for wrongful negligence of another because he might have escaped injury by higher vigilance on his own part.

Fero v. Buffalo & S. L. R. Co. 23 N. Y. 209, 78 Am. Dec. 178; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Anderson, 81 Gratt. 812, 81 Am. Rep. 750; Pennsylvania Co. v. Sinclair, 62 Ind. 301, 30 Am. Rep. 185, 190, and notes; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. p. 368, note 4, p. 369, note 1, §§ 85, 99, note 1, pp. 163, 164; Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. 100 U. S. 213, 225, 25 L. ed. 612, 617; McGowan v. La Plata Min. & Smelting Co. 8 McCrary, 393; Wood, Mast. & S. § 319, pp. 634, 635, and notes; Kerwhacker v. Cleveland, U. & O. R. Co. 80 Ohio St. 172, 62 Am. Dec. 246; Darling v. Williams, 35 Ohio St. 58; Cincinnati H. & D. R. Co. v. Kassen, 16 L. R. A. 674, 49 Ohio St. 230; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Murphy, 50 Ohio St. —, 29 Ohio L. J. 168.

Ignorance of a master of the defects in the instrumentalities used by his servants in performing his work is no defense to an action by the employé who had been injured by them, when by the exercise of proper care and inspection the master could have discovered and remedied the defects, or avoided the injury therefrom.

Benzing v. Steinway & Sons, 101 N. Y. 547; Wood, Mast. & S. §§ 343, 349; Jones v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 49 Mich. 573; Bunnell v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 29 Minn. 305.

It being the duty of the owner of the property to use reasonable care to provide a safe place for the mason to work, the jury might, though finding plaintiff free from negligence, find the owner negligent if the general plan which was adopted for protecting the bank from falling was inadequate.

O'Driscoll v. Faxon, 156 Mass. 527; Holden v. Fitchburg R. Co. 129 Mass. 268, 37 Am. Rep. 343; Ryan v. Tarbox, 135 Mass. 207.

Negligence of a servant does not excuse the master from liability to a coservant for an injury which would not have happened had the master performed his duty.

Coppins v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 123 N. Y. 557; Boyce v. Fitzpatrick, 80 Ind. 526; Rogers v. Leyden, 127 Ind. 50; Cone v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 81 N. Y. 206, 37 Am. Rep. 491; Fisk v. Central Pac. R. Co. 73 Cal. 38; Stringham v. Stewart, 100 N. Y. 516; Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. p. 662; Pittsburgh, O. & St. L. R. Co. v. Henderson, 87 Ohio St. 549.

Where the negligence of the master, combined with the negligence of his servant, produces injury to a fellow servant, the injured servant may recover, if he is, himself, free from fault.

Boyce v. Fitzpatrick, Rogers v. Leyden, Pittsburgh, O. & St. L. R. Co. v. Henderson, Fisk v. Central Pac. R. Co., Coppins v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. and Stringham v. Stewart, supra; Hancock v. Keene, 5 Ind. App. 408; Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 304; Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. 662; Smith v. The Wm. Powell Co. 23 Ohio L. J. 436; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v.

Murphy, 50 Ohio St. —, 29 Ohio L. J. 168; Monmouth Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Erling, 148 Ill. 521; Grand Trunk R. Co. of Canada v. Cummings, 106 U. S. 700, 27 L. ed. 266.

The servant has a right to assume that all reasonable attention will be given by his employer to his safety, so that he will not be carelessly, and needlessly exposed to risks which might be avoided by ordinary care and prudence.

Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 189, p. 323, note 2; Boyce v. Fitzpatrick, 80 Ind. 526.

The servant's mere continuance in the service, after knowledge of a defect, such as incompetency of a fellow servant, is not, as a matter of law, contributory negligence.

Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 209, p. 361, note 5.

Servants do not assume any risks which are not known or discoverable, nor any which do not exist at the time when he enters into his master's service, and to which his attention is not called before he suffers therefrom.

Shearm. & Redf. Neg. §§ 178, 185, p. 302, notes; 4th ed. p. 143, and note 1; Nashville & C. R. Co. v. Elliott, 1 Coldw. 611, 78 Am. Dec. 506; Wood, Mast. & S. §§ 327, 352; Reed v. Northfield, 13 Pick. 94, 23 Am. Dec. 662; Whittaker v. West Boylston, 97 Mass. 273.

Messrs. Weldy & Buerhaus also for defendant in error.

Spear, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The first proposition argued is that the common pleas erred in overruling the demurrer to the petition. A majority of the court is of opinion that, under our liberal rules of construction, the pleading, in the absence of a motion to make more definite, is sufficient.

The next proposition is that the common pleas erred in giving, in its charge to the jury, one of a series of seven requests asked by plaintiff. To this the exception entered was in this form: "to which ruling of the court in giving the special charges, as asked by the plaintiff, the defendant at the time excepted." We are of opinion that this exception is too general to bring the objection before a reviewing court. The exception should have been directed to the particular proposition to which objection was made.

Another proposition argued is that the trial court erred in refusing to give to the jury instruction No. 10, asked by the defendant, which instruction is as follows:

"10. The defendant asks the court to say to the jury that if they find from the evidence that Clay was in control of the room where he got killed, that then under the Criminal Statute, section 6871, Revised Statutes of Ohio, it was his duty to properly post the room, and no custom existing at the time at the mine could relieve him of that duty."

Upon this point, in its general charge, the court said to the jury that if they found that Clay "violated a criminal statute, for which violation he could have been prosecuted had he lived, such violation will not preclude a recovery in this action."

It is further contended that the undisputed evidence given at the trial shows that there was no case made by the plaintiff justifying a verdict, and that the trial court, therefore, erred in not sustaining the defendant's motion for a new trial. In order to judge of the bearing of the request which was refused, and the charge given respecting the section of the statute referred to, and the claim above stated, it will be necessary to look somewhat at the facts as shown by the record. It is proper here to correct a misapprehension on the part of counsel for defendant in error. They contend in their brief that the general charge of the court cannot be considered because it was not made part of the bill of exceptions. Doubtless the manner in which the record is printed misled the counsel. The original bill of exceptions shows that the charge is properly attached to and made part of the bill, and we are not, therefore, embarrassed by a defective record.

Geo. D. Clay, the deceased, a man of about twenty-two years of age, was employed at the time of his death in working a machine used in mining coal in the mine of the defendant company. With him at the time, as a helper, was one Harry Devault, who met his death at the same time and by the same accident. Clay had been engaged in mining about three years in all, most of the time as a helper, having had charge of the machine about two months. He was a man in good health, and of average intelligence. The mine embraced a number of rooms in which cutting with the machine was done. The operation of the machine is to punch or jab the coal and so make a bearing in and under the coal for the driller who follows and drills holes in the face of the coal near the top for the reception of the blasting material. The driller is succeeded by the filler, who shoots down the coal, loads it into cars, etc. Three sets of men are thus engaged in the room, but at different times, and at distinct employments. Necessarily, therefore, the one having charge of these several operations has, for the time being, control of the room.

The man Dalton was a filler, and had enjoined upon him, in addition, by direction of the mine boss, one Dilch, the work of posting in the two rooms where he worked as filler, one being the room in which Clay met his death. He had worked in the mine some eighteen months, having been employed originally as a helper, which position did not require him to attend to the work of posting, and later had been advanced to the place of a filler, and had been engaged in posting only about two months at the time of the accident. In the course of his work he was required to shoot down the coal, fill it into cars, prop the roof where necessary, and get the room ready for the machine to come in again. In the two rooms thus posted by Dalton, Clay had followed in after him during the two months and cut the coal. The operation of cutting occupies about two and a half hours in each room. Ten rooms are usually assigned to one machine, and are cut one after another until the entire number are cut, when the first room is again reached. It does not appear that either Clay or Devault at any time made complaint of the way in which Dalton was performing his duty, either to Dalton himself, or to the mine boss.

Dalton was called by the plaintiff below, and it was shown by his testimony, not contradicted, that on the day Clay and Devault were killed, Dalton was present when they started in to cut the room. He said to Clay that he had better examine the room to see whether there was anything loose or not; to see whether there was any danger there or not. Thereupon Clay took a pick and sounded the roof; and said it was all right. It appears by this and other witnesses that sounding the roof with a pick was the usual way of determining whether it was secure or not, and, by witnesses called by plaintiff, that the sounding of the roof was not a hard thing to learn, but an easy thing, and that a common man could do it; if a man had just gone in green he wouldn't know, but if he had gone in knowing the place to be dangerous and tried to learn, it is easy. No evidence was offered tending to show that any propping done by Dalton previously to the work in the room in which the decedents were engaged at the time of the accident, had been defectively or insufficiently done. Nor was any evidence given by plaintiff tending to show that the company did not furnish proper timber for supporting the roof at the place Clay was working, but evidence given by defendant, undisputed, shows that proper timber was so furnished.

Clay and Devault were killed by the falling upon them of a piece of slate some nine feet square and about a foot in thickness.

At the time of the accident, and for a long time before, a custom existed at this mine whereby the work of posting and propping was given to the workmen called fillers. By force of this custom Dalton was required to post and prop, as before stated.

In their respective duties Dalton did not have the control of Clay, nor did Clay have control over Dalton. Each was under one common superior called the mine boss.

It was in evidence by the defendant, not contradicted, that the mine boss gave instructions to both Clay and Devault to the effect that they were to cut nothing they thought dangerous; to take nobody's word for it, but to examine the place for themselves before they went to work, and if found unsafe leave it until it was fixed.

The section of the revised statutes referred to provides, among other things, that "whoever knowingly does any act whereby the life or health of the persons, or the security of any mine and machinery are endangered, or any miner or other person employed in any mine governed by the statute, who intentionally and willfully neglects to securely prop the roof of any working place under his control, shall be guilty of an offense," etc. The same section makes it the duty of the mine owner to keep at the working place of the miner a supply of timber suitable for posting. No doubt exists that the statute applies to this mine. The provision quoted was enacted in substance April 29, 1872 (69 Ohio Laws, 193), the words being as follows: ". . . or if any miner or person employed in any mine governed by the provisions of this act shall neglect or refuse to securely prop or support the roof and entries under his control," etc. The provision has been continued in all the amendments to the act to the present. The act was entitled "An act regulating coal mines, and the working thereof," and has for its principal object, apparent on the face of all its provisions, the protection of the health and lives of those who work in coal mines.

So extensive is this industry in the state that legislation affecting those engaged in it as a daily vocation may be regarded as of public interest, and where a statute, as does the one cited, undertakes to outline and prescribe a particular duty owing by persons so engaged not only to themselves but to others, it may be properly regarded as indicating a public policy on the subject, and where the same provision has remained in force for so long a time, about twenty years at the time of this occurrence, the policy may be treated as a settled one. This provision clearly points out a duty devolving upon all who come within its terms, a grave duty, one so nearly related to the protection of life and limb that it ought not to be lightly esteemed nor easily avoided.

In the case of Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Spangler, 44 Ohio St. 471, where the company sought to avoid liability for an injury caused to one of its employes by reason of the negligence of another employe placed in authority over him because of a contract between the company and the injured party, made as part of the contract of employment, that such liability should not attach, this court held that the plea could not avail inasmuch as the liability of the master was founded upon consideration of public policy. And in the opinion of Owen, Ch. J., it is said: "The policy of our law being well settled, it only remains for us to inquire whether railroad companies may ignore or contravene that policy by private compact with their employes, stipulating that they shall not be held to a liability for the negligence of their servants which public policy demands should attach to them. The answer is obvious. Such liability is not created for the protection of the employes simply, but has its reason and foundation in a public necessity and policy which should not be asked to yield or surrender to mere private interests and agreements."

If the principle of this case has application to the one at bar, and no reason is perceived why it does not, it would seem to follow that the custom set up in the petition ought not to be held to have absolved the deceased from the obligation enjoined by the statute. The object of the statute is to encourage carefulness; regard not only for the life of the miner, but for the lives of all who may be subjected to like risks. It imposes an obligation to perform a duty to others. Anything, therefore, which tends to operate in opposition to that obligation would violate the policy of this statute, and hence, whatever right the custom at this mine imposing upon Dalton the work of propping and posting the roof of the room, may have given Clay to call upon Dalton to do the manual work of posting, and delay his own work until that had been properly done, such custom ought not to have the effect to exonerate Clay from the duty enjoined by the statute, nor shift the risk undertaken by himself over upon the company. We think the trial court erred in refusing to give the instruction requested and in the charge as given upon the subject.

It is insisted by the defendant in error that the duty of the defendant company in respect to furnishing a safe working place, was such that it was liable for the negligence of Dalton, irrespective of the question of his incompetency, and of the company's knowledge thereof, and the case was given to the jury by the learned judge of the common pleas upon this theory. Necessarily this view of the law proceeds upon the assumption that Clay and Dalton were not fellow servants, but that, as respects the posting and propping, Dalton was the alter ego, of the company, and hence the superior of Clay. The claim is sought to be sustained by a class of cases which hold that the duty of the master to provide a safe working place and machinery for his employes cannot be delegated so as to absolve the master from liability in case of failure of the vice-principal to perform that duty. It does not seem necessary to review these cases. They are, as a rule, based upon the proposition that where the appliance, or place, is one which has been furnished for the work in which the servants are to be engaged, there the duty above stated attaches to the master. We need not discuss this proposition for we have not that case. Here the place was not furnished as in any sense a permanent place of work but was a place in which surrounding conditions were constantly changing, and instead of being a place furnished by the master for the employes within the spirit of the decisions referred to, was a place the furnishing and preparation of which was in itself part of the work which they were employed to perform. The distinction is shown in a number of cases, among which may be cited Fraser v. Red River Lumber Co. 45 Minn. 235; McGinty v. Athol Reservoir Co. 155 Mass. 188, and St. Louis Consol. Coal Co. v. Scheller, 42 Ill. App. 619. See also Hall v. Johnson, 8 Hurlst. & C. 589; Waddell v. Simson, 112 Pa. 567.

It cannot be necessary to restate the rule of law as to what determines the relation of fellow servant as it is recognized in this state. The principle laid down in Cleveland, O. & C. R. Co. v. Keary, 8 Ohio St. 201; in Whalan v. Mad River & L. E. R. Co. 8 Ohio St. 249; in Columbus & X. R. Co. v.

Webb, 12 Ohio St. 475, and reiterated in divers cases since, is too well established to need repetition, and we think that the facts in this case clearly bring the two men Dalton and Clay into that relation. Applying that rule to this case it was necessary, in order to a recovery, that the plaintiff should show, upon this branch of the case, not only that Dalton was guilty of negligence which was the direct cause of the death of Clay, but that he was incompetent and that this incompetency was known, or could with reasonable diligence have been known, to the company prior to the accident; and beyond this, if plaintiffs proof raised the presumption that such incompetency was known to Clay, or with reasonable diligence might have been known to him, then to overcome that presumption. If so known, the duty, therefore, to notify the bank boss of the fact, and refuse to continue in the dangerous employment until the risk was removed, followed. As to the effect of a neglect of this duty, see Chicago & O. Coal & Car Co. v. Norman, 49 Ohio St. 598. Instead of this being done, it seems to us entirely clear, by the case made by the plaintiff, that whatever incompetency had been shown in the work of Dalton was known to Clay; at least he had the fullest opportunity of noticing Dalton's manner of posting from day to day as he followed after him from room to room to cut the coal, and, so far as the record shows, no effort to give notice of incompetency was made. And while it is true that it was the duty of Dalton, as between him and his employer, to post the roof of the room to prevent it from falling, yet the plaintiff's evidence shows that Dalton, Clay, and Devault were engaged in one common object in which it was not less the duty of Clay and Devault than of Dalton, because of the nature of the employment, their common interest and their common peril, to watch every appearance of danger, and, if we may consider the uncontradicted evidence of defendant, because of the instructions of their employer the further duty to give warning promptly, and forbear exposure of their persons while the dangerous conditions existed.

It appears to us, upon a consideration of the whole record, that the verdict and judgment were the result of the erroneous view of the law taken by the trial court, inasmuch as there was no evidence given at the trial which, in law, will sustain the verdict.

The judgment will, therefore, be reversed.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

CRAFT REFRIGERATING MACHINE
CO., Appts.,

v.

QUINNIPIAC BREWING CO.

(.....Conn.....)

1. A cause of action for breach of contract to pay for a machine and one for tort for forcibly preventing the seller from regaining possession of the machine may properly be joined in one complaint which seeks to merely recover the purchase price of the machine.

2. A single count is sufficient in an

NOTE.—Without at this time attempting to annotate the question of joinder of causes of action for tort and breach of contract under modern code 25 L. R. A.

systems of procedure, we report the above cases as presenting a valuable discussion of the subject as well as an important adjudication.

action in which the relief sought is merely the recovery of the purchase price of a machine, although two causes of action are relied upon to sustain the recovery, one for breach of contract in failing to pay the purchase price and the other in tort for forcibly preventing the seller from regaining possession of the machine.

3. There can be no reversal of an order dismissing the suit because of plaintiff's refusal to comply with the direction of the court to elect upon which cause of action stated in his complaint he will proceed, although the direction is erroneous, since until reversed the direction is binding and as capable of enforcement as any other order, which may be by dismissal of the suit for disobedience.

(Carpenter and Torrance, JJ., dissent from proposition 3.)

(December 12, 1893.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for New Haven County dismissing a suit brought to recover the purchase price of certain refrigerating machines. Affirmed.

The complaint stated that the plaintiff sold and delivered to the defendant two machines at a certain agreed price. That the defendant claimed that the machines did not comply with the contract. That plaintiff agreed to take them back and sent for them, but the defendant forcibly prevented him from taking them and continued to use them as its own, thereby converting them. The court required the plaintiff to elect on which cause of action it would proceed, on the ground that the two causes of action, one on contract and the other in tort, could not be stated in a single count. The plaintiff refused to make the election and the suit was dismissed.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Henry Stoddard and John W. Bristol for appellant.

Messrs. William C. Case, William H. Ely, and Edmund Zacher for appellee.

Baldwin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Complaints, under the practice act, are to "contain a statement of the facts constituting the cause of action." Gen. Stat. § 872. This is to be "a plain and concise statement of the material facts on which the pleader relies." Id. § 880. "Acts and contracts may be stated according to their legal effect" (Practice Book, p. 14, rule 3, § 1), and "the plaintiff may claim alternative relief, based upon an alternative construction of his cause of action." Id. p. 13, rule 2, § 9. Several causes of action may be united in the same complaint if all are "upon claims, whether in contract or tort or both, arising out of the same transaction or transactions connected with the same subject of action; but they must be separately stated," and "if it appear to the court that they cannot all be conveniently heard together, the court may order separate trials of any such causes of action, or may direct that any one or more of them be expunged from the complaint." Gen. Stat. § 878. "Transactions connected with the same subject of action may include any transactions which grow out of the subject-matter in regard to which the controversy has arisen; as, for instance, the failure of a bailee to use the goods bailed for the purpose agreed, and also an injury to them by his fault or neglect." Practice Book, p. 15, rule 8, § 7. Where separate and distinct causes of action (as distinguished from separate and distinct claims for relief, founded on the same cause of action or transaction) are joined, "the complaint is to be divided into separate counts." Id. p. 12, rule 2, § 4. Any exception for misjoinder of causes of action, whether in the same or separate counts, must be taken by demurrer, and, if not so taken, will be deemed to be waived. Id. p. 17, rule 4, § 13. These various statutory provisions and rules of court are all designed to enable the plaintiff to state his grievance to the court, untrammelled by artificial forms of pleading, and regardless of most of the ancient distinctions of procedure as to law and equity, or contract and tort. There is no attempt to bring the parties to issue upon some "single, certain, and material point." Each paragraph of the complaint is to contain "as nearly as may be a separate allegation" (Gen. Stat. § 880), and it is declared that "the denial of any material allegation shall constitute an issue of fact," Practice Book, p. 17, rule 4, § 12. If, in any case, so many of these issues are formed that the court fears the jury cannot properly dispose of all at one hearing, it "may order that one or more of the issues joined be tried before the others." Gen. Stat. § 1032. And, if the issues made up by the parties are indefinite or indecisive, the court may direct them "to prepare other issues, and such issues shall, if the parties differ, be settled by the court." Id. § 880.

The plaintiff's complaint sets forth two causes of action, stating them in separate paragraphs, but not in separate counts. One cause of action is for breach of a contract to take, and pay for, two refrigerating machines, at an agreed price. The other cause of action is for a conversion of the machines. It was proper to join these different causes of action in one complaint, either if both arose out of the same transaction, or if, while one arose out of one transaction, and the other out of another, both these transactions were "connected with the same subject of action." This notion of completed action strongly characterizes the word in the Latin language, from which, through the Normans, we have derived it, although we gain little assistance otherwise from these sources in determining its meaning, since both the Romans and the French have used it mainly as a juridical term to signify an agreement of parties in settlement of differences. Dig. II. 15, "De Transactionibus," Civil Code of France, art. 2044. As the word is employed in American codes of pleading and in our own practice act, a "transaction" is something which has taken place, whereby a cause of action has arisen. It must therefore consist of an act or agreement, or several acts or agreements having some connection with each other, in which more than one person is concerned, and by which the legal relations of such persons between themselves are altered. The transaction between the parties to the present action began when they made the contract for the manufacture and sale of the two machines. Then followed the delivery of the machines, the refusal to accept them, the attempt of the plaintiff to retake them, the forcible prevention of their removal, and the subsequent continuance of their use in the defendant's business. Without taking each and all of these events into consideration, the legal relations of the parties could not be fully determined. From the delivery of the machines to the commencement of the action, they had remained continuously in the defendant's possession. It had simply dealt with them in a different way at different times. The practice act is to be "favorably and liberally construed as a remedial statute." Practice Book, p. 21, rule 9. § 4. It has taken the word "transaction," not out of any legal vocabulary of technical terms, but from the common speech of men. So far as we are aware, it has never been the subject of any exact judicial definition. It is therefore to be construed as men commonly understand it, when applied, as in our practice act it certainly is applied (Gen. Stat. § 878), to any dealings between the parties resulting in wrongs, without regard to whether the wrong be done by violence, neglect, or breach of contract. It seems to us hardly to be doubted that any ordinary man would consider everything stated in the complaint as properly belonging to a narrative of the whole transaction between the parties, and necessary for the information of one who was to form a judgment as to their respective rights. That a broader meaning should be given to the term "transaction" than it has received in some of the courts of our sister states is plain from the provision in the Practice Book (page 13, rule 2, § 7) that "where several torts are committed simultaneously against the plaintiff (as a battery accompanied by slanderous words) they may be joined as causes of action arising out of the same transaction, notwithstanding they may belong to different classes of actions." This was the deliberate adoption of a view of the meaning of the word in question which had been previously disapproved in New York, as well as by Judge Bliss in his treatise on Code Pleading (sec. 125), though accepted in Kansas. Anderson v. Hill, 53 Barb. 238, 245; Harris v. Avery, 5 Kan. 146. It follows that both the causes of action declared on were properly united in one complaint. The same result would also be reached if what we have viewed as one transaction could be regarded as consisting of several transactions, since such would all be connected with the same subject of action; that is, the two machines, and the title to them.

The plaintiff had a right to declare in separate counts. Bassett v. Shares, 68 Conn. 39, 41; Practice Book, p. 87, form 30. We think, however, that it had an equal right to use but one. While two causes of action were set up as the basis of its right to damages, there was really but one on which a recovery was claimed. The plaintiff was not seeking to be paid twice for its machines. If they conformed to the contract, or if, though not conformable to it, the defendant, after full opportunity for examination, had finally accepted them under the contract, it was liable for the contract price. If the defendant, on the other hand, had rightfully refused to accept them under the contract, and the plaintiff had acquiesced in such refusal, but had been forcibly prevented from taking them back, and the defendant had afterwards used them as its own, it would be liable for their value as on a conversion. The measure of the damages would differ according to the true construction of the plaintiff's cause of action. It had a right to present claims for "alternative relief, based upon an alternative construction" of this cause of the action. Separate counts are required for separate and distinct causes of action, but not for the presentation of separate and distinct claims for relief founded on the same cause of action or transaction. Practice Book, p. 12, rule 2, § 4. This rule does not require separate counts in all cases where the plaintiff declares on several causes of action, but only where these are separate and distinct from each other. In one sense, every cause of action must be separate and distinct from any other, but evidently this cannot be the sense in which these terms of description are employed in the rules under the practice act, for it would make them mere surplusage, in this connection. Separate and distinct causes of action, within the meaning of this rule, must be such as are both separable from each other, and separable by some distinct line of demarkation. In form 91 of the Practice Book (page 65), there is alleged in a single count the breach of a contract to print a book from stereotype plates furnished by the plaintiff, and also a conversion of the plates. This form is referred to in the index to the Practice Book (page 278)—an index carefully prepared by the commission which framed the practice act, and afterwards, by request of the judges, the rules to carry it into effect—as a complaint for a conversion "as part of an entire transaction." Had the wrong done by the breach of contract which occurred at an earlier stage of the transaction thus declared on been regarded as "separate and distinct" from the wrong done by the conversion which ended the transaction, two counts would have been necessary.

To separate and distinguish the two causes of action set up in the complaint before us would be no easy task. In substance, they amounted rather to separate and distinct claims for relief founded on the same transaction. In form 15 of the Practice Book (page 30) is found a complaint in a single count against two defendants, setting up a contract made by one as the agent of the other, and the denial by the latter of the existence of any agency. Relief in damages is sought against one or the other in the alternative. Here, obviously, are different causes of action. Not only are they several because each is against a different defendant, but one sounds in contract, and the other in tort, since the only remedy in this jurisdiction against one who contracts as an agent without authority from the supposed principal is by an action for the wrong done by his false assumption of authority. Johnson v. Smith, 21 Conn.

627, 634. Yet the Practice Book here, again, as in form 91, does to treat them as "separate and distinct," within the meaning of rule 2. Our laws formerly cast on the plaintiff the duty of construing his rights with respect to the form in which they ought to be brought before the court, and the relief to which he might be entitled, at the risk of losing everything if he mistook his remedy. The practice act enables him, in a case like the present, to throw this duty of construction upon the court. It is enough for him to tell his story as plainly and concisely as may be, and to state the different kinds of relief, one of which he thinks he may fairly claim. The court will then apply the law to the facts alleged and proved, and award such relief as the case may call for. The plaintiff in the case at the bar, upon the facts stated in its complaint, might well doubt whether it was entitled to the contract price or the market value of the machines; that is, whether its recovery should be made to rest on a breach of contract or a conversion,—on the defendant's refusal to pay for its own property, or its wrongful appropriation of the plaintiff's property. To determine this question, it was necessary to consider the whole of the transaction alleged. Without this, it could not be certain that justice between the parties would be done. The connection between the defendant's notice that the machines were not accepted, and its forcible resistance to their removal, was so close that the plaintiff's story would have been but half told, had mention of either been omitted. The substantial question in dispute was whether the defendant had so ordered and dealt with the machines that it was bound to pay for them. Whether the liability rested on a contract or a tort was matter of form, except as it might affect the assessment of damages; and if the plaintiff was entitled to judgment the interest of both parties would be promoted by having the amount of recovery ascertained by the proper rule at the same hearing in which the right of recovery was established. The defendant refers to Turner v. Davis, 48 Conn. 397, 400, as affirming it to be a rule of pleading that a plaintiff can never "occupy at one and the same time, with reference to the same subject-matter, and for the accomplishment of the same object, two positions utterly inconsistent with each other." The question in that case was whether the mortgagee of a reversion, who, after accepting an attornment from the tenant, and giving him a lease, had sought and obtained a foreclosure and judgment of ejectment against the mortgagor, on a complaint alleging that he was in possession, could then change his position, and maintain summary process against the tenant on the lease he had himself executed. This depended on the effect of a judgment by way of estoppel. The remarks quoted from the opinion of the court were pertinent to the case before it, where the plaintiff's rights had been fixed by a previous election. They have no application to the interpretation of the practice act in relation to the joinder of causes of action, between which no election has been previously made. It is the rule in some states that inconsistent claims cannot be set up in the same complaint, nor inconsistent defenses in the same answer; but a different policy has been adopted here. Practice Book, p. 11, rule 1, § 8; Id. p. 18, rule 2, § 9; Id. forms 15, 16, 389. The plaintiff's complaint, therefore, was in proper form; and, in our opinion, it set up no claims that could not be properly and conveniently heard together. It follows that the trial court erred in requiring the plaintiff, during the progress of the trial, to elect between proceeding under its claim for breach of contract, or under its claim for a tort.

The order, however, while erroneous, was not void. The court had power to direct that one or the other of these claims should be expunged from the complaint, and to make the selection for this purpose itself. Gen. Stat. § 878. By the action taken, the power and duty of selection, instead of being exercised by the court, were cast upon the plaintiff. The court had jurisdiction over the parties and the cause. It was its duty to see that the issues were so framed and tried as not to embarrass the jury by any confusion of questions which could only be satisfactorily disposed of when separately presented. The right to require an election, within proper limits, and at the proper time, between different causes of action combined in a single proceeding, is one generally incident to courts of justice. State v. Tuller, 84 Conn. 280, 299. The error of the trial court was therefore committed in the exercise of its legitimate jurisdiction, and it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to obey the order, or abide the consequences. Full warning was given by the court that a refusal to elect would be deemed sufficient ground for a dismissal of the suit. Gen. Stat., § 999, directs that "if the plaintiff shall refuse to obey the order of the court in pleading he shall be nonsuited," and the general rules of practice (58 Conn. 577), expressly provide that "if a party fails to comply with an order or rule he will be nonsuited or defaulted." It is not for him to refuse obedience to such an order because he deems it erroneous, or because it is erroneous. Until revoked or reversed, it is the law of the case. He can take his exception, but such exception will not suspend the course of justice. The order will still remain in force, and must be obeyed, or the suit dismissed, if the authority of the court, and the dignity of the state which it represents, are to be maintained.

It is urged by the plaintiff that had it made the election required, and then failed to recover a verdict, it could never have sued again on the cause of action which had not been submitted to the jury. But the order of the court was made simply to facilitate the disposition of the case on trial. Its effect was limited by its object. An election forced upon a plaintiff under such circumstances would be simply an election for the purpose of the trial; and his selection of one out of two causes of action arising out of the same transaction would no more have extinguished that not chosen than if it had arisen out of a totally different transaction. As to one cause of action, only, would the plaintiff have had his day in court. The other would stand as if wholly unheard. And, as to both, if the order were erroneous, and a proper exception taken before making the election, a new trial could be had on the original complaint.

The only exception taken by the plaintiff at the trial of this action in the court below was to the order dismissing the complaint; but, as another suit may be hereafter brought, we have thought it better to express our views fully as to the question of pleading and practice which had previously arisen, and which would be not unlikely to recur in any subsequent proceedings between the parties.

There is no error in the judgment appealed from.

Andrews, Ch. J., and Fenn, J., concurred.

Carpenter, J., dissenting:

We all agree that the court erred in requiring the plaintiff to elect whether to claim a judgment on a contract or in tort. The result is that, for disobeying an erroneous order, the plaintiff has been nonsuited. In correcting that error, ought not the plaintiff to be restored to its former position in court? The answer is that the order, although erroneous, was the law of the case, until reversed, and should have been obeyed. But is that strictly true? If the order was not within the jurisdiction of the court, how could it be the law of the case? And was the plaintiff bound to obey it? I suppose the plaintiff had a right to state the facts constituting his cause of action, and call upon the court to render the appropriate judgment. What power, then, had the court to order the plaintiff to decide in advance what the appropriate judgment was, and elect to claim that judgment only? Suppose the plaintiff has two separate causes of action stated in different counts. Has the court the power to compel him to strike out one of the counts, and to claim a judgment only on the other? The case before us, and the one supposed, seem to me to depend upon the same principle. If my Brother Torrance is right,—and I am inclined to think he is,—that there is no statute or rule of court authorizing a nonsuit in such a case, then, unless it is within the general powers of the court, the punishment was unauthorized, and the judgment of nonsuit should have been reversed on that ground.

Torrance, J., dissenting:

In this case the majority of the court hold that the trial court erred in requiring the plaintiff to elect between two causes of action stated in his complaint. In that conclusion, I fully concur. They further hold that the complaint was rightfully dismissed. In that conclusion, I do not concur. This last conclusion seems to be based upon two propositions: First, that the order to elect, though erroneous, was "the law of the case" until revoked or reversed, and therefore should have been obeyed; second, that the trial court had the power to dismiss the complaint for non-compliance with the order. I grant the first proposition, but I deny the second. That the trial court had ample power, in some way, to enforce this order, I concede. Whether it had the power to dismiss the complaint for refusal to obey is the only point in dispute. It unquestionably had power to hear and finally determine the cause. Did it also have the power to refuse to hear and determine for noncompliance with its ruling? In other words, did it have power to render the particular judgment of which the plaintiff complains? Unless it had, then its judgment of dismissal was certainly erroneous, and perhaps void, notwithstanding the fact that it had jurisdiction over the parties, the subject-matter, and the cause. Winsor v. McVeigh, 98 U. S. 274, 28 L. ed. 914. The power to compel a party to submit to a nonsuit or a default, and to dismiss a complaint, for mere noncompliance with some rule of practice or procedure, or some order made incidentally in a particular case, is certainly a very important one. In this state, where such power exists, it has, so far as I am aware, invariably been conferred specifically by some statute or general rule of practice made in pursuance of law; and, when thus conferred, the law or rule conferring the power has uniformly prescribed the particular circumstances under which it might be exercised. This power has been conferred as occasion seemed to demand from a very early period. Thus, in the Revised Statutes (1808), such power appears to have been conferred as follows: In 1667, to nonsuit for want of appearance (page 84); in 1709, to render judgment against a defendant for failing "to make his plea or join issue" (page 551); in 1713, to default for nonappearance of defendant (page 33); in 1754, to nonsuit for failure to give bond to prosecute (page 39); and in 1784, to nonsuit in an action for usury for refusing to be examined on oath when required (page 679). In 1852, power to nonsuit was specially given for failure to make out a prima facie case (Pub. Acts 1852, chap. 4); in 1871, to nonsuit in a flowage case on failure to pay costs and expenses when ordered (Gen. Stat. 1888, § 1225); in 1878, to nonsuit on failure to give a "new bond" in replevin (sec. 1829); in 1888, to nonsuit on failure to give a "new indorser," in an action on a probate bond (sec. 899); and in 1889, to nonsuit or default on failure to disclose (Pub. Acts 1889, chap. 22). This power has also, in a very few instances, been conferred by the general rules of practice made by the judges pursuant to law, as may be seen by reference to such rules hitherto or now in force. There are doubtless other instances where the power in question has been thus specially conferred; but the above are, I think, sufficient to show that in this state the superior court has not been deemed to possess such power unless it was thus specially conferred. Indeed, the power to confer it, even in this way has been questioned or doubted by the bench and the profession in some instances. See Hoyt v. Brooks, 10 Conn. 190, and Naugatuck R. Co. v. Waterbury Button Co. 24 Conn. 468. The right and the power, however, to confer it in this way, are no longer open to question. I know of no instance where the power in question has been exercised in this state, unless it has been thus specially conferred by statute or rule of practice; and I feel warranted, therefore, in assuming that, unless it is so conferred, it does not exist.

In the present case the power of the court to dismiss the complaint is claimed under rule 5 of the general rules of practice adopted in 1890, and found in 58 Conn. 577, and under section 999 of the Revision of 1888. Unless thus conferred, the power, I think, does not exist. Let us examine these two sources. The rule reads as follows: "If a party fails to comply with an order or rule, he will be nonsuited or defaulted, and upon motion to set aside such nonsuit or default the court may grant the motion upon compliance with such terms as the court may impose." Under this rule the question is whether the ruling or order to elect in the present case was "an order or rule," within the meaning of rule 5. The words "order or rule," standing alone, as in rule 5, are ambiguous. They may mean a general rule or order of practice or procedure, or some particular order or ruling made between parties in a given cause. To ascertain which of these meanings is the one intended, we must apply the ordinary rules of interpretation. These words are practically synonyms, and are freely used as such in the dictionaries and in common speech. They are so used in law also. 1 Black. Judgm. pp. 5, 6. I think they are used synonymously in rule 5, and must mean either a general rule made by the judges pursuant to law, or a special incidental order or ruling made by the court in the trial of a cause. If the latter, then every "ruling" made in a cause is a "rule or order," within the meaning of rule 5, for the dictionaries define a "ruling," as a "decision or rule" of a judge or court. If this be the correct interpretation of rule 5, then a party may be nonsuited for noncompliance with or disobedience of any such ruling, and thus may be put out of court, against his will, for a great many causes besides those specifically provided for by statute or general rule. This certainly works a very great and radical change in our practice in this respect, for prior to 1890, as we have seen, this power was always conferred specifically in given cases, under clearly defined circumstances, that usually left no room for doubt or dispute; and, whether given by statute or by general rule, it was given quite sparingly, and only in cases where it was deemed advisable to confer it. But, under the claim now made, it is given generally, and without apparent limitation, and, of course, may be used in cases where there may be great doubt as to whether the ruling is or is not erroneous. I cannot believe that in adopting rule 5 the judges intended to depart so widely and so radically from the former practice. It may well be doubted whether they had the power to provide by general rule sanctions of this kind for every special ruling or order made in a cause. They are expressly empowered to make general rules, and this, by necessary implication, gives the power to provide sanctions for these rules; but the power to provide sanctions for every special ruling is a very different matter, and is not given, I think, either expressly or by implication. But if we assume that they had the power, I think they have not exercised it. Had they intended to depart so widely from the former practice as is now claimed, they would have expressed themselves to that effect more clearly than they have in rule 5. There existed in 1890 no good reason why they should confer the power to nonsuit or default in this general way, for the superior court, as a court of general jurisdiction, already possessed ample power to enforce its special orders and rulings by methods quite as efficient as those pointed out in rule 5. Besides this, it already possessed the power to nonsuit or default in all special cases where the legislature or the judges had deemed it advisable to confer it. Under these circumstances, I do not think the judges intended to confer it in all cases without limitation, and thus render superfluous the statutes by which it was specially conferred, especially when there existed no good reasons for so doing. For these reasons, I think the rule invoked does not confer the power in question.

The power to dismiss is also based upon section 999 of the General Statutes. The difficulty here is that, even under the most liberal construction of the statute, the order in question does not fairly fall within it. The object of the statute is to compel the parties to "make their pleas and join issue." If the plaintiff fails to do this according to the order of the court, he shall be nonsuited. If the defendant so fails, judgment may be rendered against him as upon nihil dicit. The end of the statute is attained when the parties have "made their pleas and joined issue." The court cannot use the power thus conferred for any other purpose. In the case at bar the pleadings were closed; the defendant, under section 18 of rule 4 of the Practice Book, had waived any exception for misjoinder; and the trial was in progress. Under these circumstances, the plaintiff, having offered evidence of a breach of contract, then offered evidence to prove a tort. Thereupon, the defendant claimed that the plaintiff could not proceed for both causes of action, and that it had already elected to proceed for breach of contract. The court held that the plaintiff had not made its election, but ordered it to do so. This was not an "order of the court in pleading," within the statute. If, in a criminal case, like that of State v. Bates, 10 Conn. 372, the court orders the prosecutor to confine himself to the act concerning which evidence has first been given, or if the prosecutor, charging two distinct and separate felonies in one information, is ordered to elect, these can hardly, with propriety, be called orders of the court relating to the pleadings in such cases. Or if, under section 1032 of the General Statutes, the court orders one or more of the issues joined to be tried before the other, such order can hardly be called an "order of the court in pleading," within section 999. The truth is, the court made no "order in pleading." The pleadings were not to be changed at all, but were to remain precisely as the parties had made them. The power to dismiss a cause in this way ought not to be exercised except in cases where it is clearly conferred; and, even in such cases, it ought to be exercised sparingly, for such a power is "not the daily bread, but the strong medicine," of the law. For these reasons, I think the judgment of the court below was either erroneous or void.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Oregon, ex rel. A. C. TAYLOR,
Respt.,
v.
Sylvester PENNOYER et al., Commissioners of Public Buildings, Appls.

(.....Or.....)

An injunction against using state moneys to build a state institution, such as a branch insane asylum, elsewhere than at the seat of government, cannot be granted merely on the ground that the constitution requires its location at the capital, where it does not appear that the cost to the state will be any greater at one place than the other.

(October 16, 1894.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a decree of the Circuit Court for Marion County overruling a demurrer to a complaint filed to restrain proceedings for the location of a branch insane asylum. Reversed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion. Mr. J. C. Moreland, for appellants:

The mere allegation of irreparable injury is not sufficient; the facts must be stated.

Burnett v. Whitesides, 18 Cal. 156; Branch Turnp. Co. v. Yuba County Suprs. Id. 190; Hoke v. Perdue, 62 Cal. 545; Portland v. Baker, 8 Or. 356; Schurmeir v. St. Paul & P. R. Co. 8 Minn. 113, 83 Am. Dec. 770.

When an individual seeks to bring in the aid of the state he must be injured.

State v. Shively, 10 Or. 267.

A civil action cannot be maintained in the name of the state to redress private wrongs.

People v. Albany & S. R. Co. 57 N. Y. 161. See also People v. Miner, 2 Lans. 396.

There is no authority in the statute for the district attorney to bring this proceeding.

Courts cannot supply omissions in legislation.

State v. Simon, 20 Or. 373; Raker v. Payne, 22 Or. 341; King v. Burrell, 12 Ad. & El. 468.

The complainant who seeks an injunction must be able to specify some particular act, the performance of which will damnify him, and it is such act alone that he can restrain.

Gibbs v. Green, 54 Miss. 612.

In no case will an injunction be granted unless the right thereunto be clear.

Tongue v. Gaston, 10 Or. 328; High, Inj. 8d ed. § 1327; People v. New York Canal Board, 55 N. Y. 397.

Mr. T. H. Crawford also for appellants. Messrs. James McCain, Dist. Atty., H.

NOTE.—The right to an injunction against illegal appropriations is considered in a note to Russell v. Tate (Ark.) 7 L. R. A. 180.

In the present case, the alleged constitutionality of the use of the moneys being based merely on the place and not on the substance of the use, presents a somewhat novel question.

25 L. R. A.

J. Bigger, and W. H. Holmes, for respondent:

A taxpayer is the proper party to enjoin illegal diversion of public funds and property.

Carman v. Woodruff, 10 Or. 133; White v. Multnomah County Comrs. 13 Or. 317, 57 Am. Rep. 20, 54 Am. Rep. 882; Wormington v. Pierce, 22 Or. 606; Baker v. Payne, Id. 335; Rice v. Smith, 9 Iowa, 570; Drake v. Phillips, 40 Ill. 388; Colton v. Hanchett, 13 Ill. 615; Webster v. Harwinton, 32 Conn. 131; Portland & W. R. Co. v. Portland, 14 Or. 188, 58 Am. Rep. 299.

The relator need not be the real party, or have any special interest to enforce a public right, but as a voter and citizen he has a general interest in the execution of the law.

State v. Ware, 13 Or. 380; Pike County v. People, 11 Ill. 208; Hall v. People, 57 Ill. 307; Glencoe v. People, 78 Ill. 388; People v. Pacheco, 29 Cal. 212; Linden v. Alameda Supra 45 Cal. 7; Sanger v. Kennebec County Comrs. 25 Me. 291; Heffner v. Com. 28 Pa. 103; People v. Regents of University of Michigan, 4 Mich. 98.

Injunction is the proper, in fact the only, remedy, as the defendants have acted in violation of the constitution.

State v. Judge of Seventh Jud. Dist. Or. 43 La. Ann. 1104; Bradley v. Powell County Comrs. 2 Humph. 428, 37 Am. Dec. 563; Ford v. Farmer, 9 Humph. 157; Bridgenor v. Rodgers, 1 Coldw. 259; Marion County v. Grundy County, 5 Sneed, 490; Hilliard, Inj. 443; High, Inj. §§ 1308, 1319, 1321, 1327; Cooley, Const. Lim. 81-93; Sutherland, Stat. Const. §§ 307, 308.

The appellants have no discretion.

Throop, Pub. Off. §§ 555, 846, note 5, 853, note 3.

Constitutions are to be construed strictly.

Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 183, 6 L. ed. 68.

Wolverton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was instituted for the purpose of having the defendants, acting in their capacity as a board of commissioners of public buildings of the state of Oregon, enjoined and restrained from purchasing 640 acres of land in Union county, in this state, to be used as a site for a branch insane asylum, and expending therefor, of the public funds, the sum of $25,000; from constructing buildings thereon to be used as a hospital for the care of insane persons who should be lawfully committed thereto for care and treatment at the expense of the state; and from expending the funds appropriated therefor. The legislative assembly, at its last session, passed an act "To provide for the location and construction of a branch insane asylum in the eastern portion of Oregon and appropriating money therefor," which provided, among other things: That the governor, secretary of state, and state treasurer, acting in their capacity as a board of commissioners of public buildings of the state of Oregon, should, within sixty days after the act took effect, locate a site for a branch insane asylum, to be known as the "Eastern Oregon Insane Asylum," at some point in one of the following named counties: Wasco, Sherman, Gilliam, Morrow, Umatilla, Union, Crook, or Baker. That said board shall contract for and purchase in the name of and for the state, at the place selected for said asylum, a tract of land consisting of not less than 820 acres nor more than 640 acres, and shall, in the manner provided for by the act, proceed to erect and construct upon said premises an asylum building and outbuildings, and make suitable improvements, and supply the same with furniture and fixtures and everything necessary and requisite to fully complete and equip said Eastern Oregon Asylum, at a cost not exceeding the sum of $165,000. For the purpose of purchasing the land and erecting the asylum buildings, the act appropriates out of the public treasury of the state, from any moneys not otherwise appropriated, $165,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

See also 31 L. R. A. 473; 41 L. R. A. 692.

The complaint alleges, in substance, that the relator is a taxpayer and citizen of the state; that the defendants, Pennoyer, McBride, and Metchan, as governor, secretary, and treasurer of the state of Oregon, constitute the board of commissioners of public buildings of the state; that by virtue of the powers in them vested, as such board, under the provisions of a pretended act of the legislative assembly, which it is claimed passed the assembly at its seventeenth biennial session, the defendants are about to purchase with the moneys of the plaintiff, sought to be appropriated by said legislative assembly for the purpose, 640 acres of land in Union county, Or., for the sum of $25,000, to be used as a site for a branch insane asylum for the state; that defendants, in their capacity as such board, are about to expend of the moneys of the plaintiff, sought to be appropriated as aforesaid, the sum of $140,000 in constructing buildings on said land, to be used as a hospital for the care of a portion of the insane of said state who may be hereafter lawfully committed to such institution for care and treatment at the expense of the state; that said asylum, if constructed as intended, will be one of the public institutions of the state, and that, unless restrained, defendants will purchase and pay for said lands, and build and pay for said buildings, with the money of the state, to the great and irreparable injury of plaintiff; and that plaintiff has no other plain, speedy, or adequate remedy at law. To this complaint the defendants interposed a demurrer, and, for ground thereof, alleged: First, that neither the state nor the relator nor the plaintiff has any legal capacity to bring this suit; second, that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of suit against the defendants, or either of them; third, the complaint does not state facts to constitute any injury threatened to the plaintiff; fourth, that no cause is stated in said complaint for the issuance of an injunction. The demurrer was overruled by the court below, and the cause is here for our consideration upon the questions arising upon the complaint and demurrer.

This case is only distinguishable from the case of Sherman v. Bellows, 24 Or. 553, in that it is brought in the name of the state upon the relation of a private individual, instead of in the name of the private individual directly. It is the settled doctrine of this state that an individual taxpayer, whose burdens would be increased by the wrongful acts of public officers, and where a fraudulent or illegal diversion or misapplication of the public funds is about to be consummated, has such an interest, by reason of the special and peculiar injury he would sustain, as would give him a standing in a court of equity by injunction to restrain such acts, and prevent such diversion of the public funds. Carman v. Woodruff, 10 Or. 183. This doctrine is so well established and sustained by the undoubted weight of authority in the United States that it is unnecessary to enumerate the cases sustaining it. The taxpayer must, however, present such a case as will bring him within the ordinary equitable rules which govern when relief by injunction is sought. He must show that some act is threatened or imminent which will result in some material injury to himself, for which there is no adequate remedy at law. It is not sufficient that he apprehends injurious consequences, which neither actually exist nor are threatened. Fanciful, speculative, or even possible evil results are too remote and indefinite upon which to call into requisition the restraining process of a court of equity. This rule is applicable as well when the state is a party plaintiff as where a individual occupies a like position. Allen, J., in People v. New York Canal Board, 55 N. Y. 895, says: "When the state, as plaintiff, invokes the aid of a court of equity, it is not exempt from the rules applicable to ordinary suitors; that is, it must establish a case of equitable cognizance, and a right to the peculiar relief demanded." See also 2 High, on Injunction, § 1327. So that in legal effect the position occupied by plaintiff herein is not superior to or different from that of the plaintiff in Sherman v. Bellows, supra. The state represents the aggregate of individual taxpayers; the individual himself only, but incidentally the whole people, and the object sought to be attained is identical. The act violative of law or trust relations, which will result in material injury to the individual, must be threatened or imminent, to entitle him to the interposition of a court of equity, and in principle there exists no reason why a different equitable rule should apply where the state is plaintiff.

The contention of the plaintiff is that the legislative act aforesaid is in contravention of section 3, article 14, of the state Constitution, which is as follows: "The seat of government, when established as provided in section 1, shall not be removed for the term of twenty years from the time of such establishment; nor in any other manner than as provided in the first section of this article; provided, that all public institutions of the state, hereafter provided for by the legislative assembly, shall be located at the seat of government,"—and therefore void and inoperative. That the clause "public institutions of the state" means or includes the public buildings thereof; that the branch insane asylum provided for by the act is a public institution, in that sense, and therefore should, under the constitution, be located at the seat of government. In Elliott v. Oliver, 22 Or. 47, Mr. Justice Lord says: "As a general rule a court will not pass upon a constitutional question, and decide a statute to be invalid, unless a decision upon that very point becomes necessary to the determination of the cause;" citing in support thereof Ex parte Randolph, 2 Brock. 448, Fed. Cas. No. 11,558; Hoover v. Wood, 9 Ind. 287; Cooley, Const. Lim. *163. This rule arises out of the due respect which one co-ordinate branch of a state government entertains towards another. The legislature, in adopting laws for the government of the people, does so under its construction of the constitution, and the just presumption always prevails that the business of the legislature is transacted with due regard for the fundamental law by which its acts are limited and governed. It must be a clear case, therefore, and one in which the constitutional question is the very lis mota, before courts will assume the responsibility of declaring an act of the legislative assembly void upon constitutional grounds, and reverse the judgment of a co-ordinate branch of the state government. Does the plaintiff present such a case? and has it exhibited such equities as to entitle it to the relief demanded? The legislature, acting in its legislative and discretionary capacity, has, by adopting the act in question, declared, in effect—First, that a new asylum building is required for the accommodation and proper care and treatment of the insane and idiotic of the state; second, that it is to the best interests of the state and such unfortunates that the same be located in the eastern part of the state; and, third, that $165,000 is required for its construction and completion, and makes an appropriation accordingly. No one will contend but what the legislature had a perfect constitutional right to determine upon the necessity for an additional building, and the amount of funds necessary for the construction thereof, and to make an appropriation therefor. What the difference will be between the cost of construction and maintenance of such a building as an asylum at the seat of government, and a like building and its maintenance in eastern Oregon, is not made apparent by the complaint; and this is wherein the plaintiff fails to show that the burdens of taxation of its citizens will be increased, or that any additional amount of public funds will be required, as a consequence of its erection at the latter place. This is the exact ground upon which the case of Sherman v. Bellows, supra, was decided, and we see no reason now for disturbing that decision. Mr. Justice Moore, speaking for the court in that case, says: "Conceding, without deciding, that the soldiers' home is a public institution of the state, provided by the legislative assembly, and that section 3 of article 14 of the Constitution required the trustees to locate it at Salem; that they had threatened to violate their official duty by locating it at Roseburg,—does it appear that the plaintiff has sustained a personal injury thereby? If it were alleged that, in consequence of the location of the soldiers' home at Roseburg, plaintiff's property would be subjected to a burden of taxation in addition to that which it would be required to bear if located at Salem, then he would sustain a personal injury; and, since an adequate compensation cannot be had at law, he would be entitled to an injunction to prevent such location." Mitchell, J., in Thompson v. Canal Fund Comrs., 2 Abb. Pr. 252, in speaking of the equitable remedy by way of injunction, says: "It was never granted merely to prevent an officer from carrying out a law of the state because it was deemed unconstitutional, where some equity was not the foundation of the bill." 2 High, Inf. § 1326. Chalmers, J., in Gibbs v. Green, 54 Miss. 592, says: "Neither an executive nor a ministerial officer can be enjoined generally from putting a law into force (citing Mississippi v. Johnson, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 475, 18 L. ed. 437). The complainant who seeks an injunction must be able to specify some particular act, the performance of which will damage him, and it is such act alone that he can restrain. This court has no power to examine an act of the legislature generally, and declare it unconstitutional. The limit of our authority in this respect is to disregard, as in violation of the constitution, any act or part of an act which stands in the way of the legal rights of a suitor before us; but a suitor who calls upon a court of chancery to arrest the performance of a duty imposed by the legislature upon a public officer must show conclusively, not only that the act about to be performed is unconstitutional, but also that it will inflict a direct injury upon him." The case at bar presents the peculiar situation of the state calling into requisition one co-ordinate branch of the government to enjoin the executive and ministerial officers of the state, acting in the capacity of a board of commissioners of public buildings, from carrying out the provisions of a law adopted by another co-ordinate branch of the same state government. The contention of the state is that the court must interpose by the extraordinary remedy of injunction, and render nugatory the solemn enactment of a co-ordinate branch of its government, as in contravention of the fundamental law, without at the same time alleging any facts showing wherein and in what manner the state would be damaged, and without exhibiting any good or sufficient reason for the exercise of such extraordinary power. A mere suggestion that the act complained of is unconstitutional, and that the legislature has exceeded its constitutional limitations, is insufficient to call into requisition a court of equity. "The court, as such, has no supervisory power or jurisdiction over public officials or public bodies." People v. New York Canal Board, supra.

The state, when equitable relief is sought, such as is prayed for in the present proceeding, must, like private individuals, bring itself within the known and fixed rules of equitable interference before the court will grant its petition.

It follows from these conclusions that the demurrer should be sustained, and it is so ordered, and that the cause be remanded to the court below for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

RÉSUMÉ OF THE DECISIONS PUBLISHED IN THIS BOOK.

SHOWING the Changes, Progress, and Development of the Law during the First Quarter of the Judicial Year Beginning with October 1, 1894, Classified as Follows:

- I. PUBLIC, OFFICIAL, AND STATUTORY MATTERS.
- II. CONTRACTUAL AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.
- III. CORPORATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS.
- IV. DOMESTIC RELATIONS; PERSONAL CAPACITY.
- V. FIDUCIARIES AND REPRESENTATIVES.
- VI. TORTS; NEGLIGENCE; INJURIES.
- VII. PROPERTY RIGHTS; LIENS; WILLS.
- VIII. CIVIL REMEDIES; RULES AND PRINCIPLES.
- IX. CRIMINAL LAW AND PRACTICE.

I. PUBLIC, OFFICIAL, AND STATUTORY MATTERS.

Constitutional amendment.

The question of the adoption of a constitutional amendment in Montana turns on the failure to publish it for the time specified before election, and this is held fatal on the ground that the provision is mandatory. (Mont.) 560.

A peculiar case respecting a constitutional amendment is presented in California, in which a proposed amendment by the legislature is held invalid because it would not become operative on adoption by the people without subsequent acts and the exercise of discretion by certain officers. (Cal.) 312.

Apportionment.

The validity of an apportionment act, it is held, cannot be contested by an injunction, as equity will not interfere to protect purely political rights. (Ill.) 143.

Suffrage.

The right of women to vote for school commissioner in New York is denied by a decision that such school commissioner must be classed with town and county officers for whom only constitutional electors can vote. (N. Y.) 781. The constitutional qualifications of voters are held applicable to voters for road commissioners so as to invalidate a statute requiring the voters to be freeholders, whether men or women. (N. J.) 480.

A constitutional provision in Kansas, disfranchising those who have voluntarily borne arms against the government, unless their disabilities have been removed in the specified manner, is held to be neither an ex post facto law nor a bill of attainder, but to be valid. (Kan.) 486.

Ballot law.

The Michigan ballot law is considered in a case which holds the provision for an oath of inability to read English as a condition of assistance on that ground is not unconstitutional and is mandatory. (Mich.) 325.

Residence.

That residence cannot be gained by life in prison is held in the case of one committed to prison on his own application in order to get a home and work. (N. Y.) 399.

Governor.

A vacancy in the governor's chair is held to exist under the New Hampshire constitution in case of the governor's disability resulting from illness, and the court by mandamus orders the president of the senate to assume the duties of the office. (N. H.) 613.

Public money.

The appropriation of public money is decided to be in the nature of a donation, the auditor to have no discretion in respect to the drawing his warrant therefor. (Neb.) 774.

Contempt.

The judicial nature of a commitment for contempt is emphatically declared in a Kansas case, holding it unconstitutional to confer such power on county attorneys. (Kan.) 110.

Jurisdiction.

Several interesting questions as to jurisdiction of suits to annul marriages are raised in a case which holds that jurisdiction to annul a marriage on the ground of a prior marriage, in the absence of fraud, duress, mistake, or lunacy, is purely statutory; and that the assumption of such jurisdiction by a court in another state is not sufficient evidence of its existence, even in the case of a court of general jurisdiction. (Mass.) 806.

Judges.

The disqualification of a judge, by reason of prior connection with the case as attorney, is discussed in a Florida case, which holds that it is entirely independent of any present interest in the case, or any fee or reward therefrom. A connection merely nominal, as a member of a firm in whose name an action was begun, is held a disqualification. (Fla.) 114.

The rule denying the liability of a judicial officer for acts done in his judicial capacity is applied to the wrongful exclusion of a spectator from a court-room. (Me.) 506.

The question of jurisdiction to appoint a receiver of property outside the state in which the court sits is raised in respect to a receiver appointed by a federal court in Louisiana for the railroad in Texas, of a corporation created by act of congress, and the jurisdiction is denied. The court also decides that in such a case or in case of collusive appointment of a receiver, he is merely an agent of a company which is responsible for his negligence. (Tex.) 52.

Foreign receiver.

The recognition of a foreign receiver is illustrated in another iron hall case by a Michigan decision. (Mich.) 739.

Such recognition is also illustrated by the dismissal of a writ of error taken by an officer of the company in disregard of an injunction from the court which appointed the receiver in the other state. (Colo.) 888.

Extradition.

The lawfulness of the detention of a person surrendered by a foreign nation as an act of comity when not required to do by treaty is presented in a California case, in which it is held that his rights under the treaty, which enumerated other crimes, are not violated, and also that setting aside of the indictment and his consequent discharge does not exempt him from arrest on a subsequent complaint for the same crime. (Cal.) 598.

Eminent domain.

Several constitutional provisions are involved in the North Dakota case which denies validity to a statute for a drain commission. The provision to be made is held applicable to taking by a municipality, and an order on the drainage fund is not regarded as payment, while a provision for county bonds to be repaid by assessments on the property owners is held in violation of the provision against loaning the credit of the county. (N. Dak.) 888. See also infra as to highways.

Municipal corporations.

A municipal corporation required by statute to establish and maintain a free bathing beach is not liable for the unsafe condition of the bottom, or for its failure to mark the relative depth of water,—especially where it has not thrown open the beach to the public. (D. C.) 691.

The rule that municipal corporations are not liable for failure to enforce police regulations is applied to the neglect of police to suppress the nuisance of coasting on the streets. (Del.) 588.

The validity of an incorporation of a large territory which consists mostly of wild lands and rural property is denied in a Minnesota case, which holds that land "adjacent" to a platted tract under the statute must be such as is somewhat suburban in character, and have some community of interest with the platted portion in the maintenance of a village government. (Minn.) 755.

An attempt by ordinance to give a city building inspector final authority to decide as to the right of a citizen to build upon his property is held unconstitutional. (S. Dak.) 621.

The right of a municipality to supply electricity for municipal and private purposes is sustained in Pennsylvania. (Pa.) 217.

Casting vote.

A peculiar instance of a casting vote appears in a Connecticut case in which the mayor was held to have the casting vote for each of two official newspapers, where four votes had been cast for each of three newspapers by the twelve aldermen, each of whom was allowed to vote for but one. (Conn.) 694.
25 L. R. A.

Protection of employes.

The constitutionality of statutes in the exercise of the police power to protect employes is upheld in respect to an act for the protection of motormen and similar employes on cable, electric, or steam cars. (Minn.) 759.

Protection of children.

The power of the state to protect the health and morals of children is upheld as declared in N. Y. Penal Code, § 292, prohibiting the exhibition in stage dances, etc., of a female child under fourteen years of age. (N. Y.) 794.

Absolute liability of railroads.

A statute making railroad companies liable for property destroyed by fire is held constitutional and not limited to insurable property, although it gives the companies an insurable interest in property for which they may be charged. (Mo.) 175.

Nor is the company entitled to any part of the insurance which the owner procures for himself. (Mo.) 161.

Right to carry on business.

The restriction of fire insurance business entirely to corporations is held constitutional in Pennsylvania. (Pa.) 250.

Tolls of mills.

The regulation by statute of tolls by public water mills is held in Maine to be constitutional. (Me.) 504.

Vaccination.

The power of a school board to exclude children who have not been vaccinated is upheld in a Pennsylvania case. (Pa.) 152.

Taxation.

The power of the legislature to commission a township board of education to levy a tax for a claim unsupported by any legal or moral obligation is denied as unconstitutional, and a recital of disputed facts in the statute held not conclusive on the courts. (Ohio) 770.

The constitutionality of a tax on a succession by will or descent to a decedent's estate is upheld in Maine with the declaration that such succession is entirely subject to the law of the state, which can modify the right or take it away entirely. (Me.) 682.

The attempt to charge a contingent estate with a collateral inheritance tax is unsuccessful in a New York case which holds that even a vested remainder cannot be taxed so long as its value is contingent. (N. Y.) 695.

State taxation of interstate commerce is discussed in a case which holds an express company liable to tax on the business done within the state although it also does interstate business for which it cannot be taxed. (Fla.) 120.

The law of interstate commerce as applied to a license tax on putting up lightning rods is held not to prevent the tax because only such rods are put up as are sold and brought from another state. (N. C.) 810.

A state tax imposed on corporations is held valid notwithstanding the corporation may be created for the carrying on of interstate commerce. (N. J.) 184.

Highways.

Ejectment against a railroad company for constructing a road in a street is denied in a California case which also declares that such a road does not constitute an additional burden. (Cal.) 654.

Poles and wires of a telegraph or telephone company are regarded as an additional burden on a rural highway in a New York case which holds that the public easement includes only moving vehicles or bodies and not the permanent appropriation of any part of the highway. (N. Y.) 640.

This is in conflict with the Michigan decision in 24 L. R. A. 721.

The limitation of lawful uses of a street is illustrated by a decision that a standpipe or water tower cannot be lawfully built by a city in a street, although it owns the fee thereof. (Ill.) 535.

II. CONTRACTUAL AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.

A contract to procure testimony which will win a lawsuit is condemned as against public policy. (Mont.) 87.

The rule as to recognition of a contract valid where made is not applied to uphold an order signed by a married woman out of the state for goods, where the law of her domicile does not permit her to contract debts. (N. C.) 188.

A sale to a nonresident intended merely to avoid an insolvent law is held to be subject to such law in a New Hampshire case, where the transfer was made to avoid Massachusetts law. (N. H.) 821.

An agreement to pay a hundred dollars extra for a mare if she could travel as fast as another one on a test by a certain person within a certain time is held not to involve such test as an indispensable condition, but on failure of the purchaser to have the test made he was held liable on other proof of the speed. (Mich.) 719.

Bonds.

A case involving important questions as to recitals in bonds and of estoppel to dispute them decides also that an instrument is not negotiable where it provides for exchange in addition to principal and interest. (N. Dak.) 363.

Reward.

The revocation of an offer of reward for a criminal is held to be conclusively presumed after a reasonable time, although the offer was absolute in its terms and never withdrawn. (Me.) 503.

Hiring teacher.

The effect of obtaining a certificate to teach after making an unauthorized contract to teach school is presented in a North Dakota case, which holds that the contract being void when made does not become valid on obtaining the certificate, and that there can be no recovery by the teacher for a breach of the contract by discharging him. (N. Dak.) 888.

Sale of timber.

A sale of standing timber although in writing, is held in Rhode Island to be a revokable license which is revoked by conveyance of the land to another. (R. I.) 159.

Adoption of child.

The effect of part performance to invalidate an oral contract is illustrated in case of a contract to adopt a child as an heir, where the relation was assumed and continued during the life of the adopting parents. (Neb.) 207.

Banking.

Surrendering a check held for collection and taking in payment the drawee's check on another bank is held to require the utmost diligence in obtaining payment of the latter. (Md.) 200.
25 L. R. A.

A check on a New York bank sent in payment of a collection is held not to constitute an assignment pro tanto of a general deposit. (Tenn.) 523.

Deposit with a bank after business hours of a post-dated check upon itself for collection is held to make the bank liable if there are funds applicable to the check when it opens on the day of the date of the check, though at the close of the day the account is overdrawn. (D. C.) 761.

Where the sender of a draft for collection orders a remittance in New York exchange, it is held to defeat any claim of trust in the proceeds, after the collecting bank fails. (Tenn.) 523.

An overdraft on the faith of which a bank cancels drafts held for collection, but which is paid to an assignee of the bank after its failure, raises the question of the right of the sender of the paper for collection to the money paid to the assignee. The court denies that the payment constitutes a trust fund or belongs to the sender of the draft for collection. Id.

A special deposit or trust fund, which will not pass to a receiver of the bank, is made where money is left with the bank to be paid to a third person on his presentation of a deed and abstract showing good title to land. (S. Dak.) 809.

A somewhat unusual case growing out of the insolvency of a national bank decides that the closing of the bank by an examiner after the usual exchange of securities with other banks at a clearing house and the payment thereafter to the clearing house by the other banks of the drafts and checks on the insolvent bank, which had been left at the clearing house as security for a balance due to it, and the appropriation by the clearing house of the money thus received on its claims, did not constitute an unlawful preference, since the subsequent transactions did not annul the exchange of securities at the clearing house before the bank closed. (C. C. App. 8d C.) 824.

Preference by state law of a deposit by a savings bank in a bank which has become insolvent is held not an unlawful preference under the New York banking act. (N. Y.) 546.

Carriers.

A stipulation that a shipper of goods who accompanies them shall be carried at his own risk is held applicable to an injury received by him in unloading, after he had temporarily left the car to get assistance. (S. Dak.) 81.

A person traveling by invitation of another on the latter's pass, knowing that fact but not having seen the pass or knowing its conditions, is held bound by a condition that the passengers assume all risks. (Me.) 491.

The legality of discrimination by a carrier is affirmed in a New York case where the discrimination consisted merely in offering special rates, too low to be profitable, at certain periods to those only who would stipulate not to ship any goods by a rival vessel; and one who refused to make the stipulation is held to be not entitled to the special rate. (N. Y.) 674.

Stipulation as to telegram.

Failure to send a message is held not within stipulations against liability unless the message is repeated or claim made within sixty days. (Minn.) 406.

Insurance.

Insurance taken by a mortgagor in his own name and not assigned is held to inure to the benefit of the mortgagee, where the mortgagor's agreement was to keep the premises insured for the other's benefit. (Kan.) 305.

The rights of a mortgagee to whom an insurance policy is payable with a provision that his interest shall not be invalidated by any act or neglect of the mortgagor or owner of the property are upheld, notwithstanding a forfeiture of the insurance by the mortgagor. (Neb.) 679.

In a New York case also a similar insurance policy is construed and the rights of a mortgagee held to be unaffected by other insurance taken without his knowledge by a mortgagor in violation of the policy. Loss pending foreclosure is held not to prevent its consummation. (N. Y.) 686.

In rejecting a certificate by a notary, on the ground that there was a nearer notary, an insurance company is held to waive the requirement as to the nearest notary, if it fails to give his name or address. (N. Y.) 198.

The effect of a bill of sale made without a consideration as a change of title or incumbrance is considered in a case which denies effect to such instrument and holds the policy valid. (N. Y.) 687.

The improper procurement of the surrender of a life insurance policy by threats of litigation and false statements of its invalidity is considered in a case which holds that the policy must be revived. (Mich.) 627.

III. CORPORATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS.

The rule that states may exclude foreign corporations or impose such burdens on them as they choose is so much limited by the law as to interstate commerce that an express statute that contracts of a corporation which has not paid its franchise tax shall be void is denied application to a foreign corporation selling goods by traveling agents. (Mich.) 819.

Extraterritorial effect of general statutes restricting the powers of a corporation is denied in an Illinois case, holding that the New York law prohibiting assignments by insolvent corporations does not affect such an assignment made in Ohio by a New York corporation. (Ill.) 746.

The doing of business by a foreign corporation which will subject to suit in a county is discussed in an Alabama case, which holds that the care and preservation of unemployed property, after the suspension of the operation of a mill, and payment of taxes thereon, is not the doing of business, and that the business must be carried on at the time of the commencement of the suit. (Ala.) 548.

Insurance companies.

The Alabama statute restricting insurance business by foreign companies is construed in a case in which a Philadelphia association is held within the statute. (Ala.) 288.

The Missouri statute restricting insurance business is applied to a New York Lloyds association. (Mo.) 248.

The Lloyds association is held in Pennsylvania not to constitute a "company," within the meaning of statutes restricting insurance by foreign companies. (Pa.) 247.

Benefit association.

Membership in a masonic benefit association is held to be forfeited by the loss of membership in a masonic lodge, although there has been no formal expulsion therefrom, in the case of one who continues to be a saloon keeper in violation of the law of his order. (Mo.) 149.

Railroads.

The effect of abandoning its purpose to build a railroad over land purchased in fee simple for a right of way is held not to forfeit the land, or make a deed by the railroad company for other purposes void, unless the state has assailed the title. (S. C.) 139.

Library board.

The power of a library board, authorized to take property by gift, grant, purchase, devise, bequest, or otherwise, for the maintenance of public libraries, museums, etc., is held to extend to receiving a loan of a collection of coins for exhibition. (Minn.) 280.

Building and loan associations.

The effect of giving notice of withdrawal from a mutual building association is a question of increasing interest in many places, on which a decision of the supreme court of Minnesota is to the effect that a stockholder does not thereby become a general creditor and is not entitled to bring an action and take judgment against the association when there are no funds legally applicable to his claim. (Minn.) 215.

By-laws.

The question of notice of corporate by-laws is raised in a South Carolina case, which holds that such notice is not chargeable on one who is employed by the general manager of the company, whose power is restricted by by-law. (S. C.) 48.

Promoters.

The fraud of a promoter of a corporation in obtaining profits on the sale of property to the corporation is considered in an important Connecticut case, reviewing authorities on the subject. (Conn.) 90.

President.

The power of the president of a banking corporation to institute and conduct litigation is regarded in a Kansas case as belonging to his office, in the absence of express restriction. (Kan.) 110.

Partners.

See infra, VIII., as to attachment.
An interesting question as to the liability of an innocent partner to attachment of his individual property for a firm debt contracted fraudulently by his copartner is decided by the supreme court of Michigan in the negative. (Mich.) 645.

IV. DOMESTIC RELATIONS; PERSONAL CAPACITY.

The presumption of marriage, or legitimacy of issue, is illustrated in a case which expressly holds that in the absence of proof a mere denial will not defeat the presumption, and that it strengthens by the lapse of time. (Pa.) 477.

A somewhat unusual case for a suit for annulment of marriage brought by a third person arises in Maryland, where the plaintiff claims to be the lawful husband of the woman; but it is held that he cannot maintain the suit.

The case also denies that equity has inherent jurisdiction to annul a marriage except in case of fraud or duress. (Md.) 800.

A single blow from husband to wife is held not necessarily cruel and barbarous treatment as cause for a divorce, nor the wife's leaving the house in anger on account of it to be necessarily a desertion. (Pa.) 697.

An unusual application made by a grandmother in Louisiana to compel the sending of grandchildren by their father to visit her was denied, as beyond the jurisdiction of the court, although it was intimated that extreme cases might justify the court in removing the father of the children from his tutorship. (La.) 798.

The conflict of laws as to the status of married women is involved in a case which denies attachment of the property of a married woman, although the debt was created in another state in which she resided and in which the contract was valid. (Mo.) 178.

The doctrine of necessities as applied to infants' contracts is declared in a Connecticut case to be limited to cases in which the necessities have been actually supplied, and in that case a contract for rooms as lodging for a year is held not binding on the infant any longer than he actually occupies the rooms. (Conn.) 618.

V. FIDUCIARIES AND REPRESENTATIVES.

A train despatcher is held not to be a representative of the master and not a fellow servant of trainmen. (Ark.) 886; (N. Y.) 896.

A train despatcher is held in a Maryland case to be a fellow servant of an engineman on a train, but the train despatcher's negligence, which in this case was in question, was in respect to the sending out of drunken or negligent brakemen and not in giving orders for movement of trains. (Md.) 710.

The rule as to vice-principals is applied to the case of a conductor of a freight train with respect to a brakeman. (C. C. App. 2d C.) 470.

See also, infra, VI.

VI. TORTS; NEGLIGENCE; INJURIES.

Slander.

The privilege of witnesses is discussed in respect to testimony before a committee of aldermen investigating charges before a board of public works and held to exist in respect to relevant information given in good faith, even if volunteered. (Conn.) 106.

Negligence; electric wires.

The interest in questions as to the danger from electric wires calls attention to a case in which permission of an electric light company to use a standard on the roof of a building for telegraph and telephone wires is held to create no duty to men looking after the latter wires with respect to the insulation of the electric light wires over another building to which no wires were attached. (Mass.) 554.

And in another case from the same state it is held that the lack of insulation of wires at joints twelve or fifteen inches from a frame to which the wires are fastened and which it is the duty of linemen to ascend in looking after other wires, raises the question for the jury as to negligence. (Mass.) 552.

Elevators.

The degree of care required in operating passenger elevators is discussed in a federal case, which applies the ordinary rule as to carriers. (C. C. App. 6th C.) 83.
55 L. R. A.

Negligence of railroads.

See also, supra, I., as to absolute liability.

Negligence of a railroad company in injuring children upon the track is discussed at considerable length in a North Carolina case, recognizing a special need of care toward children. (N. C.) 784.

Lookout.

The duty to maintain a lookout on a railroad locomotive, as far as consistent with the engineer's management of the train, is affirmed in North Carolina. (N. C.) 287.

The question of proximate cause in its relation to contributory negligence is extensively discussed in this case.

The conductor of one train is held to be the fellow servant of a fireman on another train who is injured by the negligence of the former in leaving a switch open. (C. C. App. 8th C.) 833.

As to passengers.

The effect of the Massachusetts statute creating a penal liability for negligence causing the death of a passenger is considered in a case which holds that conditions on the back of a railroad ticket cannot release it, and that an employé of the company having a monthly ticket is a passenger while traveling on his own business or pleasure. (Mass.) 157.

On the question of a right to recover for injuries in jumping from a moving train, it is held that one who jumps merely because he is afraid of arrest if found thereon, and who was not a passenger, is chargeable with negligence. (Neb.) 79.

To railroad employés.

Liability of a railroad company to an engineer for injuries from collision with an animal due to the failure to keep such fence as the statute requires is upheld, and the collision regarded as the proximate cause of the injury, although the engine, except two small wheels, remains on the track for some distance until it strikes a switch. (Mo.) 820.

An important case in the law of master and servant settles the question in New York to the effect that a train despatcher is not a fellow servant of a trainman, who is injured by the former's negligent orders. (N. Y.) 896.

The same is held in Arkansas, 886. See also supra, V.

Mining employés.

Statutory regulations for the protection of miners have been made in various states, and the Ohio statute making it the duty of the miner to see that the roof of the mine is propped is construed in a case which denies his right to evade the statute by a custom that another employé should prop the mine. (Ohio) 848.

Street railways.

The question of negligence as between a person driving on the track of a cable road and the driver of the car is considered in a Missouri case which holds that it is not necessarily negligent for the car to follow the buggy after it is seen without stopping, but that the negligence of each party is for the jury. (Mo.) 508.

Negligence of an electric railway company in respect to the places at which passengers alight, is the question in a Michigan case where passengers had been allowed to get off on both sides of the cars, on one side of which the ground was rough and uneven. (Mich.) 744.

The law of negligence is applied to an accident on an electric street railway, whereby a school child is struck and killed, and the court holds that the failure of the child to look or listen is not negligence as matter of law, and that greater care is required in running electric cars past a crossing frequented by school children. (Or.) 663.

Volunteer.

The rule that a person assisting the servants of another to facilitate his own business or that of his employer is not their fellow servant or a volunteer is applied in a Maine case, where the servants of a contractor were removing earth from a car for the consignee and engaged in unloading the car by request of the railroad crew. (Me.) 658.

Servants of charities.

The exemption of charitable institutions from liability for torts or negligence of managers or employés, which, against some opposition, seems to be establishing itself in the courts, is supported by a recent Michigan decision as to a hospital for the insane. (Mich.) 602.

Party wall.

The damages to a building caused by the falling of a party wall, which was being carried up as originally intended for a neighboring building, is held not to be chargeable against the person for whom the work was being done in the absence of negligence on his part, and the negligence of an independent contractor is held not chargeable to him. (N. Y.) 667.

VII. PROPERTY RIGHTS; LIENS; WILLS.

Homestead.

A somewhat peculiar case as to the abandonment of a homestead in certain rooms in a building on the homestead lot is decided in Texas against the claim that there could be an abandonment of the homestead in such rooms. (Tex.) 155.

Dower.

Dower is denied in land purchased with the husband's money in the name of a third person for the husband's benefit. (N. Y.) 625.

Inheritance by murderer.

Reversing its former decision on a rehearing, the supreme court of Nebraska holds that an heir may inherit from an ancestor whom he murders. (Neb.) 564.

Receivership.

See also supra.

A sheriff's right to the possession of property is held to continue on appointment of a receiver. (Wash.) 854.

Pledge.

The validity of an attempt to make a pledge is considered in a Louisiana case, which holds that possession sufficient to constitute a pledge was not shown, although securities were placed in a bank box and given to a clerk to be placed in a bank, he to retain the key and deliver them to the creditor when called for. (La.) 577.
25 L. R. A.

Trust certificates.

Regarding certificates of a trust in certain property as similar to stock in a corporation, it is held in New York that a transfer by the owner is not subject to a lien for expenses other than taxable costs of litigation instituted by such owner against the trustees. (N. Y.) 670.

Petroleum.

Petroleum is regarded as realty, constituting part of the inheritance and subject to waste. (W. Va.) 222.

Copyright.

Copyright in reports of law cases is held not to extend to the opinions of the judges or syllabi prepared by them. (C. C. N. D. N. Y.) 441.

Trade-mark.

Priority of discovery or appropriation is declared insufficient to establish a right in a local geographical name as a trade-mark against a rival user of the same locality, if the first user has not so occupied the market as to make the use by another a fraud on customers. (C. C. App. 1st C.) 190.

Trade-name.

The trade-name of a milk business in the sale of milk from a ranch of that name is held not to pass on a division of business between the owner of the ranch and a partner who had no interest in the real estate after the latter ceased to buy milk from that ranch, and the use of the name for milk from other places was held to be a fraud. (Cal.) 193.

Way of necessity.

A right of way from necessity is denied to land to which access can be had by sea, without crossing other land of the grantor. (Me.) 102.

Flowage right.

The right of flowage of a water company is held in a Maine case to include right to ice formed on its pond as against a claim of the owner of the land. (Me.) 499.

River overflow.

An important case as to the right to build levees along a river bank denies the right so far as it would cast surplus water in time of ordinary floods on the opposite shore, or injuriously affect the rights of a railroad company which has a bridge over the stream. (C. C. D. Ind.) 527.

Bed of lakes.

A somewhat important change in the doctrine of the supreme court of Michigan as to the rights of shore owners on small inland lakes is made in a recent case, deciding that where the lake would not all be included within the sections and sub-divisions of the shore owners if their lines were extended, those lines will be disregarded and the principles applicable to riparian ownership will govern, so that the rights will depend upon frontage and the form, length, and breadth of the body of water. (Mich.) 815.

Chattel mortgage.

The question whether or not chattel mortgages constitute an assignment for creditors is decided in the negative by a North Dakota case. (N. Dak.) 377.

Merger of legacies.

A somewhat peculiar case as to liability for the payment of legacies is one in which a devisee, personally charged with payment as each legatee becomes of age, died before all were due and the land descended to the legatees but his estate was held liable and his property first charged with the payment. (Ohio) 766.

Wills.

On the question of due execution of a will signed for the testator by another, it is held that there is some evidence of the fact that it was signed in his presence as the statute requires, where there is proof that he stated to the witnesses whom he called to attest it that it was his will and that he had it written. (Mo.) 701.

Bequest for masses.

A bequest to a church to be used in masses is held invalid. (Ala.) 360.

VIII. CIVIL REMEDIES; RULES AND PRINCIPLES.

A stranger to a contract is denied the right to enforce it, where no consideration moves from him and there is no duty or obligation to him on the part of the promisee. (Minn.) 257.

Joinder.

The question as to joinder of causes of action in modern practice is fully discussed in a Connecticut case. (Conn.) 856.

Election.

The election of remedies is considered in a somewhat difficult case in respect to an attachment and execution in an action of trover, where plaintiff subsequently brought replevin for the property against one who obtained it from one of the former defendants by replevin in another state in an action still pending. (Mass.) 42.

Reference.

The right to compulsory reference because of a long account in a counterclaim, where plaintiff's claim is disputed, is denied by the majority of the court, as an infringement of the right to trial by jury (N. Y.) 67.

Reply.

A reply attacking a release on the ground of fraud is upheld in an action of law in Missouri, by a bare majority of the court, the others holding that the instrument should have been canceled in equity. (Mo.) 514.

25 L. R. A.

Attachment.

Attachment of a partnership on the ground of nonresidence is allowed in Ohio, where the members of the firm are nonresidents, although the firm does business in the state and the statute allows a partnership to be sued in its firm name and served by leaving a copy at its place of business. (Ohio) 649.

Prohibition.

What is said by the court to be the first instance in the state of Vermont of a petition for a writ of prohibition is in a case where a single cause of action had been split up into separate suits before a justice of the peace to prevent an appeal, and the writ is allowed. (Vt.) 605.

Physical examination.

The New York statute authorizing physical examination of an injured party who sues for damages, which has been held to be beyond the power of the court in that state independent of statute, is construed to authorize such examination only as a part of the examination of a party before trial as a witness. (N. Y.) 402.

Injunction.

The necessity of something more than the unconstitutionality of an act by state officers to justify an injunction is illustrated in an Oregon case in which an injunction is refused against the location of a state institution elsewhere than at the capital. (Or.) 862.

An injunction to protect political rights is held beyond chancery jurisdiction in a case which refuses to enjoin election notices under an unconstitutional law. (Ill.) 143.

Injunction of a digest for infringement of copyright in syllabi of reports cannot be granted against the whole book, when only a very few paragraphs infringe. (C. C. N. D. N. Y.) 441.

The power of the courts to enjoin a strike by employes of a receiver is extensively considered in a federal case which denies the power to prevent them from quitting work, but upholds the power to prevent combining to quit with the purpose and intent of crippling the property or embarrassing the operation of the road. (U. S. C. C. App.) 414.

Damages.

An unusual test of the rule of damages for wrongfully but in good faith cutting timber from another's land is furnished where the owner recaptures a part of the logs after they had acquired enhanced value by transportation. But this enhanced value is held to belong to him and not subject to recoupment against the damages for the other part of the logs. (N. C.) 818.

The measure of damages for wrongfully removing standing timber is held to be the value of the timber made therefrom at its place of disposal, without any allowance for expenditure in removing it, where a mortgagee in possession wrongfully wasted the premises. (Vt.) 598.

Damages for mental anguish on account of failure to send a telegram are not allowed in Minnesota. (Minn.) 406.

Restitution.

The rule that requires restoration in order to rescind a contract for fraud is denied application to defeat an action for the balance due on a policy of insurance, where a fraudulent compromise has been obtained. (Ohio) 37.

Limitation of actions.

On a very full review of conflicting authorities, a Wyoming case decides that the great weight of authority denies the power of one person jointly and severally liable on a promissory note to interrupt the running of the statute in favor of the others by making a payment thereon. (Wyo.) 608.

Laches.

Twelve years' acquiescence in the control of a street by park commissioners is held to defeat an objection by a railroad company to the authority of such commissioners in preventing obstructions. (Ill.) 800.

Service of process.

An exception to the rule giving privilege from service of process while coming from another state as a witness is made in respect to the plaintiff in an attachment suit who is sued for malicious prosecution of that suit. (Md.) 721.

In an action on a judgment of another state, absence of service of process may be shown to defeat it, notwithstanding a recital of such services. (Pa.) 699.

IX. CRIMINAL LAW AND PRACTICE.

An ordinance prohibiting unmarried minors to enter bars, unless as agents or servants, is upheld as not unreasonable or inconsistent with statutes prohibiting sales to such persons. (N. C.) 288.

Documentary evidence.

The use of documentary evidence as affected by the constitutional right of an accused to confront the witnesses against him is discussed in a North Carolina case, in which a marriage certificate made at the very time of the marriage was held admissible. (N. C.) 449.

Forgery.

Signing the names of others to a note, adding over one's own signature a statement of authority to sign for the others, is held not to constitute forgery, though the claim of authority is false. (La.) 591.

Solicitation.

The effect of solicitation as an attempt to commit a crime is considered at length in a Washington case, which denies that it constitutes such crime. (Wash.) 434.

Instigation.

Suggesting a scheme for larceny with the approval of the owner of the property prevents conviction for conspiracy to steal the property. (Colo.) 841.

But acting with thieves for the purpose of detecting and punishing them is held not to prevent their conviction of larceny. (Pa.) 849.

INDEX TO NOTES.

(The General Index follows this.)

Action or suit; right of a third party to sue upon a contract made for his benefit:—(I.) the doctrine of consideration; (II.) the question of privity; (III.) general rules as to party to sue; (IV.) grounds upholding action; (a) in general; (b) money had and received; (c) implied promise; (d) there must be an actual benefit; (V.) the statute of frauds; (VI.) limitation of the rule; (VII.) designation of such party; (VIII.) parol evidence to prove party; (IX.) necessity of delivery; (X.) necessity of assent and knowledge; (XI.) effect of assent; (XII.) election of remedies; (XIII.) release of the promise; (XIV.) as a defense to an action; (XV.) actions maintainable by either party; (XVI.) state doctrines; (XVII.) not maintainable; (XVIII.) contracts under seal; (XIX.) insurance contracts; (XX.) partnership transactions; (XXI.) purchase subject to a lien, debt, or mortgage; (XXII.) state statutes; (XXIII.) the English doctrine 287

Attachment; of individual property of one partner for fraud of his copartner 645

Banks. See also CLEARING-HOUSE BUSINESS. Accepting something besides money from the bank as a discharge of drawer of check 200

Exceptions to the prohibition of preferences by insolvent national banks; priority by reason of trust character of deposit; transfers by insolvent national banks 546

Benefit societies. See INSURANCE.

By-laws. See CORPORATIONS.

Checks. See BANKS.

Clearing-house business:—(a) origin and description; (b) rights and liabilities of clearing-houses; (c) clearing-house loan certificates; (d) clearing-house due-bill; (e) presentation and payment through clearing-house; (f) return of paper not good, after receiving it through clearing-house; (g) effect of clearing-house rules and customs; (h) agency of clearing-house members; (i) gold clearing-house; (j) country clearing-house of London; (k) miscellaneous 824

Conflict of laws; enforceability of contracts of married women outside of state in which they are legally made:—contracts in relation to real estate situated where the action is brought; outside of state of domicile; the remedy applicable 178

Constitutional law. See also REFERENCE. Constitutionality of statute making railroad companies absolutely responsible for damages by fires set by them, or for stock killed by them, irrespective of negligence:—fires; killing stock 161

As to statutes to secure safety and comfort of employes 759

25 L. R. A.

Contracts. See also CONFLICT OF LAWS. Contractual relations between school teacher and district 888

Corporations; effect of corporate by-law as notice:—in general; as to member of corporation; as to lien on stock; as to the public generally 49

Duties and liability of promoters to the corporation and its members:—duty of the promoter; sales by promoter to corporation; commissions; profits on options and profits on property bought for corporation; liability to corporation; liability to subscribers; duty to bondholders; character of promoter's liability; effect of promoter's fraud on corporation's right against subscriber; feigned subscription; waiver of fraud; how suit should be brought 90

Courts; disqualification of judge by prior connection with the case:—(I.) statutory disqualification of judge from having been counsel in the case; (a) generally; (b) causes not identical; (c) parties not identical; (d) formal orders; (II.) disqualification, without regard to statute, from having been of counsel in the case; (III.) disqualification from having tried the case before 114

Criminal law; instigation or consent to crime for the purpose of detecting criminal as a defense to prosecution:—burglary; robbery; larceny; stealing slave; trading with slave; offering bribe; counterfeiting; receiving stolen goods; false pretenses; putting away forged instruments; obstructing railway track; conspiracy; selling obscene print and lottery tickets; selling liquor; offenses against the mails 841

Criminality of solicitation to crime which is not consummated:—(I.) how far punishable as assault; (II.) how far punishable as attempt; (III.) how far punishable as solicitation; charging solicitation slanderous; solicitation a crime in itself; solicitation to murder; solicitation to fight a duel; arson; larceny; assault; sexual crimes; avoidance of legal process; bribery; interference with witnesses; interference with jury 494

Divorce. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Elevators; liability for injury to elevator passenger:—passenger elevators; freight elevators used by outside parties as passenger elevators 88

Eminent domain. See RAILROADS.

Equity. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Evidence; proof of foreign laws:—(I.) in general; (II.) the unwritten or common law, lex non scripta; (III.) the written law, lex scripta; (a) of sister states; (b) of foreign 878

- countries; (IV.) modifications of common law; (V.) construction of written laws; (VI.) proof of practice under statutes; (VII.) state statutes; (VIII.) the English doctrine 449
- Extradition; effect upon prisoner's rights of necessity of amendment of charge upon which he was extradited:—in general; Canadian cases; the English rule 698
- Fence. See RAILROADS.
- Foreign laws. See EVIDENCE.
- Gas. See MINES.
- Governor; how far sickness constitutes a vacancy in office authorizing performance of the duties of the office by another 613
- Husband and wife; jurisdiction of chancery to decree nullity or dissolution of marriage:—in general; dicta; character of proceeding 800
- Infants. See RAILROADS.
- Insurance; effect of expulsion from a society to destroy right to insurance connected therewith:—suits on benefit certificate; damages 149
- Restrictions on insurance by unincorporated associations or individuals; Lloyds associations 238
- Rights of mortgagee to benefit of insurance taken in name of mortgagor:—rights of mortgagee in absence of contract; where there is a contract or covenant to insure; who may maintain an action for the proceeds 305
- Right to take life insurance for benefit of stranger:—in general; speculative policies; existence of insurable interest; payment of premiums; the Texas doctrine 627
- Rights given by the attachment of a mortgage slip to an insurance policy:—in general; rights of mortgagee; rights of mortgagor and his grantees; the subrogation clause; the prorating clause 679
- Judge. See COURTS.
- Jurisdiction. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.
- Jury. See REFERENCE.
- Lloyds. See INSURANCE.
- Marriage. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.
- Masses. See WILLS.
- Master and servant. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW; RAILROADS.
- Train dispatcher and telegraph operator as fellow servants of trainmen:—(I.) general doctrine; (II.) special principles against the relation; (III.) train dispatcher; (a) not a fellow servant; (b) a fellow servant; (IV.) telegraph operator; (a) not a fellow servant; (b) a fellow servant 286
- Liability of master for injuries caused to one servant by the incompetency of a fellow servant:—(1) employment generally; (2) retention in employ; (3) incompetency through use of liquor; (4) pleading incompetency; (5) evidence; (a) generally; (b) specific acts; (c) notice to company; (d) burden of proof 710
- Statutory regulations for the protection and safety of workmen in mines:—(I.) props; (II.) cage and signals; (III.) shafts and fences; (IV.) escape and ventilation shafts; (V.) miscellaneous 843
- Maxim. See STATUTES.
- Mines; nature of property in mineral oil or gas:—natural gas; petroleum; right to drill through coal of another owner; nature of interest in leases 229
- Mortgage. See INSURANCE.
- Municipal corporations; physical characteristics necessary to municipal organization 195
- Natural gas. See MINES.
- Negligence. See RAILROADS; STREET RAILWAYS.
- Notice. See CORPORATIONS.
- Officers. See GOVERNOR.
- Oil. See MINES.
- Partnership. See ATTACHMENT.
- Pledge; how far may pledge be effectual of which the pledgor's agent is made depositary 877
- Promoters. See CORPORATIONS.
- Railroads. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.
- Validity of sale of real estate by railroad corporation 129
- Duty to maintain lookout on railroad trains:—failure to maintain lookout at crossings; lookout for persons on track; general; party on track in city; trespassers; employé on track; injuries to passenger; stock; the law in Tennessee 287
- Obligation of railroad company to employés as to fencing track:—statutory duty to fence; liability in absence of statute 220
- Care required of railroad companies to prevent injuring small children upon the track:—(I.) duty of railroads to fence against children; (II.) duty to discover child on track; (III.) lookout for children; (IV.) negligence after discovery; (V.) failure to give signal; (VI.) speed; (VII.) city; (VIII.) foot caught; (IX.) sudden appearance of child; (X.) projecting timber or car; (XI.) gross negligence 734
- Reference; compulsory reference as denial of the constitutional right to trial by jury:—(I.) the United States Constitution; (II.) where the right existed prior to the state constitution; (III.) state statute no infringement of constitutional right; (IV.) equitable account; (V.) constitution violated; (VI.) action at law; (VII.) state constitution 67
- Solicitation. See CRIMINAL LAW.
- Statutes; how far statutes will be regarded as having abrogated the maxim that one cannot profit by his own wrong:—divorce statutes; statutes of limitation; statutes against foreign corporations; statutes compelling railroad company to carry baggage free; statutes avoiding auction sales when duty unpaid; statute of frauds; (a) rule of construction; (b) prevention of reduction to writing; (c) fraudulent omission of part of the agreement; (d) preventing a will; (e) the rule at law; statute providing for discharge in bankruptcy; statute imposing liability for negligence; statutes giving dower; estoppel generally; Nebraska decisions 534
- Street railways; duty imposed on street-railroad companies to avoid injuring chil-

children on the track:—(I.) care required of employes; (a) lookout; (b) speed; (II.) negligence defined; (a) lookout; (b) speed; (III.) negligence a question for the jury; (a) lookout; (b) speed 603 Injuries by street-car collision with vehicles or horses; horses or vehicles caught in dangerous places; injuries at street crossings; crossing the track at places other than streets; injury received in turning out; lookout; right of way 503 Trial. See REFERENCE. Vaccination; by compulsion 153 Voters and elections; how far the right to vote is absolute; constitutional right of suffrage; (a) as affected by acts of congress; (b) registration; (c) tax or property qualifications; (d) soldiers voting; (e) test oaths and disqualification for crime; (f) ballots and primaries; (g) other statutory conditions, restrictions, and qualifications 430 Waters; what is surface water:—distinguished from watercourse; (a) what is a water- 35 L. R. A.	course (b) how far channel necessary or sufficient; (c) source of supply; (d) source and channel; (e) permanence of flow; (f) water which has joined a watercourse; distinguished from basins or marshes; definition of surface water; question for the jury; water overflowing river banks; (a) the right to build levees; (b) cases holding flood water to be surface water 527 Wills; validity of bequests for masses; secret trusts to use for masses 300 Witnesses. See WRIT AND PROCESS. Writ and process; rights and privileges of nonresident witnesses from suit:—(I.) reason of the privilege; (II.) nature of the privilege; (III.) the extent and limit of the privilege; (IV.) parties as witnesses; (V.) witnesses in general; (VI.) the effect of fraud and deceit; (VII.) enforcement of the privilege; (VIII.) the question of waiver; (IX.) the question of deviation; (X.) English doctrine 721
---	---

GENERAL INDEX

TO

OPINIONS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

(Separate Index to Notes precedes this.)

ACCESSION AND CONFUSION. See
INJUNCTION, 4.

ACCOUNT.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Liquidated, settled, or adjusted. 775

ACTION OR SUIT.

1. Replevin of a horse is not defeated on the ground that plaintiff has elected another remedy by a prior attachment of the property in an action of trover and judgment against one of the defendants therein, after which the horse was taken in execution, but, before satisfaction of the judgment, was retaken by one of the defendants in a replevin action which is still pending in another state, but to which the present defendant is not a party. Miller v. Hyde (Mass.) 42

2. A cause of action for breach of contract to pay for a machine, and one for tort for forcibly preventing the seiler from regaining possession of the machine, may properly be joined in one complaint which seeks merely to recover the purchase price of the machine. Craft Refrigerating Mach. Co. v. Quinnipiac Brew. Co. (Conn.) 856

3. A stranger to a contract between others, in which one of the parties promises to do something for the benefit of such stranger, there being nothing but the promise, no consideration from such stranger, and no duty or obligation to him on the part of the promisee, —cannot recover upon it. Jefferson v. Asch (Minn.) 257

4. Remaindermen under a will devising lands to testator's daughter for life, with power to dispose of them by will amongst her sisters as she may think proper, and in case of her dying without a will the lands to revert to her sisters in equal proportions, take a vested interest, and cannot be made parties, by representation by the life tenant, to any judicial proceeding involving their interest in the land. Williamson v. Jones (W. Va.) 222

5. A corporation, instead of its stockholders, should sue for the avails of a secret agreement between a promoter and one from whom the corporation purchases property. Yale Gas Stove Co. v. Wilcox (Conn.) 90

6. A foreign corporation which is not doing business in the county at the time of the commencement of the suit cannot be sued there, 25 L. R. A.

even on a contract made or cause of action arising in the county while the corporation was doing business there, under Ala. Const. art. 14, providing that a foreign corporation having a known place of business and authorized agents in the state may be sued in any county "where it does business." Sullivan v. Sullivan Timber Co. (Ala.) 543

7. A foreign corporation is not doing business in a county so as to subject it to suit there, merely because it has an agent there who pays taxes on and has possession of an unemployed railroad and machinery, which were mere adjuncts or appurtenances to a mill which the corporation had formerly operated in that county, the operation of which has been suspended. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Action or suit; right of a third party to sue upon a contract made for his benefit:—(I.) the doctrine of consideration; (II.) the question of privity; (III.) general rules as to party to sue; (IV.) grounds upholding action; (a) in general; (b) money had and received; (c) implied promise; (d) there must be an actual benefit; (V.) the statute of frauds; (VI.) limitation of the rule; (VII.) designation of such party; (VIII.) parol evidence to prove party; (IX.) necessity of delivery; (X.) necessity of assent and knowledge; (XI.) effect of assent; (XII.) election of remedies; (XIII.) release of the promise; (XIV.) as a defense to an action; (XV.) actions maintainable by either party; (XVI.) state doctrines; (XVII.) not maintainable; (XVIII.) contracts under seal; (XIX.) insurance contracts; (XX.) partnership transactions; (XXI.) purchase subject to a lien, debt, or mortgage; (XXII.) state statutes; (XXIII.) the English doctrine. 257

By citizen for public right. 813

Election of remedies. 48

ADOPTION. See CONTRACTS, 2.

ADULTERY.

Mere solicitation to commit adultery is not an attempt to commit the crime. State v. Butler (Wash.) 484

ALDERMEN. See LIBEL AND SLANDER, 2-4.

ANNUITIES. See TAXES, 11.

APPEAL AND ERROR.

1. An appeal, and not a writ of error, is the proper mode of review in an action for a penalty under a municipal ordinance, where the act is not made criminal by the general law of the state. Sioux Falls v. Kirby (S. D.) 621

2. A party cannot on appeal insist on error committed at his own instance, or contrary to his express stipulations upon which the lower court was induced to act. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. West Chicago Park Comrs. (Ill.) 800

3. Statutes and decisions of another state not put in evidence at the trial cannot be used for the first time at the argument of a case on report to the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts. Kelley v. Kelley (Mass.) 806

4. In the absence of a special exception signed and sealed by the judge, an objection that there is no evidence to support an instruction will not be considered on appeal. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Hoover (Md.) 710

5. Exceptions filed within the time allowed, which the opposite party asks to have disallowed, may be amended in the discretion of the presiding justice, with consent of the excepting party, although the time for filing exceptions has passed. Hector v. Boston Electric-Light Co. (Mass.) 554

6. A fee allowed to the master by the trial court will not be reduced by the appellate court, in the absence of evidence showing it to be clearly excessive. Linn v. Chambersburg (Pa.) 217

7. An unwarranted statement by counsel in argument as to the effect of evidence in the case will not cause reversal, if it was made with reference to an immaterial issue in the case. Noble v. Mitchell (Ala.) 238

8. The omission to allege or prove an offer to return benefits received under an agreement for a release is not prejudicial error on appeal, where the point was not made in the trial court and the benefits were accounted for in the judgment. Girard v. St. Louis Car-Wheel Co. (Mo.) 514

9. There can be no reversal of an order dismissing the suit because of plaintiff's refusal to comply with the direction of the court to elect upon which cause of action stated in his complaint he will proceed, although the direction is erroneous, since until reversed the direction is binding and as capable of enforcement as any other order, which may be by dismissal of the suit for disobedience. Craft Refrigerating Mach. Co. v. Quinnipiac Brew. Co. (Conn.) 856

10. Failure to state the law on an issue is not ground for reversal if no instruction on that question is requested. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Gay (Tex.) 52

APPORTIONMENT. See INJUNCTION, 2.

APPROPRIATIONS. See also MANDAMUS.

An act appropriating a designated sum for the relief of a specified county, and to reimburse such county for expenses incurred on a designated murder trial, is not in conflict with 25 L. R. A.

either the letter or the spirit of the Nebraska constitution. State, Sayre, v. Moore (Neb.) 774

ASSIGNMENT.

For Creditors, see INSOLVENCY.

See also BANKS, 1.

1. A fund that exists potentially, although it is not yet due, is subject to an equitable assignment of a portion of it, which will be operative as soon as the fund is acquired. Warren v. Columbus First Nat. Bank (Ill.) 746

2. A part of a debt or chose in action may be assigned in equity, creating a trust in favor of the assignee and an equitable lien upon the fund. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Assignment; of fund by order. 747

ASSOCIATIONS. See also BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.

A resolution of the Masonic Order denying membership to saloon keepers applies to existing members if they continue thereafter in that business. Ellerbe v. Faust (Mo.) 149

ATTACHMENT. See also CONFLICT OF LAWS, 7; COURTS, 5.

1. Attachment against the property of a partnership on the ground of nonresidence may be had, where the members of the firm reside out of the state, although the firm carries on business in the state, and the statute allows a partnership to be sued in the firm name and service to be made by leaving a copy of the summons at its usual place of business. Byers v. Schlups (Ohio) 649

2. Individual property of an innocent partner is not subject to attachment for a partnership debt fraudulently contracted by his copartner, under a general provision of the statute authorizing attachment for fraud of the debtor, where another provision expressly says that in a case for attachment against partners or joint creditors the writ shall issue against the property and effects of those brought within the statute. Jaffray v. Jennings (Mich.) 645

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Attachment; of individual property of one partner for fraud of his copartner. 645

As affected by insolvency proceedings in other state. 821

ATTAINDER.

The provision of a state constitution disfranchising all persons who have voluntarily borne arms against the government of the United States or aided or abetted an attempted overthrow of the government, unless the disability has been removed by service and honorable discharge in the army, or by the legislature, is not invalid as a bill of attainder, in violation of U. S. Const. art. 1, § 10. Boyd v. Mills (Kan.) 486

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Attainder; what is. 487

ATTEMPT. See ADULTERY.

ATTORNEYS.

An attorney's lien for services rendered his client cannot be successfully asserted against money appropriated to such client by an act of the legislature, while such money is in the custody or under the control of the state treasurer. State, Sayre, v. Moore (Neb.) 774

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Attorneys; lien of. 774

AUDITOR. See MANDAMUS.

BAILMENT.

1. A library board of a city, which has statutory power to receive property by gift, grant, purchase, devise, bequest, "or otherwise," for the purpose of maintaining public libraries, art galleries, and museums, has power to receive a collection of coins as a loan from the owner, and become liable therefor as bailee. Smith v. Minneapolis Library Bd. (Minn.) 280

2. A resolution by the board of directors of a corporation which has become a bailee of property, to the effect that it will not be responsible in any manner for the safety of the property, will not, even if it is brought to the notice of the owner, relieve the corporation from liability for loss in case of its gross negligence. Id.

BANKS. See also CHECKS.

1. A check by one bank upon another, sent in payment of the collection of a draft, is not an equitable assignment of any portion of a general deposit on which it is drawn. Akin v. Jones (Tenn.) 528

2. A bank which receives a post-dated check upon itself for collection, under a promise to hold the proceeds subject to the check of the depositor, is liable to the latter where, when the bank opens on the day of the date of such check, the drawer has funds sufficient to discharge the debt, although at the closing hour on such day the account of the drawer is overdrawn. Averell v. Washington Second Nat. Bank (D. C. App.) 761

3. One who goes into a bank after business hours, and finds in a room used for the transaction of business after usual hours the paying teller of such bank, who is the only officer with whom he is acquainted, and deposits with such teller for collection a post-dated check upon such bank, upon the teller's promise to hold the proceeds subject to his check, the transaction being substantially in the presence of the cashier, though he is separated by a wire partition, is entitled to hold the bank liable,—especially where such teller has, to the knowledge of the cashier, occasionally acted as receiving teller, and the depositor is not aware of any limitations upon his authority. Id.

4. The preference under state law of the debt of an insolvent national bank for a lawful deposit by a savings bank is not such a preference as is prohibited by U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 5236, 5242, requiring a ratable distribution among creditors, and prohibiting preferences in contemplation of or after committing an act of insolvency. Elmira Sav. Bank v. Davis (N. Y.) 546

5. The equities and rights arising from express agreement, or implied from the nature of dealings between a national bank and a clearing house association or the other members thereof prior to the closing of the bank, must be preserved and enforced in settling its affairs by a receiver. Yardley v. Philler (O. C. App. 3d C.) 824

6. The appropriation on its own claims, by a clearing-house, after the closing of a national bank by an examiner, of money paid by other banks on a call by the clearing-house to take up drafts and checks on the insolvent bank, which they had surrendered to its clerk in due course of business, in an exchange at the clearing-house before the bank suspended, and which had been left there as security for a balance due from it to the clearing-house,—is not an unlawful preference, as the subsequent transactions do not rescind the exchange of securities made while the bank was doing business: and gives no right of action to the receiver of the bank against the clearing-house committee for the amount of the drafts and checks on other banks which it surrendered on the exchange. Id.

7. Sending a draft to a bank for collection, with instructions to remit in New York exchange, is equivalent to an agreement that the money collected may be used by the collecting bank, and precludes the claim that such proceeds are held in trust, where the bank fails before it has paid the collection. Akin v. Jones (Tenn.) 528

8. Payment to an assignee of an insolvent bank of overdrafts allowed by the bank, on the faith of which it had canceled drafts held by it for collection, cannot be regarded as payments of such previously canceled drafts so as to give the sender of them a right to such proceeds as a trust fund. Id.

9. Money deposited in a bank for payment to another person on his presentation of a warranty deed, with abstract showing good title to the land, for which the depositor takes a receipt reciting the purpose for which the money is left, constitutes a trust fund, and not assets of the bank which can pass to a receiver of the bank, although the bank on receipt of the money gave credit to the depositor, without his knowledge or consent, and mingled the money with that of the bank. Kimmel v. Dickson (S. D.) 809

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also CLEARING-HOUSE BUSINESS.

Banks; accepting something besides money from the bank as a discharge of drawer of check. 200

Exceptions to the prohibition of preferences by insolvent national banks; priority by reason of trust character of deposit; transfers by insolvent national banks. 546

Rights as to collections. 528

Trust in deposit. 810

Deposit of check on other depositor. 761

BATHING RESORT. See also MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

1. A municipality upon which a statutory duty has been imposed of establishing and maintaining a bathing beach is not responsible for its safety and the safe use of it by those likely to have recourse to it, in the same manner as streets and highways, or even as parks and grounds kept for entertainment and amusement without profit, are to be rendered safe. McGraw v. District of Columbia (D. C. App.) 691

2. If a municipality required by statute to establish and maintain a free bathing beach is liable for its unsafe condition after the beach is opened, the detail of a policeman to preserve the peace and good order at such beach before the work of construction is completed, where boys and young men are in the habit of congregating and have congregated for many years, is not an opening of the beach to the public and an invitation to the public to use it. Id.

3. A municipal corporation required by statute to establish and maintain a free bathing beach, if liable for the condition of such beach, cannot be held responsible until it has completed the work of construction and thrown the beach open to the public for the uses contemplated. Id.

4. A municipality required by statute to establish and maintain a free bathing beach upon the margin of a river is not bound to warn the public against change in the bed of the stream, or to mark in any way the depth or relative depth of the water, so as to guard the ignorant bather from venturing too far. Id.

BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES. See also CONTEMPT, 2; INSURANCE, 11, NOTES AND BRIEFS; RECEIVERS, 4, 5.

1. The termination of membership in a Masonic lodge, which is in substance and effect an expulsion, although not so in form, forfeits membership in a Masonic mutual benefit association which not only provides that expulsion from the lodge shall work a forfeiture of membership in the association, but also makes it a requisite for membership that the applicant be a Mason in good standing. Elzerbe v. Faust (Mo.) 149

2. The title to the 20 per cent of the assessments levied by the Order of Iron Hall, which is retained by the local branches, as well as to the 80 per cent which is transmitted to the supreme sitting, is, under the laws of the order, in the supreme sitting. Baldwin v. Hosmer (Mich.) 789

3. Local branches of a secret benefit order cannot, when called upon to pay over assessments which they have collected under the laws of the order, and which by such laws belong to the supreme sitting, question the validity of the incorporation of the supreme sitting. Id.

BILL OF ATTAINDER. See ATTAINDER.
25 L. R. A.BILLS AND NOTES.

A provision for the payment of exchange in addition to principal and interest destroys the negotiability of an instrument. Flagg v. Barnes County School Dist. No. 70 (N. D.) 363

BONA FIDE PURCHASER. See BONDS.BONDS. See also ESTOPPEL, 1.

1. The decision of a county clerk, whose duty it is to pass upon the question of title to a school site for which bonds are given, before registering and certifying the bonds, is final on that point, as against the district, in favor of a bona fide purchaser for value. Flagg v. Barnes County School Dist. No. 70 (N. D.) 363

2. The consideration of bonds cannot be denied, as against a bona fide purchaser, where they were issued to pay claims which had been audited by a committee acting by authority of a statute. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS

Bonds; recitals in; negotiability of; bona fide purchasers. 364

BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.

1. A nonborrowing member of a mutual building association cannot be allowed to bring an action to take judgment against the association, when there is no money in the treasury legally applicable to the payment of his claim, although he has complied with the prescribed conditions of withdrawal. Heinbokel v. National Savings Loan & B. Assn. (Minn.) 215

2. A stockholder does not become a general creditor of a mutual building association by giving notice of withdrawal. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Building and loan associations; rights of withdrawing members. 215

BUILDINGS. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 13.NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Buildings; restriction by ordinance. 621

BY-LAWS. See CORPORATIONS, 1, NOTES AND BRIEFS.CABLE CAR. See STREET RAILWAYS, 1.CAPITAL. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 1.CARRIERS. See also ELEVATORS, 1; TRIAL, 8.

1. To constitute one a passenger on a train, the knowledge or consent of the carrier, or its agent in charge of the train, is essential, unless such person is rightfully on the train. Woolsey v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (Neb.) 79

2. A person riding on the locomotive of a freight train without the conductor's knowledge or consent, by agreement with the fireman to shovel coal for the privilege of riding, is not a passenger. Id.

3. A person injured by the slipping of a gang plank while attempting to cross it in entering a steamer to take passage is to be regarded as a passenger. Rogers v. Kennebec Steamboat Co. (Me.) 491

4. A railroad employee having a monthly ticket given him, which is good for more rides than are necessary in attending to his work, with the express privilege of using them for his own private interest or pleasure, is not, when passing over the road entirely for his own business or pleasure, an employé, but is a passenger, within Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 112, § 212, creating a liability for injury to a passenger. Doyle v. Fitchburg R. Co. (Mass.) 157

5. Conditions on the back of a ticket cannot release the railroad from liability for the penalty given by Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 112, § 212, to the widow and children and next of kin of a passenger injured by the gross negligence or carelessness of the servants of the company. Id.

6. A condition in a free pass, that the passenger will assume all risks of personal injury, is not against public policy. Rogers v. Kennebec Steamboat Co. (Me.) 491

7. A person traveling with a friend by invitation, knowing that they are going on a pass held by the latter, although not seeing the pass or knowing its contents, is bound by a condition thereon that passengers traveling upon it assume all risks of injury. Id.

8. A shipper while unloading his stock is within an exemption clause of the contract of transportation, by which he assumes the risk of personal injury, though the car has arrived at its destination, and the shipper has left the car for a short time, prior to the injury, and proceeded to a hotel, to get lanterns and assistants to aid him in unloading the car. Meuer v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (S. D.) 81

9. A special contract for transporting a carload of livestock and emigrant movables, in which it is stipulated that the shipper shall be entitled to passage upon the same train to care for, feed, and water his stock, and load and unload the same, at his "own risk of personal injury from whatever cause,"—exonerates the railroad company from all liability for any injury to him while a passenger, not caused by the gross negligence, fraud, or willful wrong of the company or its servants. Id.

10. By the law of South Dakota, a common carrier of property or passengers may limit its liability by an express contract signed by the parties, except as to gross negligence, fraud, or willful wrong of such carrier or its servants. Id.

11. It is not negligence as matter of law to attempt to alight from a car at a pleasure resort station established by a street-railway company, on the side opposite to that prepared for the reception of passengers, if those in charge of the car have invited an alighting on such opposite side. Pools v. Consolidated Street R. Co. (Mich.) 744

25 L. R. A.

12. That a car has not reached the usual stopping-place when a stop is made and a passenger attempts to alight will not render him guilty of negligence, if there was no warning not to alight, and from the surroundings a passenger might well have understood that the stop was made for that purpose. Id.

13. One who jumps from a locomotive on a freight train while it is running at a dangerous speed, because he is told by the fireman that he will be arrested if he is found thereon when the train stops, and who is not a passenger, but is riding on agreement with the fireman to shovel coal for the privilege of riding, is chargeable with negligence which will prevent any recovery for injuries received in jumping off. Woolsey v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (Neb.) 79

14. The purpose of a carrier to suppress competition does not make it unlawful to offer low rates when a rival vessel is loading to those only who will not ship anything by the latter. Lough v. Outerbridge (N. Y.) 674

15. Special freight rates for transportation by ship, which are too low to be profitable, and are offered by the carrier only at particular periods when a rival vessel is loading and on the single condition of the shipper's stipulation not to ship by the rival vessel, cannot be claimed by a shipper who refuses to make such stipulation, but he may be lawfully charged the ordinary reasonable rates for shipment during the same period in which the lower rates are given to those who comply with the condition. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Carriers; contracts limiting liability of.	81
Negligence as to passengers; stipulation against liability for negligence.	492
Unauthorized passage by permission of employés.	79
Servant as passenger.	158
Lawful discrimination by.	675

CERTIFICATES. See TRUSTS.

CHARITIES.

1. An injury to an inmate of a hospital for the insane which is a purely eleemosynary institution, caused by the tortious or negligent acts of its managers or employés, will not create a liability against the institution for damages. Downs v. Harper Hospital (Mich.) 602

2. The fact that patients who are able to do so are required to pay for the privileges of a hospital will not of itself destroy its character as a charitable institution, or make it liable to such a patient for negligence or torts of its employés. Id.

3. A bequest to a church "to be used in solemn masses for the repose of my soul" is invalid. Pestorazzi v. St. Joseph Roman Catholic Church (Ala.) 860

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Charities; liability for torts of servants.	603
---	-----

CHECKS. See also BANKS, 1-3, NOTES AND BRIEFS; EVIDENCE, 20.

1. To hold the drawer of a check liable after a collecting bank has surrendered it to the drawee bank and taken for it the latter's check on a third bank, the utmost diligence to present the substituted check for payment must be exercised by the collecting bank. Anderson v. Gill (Md.) 200

2. The fact that the loss would have fallen on the depositor if a check held for collection had not been presented sooner than was necessary, where the bank failed before the time for collecting it expired, does not relieve the collecting bank of liability for the loss, if, having presented the check before such failure and accepted the drawee's check on another bank in payment, it delays presenting the latter until it is worthless because of the failure of its drawer. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Check; as assignment of fund. 523

CLEARING-HOUSE BUSINESS. See also BANKS, 5, 6.NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Clearing-house business; (a) origin and description; (b) rights and liabilities of clearing-houses; (c) clearing-house loan certificates; (d) clearing-house due bill; (e) presentation and payment through clearing house; (f) return of paper, not good after receiving it through clearing-house; (g) effect of clearing-house rules and customs; (h) agency of clearing-house members; (i) gold clearing-house; (j) country clearing-house of London; (k) miscellaneous. 824

COASTING. See COURTS, 2; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 3.COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX. See TAXES.COMMERCE. See also TAXES, 2-4.

1. The sale of lightning-rods constituting only a part of the original package in which they were brought from another state is not interstate commerce. State v. Gorham (N. C.) 810

2. A license tax on the business of putting up lightning-rods is not a tax on interstate commerce, in case of a person who puts up no rods except those which he sells and which are brought from another state, although he puts them up without extra charge. Id.

3. The doing of business, such as that of an express company, that constitutes interstate commerce, by a person who is also at the same time engaged in business of the same kind that constitutes state or local commerce, cannot be made a bar or exemption of the local or state commerce business from taxation or regulation by state authority. Osborne v. State (Fla.) 120

4. A statute expressly providing that all contracts of a corporation which has not paid the franchise tax shall be void cannot apply to sales of foreign corporations, through itinerant agents, of commodities manufactured outside the state. Cott v. Sutton (Mich.) 819

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Commerce; license taxes as affecting. 123, 811

COMPOUNDING CRIME. See CONTRACTS, 4.CONFLICT OF LAWS. See also CORPORATIONS, 6.

1. Though the laws of a state do not have extraterritorial force as mere laws, nevertheless the general rule is that things done in one state in pursuance of the laws thereof are valid and binding in other states. American Waterworks Co. v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. (Colo.) 338

2. A contract for the sale of goods, made by an order given by a married woman in North Carolina to a firm in Maryland, and its shipment of the goods in Maryland, is a Maryland, and not a North Carolina, contract. Armstrong v. Best (N. C.) 183

3. A contract for the purchase of goods, made in another state where it is valid, by a married woman resident in North Carolina, where the common-law disability of married women still obtains, and their promises under the policy of the state are void, and no power exists to proceed to judgment against them in personam,—will not be enforced in the latter state. Id.

4. An attachment of the property of a married woman, which is not allowed by state law in the case of its own citizens, will not be allowed to a nonresident creditor, although the debt was created in another state where the married woman resided and where the contract creating it was valid. Ruhe v. Buck (Mo.) 178

5. The spirit of comity does not require that a nonresident shall be allowed a remedy which is by the policy of the state law denied to its own citizens. Id.

6. A special contract between a railroad company and a shipper, for transporting a carload of livestock and emigrant movables to a point in another state, is to be interpreted according to the law of the state in which the contract was made. Meuer v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (S. D.) 81

7. A sale to a resident by a nonresident, of notes against another nonresident, at a discount and with a guaranty against loss or expense in collection, which is made to avoid the insolvent law of the state where the other parties reside, will not give the transferee as an attaching creditor a position superior to that of his nonresident assignor, but his rights will be subject to such insolvent law. Crippen v. Rogers (N. H.) 821

8. A statute of a foreign country, providing that a cause of action for personal injuries shall be absolutely extinguished in one year, will not operate as a defense to a suit in the United States, where the injured person left such country before such statute became operative by the expiration of the year. Canadian P. R. Co. v. Johnston (C. C. App. 2d C.) 479

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Conflict of laws; enforceability of contracts of married women outside of state in which they are legally made:—contracts in relation to real estate situated where the action is brought; outside of state of domicile; the remedy applicable. 178

As to interstate transportation. 81

As to insolvency and attachment in other state. 821

CONSPIRACY. See also INJUNCTION, 9.

1. Persons cannot be convicted of conspiracy to commit larceny, if they merely adopt a scheme which is suggested to them by a detective and which has received the approval of the owner of the property. Connor v. People (Colo.) 841

2. A strike is not unlawful if it is merely a combination among employes having for its object their orderly withdrawal in large numbers or in a body from their employer's service, to accomplish some lawful purpose. Arthur v. Oakes (C. C. App. 7th C.) 414

3. Illegal combinations are not sanctioned in any degree by the Act of Congress of June 29, 1886, legalizing the incorporation of national trades unions. Id.

4. Employes of the receiver of a railroad may lawfully confer together upon the subject of a proposed reduction of wages, and, if not restrained by their contract, may withdraw in a body from the receiver's service because of such reduction, although they expect that such action will inconvenience the receiver and the public. Id.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

As to impairing obligation of contracts, see CONTRACTS.

See also ATTAINDER; GOVERNOR; RAILROADS, 9; TAXES, 7, 8.

Amendments.

1. The declaration in a state constitution, that a certain city is the seat of government and shall so remain "until changed by law," does not withdraw this provision from the possibility of amendment, although the section itself provides for change by statute approved by the people. Licermore v. Waite (Cal.) 812

2. An amendment of the state constitution by changing the seat of government to another city on condition of a certain donation of land and money and an approval by certain officers of the site donated is not such an amendment as the legislature is authorized to submit to the vote of the people, since it would not upon adoption by the people become an effective part of the constitution without subsequent acts and the approval thereof by certain officers and the exercise of discretion by the commission. Id.

3. Publication of a proposed amendment two weeks only before election, instead of three months as required by Mont. Const. art. 19, § 9, is fatal to the amendment, as the provision is that the secretary of state "shall" cause the publishing for three months, and it 25 L. R. A.

is also declared in another section that the provisions of the constitution are mandatory and prohibitory, unless by express words declared to be otherwise. State, Woods, v. Tooker (Mont.) 560

Ex post facto.

4. The disfranchisement of certain classes of persons by a constitutional provision is not a punishment for crime, and therefore does not make such provision an ex post facto law. Boyd v. Mills (Kan.) 486

Due process.

5. A railroad company is not deprived of its property without due process of law, or contrary to the law of the land, by a statute making such company liable for all fires caused and communicated from locomotives. Matthews v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo.) 161

Equal protection.

6. The equal protection of laws is not denied to railroad companies by a statute making them liable for fires set by engines without regard to negligence. Id.

7. Confining a statute for the protection of employes to street cars propelled by cable, steam, or electricity, does not make the act unconstitutional as an attempt at purely arbitrary classification. State v. Hoskins (Minn.) 759

Police power.

8. No natural right is contravened by making a railroad company liable without regard to negligence for fires set by locomotive engines, where experience has demonstrated the danger of fires from such sources. Matthews v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo.) 161

9. A statute compelling reasonable protection for the employes on electric, cable, or steam cars, except those on the rear platform, between November 1 and April 1 of each year, is within the police power. State v. Hoskins (Minn.) 759

Regulation of business.

10. The constitutional rights of citizens to engage in business are not violated by restricting insurance business to corporations. Com. v. Vrooman (Pa.) 250

11. A statute limiting the amount of toll which may be taken by a water-mill which does grinding for the public is not unconstitutional. State v. Edwards (Me.) 504

12. A contract to pay greater toll for grinding at a public mill than that fixed by statute is invalid and constitutes no defense for taking excessive tolls. Id.

Property rights.

13. An ordinance making the right of the owner of property to improve and use it dependent upon the decision of a city building inspector in respect to a permit, from which there is no appeal, is an unconstitutional interference with the rights of citizens. Sions Falls v. Kirby (S. D.) 621

14. The right to transmit property at death free from a succession tax is not within the constitutional right of acquiring, possessing, and protecting property. State v. Hamlin (Me.) 633

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also REFERENCE; TAXES.

Constitutionality of statute making railroad companies absolutely responsible for damages by fires set by them or for stock killed by them, irrespective of negligence:—fires; killing stock. 161

As to statutes to secure safety and comfort of employes. 759

Right to carry on business. 243, 250

Amendments of constitution. — 318

Police power; protection of health and morals of children. 795

CONTEMPT.

1. A statute attempting to confer on county attorneys the power to commit witnesses for contempt on account of a refusal to be sworn or testify on an examination as to an alleged offense is unconstitutional, as the power is judicial in its nature. Re Sims (Kan.) 110

2. Contempt proceedings are not appropriate for the trial of issues involving the title to a fund raised by assessments upon the members of a benefit society, which is in the possession of the local branch from whose members it came, or to determine the validity of a lien alleged to have been acquired by garnishment proceedings against it. Baldwin v. Hosmer (Mich.) 789

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Contempt; judicial character of power to punish for. 110

CONTRACTS. See also ACTION OR SUIT, 3.

1. Failure of the purchaser of a mare to have a test of her speed as compared with that of another one owned by him, made by the person and within the time agreed upon, because the mares were not in proper condition for the test, or to have the test made afterwards, will not relieve him from liability to pay an extra $100 in case she is as fast as the other, on other proof of this fact. Deyo v. Hammond (Mich.) 719

2. An oral contract to adopt a child and make her an heir is made valid by part performance, where it has been carried out by assumption and continuance of the parental relation for ten years and until the death of the adopting parents. Kofka v. Rosicky (Neb.) 207

Legality.

3. A contract to procure for a consideration testimony that will win a lawsuit is void as against public policy and as tending to impede the administration of justice. Quirk v. Muller (Mont.) 87

4. A contract the consideration of which, in whole or in part, is the suppression of a criminal prosecution, is without any legal efficacy either as a cause of action or as a defense to an action not founded on or arising out of the agreement. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Hull (Ohio) 37

5. Neither party can have the aid of a 25 L. R. A.

court to enforce rights under a contract which is opposed to public policy. Yale Gas Store Co. v. Wilcox (Conn.) 91

6. The illegality of an agreement by a corporation for the purchase of property, by which, to avoid the statutes and to defraud the public, a secret contract was made for the purchase of patents, will not defeat the right of the corporation to recover from a promoter of the corporation the avails of a secret agreement between him and the seller of the property. Id.

7. A contract duly executed between the proper officers of a school district and another person, by the terms of which said person is employed as a teacher in a public school in said district, is void under the North Dakota statute, where such person at the time of making the contract holds no certificate of authority to teach in the county where the district is located. Hosmer v. Ransom County Sheldon School Dist. No. 2. (N. D.) 338

Rescission.

8. The rule that a party who would rescind a contract must restore what he has received under it does not apply to contracts founded on an illegal consideration and which are void for that reason. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Hull (Ohio) 37

9. The rule as to restoration on rescission of a contract is satisfied if the judgment sought will substantially restore the one party to the situation he was in when the agreement was made; as, when money paid by him is less than he justly owed the other party, and the same is credited and the action brought for the balance. Id.

Impairing obligation.

10. A statute making a railroad company liable for damages caused by fire from a locomotive does not impair the obligation of a contract in its charter, which merely authorizes the use of steam or of animal power or mechanical power in operating the road. Matthews v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo.) 161

11. A contract between a street-railway company and a city to run cars of the best modern style and construction is not impaired by a statute making additional requirements in respect to the cars for the protection of employes. State v. Hoskins (Minn.) 759

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also CONFLICT OF LAWS.

Contractual relations between school teacher and district. 393

Condition as to test. 719

Conditions of rescission; restitution. 38

COPYRIGHT. See also EVIDENCE, 5, 6; INJUNCTION, 3, 4.

1. The compiler of a digest has no monopoly of the opinions, decisions, and syllabi prepared by the courts and judges, even though he has previously published them in copyrighted pamphlets. West Pub. Co. v. Lawyers' Co-Op. Pub. Co. (C. C. N. D. N. Y.) 441

2. A valid copyright may be had by one reporting judicial decisions, for his original work published in connection with the opinions and syllabi prepared by the judge. Id.

3. Copyrighted headnotes suitable for use in a digest, prepared by a publisher of a series of reports and a digest, cannot be used by a subsequent compiler of a digest, either directly or by way of suggestion, to lighten his labors, except as a guide to verify the accuracy of his work or detect errors, omissions, or other faults. Id.

4. Mala fides cannot be imputed to the compiler of an annual digest of judicial decisions, in using copyrighted reports published during the year for the purpose of making such digest. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Copyright; infringement of. 444

CORPORATIONS. See also ACTION OR SUIT, 5-7; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 10; CONTRACTS, 6; INSURANCE, 2; TAXES, 3-5.

1. Notice of the by-laws of a corporation restricting the right of any officer to make contracts of employment to a period less than one year is not chargeable to one who makes a contract for services to the corporation with a general manager of the company, who has been given absolute charge of its business at the place of contract. Moyer v. East Shore Terminal Co. (S. C.) 48

2. No offer of rescission is necessary to obtain an accounting by a corporation from a promoter who by his fraud has secretly received profits on property sold to the corporation. Yale Gas-Stove Co. v. Wilcox (Conn.) 91

3. One who organizes a corporation to purchase letters patent at a certain price, while he already has a secret agreement with the owner whereby he is to obtain from the latter a part of the avails of the sale, but who induces subscriptions to the stock by stating that he is putting his money into the enterprise upon precisely the same basis as the other stockholders, may be compelled to account to the corporation for the profits retained by him under his secret agreement. Id.

4. The mere insolvency of a corporation does not eo instanti deprive its directors and officers of power to dispose of the corporate property in good faith as payment or security of corporate debts, although the effect may be to give some creditors a preference over others. Warren v. Columbus First Nat. Bank (Ill.) 746

Foreign corporations.

See also COMMERCIAL, 4.

5. The charter alone of a foreign corporation, and not the general legislation of the state in which it was created, will have effect to limit its powers outside of that state. Id.

6. The New York statute prohibiting assignments or transfers by insolvent corporations has no extraterritorial force, and does not affect the validity of an assignment by an insolvent corporation, executed in Ohio, as a transfer of a fund in Illinois. Id.

7. A corporation is subject to the laws of the state or sovereignty under and by virtue of which it has been created; and these laws have a paramount influence over its corporate 25 L. R. A.

powers, where it undertakes to exercise them. American Waterworks Co. v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. (Colo.) 388

8. An officer of a foreign corporation cannot use its name to prosecute a writ of error against the objection of a receiver who has been appointed in the state where it was created, with an injunction upon the officers from continuing the business or using the name of the corporation for any purpose. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Corporations; effect of corporate by-law as notice:—in general; as to member of corporation; as to lien on stock; as to the public generally. 48

Duties and liability of promoters to the corporation and its members:—duty of the promoter; sales by promoter to corporation; commissions; profits on options and profits on property bought for corporation; liability to corporation; liability to subscribers; duty to bondholders; character of promoter's liability; effect of promoter's fraud on corporation's right against subscriber; feigned subscription, waiver of fraud; how suit should be brought. 90

Franchise tax on. 185

Rights of foreign companies. 243

Foreign, right to exclude. 819

COSTS AND FEES.

Directing that all of a receiver's fees and expenses should be taxed as costs against the unsuccessful party to a suit, without fixing his compensation and in advance of a hearing on different items of his account, is improper. Cutter v. Pollock (N. D.) 877

COUNTIES. See also APPROPRIATIONS; DRAINS AND SEWERS.

The loan of the credit of a county, prohibited by N. D. Const. § 185, is provided for by a statute authorizing county bonds to cover the cost of drains in the county, and that assessments shall be made to create a sinking fund to reimburse the county. Martin v. Tyler (N. D.) 688

COURTS. See also JUDGMENT, 8; OFFICERS.

1. A finding of the legislature, recited in a statute, respecting disputed facts on which a claim is asserted against a board of education, will not estop the board from contesting the facts in court. Marion Twp. Bd. of Edu. v. State, Lindsey (Ohio) 770

2. The jurisdiction of the municipal court of the city of Wilmington, Delaware, in cases of public nuisance, extends to a case of coasting on the public streets, which is intrinsically a common nuisance, although not expressly declared to be so by any ordinance. Wilmington v. Vandegrift (Del.) 588

3. The right of an adjoining land owner to make a new bank for a navigable river which forms the boundary between two States, or by artificial structures to turn the water upon the lands upon the opposite side of the river, is not a local question on which a federal court is bound by state decisions, but depends upon general principles of law. Cairo, V. & O. R. Co. v. Bretoort (C. C. D. Ind.) 527

4. A circuit court of the United States in Louisiana has no jurisdiction over property in Texas such as confers upon it power to appoint a receiver of a railroad in Texas which is the property of a corporation created by congress. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Gay (Tex.) 52

5. A sheriff's right to the possession of property under attachment is not lost by the subsequent appointment of a receiver. State, Hunt, v. Chehalis County Super. Ct. (Wash.) 354
Judges.

6. The question of the disqualification of a judge by reason of a former relation of attorney and client is entirely distinct and independent of any question of present interest in the case, and of the payment of any fee or reward therein. State, Ambler, v. Hocker (Fla.) 114

7. A judge who, previous to his commission, has been an attorney in a case, is disqualified to adjudicate not only all matters arising in that identical case, but also all supplemental matters or proceedings had or taken to enforce, or to resist the enforcement of, any judgment or decree rendered in such case. Id.

8. A judge who, previous to his commission, was a solicitor of record for complainant in a chancery cause brought for the purpose of having receivers appointed for certain property, is disqualified from trying a claim interposed by said receivers to said property, when the same is levied upon under execution in favor of third parties. Id.

9. A judge who, previous to his commission, was an attorney of record in an attachment suit at the time of the levy of the writ of attachment upon certain property, is disqualified to try a claim interposed to said property, when the same is afterwards levied upon under an execution issued in the same suit. Id.

10. A member of a law firm which began a suit, using the name of such firm as attorneys for the plaintiff, is disqualified as a judge for trying a claim interposed to property levied upon by virtue of an execution issued in such main case, although the management of such suit may have been exclusively under the direction of the other member of such firm, and not within the knowledge of such judge. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Courts; disqualification of judge by prior connection with the case:—(I.) statutory disqualification of judge from having been counsel in the case; (a) generally; (b) causes not identical; (c) parties not identical; (d) formal orders; (II.) disqualification, without regard to statute, from having been of counsel in the case; (III.) disqualification from having tried the case before. 114

CRIMINAL LAW. See also ADULTERY; EVIDENCE, 7, 9, 23.

1. A conviction of larceny will not be prevented by the fact that one of the supposed 25 L. R. A.

confederates in the plan had informed the police and the intended victim, and was acting with them for the purpose of detecting and punishing the guilty parties, if the latter had no knowledge of it and performed all the acts necessary to consummate the crime. Com. v. Hollister (Pa.) 349

2. Active participation in planning a felonious taking of money, followed by an actual taking by a part of the confederates in pursuance of the plan, will warrant a conviction of larceny, although the accused was not present when the crime was actually committed. Id.

3. A fine of from $50 to $100 for each day that street cars are run in violation of law is not excessive, although a large aggregate of fines may be made by repeatedly committing the offense. State v. Hoskins (Minn.) 750

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Criminal law; instigation or consent to crime for the purpose of detecting criminal as a defense to prosecution:—burglary; robbery; larceny; stealing slave; trading with slave; offering bribe; counterfeiting; receiving stolen goods; false pretenses; putting away forged instruments; obstructing railway track; conspiracy; selling obscene prints and lottery tickets; selling liquor; offenses against the mails. 341

Criminality of solicitation to crime which is not consummated:—(I.) how far punishable as assault; (II.) how far punishable as attempt; (III.) how far punishable as solicitation; charging solicitation slanderous; solicitation a crime in itself; solicitation to murder; solicitation to fight a duel; arson; larceny; assault; sexual crimes; avoidance of legal process; bribery; interference with witnesses; interference with jury. 434

CUSTODY OF LAW. See COURTS, 5.

CUSTOM. See MASTER AND SERVANT, 15.

DAMAGES. See also SET-OFF.

1. Damages for mental suffering cannot be recovered for failure to transmit and deliver a telegram. Francis v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Minn.) 406

2. The sum of $8,000 is an excessive allowance for injuries resulting in the death, six or seven months later, of an unskilled laborer twenty-three years old, who, without any family to support, had saved nothing from his earnings,—especially when $5,000 is the statutory limit of recovery for death resulting from injuries immediately. O'Donnell v. Maine O. R. Co. (Me.) 658

3. In trespass for cutting timber, against one who acted in the honest but mistaken belief that the trees were his, the measure of damages is their value in the woods from which they were taken, together with the injury incident to their removal. Gaskins v. Davis (N. C.) 813

4. The value of the lumber at the place of disposal, without any allowance for expenditure in wrongfully cutting and removing standing timber from the premises, is the measure of damages against a mortgagee in possession for thus wrongfully wasting the premises after he had received all that was due him on his mortgage by conversion of personal property. Whiting v. Adams (Vt.) 598

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Damages for mental anguish. 406

DANCING. See INFANTS, 1.

DEATH. See DAMAGES, 2; PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

DEFINITION. See INSURANCE, 3.

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.

The murder of an intestate by one to whom the property would descend under the plain terms of the statute will not prevent the murderer from taking the inheritance. Shellenberger v. Ransom (Neb.) 564

DISCOVERY AND INSPECTION.

An order for the physical examination of the plaintiff in an action for personal injuries, under N. Y. Laws 1893, chap. 721, amending N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 878, can be made only in connection with, or as a part of, an order for the examination of the party before trial and in conformity to the general provisions for such examinations; and the physical examination by surgeons cannot be authorized as an independent proceeding. Lyon v. Manhattan R. Co. (N. Y.) 402

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Discovery; by physical examination before trial. 402

DISFRANCHISEMENT. See ATTAINDER.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY. See CONTEMPT, 1.

DIVORCE. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 4, 5, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

DOMICIL.

The constitutional provision against gaining a residence while confined in a public prison applies to a person committed to such prison, even if the commitment was irregular or illegal and was made upon his own application, notwithstanding the fact that he had no family and no home, and made the application for commitment to get a home and work in the prison. People v. Cady (N. Y.) 399

DOWER.

A woman cannot under the New York statutes enforce dower rights in land purchased with her husband's money and conveyed to a third person who has contracted in writing to permit the husband to receive all the benefit of and have full control over the property. Phelps v. Phelps (N. Y.) 625

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Dower; in what property. 625

25 L. R. A.

DRAINS AND SEWERS. See also COUNTIES; EMINENT DOMAIN, 4.

Creating a drain commission and providing for county bonds to pay for drains within a county, under special legislative authority, does not violate a constitutional provision that "the fiscal affairs" of the county shall be transacted by county commissioners. Martin v. Tyler (N. D.) 838

DURESS. See INSURANCE, 23, 24.

EASEMENTS.

A way of access by water to land bordering on the sea is sufficient to prevent a right of way from necessity across land of the grantor which encloses it on the land side. Kingsley v. Gouldsboro Land Improv. Co. (Me.) 502

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Easement; right of way by necessity. 502

EJECTMENT.

An ouster which will sustain ejectment by the owner of the soil of a highway is not made by constructing a railroad thereon by permission of the municipal authorities. Montgomery v. Santa Ana & W. R. Co. (Cal.) 654

ELECTION DISTRICTS. See INJUNCTION, 2.

ELECTIONS. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 4; VOTERS AND ELECTIONS.

ELECTRICAL USES AND APPLIANCES. See also EVIDENCE, 19; TRIAL, 8, 4.

1. Reasonable care to keep electric wires in a safe condition is due by an electric-light company to persons expressly or impliedly licensed to approach them in performing their duties with reference to other electric wires attached to structures of the electric-light company. Illingsworth v. Boston Electric-Light Co. (Mass.) 552

2. The lack of reasonable care to keep electric-light wires insulated is not excused by reason of the fact that mere contact with such wires is not dangerous unless other conditions exist, in view of the circumstances likely to occur which may render the contact dangerous. Id.

3. An electric-light company allowing its standard for the support of wires on the roof of a building to be used by a telegraph and telephone company for its wires also does not thereby assume any duty to employees of the latter company in respect to the safe insulation of the electric-light wires over the roof of an adjoining building to which no wires of any kind are attached, and on which they have no right to go by reason of permission to use the standard on the former building. Hector v. Boston Electric-Light Co. (Mass.) 554

4. The liability of electric-light companies for injuries received from posts, wires, or other apparatus, is not affected by Mass. Stat. 1883, chap. 221, granting to such companies the right to lay and maintain wires subject to municipal regulations. Hector v. Boston Electric Light Co. (Mass.) 554

ELECTRIC RAILWAYS. See STREET RAILWAYS, 8.

ELEVATORS.

1. Passenger elevators are within the rule governing other carriers of passengers, which requires the highest degree of care. Mitchell v. Marker (C. C. App. 6th C.) 33

2. Reasonable opportunity must be given a passenger on entering an elevator to obtain a balance before a rapid and sudden start of the elevator is made. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Elevators; liability for injury to elevator passenger:—passenger elevators; freight elevators used by outside parties as passenger elevators. 33

EMINENT DOMAIN.

1. A municipal corporation taking private property for public use is within the provision of N. D. Const. art. 1, § 14, requiring compensation to be "first made to or paid into court for the owner." Martin v. Tyler (N. D.) 838

2. The owner is not entitled to have compensation for property taken by a municipal corporation ascertained by a jury, under N. D. Const. art. 1, § 14, which mentions a jury only in the clause concerning the appropriation of property to the use of any corporation other than municipal. Id.

3. The provision that a warrant for damages in case of an unknown owner shall be deposited with the county auditor for his use violates a constitutional provision that compensation shall be first made to or paid into court for the owner. Id.

4. An order drawn by drain commissioners upon a drainage fund is not such a payment as will satisfy the constitutional provision that payment shall be first made on taking private property for public use. Id.

5. A railroad for transportation of passengers and freight on a street does not impose a new burden or servitude upon the owner of the soil, although he may be entitled to damages for injury to his right of access, or light and air. Montgomery v. Santa Ana & W. R. Co. (Cal.) 654

6. The public easement in a rural highway of which the fee is in the adjoining owner does not include the permanent and exclusive appropriation of any part of the highway by poles and wires of a telegraph and telephone company. Eels v. American Teleph. & Teleg. Co. (N. Y.) 640

7. The right of a water company in lands flowed by it under the exercise of eminent domain is something more than a mere easement, and includes the right of exclusive occupation, with all attendant riparian rights, for such time as the land is held under the charter. Wright v. Woodcock (Me.) 499

8. A deed by a railroad company of land purchased by it in fee simple for a right of way is not void until so declared in proceedings by 35 L. R. A.

the state, although the company has abandoned its purpose of using the land for a railroad. Chamberlain v. Northeastern R. Co. (S. C.) 139

9. Land is taken by purchase, and not by condemnation, when in pursuance of an agreement with the owner a decree is obtained for payment to him, and denying the alleged rights of other persons who have given notice not to pay him. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also RAILROADS.

Eminent domain; easement of, not an appropriation; additional burden of poles and wires. 640

Additional burden of a railroad in street. 654

Constitutionality of provisions; compensation first made. 339

EQUITY. See also HUSBAND AND WIFE, 1, 2, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

1. The use as a tradename by a milk-dealer, of the name of a well-known ranch, cannot be protected in equity, where the milk which he sells is not from that ranch, even if it is of a superior quality. Millbras v. Taylor (Cal.) 193

2. Chancery has no jurisdiction to protect purely political rights, such as those in respect to public elections. Fletcher v. Tuttle (Ill.) 143

ESCHEAT. See EMINENT DOMAIN, 8.

ESTOPPEL. See also BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES, 8; INSURANCE, 11.

1. A recital or certificate in bonds as to facts which the person making it had authority to determine is conclusive in case of non-negotiable bonds, as well as those which are negotiable. Flagg v. Barnes County School Dist. No. 70 (N. D.) 363

2. After twelve years' acquiescence, in common with the city and the general public, in the control of a street by park commissioners, a railroad company will not, in a proceeding by them to prevent its placing tracks in the street, be heard to question their authority on the ground that the consent of the city and abutting owners to their control was not technically regular. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. West Chicago Park Comrs. (Ill.) 300

3. One who causes his land to be sold for a purpose of his own, under a judicial proceeding which afterwards turns out to be void, and receives and retains the proceeds of sale, is estopped from questioning its validity, where he stands by and permits the purchaser to expend large sums of money in developing oil on the property. Williamson v. Jones (W. Va.) 223

4. No estoppel against showing that a receiver was really the agent of a railroad company because collusively appointed is created, so as to prevent charging the railroad company with his negligence, by making a contract of employment with him as receiver. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Gay (Tex.) 53

5. The plaintiff in an action of replevin is not estopped by a former attachment or levy, where the other party has not changed his position or course of conduct relying thereon. Miller v. Hyde (Mass.) 42

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Estoppel; by acquiescence. 300
In pais; to whom applies. 223

EVIDENCE. See also CONTRACTS, 3.

Judicial notice.

1. Courts will not take judicial notice of the law of another state, but such law must be alleged and proved like any other fact in the case. Meier v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (S. D.) 81

Presumptions and burden of proof.

See also infra, 21-24, as to weight.

2. There is no presumption that the statutes or local laws or usages of another state are like those of the forum. Kelley v. Kelley (Mass.) 806

But see next case.

3. In the absence of proof, the law of another state governing a contract will be presumed to be the same as the law of the forum, and such contract will be interpreted accordingly. Meier v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (S. D.) 81

4. One seeking to enjoin a municipality from incurring further indebtedness on the ground that it would exceed the constitutional limit has the burden of showing that such would be the fact. Linn v. Chambersburg (Pa.) 217

5. Proof that a digest containing 88,000 paragraphs separate and distinct from each other contains 808 paragraphs which infringe the copyrights of another raises no presumption that the remainder of the work is an infringement. West Pub. Co. v. Lawyers' Co-Op. Pub. Co. (C. C. N. D. N. Y.) 441

6. Complainant in a suit for infringement of a copyright of a digest is not relieved of the burden of proving the infringement, by the fact that he proves part of his case and convinces the court that it will be difficult to prove the rest. Id.

Documentary.

7. The constitutional right of an accused to confront the witnesses against him does not exclude, in a criminal prosecution, the use of a certificate of marriage made at the very time of the marriage by the rabbi who performed the marriage ceremony. State v. Behrman (N. C.) 449

8. A writing on the back of a picture sent by a man to a woman, in which he calls himself her husband, is competent as an acknowledgment by him of their relations. Id.

9. A paper purporting to be an original certificate of marriage by a rabbi in a foreign country, verified by the signature and seal of the official minister, is admissible as res gesta to prove the marriage, in a criminal prosecution, where one of the parties testifies that it was given to her at the time of the marriage. Id.

10. An alleged marriage contract which a woman testifies was signed by her and her alleged husband at the time of the marriage is admissible, not simply as corroborative, but as substantive, testimony of the marriage. Id.

11. The report of a committee of aldermen is admissible to show that the committee did in fact investigate matters not specifically committed to it, in order to show that a witness who is charged with slander in statements made to the committee was making relevant statements. Blakeslee v. Carroll (Conn.) 106

Opinions; explanations.

12. The opinion of a witness that trees, shrubs, plants, and vines are by their inherent nature not susceptible to insurance is not admissible, since the judge and jury are as competent in respect to that question as any witness. Mathews v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo.) 161

13. A person may be competent to testify as to the value of coins, although he has not bought and sold such articles up to the day of trial. Smith v. Minneapolis Library Board (Minn.) 280

14. All who claim to know the provisions of the unwritten laws of a foreign country are competent to explain them, under a statute allowing such laws to be proved as a fact by oral evidence. State v. Behrman (N. C.) 449

Relevancy.

15. Declarations by a testator after the execution of his will are not admissible to show due execution. Walton v. Kendrick (Mo.) 701

16. Common reputation in a family as to who are members of the family is admissible, when no superior evidence is attainable, or in connection with superior evidence to prove pedigree, legitimacy, and marriage. Re Pickens's Estate (Pa.) 477

17. Evidence of the general reputation for intemperance of a railroad brakeman is admissible on the question of the negligence of the master in employing or retaining him. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Hoover (Md.) 710

18. Evidence that, both before and after the occurrence of a fire which caused the injuries forming the basis of the suit, other fires had been started by sparks from defendant's engines at different places along the road, is admissible as tending to show that the fire in question was so caused. Campbell v. Missouri P. R. Co. (Mo.) 176

19. Evidence that a bill was rendered to and paid by the owner of electric wires attached to the frames of an electric light company, for a part of the expense of repairing a roof to which one of the frames is fastened, is admissible in an action by an employé of such owner against the light company for injuries caused by the bad condition of the light wires, as tending to show an agreement for a joint use of the frame, within the rule which requires of one owner care as to the condition of wires which employés of the other may be required to approach. Illingsworth v. Boston Electric Light Co. (Mass.) 562

20. Testimony that if a post-dated check had been presented during business hours it would not have been received as a deposit is not admissible upon the question whether or not, when presented after business hours, the bank agreed to apply to its payment any funds standing to the drawer's credit when it became due, and hold them subject to the check of the holder. Averell v. Washington Second Nat. Bank (D. C. App.) 761

Weight.

21. The presumption in favor of marriage and the legitimacy of the offspring is strengthened by lapse of time, and after ninety years from the birth of issue cannot be overcome except by strong, direct, and satisfactory proof. Re Pickens's Estate (Pa.) 477

22. In the absence of evidence the mere denial of marriage will not defeat the presumption of the legitimacy of issue, or throw upon such issue the burden of proof of the marriage of the parents. Id.

23. The testimony of one who pretended to act with others in the commission of a crime, for the purpose of detecting and punishing them, is alone sufficient to sustain a conviction. Com. v. Hollister (Pa.) 349

24. Some evidence that a testator's will was signed in his presence as well as by his direction, so as to comply with the statute in a case where the testator does not affix his own signature, is furnished by proof that he stated to the witnesses whom he asked to attest it that it was his will and that he had it written, while it appears that he was fully acquainted with all the formalities required by the statute. Walton v. Kendrick (Mo.) 701

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Evidence; proof of foreign laws:—(I.) in general; (II.) the unwritten or common law, lex non scripta; (III.) the written law, lex scripta; (a) of sister states; (b) of foreign countries; (IV.) modifications of common law; (V.) construction of written laws; (VI.) proof of practice under statutes; (VII.) state statutes; (VIII.) the English doctrine. 449

Of pedigree. 478

Of declarations of testator; of execution of will. 701

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

1. Legacies are not extinguished by merger or otherwise, on account of the descent to the legatees of land which was devised to an ancestor, with a direction that he pay the legacies; but his personal estate must be used to pay the legacies like other debts of his estate. Case v. Hall (Ohio) 766

2. The death of one who, by acceptance of a devise, became personally liable to pay legacies as each legatee became of age, leaves his estate liable as an entirety for the payment of the legacies thereafter coming due. Id.

EXEMPTION. See INSURANCE, 10.

EX POST FACTO. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 4.

EXPRESS COMPANY. See COMMERCE, 8; LICENSE.

35 L. R. A.

EXTRADITION.

1. The discharge of a person who has been surrendered by a foreign nation in extradition proceedings, on setting aside the indictment against him, does not prevent his arrest on a subsequent complaint for the same offense. Re Foss (Cal.) 593

2. The surrender as an act of comity, by a foreign nation, of a fugitive whose crime is not one for which a treaty requires his surrender, does not violate any right secured to him by the treaty, or entitle him to his discharge on habeas corpus. Id.

3. The existence of a treaty which provides for extradition for certain crimes does not deprive either nation of the power and right to exercise its own discretion to surrender criminals in cases not coming within the terms of the treaty. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Extradition; effect upon prisoner's rights of necessity of amendment of charge upon which he was extradited:—in general; Canadian cases; the English rule. 693

FACTORS.

A factor's lien cannot attach to goods which never came into his actual possession, but were delivered or consigned by the owner directly to the purchasers, even if the factor's contract provided that the goods should be consigned to him for sale. Warren v. Columbus First Nat. Bank (Ill.) 746

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Factors; lien of. 747

FENCES. See MASTER AND SERVANT, 6; RAILROADS, NOTES AND BRIEFS; TRIAL, 9.

FINE. See CRIMINAL LAW, 3.

FIRES. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 5, 6, 8; EVIDENCE, 18; RAILROADS, 6-10.

FOREIGN LAWS. See EVIDENCE, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

FORFEITURE. See INSURANCE, 11-13.

FORGERY.

Signing the names of other persons to a note, with an addendum over the signer's own name stating that he is authorized to sign for the others, does not constitute forgery, although the claim of authority is entirely false. State v. Taylor (La.) 691

FRAUD. See CORPORATIONS, 3.

GARNISHMENT.

1. An insurance company may be garnished for the amount due after a loss, where payment is not conditional on anything which remains to be done. Shipman v. Carroll (Kan.) 806

2. Funds which have been garnished will not be directed to be turned over to an ancillary receiver until the rights of the plaintiffs in the marriage proceedings have been disposed of. Baldwin v. Hoerner (Mich.) 789

GAS. See MINES, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

GOVERNOR.

Illness of the governor of the state, which disables him from performing the duties of his office, constitutes a vacancy during which the president of the senate shall exercise the powers of the office, under N. H. Const. art. 49, making such provision "whenever the chair of the governor shall become vacant by reason of his death, absence from the state, or otherwise." Barnard v. Taggart (N. H.) 618

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Governor; how far sickness constitutes a vacancy in office authorizing performance of the duties of the office by another. 618

HEALTH. See SCHOOLS, 3.

HEIRS. See DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.

HIGHWAYS. See also EJECTMENT; EMINENT DOMAIN, 5, 6; ESTOPPEL, 2; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 8; STREET RAILWAYS, 3.

1. Limiting the class of voters for road commissioners to resident freeholders, or extending it to include women and nonresidents, is not permitted where the constitution limits the class of voters for elective officers to male citizens. State, Allison, v. Blake (N. J. Sup.) 480

2. A standpipe or water-tower placed in a street is an unlawful use thereof, although the fee belongs to the city which erects the tower. Barrows v. Sycamore (Ill.) 585

3. Special injury is necessary to give a private right of action for the unlawful placing of a standpipe or water-tower in a street. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also EMINENT DOMAIN.

Highways; lawfulness of use of; obstructions. 585, 589

HOMESTEAD. See also INSURANCE, 16.

Rooms in a house which stands on a homestead lot cannot be subjected to forced sale, on the ground that the homestead as to them has been abandoned, under the Texas constitution and laws, by which the exemption is placed on the lots, and not upon the improvements. Ford v. Foregard (Tex.) 155

HOMICIDE. See DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.

HOSPITAL. See CHARITIES, 1.

HUSBAND AND WIFE. See also CONFLICT OF LAWS, 3, 4; EVIDENCE, 7-10; JUDGMENT, 3.

1. A court of chancery has no authority to annul a marriage independently of statutory authority, on the ground merely that one of 25 L. R. A.

the parties was incapable of marrying because of a prior existing marriage. Kelley v. Kelley (Mass.) 806

2. A court of equity has no inherent jurisdiction to annul a marriage, in the absence of fraud or duress. Ridgely v. Ridgely (Md.) 800

3. The annulment of an invalid marriage cannot be decreed upon the application of a third party, on the ground that he is the lawful husband of the woman by a prior marriage which is still in force. Id.

4. Willful and malicious desertion constituting cause for divorce is not shown by the facts that the wife, in a passion roused by a single blow by her husband, leaves the house without intending to remain away permanently, and on reflection returns to find the home barred against her, and then seeks by violence to enter, for which she is prosecuted by the husband, and thereafter does not return. Hardie v. Hardie (Pa.) 697

5. A single blow given in anger by husband to wife is not necessarily cruel and barbarous treatment constituting cause for divorce. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Husband and wife; jurisdiction of chancery to decree nullity or dissolution of marriage:—in general; dicta; character of proceeding. 800

ICE.

Ice formed on water flowing land which has been taken in condemnation proceedings by a water-supply company belongs to the water company, and not to the owner of the fee. Wright v. Woodcock (Me.) 499

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Ice; rights in. 499

INCOMPETENT PERSONS. See CHARITIES, 1.

INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR. See MASTER AND SERVANT, 3.

INFANTS. See also INTOXICATING LIQUORS; NEGLIGENCE, 1; RAILROADS, 4; STREET RAILWAYS, 2, 3; TRIAL, 7.

1. The prohibition by N. Y. Pen. Code, § 292, of the exhibition, as a dancer or in theatrical performances, of a girl under fourteen, applies to all public exhibitions or shows, and not merely to exhibitions which offend against morals or decency or endanger life or limb. People v. Ewer (N. Y.) 794

2. A statute prohibiting the employment or exhibition of girls under fourteen years of age as dancers or in theatrical exhibitions is not invalid as taking away from parents the right to employ their children in any lawful occupation; but is an exercise of the power of the State as parens patriæ, to protect the physical, mental, and moral welfare of children. Id.

3. An application by a grandmother to compel the sending of her grandchildren to visit her, where by reason of disagreement between her and their father—her son in law—he has refused to send them, but is willing she should come to visit them, is outside the jurisdiction of a court, even if there might be cases of downright wrong and inhumanity which would demand judicial intervention to the extent of dismissing the father from his trust as tutor. Re Reiss's Succession (La.) 798

4. A minor leasing rooms for a year while attending college is bound, on the ground that the lodging is a necessary, only to pay for the time he continues to occupy them, and may terminate the lease at any time. Gregory v. Lee (Conn.) 618

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also RAILROADS.

Infants; power to appoint agents. 209

Contracts for necessities; lease of lodgings. 618

Protection of health and morals of. 795

INJUNCTION.

1. An injunction against using state moneys to build a state institution, such as a branch insane asylum, elsewhere than at the seat of government, cannot be granted merely on the ground that the constitution requires its location at the capital, where it does not appear that the cost to the state will be any greater at one place than the other. State, Taylor v. Pennoyer (Or.) 862

2. An injunction cannot be granted to prevent the giving of election notices, or the certifying of nominees for districts created by an apportionment act, on the ground that such act is unconstitutional, since the rights involved are purely political and enforceable only at law. Fletcher v. Tuttle (Ill.) 143

3. The publication of a digest of judicial decisions will not be enjoined on proof that less than 1 per cent of the number of paragraphs therein infringe the copyrights of another publisher, as such infringing paragraphs can readily be separated from the remainder of the book. West Pub. Co. v. Lawyers' Co-Op. Pub. Co. (C. C. N. D. N. Y.) 441

4. The doctrine of confusion of goods is not applicable to a suit to enjoin the publication of a digest of judicial decisions as an infringement of a copyright, where there is no connection between the pirated paragraphs and those which are the result of original and honest labor. Id.

Against employees.

5. Trade unions are not prohibited by an injunction against illegal combinations of workingmen. Arthur v. Oakes (O. C. App. 7th C.) 414

6. Injunction is a proper remedy to restrain threatened acts of employes of a railroad receiver, which would inflict irreparable loss upon the property and seriously prejudice the interests of the public involved in the regular continuous operation of the road. Id.

7. Equity will not enjoin employes of a receiver of a railroad from quitting his service, although the effect of such action will be to cripple the property or prevent or hinder the operation of the road. Id.

8. Employes of the receiver of a railroad may be enjoined from combining and conspiring to quit his service, with the object and intent of crippling the property in his custody, or embarrassing the operation of the railroad. Id.

9. Equity will enjoin any combination or conspiracy among the employes of the receiver of a railroad, which has for its object and intent the physical injury of the property in the receiver's possession, or actual interference with the regular continuous operation by him of the railroad. Id.

10. Employes of a receiver of a railroad may be enjoined from disabling rolling-stock or other property in the receiver's possession, from interfering with its possession or obstructing its management, and from using force, intimidation, threats, or other wrongful methods against the receiver, his agents, or employes, or persons seeking employment. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Injunction; to protect political rights. 143

Against interference with railroad receivers; against strikes. 415

Against violation of law or unconstitutional act. 862

INSANE PERSONS. See CHARITIES, 1.

INSOLVENCY. See also BANKS, 4-9.

1. An insolvent debtor may pay or secure one creditor in preference to another, in the absence of statutory restrictions. Outler v. Pollock (N. D.) 377

2. A statute prohibiting preferences in an assignment for the benefit of creditors is not violated by the execution of chattel mortgages covering substantially all of the debtor's property to secure only a portion of his creditors, even if the debtor knew that the consequence would be to prevent his continuing business, and the mortgagees at once took possession and commenced foreclosure. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Insolvency; what constitutes an assignment; chattel mortgage. 377

Order or draft in contemplation of. 747

INSURANCE. See also EVIDENCE, 12; GARNISHMENT, 1.

Companies and agents.

1. Persons seeking to transact insurance business may be subjected by the state to reasonable regulations. State v. Stone (Mo.) 243

2. The legislature may lawfully confine insurance business to corporations. Com. v. Freeman (Pa.) 250

3. Persons writing insurance with individual liability of each for a certain part of the whole undertaking are not a "company" within the meaning of Pa. Act May 1, 1876, § 47, declaring it to be a misdemeanor to act as an agent for a foreign insurance company without a certificate of authority from the state. Com. v. Reinahl (Pa.) 247

4. Provisions of a statute imposing a penalty upon one who acts as insurance agent for a principal who has not acquired a certificate of permission to transact business should not be disregarded, so far as they are made to apply to agents of individuals, because the statutes requiring a certificate and regulating the procedure for procuring it apply only to "companies," if such statutes are made by subsequent ones applicable to individuals and all their essential provisions can be complied with by individuals. State v. Stone (Mo.) 243

5. A statute making one acting for an unlicensed foreign company, corporation, association, or partnership transacting insurance business in the state, personally liable for the amount of the policy, and imposing a penalty upon him, is separable and valid so far as it applies to the agents of corporations. Noble v. Mitchell (Ala.) 238

6. Compliance with the terms of the policy as to proofs of loss and time for bringing suit is not necessary to authorize recovery under a statute making an agent acting for an unlicensed foreign company personally liable for the amount of loss. Id.

7. The fact that insurance solicitors placed a risk through brokers in another state without knowing what company took it will not relieve them from liability under the provisions of a statute authorizing recovery of the loss from persons who act as agents of unlicensed foreign companies. Id.

Title and incumbrances.

8. A mere paper transfer called a bill of sale, without consideration and without delivery of possession of the property, does not constitute a change of title or an incumbrance within the meaning of an insurance policy containing conditions as to title and incumbrances, even if it was intended to defraud creditors. Forward v. Continental Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 687

9. Knowledge of an agent with power to solicit insurance, collect premiums, and deliver policies, of the existence of a bill of sale of property insured, takes such instrument out of the operation of a condition as to title and incumbrances in a policy which at his discretion he fills up and delivers. Id.

Wager policy.

10. A life insurance policy payable to the son of the insured is not a wager policy, where the first premium was paid by the insured and the others by the son, who had general charge of the business of the insured and forwarded them in her behalf. Heinlein v. Imperial L. Ins. Co. (Mich.) 627

Assessments; forfeiture.

11. Payments of assessments in a benefit association after forfeiture of membership, but in ignorance of that fact, do not estop the member from denying his liability to pay subsequent assessments. Ellerbs v. Faust (Mo.) 149

12. A life insurance policy is not forfeited by failure to pay an assessment which became due after the surrender of the policy had been improperly procured by the company. Heinlein v. Imperial L. Ins. Co. (Mich.) 627

13. Instructions by an insurance company 25 L. R. A.

that premiums must be paid at the office, and that due notice will be given of the day when due, will prevent forfeiture for nonpayment unless notice has been given. Id.

Rights in proceeds.

14. A railroad company is not entitled to any part of the insurance contracted for and collected by the owner of property destroyed by a fire communicated from a railroad locomotive, although the railroad company is given by statute an insurable interest in such property, with the right to insure it for its own protection. Matthews v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo.) 161

Mortgagee's rights.

15. A mortgagee has an equitable lien on the proceeds of an insurance policy taken by the mortgagor in his own name, and not assigned to the mortgagee or in any way made payable to him, where there is an agreement between them that the mortgagor shall keep the premises insured for the mortgagee's benefit. Chipman v. Carroll (Kan.) 805

16. Insurance money is not exempt, on the ground that the insured property constituted a homestead, from an equitable lien of a mortgagee for whose benefit the mortgagor is bound to insure the property, but takes the insurance, instead, in his own name. Id.

17. A conveyance of property which avoids insurance as to the owner does not defeat the rights of a mortgagee, under a provision that his interest shall not be invalidated by any act or neglect of the mortgagor or owner. Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Omaha Loan & T. Co. (Neb.) 679

18. The failure of a mortgagee to give notice to the insurer of a conveyance of the property, as required by the policy, will not defeat his right to the insurance, in the absence of any provision that the policy shall be void for that cause. Id.

19. A mortgagee to whom an insurance policy is payable does not lose the right to collect the insurance by a transfer of the mortgage, with a guaranty of its payment and without assigning the policy, although the assignee of the mortgage may be a proper party plaintiff. Id.

20. A provision that a mortgagee's interest in a policy of insurance shall not be "invalidated" by any act of the owner means that it shall not be injuriously impaired or affected thereby, and prevents the reduction of his recovery on account of other insurance taken without his knowledge, by reason of a provision that the insurer shall be liable only in the proportion that the sum insured by the policy bears to the whole amount of insurance issued to or held by any party or parties having an insurable interest. Eddy v. London Assur. Corp. (N. Y.) 686

21. Invalid insurance taken by the owner of property in violation of a policy cannot be reckoned in determining the recovery of a mortgagee, where the policy provides that his interest shall not be invalidated by any act of the owner, although it provides generally that the insurer shall be liable only for its proportion of the loss according to the whole amount of insurance on the property, whether valid or not. Eddy v. London Assur. Corp. (N. Y.) 686

22. A mortgagee may properly proceed to judgment and sale in a foreclosure suit which was pending when a loss by fire occurred, unless payment of his mortgage debt is made, under a policy stipulating that his interest in the insurance shall not be invalidated by foreclosure, although it also provides for subrogation of the insurer to his rights under the mortgage, with a proviso that it shall not impair his right to recover the full amount of his claim. Id.

Surrender by duress.

23. A life insurance policy surrendered on return of the premiums paid will be revived where the surrender was procured during the illness of the insured, by false assertions that it was a wager policy and threats of litigation unless it were surrendered. Heinlein v. Imperial L. Ins. Co. (Mich.) 627

24. Where a person is induced by threats of a groundless prosecution to accept a less sum than is justly owing to him on a policy of fire insurance, in satisfaction of his claim, and to surrender the same, he may maintain an action on the policy for the balance due, without returning or tendering back the money so received. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Hull (Ohio) 87

Procedure to recover.

25. The stipulations of a policy, which relate to the procedure merely, after the occurrence of a loss, are to be reasonably, and not rigidly, construed. Paltrovitch v. Phoenix Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 198

26. By rejecting a certificate of a notary respecting a loss, on the ground that there is a nearer notary whose certificate should be given, but without giving his name or address, an insurance company may be regarded as not desiring a further certificate, and as waiving a condition requiring the certificate of the nearest notary,—especially where the certificate furnished is kept twenty-three days without objection. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Insurance; effect of expulsion from society to destroy right to insurance connected therewith:—suits on benefit certificate; damages. 149

Restrictions on insurance by unincorporated associations or individuals; Lloyds associations. 288

Rights of mortgagee to benefit of insurance taken in name of mortgagor:—rights of mortgagee in absence of contract; where there is a contract or covenant to insure; who may maintain an action for the proceeds. 805

Right to take life insurance for benefit of stranger; in general; speculative policies; existence of insurable interest; payment of premiums; the Texas doctrine. 627

Rights given by the attachment of a mortgage slip to an insurance policy:—in general; rights of mortgagee; rights of mortgagor and his grantees; the subrogation clause; the pro-rating clause. 679

By agents of foreign companies. 248, 249
25 L. R. A.

Certificate of notary or magistrate as to loss. 120

Rights of mortgagee after forfeiture of mortgagor's right. 679, 686

Change of title by bill of sale without delivery of possession. 637

INTOXICATION. See also NEGLIGENCE, 2.

An ordinance forbidding unmarried minors to enter any bar room unless as agent or servant is not void, unreasonable, or inconsistent with a statute which makes it unlawful to sell or give intoxicating liquors to such persons. State v. Austin (N. C.) 283

JOINT CREDITORS AND DEBTORS. See LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 1.

JUDGE. See COURTS, 6-10, NOTES AND BRIEFS; OFFICERS.

JUDGMENT.

1. A judgment on a mortgage does not, before any sale or conveyance, extinguish the debt so as to prevent the mortgagee from claiming the proceeds of insurance on the mortgaged property. Chipman v. Carroll (Kan.) 305

2. Proceeding upon some erroneous legal theory applied to the facts will not, under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1207, defeat plaintiff's right to such relief as the facts may warrant, if it is consistent with the complaint and embraced within the issue. Cassagne v. Maria (N. Y.) 670

3. The assumption of a court of general jurisdiction in another state, of the exercise of jurisdiction to annul a marriage on the ground of a prior existing marriage of one of the parties, and a dismissal of the complaint for failure to prosecute the suit, with a judgment for alimony and costs in favor of the defendant, which jurisdiction must depend on statute,—is not sufficient to create a presumption that such jurisdiction existed. Kelley v. Kelley (Mass.) 806

4. Absence of service of process in the original suit may be shown in defense of a suit upon a judgment procured in another state, although service is recited as a fact in the record upon which the judgment is based. Price v. Schaffer (Pa.) 699

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Judgment; of other state; contesting jurisdiction. 699

As to what conclusive. 300

JURISDICTION. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

JURY. See REFERENCE, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

LABOR ORGANIZATIONS. See INJUNCTION, 5.

LAKE. See WATERS, 3, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

LARCENY. See CRIMINAL LAW, 1, 2.

LAW OF PLACE. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

LAW REPORTS. See COPYRIGHT.

LEGACIES. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS; WILLS.

LEGISLATURE. See COURTS, 1.

LEVEE. See WATERS, 1.

LIBEL AND SLANDER.

1. The mere fact that words uttered by a witness were not in response to questions does not avoid the privilege, if they were spoken in respect to pertinent and relevant matters, although statements officiously volunteered might be evidence of express malice. Blakeslee v. Carroll (Conn.) 106

2. Testimony under oath before a committee of aldermen investigating charges against the city board of public works is not absolutely privileged. Id.

3. A citizen is privileged in going before a committee of aldermen investigating charges against city officials, and in good faith giving such information as he may have touching the matter under investigation. Id.

4. Pertinent and relevant testimony of a witness before a committee of aldermen having power to compel testimony is within a conditional privilege of the witness, although the committee, appointed to investigate certain charges against the board of public works, had extended the scope of its investigation to other charges against the board, and the evidence was given in respect to these. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Libel and slander; privilege of witnesses as to statements. 106

LIBRARY. See BAILMENT, 1.

LICENSE. See also COMMERCE, 2.

A license fee of $200 for doing express business in a city of 15,000 inhabitants is not shown to be prohibitory or destructive of the business of express companies, even if it be that any judicial action could be based on such a showing. Osborne v. State (Fla.) 120

LIENS. See ATTORNEYS; FACTORS.

LIGHTNING RODS. See COMMERCE, 1, 2.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS. See also CONFLICT OF LAWS, 8.

1. A partial payment by one of two parties jointly and severally liable upon a promissory note will not suspend the running of the statute in favor of the other. Cowhick v. Shingle Wyo. 608

2. Fraudulent concealment of a cause of action takes the case out of the bar of the statute of limitations, unless plaintiff's failure to discover the facts is due to his negligence. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Gay (Tex.) 52

5 L. R. A.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Limitation of action; suspension of suit by payment by one party. 608

LLOYDS. See INSURANCE, 3, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

LOGS. See TROVER, 2.

LOOKOUT. See RAILROADS, 1.

MANDAMUS.

It is not the duty of the auditor to examine and adjust an appropriation by the legislature in the nature of a gift or donation to a designated county for the expenses of a murder trial, under Neb. Const. art. 9, § 9, making it the duty of the legislature to provide by law that all claims upon the treasurer shall be examined and adjusted by the auditor and approved by the secretary of state before any warrant for the amount allowed shall be drawn; but his only duty is the ministerial one of issuing a warrant for such appropriation; and mandamus lies to compel its issuance. State, Sayre, v. Moore (Neb.) 774

MARRIAGE. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

MASONS. See ASSOCIATIONS; BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES, 1.

MASSES. See CHARITIES, 3; WILLS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

MASTER AND SERVANT. See also CHARITIES, 1, 2; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 7, 9; PROXIMATE CAUSE; TRIAL, 9, 10.

1. For negligence in respect to acts which the duty of the master to the servant requires to be performed, the master is liable if injury results to the employé, without regard to the rank or title of the agent whom he has entrusted with its performance. Hankins v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (N. Y.) 396

2. The master's knowledge of the bad reputation for intemperance of a person employed as brakeman on a train is not necessary to render him liable for injuries caused by the brakeman's unfitness, if he was negligent in not knowing of such reputation. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Hoover (Md.) 710

3. The work of raising a party-wall is neither dangerous nor extraordinary in itself, so as to make the person for whom it is done liable for negligence of an independent contractor in doing the work. Negus v. Becker (N. Y.) 667

4. Employés of a contractor engaged in taking earth away from cars for a consignee, who, to facilitate the work, dump the earth from the car on request of the railroad crew, are not volunteers so as to preclude recovery from the railroad company for injury by the tipping over of a car, due to defects therein and to improper loading. O'Donnell v. Maine C. R. Co. (Me.) 658

5. One assisting the servants of another to facilitate his own business or that of another is not their fellow servant. Id.

Railroad employes.

6. A railroad company is liable to an employé for failure to keep its fence in repair as required by statute, if he is injured, without his fault, in consequence thereof by collision of a train on which he is employed, with an animal upon the track. Dickson v. Omaha & St. L. R. Co. (Mo.) 820

7. The negligence of the conductor of a construction train in leaving open a switch which a rule of the company makes it his duty to attend to in person is the negligence of a fellow servant of a fireman on a passenger train who is injured in consequence of the open switch. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Needham (C. C. App. 8th C.) 888

8. A railroad engineer is not negligent in remaining on his engine after the front pair of small wheels under the engine is derailed and he has reversed his engine and put on air brakes, even if this is not the safest and most prudent course. Dickson v. Omaha & St. L. R. Co. (Mo.) 820

9. Disobedience by an engineer of a rule requiring a train to be kept under control and prepared to stop in case the track is obstructed does not affect the liability of the company for his death caused by a collision with an animal on the track, where the road was not fenced as required by law, if the most diligent care and careful control of the engine could not have prevented the collision after the danger appeared. Id.

10. The duty of opening and closing a switch in the ordinary operation of a railroad is not one of the personal duties of the master which cannot be delegated to a servant so as to bring negligence in respect to it within the rule as to fellow servants. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Needham (C. C. App. 8th C.) 888

11. A train dispatcher who controls and directs the movements of trains is not the fellow servant of a fireman on a passenger train employed by the same company. Little Rock & M. R. Co. v. Barry (Ark.) 886

12. A train dispatcher in sending special telegraph orders for the movement of trains, which are entirely controlled by such orders because they are behind time, is not a fellow servant of the fireman on one of such trains, but is, in respect to such duty, acting as the master, as his alter ego. Hankins v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (N. Y.) 396

13. A train dispatcher with power to employ and discharge flagmen and brakemen, and having general charge of the trainmen of one division and movement of trains thereon, but without power to employ engine-men and firemen,—is the fellow servant of an engine-man who is injured in consequence of the train dispatcher's negligence in sending incompetent or unfit brakemen with the train. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Hoover (Md.) 710

14. The conductor of a freight train, having exclusive control thereof in relation to other employes acting under him on the train directing its movements, occupies the position of a vice-principal toward a brakeman injured by such conductor's suddenly ordering the train to start while the brakeman is in a position of danger. Canadian P. R. Co. v. Johnston (C. C. App. 2d C.) 470

Mining employes.

15. A custom which imposes on another employé the work of posting and propping the roof of a coal mine cannot exonerate a miner from the duty imposed on him by statute to do this, in order to shift the risk undertaken by himself over on his employer. Consolidated Coal & Min. Co. v. Floyd (Ohio) 848

16. An experienced miner knowing the danger of working in a room insufficiently propped, who continues to work therein without complaint after knowing the incompetency of a persons employed to prop it, assumes the risk. Id.

17. A coal mine, being a place in which conditions are constantly changing, is not a place furnished by the master for employes, within the spirit of those decisions which deny the right of the master to delegate to a servant the duty of providing a safe place for his employes. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also CHARITIES; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW; RAILROADS.

Master and servant; train dispatcher and telegraph operator as fellow servant of trainmen:—(I.) general doctrine; (II.) special principles against the relation; (III.) train dispatcher; (a) not a fellow servant; (b) a fellow servant; (IV.) telegraph operator; (a) not a fellow servant; (b) a fellow servant. 386

Liability of master for injuries caused to one servant by the incompetency of a fellow servant:—(1) employment generally; (2) retention in employ; (3) incompetency through use of liquor; (4) pleading incompetency; (5) evidence; (a) generally; (b) specific acts; (c) notice to company; (d) burden of proof. 710

Statutory regulations for the protection and safety of workmen in mines:—(I.) props; (II.) cage and signals; (III.) shafts and fences; (IV.) escape and ventilation shafts; (V.) miscellaneous. 848

Relation of servant riding on train. 157

Who are fellow servants. 396

Volunteers injured by servants; aiding servants to facilitate own business. 659

Vice-principal a fellow servant. 470, 834

MAXIMS. See also STATUTES, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

1. Damnum absque injuria. Barrows v. Sycamore (Ill.) 535

2. Expressio unius est exclusio alterius. Re Foss (Cal.) 588

3. He who comes into equity must come with clean hands. Yale Gas-Stove Co. v. Wilcox (Conn.) 91

4. Index animi sermo. Shellenberger v. Ransom (Neb.) 564

5. Sic utere tuo ut non alienum laedas. Smith v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. (N. C.) 287
Matthews v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo.) 161

MERGER. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, 1.

MILLS. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 11, 12.

MINES. See also MASTER AND SERVANT, 15-17.

Petroleum or mineral oil in place is a part of the realty and of the inheritance. Williamson v. Jones (W. Va.) 222

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Mines; nature of property in mineral oil or gas:—natural gas; petroleum; right to drill through coal of another owner; nature of interest in leases. 222

MORTGAGE. See also INSOLVENCY, 2; INSURANCE, 15-22; JUDGMENT, 1.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also INSURANCE.

Mortgage; rights under common-law mortgage; mortgagee in possession; conversion of timber by mortgagee. 599

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS. See also BATHING RESORT; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 13; EMINENT DOMAIN, 1, 2; EVIDENCE, 4; PARLIAMENTARY LAW.

1. Territory containing nearly 85 square miles, the greater part of which consists of wild lands and about 150 cultivated farms, including several postoffices, 8 railroad stations, and 17 platted tracts which are in no way connected, and some of which are entirely uninhabited, while the most populous has only about 20 families, cannot become an incorporated village under a statute authorizing the incorporation of a platted tract and "lands adjacent." State, Childs, v. Minnetonka (Minn.) 755

2. "Lands adjacent" to a district platted into lots and blocks, which may be included in an incorporated village under Minn. Laws 1885, chap. 145, can include only those lands which lie so near the center or nucleus of population on the platted lands as to be somewhat suburban in their character and to have some community of interest with the platted portion in the maintenance of a village government, and cannot include large tracts of rural territory, which have no natural connection with any village and no adaptability to village purposes. Id.

3. The neglect of the city police to abate and suppress such a nuisance as coasting upon the public streets of a city does not make the city liable for damage done to a traveler on the street by one engaged in coasting. Wilming-ton v. Vandegrift (Del.) 588

4. A municipality may manufacture and supply electricity for municipal purposes and for the use and benefit of such of its inhabitants as wish to use and are willing to pay for it at reasonable rates. Linn v. Chambersburg (Pa.) 217

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also BUILDINGS.

Municipal corporations; physical characteristics necessary to municipal organization. 755

Liability for coasting on street. 589

25 L. R. A.

Liability as to bathing resort. 691

Power to operate electric-light plant. 220

NATIONAL BANK. See BANKS, 4-6.

NATURAL GAS. See MINES, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

NEGLIGENCE. See also MASTER AND SERVANT, 8; RAILROADS, 4, 5; STREET RAILWAYS, 1; TRIAL, 7, 8.

1. The negligence of a parent in permitting an infant to wander upon a railroad track will not be imputed to it so as to preclude a recovery by it for an injury there received. Bottoms v. Seaboard & R. R. Co. (N. C.) 784

2. One who has voluntarily disabled himself by reason of intoxication is held to the same degree of care and prudence for his safety that is required of a sober person. Smith v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. (N. C.) 287

3. The rule of contributory negligence is simply a means of determining whether the plaintiff's negligence is a remote or proximate cause of the injury. Id.

4. If the injury could have been prevented by the exercise of reasonable care and prudence on the part of the defendant after plaintiff's negligence occurred, contributory negligence is not a defense. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also RAILROADS; STREET RAILWAYS.

Negligence; as to unsafe premises; as to trespassers. 554

NEWSPAPERS. See PARLIAMENTARY LAW.

NOTARY. See INSURANCE, 26.

NOTICE. See CORPORATIONS, 1, NOTES AND BRIEFS; INSURANCE, 18, 18.

NUISANCES. See COURTS, 2.

OFFER. See REWARD.

OFFICERS. See also GOVERNOR, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

A justice is not personally liable for ordering the exclusion of spectators from his courtroom, and the actual removal of a person by an officer under his direction, where he acts in the mistaken belief that the case is one which he is justified in conducting with closed doors. Williamson v. Lacy (Me.) 506

OIL. See MINES, NOTES AND BRIEFS; WASTE.

PARENT AND CHILD. See also CONTRACTS, 2; INFANTS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Parent and child; contract of adoption. 207

PARK COMMISSIONERS. See ESTOPPEL, 2.

PARLIAMENTARY LAW.

A tie vote on which the mayor may give a casting vote for each of two official newspapers to be chosen is presented by a vote of twelve aldermen and in which three newspapers receive four votes each, where the charter provides that two shall be chosen, but that each alderman shall vote for one only, and a general charter provision gives the mayor a casting vote in case of a tie. Wooster v. Mullins (Conn.) 694

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Parliamentary law; as to casting vote. 694

PARTNERSHIP. See ATTACHMENT, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

PARTY-WALL.

Carrying up a party-wall for a three story building, as contemplated by the contract under which it was built, although the other party has erected a building only two stories high, does not make the owner of the new building an insurer against injuries which may result to his neighbor's property, or render him liable for a falling of the wall without any negligence on his part. Negus v. Becker (N.Y.) 667

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Party-wall; liability for damages caused by raising. 668

PASS. See CARRIERS, 6, 7.

PAYMENT. See EMINENT DOMAIN, 4.

PENALTY. See INSURANCE, 4.

PHYSICAL EXAMINATION. See DISCOVERY AND INSPECTION, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

PLEADING. See also JUDGMENT, 2.

1. The mere conclusion of the pleader that a standpipe or water-tower is liable to blow over or burst is not a sufficient averment of special damages. Barrows v. Sycamore (Ill.) 585

2. An allegation that a standpipe obstructs the light to a building is a sufficient allegation of special injury to the owner. Id.

3. A single count is sufficient in an action in which the relief sought is merely the recovery of the purchase price of a machine, although two causes of action are relied upon to sustain the recovery,—one for breach of contract in failing to pay the purchase price, and the other in tort for forcibly preventing the seller from regaining possession of the machine. Craft Refrigerating Mach. Co. v. Quinnipiac Brew. Co. (Conn.) 856

4. A reply to the plea of a release, that it was obtained by fraud, may be sufficient in an action at law without resorting to equity to cancel the document. Girard v. St. Louis Car-Wheel Co. (Mo.) 514

5. A recovery for injury by fire set out by a locomotive, without proof of negligence, will 25 L. R. A.

not be prevented where the statute authorizes such recovery, by the mere fact that negligence is alleged in the petition. Campbell v. Missouri P. R. Co. (Mo.) 175

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Pleadings; sufficiency on demurrer. 383

PLEDGE AND COLLATERAL SECURITY.

1. Delivery of the property pledged to the creditor, or to a third person to hold possession for the creditor, is indispensable to perfect a contract of pledge; and when delivered to the third person he must of course know of the trust and accept the obligation it imposes. Re Lanau's Succession (La.) 577

2. The possession of securities sufficient to create a pledge is not shown by placing them in a bank box which, with the key, is given to the debtor's clerk for the purpose of depositing the box in a bank and delivering possession thereof to the creditor in pursuance of a promise of a pledge, although the creditor is notified of this deposit and of the clerk's instructions to deliver the securities when called for, where they remain in the bank uncalled for until the death of the debtor. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

How far pledge may be effectual, of which the pledgor's agent is made depositary. 577

POLITICAL RIGHTS. See also EQUITY, 2.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Political rights; chancery jurisdiction to protect. 143

PRESUMPTION. See EVIDENCE.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT. See also INSURANCE, 4-7, 9.

The death of the employer terminates the right of his clerk to deliver securities under instructions to deliver them to a creditor as a pledge. Re Lanau's Succession (La.) 577

PRISON. See DOMICIL.

PROHIBITION.

1. An agreement of counsel that a justice of the peace is an aged man not to be affected to his disadvantage by the result of the proceeding will not prevent a writ of prohibition against unlawful proceedings in his court from issuing against him as well as the party and his counsel. Bullard v. Thorpe (Vt.) 605

2. A writ of prohibition will issue against actions brought before a justice of the peace by splitting up an entire cause of action so as to make the amount claimed in each too small to permit an appeal, where relief has been denied by the justice, leaving no other remedy. Id.

PROMOTERS. See CORPORATIONS, 2, 3, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

PROXIMATE CAUSE.

Collision of a train with an animal on the track, which derails the front pair of small wheels under the engine, is the proximate cause of injury to the engineer, who, after reversing his engine and applying an air brake, goes out on the running board to the steam chest and is killed by the derailing of the engine as it strikes a switch less than 1,000 feet from the point of collision. Dickson v. Omaha & St. L. R. Co. (Mo.) 820

QUO WARRANTO. See TRIAL, 1.

RAILROADS.

As Carriers, see CARRIERS.

See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 5, 6, 8; CONTRACTS, 10; EMINENT DOMAIN, 5, 8; INJUNCTION, 6-10; INSURANCE, 14; MASTER AND SERVANT, 6-18; NEGLIGENCE, 1; PLEADING, 5; RECEIVERS, 2, 8.

1. The duty of the engineer of a railroad train to keep a vigilant lookout on the track in order to discover and avoid any obstructions that may be encountered thereon is enforceable in favor of helpless persons upon the track between crossings, when it can be exercised consistently with giving the attention to the engine necessary to its safe and proper management. Smith v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. (N. C.) 287

2. Failure by an engineer to exercise ordinary care to discover persons on the track in time to avoid injuring them is not such willful and wanton negligence as to exclude the defense of contributory negligence in case a person so situated is injured. Id.

3. Failure of an engineer to stop a train, which is due merely to its lack of proper equipment, where he was guilty of no negligence after discovering the danger, will not preclude the defense of contributory negligence, where an intoxicated person is on the track and struck by the train. Id.

4. A child twenty-two months old cannot be charged with negligence for straying upon a railroad track. Bottoms v. Seaboard & R. R. Co. (N. C.) 784

5. A railroad company is liable for injuring a child of tender years upon its track, if, consistent with the attention demanded by the engine, its danger could have been discovered in time to avoid the injury by stopping the train. Id.

Fires.

See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 6, 8.

6. Absolute liability, and not merely a prima facie liability, is created for fires set by locomotives, under Mo. Rev. Stat. 1889, § 2615, declaring that each railroad corporation "shall be responsible" in such cases. Matthews v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo.) 161

7. Allowing weeds to grow on one's premises cannot be held to be contributory negligence which will defeat the liability of a railroad company for a fire communicated from a locomotive,—especially under a statute which makes the railroad company an insurer against fires thus caused. Id.

8. Including in damages for condemnation 25 L. R. A.

an allowance for the danger of fire by operation of a railroad will not prevent the owner of property from recovering for its loss by subsequent fire communicated from the railroad locomotives, as the original damages were compensation for the depreciation to the value of the property. Id.

9. There is no constitutional objection against making a railroad company absolutely liable for the injury caused by fire set out by its locomotives along the line of its road. Campbell v. Missouri P. R. Co. (Mo.) 175

10. A statute making railroad companies responsible "to every person or corporation whose property may be injured or destroyed" by fire set out by their locomotives will not be limited by construction to embrace only insurable property, although the companies are given by the statute an insurable interest in the property for the destruction of which they may be liable. Id.

Waters.

11. A railroad company in bridging a stream must provide a sufficient waterway for the passage of the water, including the superabundant water which flows into and down the stream in times of ordinary floods. Cairo, V. & O. R. Co. v. Brevoort (O. C. D. Ind.) 527

12. The easement of a railroad company under a deed conveying the same estate which could have been acquired under condemnation proceedings prevents the construction by the owner of the fee of levees on a river bank, which would change the natural condition of a river over which the road runs, in time of ordinary floods, thereby causing injury to the railroad approach and track, or rendering the company liable for injuries to other persons by water impeded by the bridge. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Validity of sale of real estate by railroad corporation. 189

Duty to maintain lookout on railroad trains:—failure to maintain lookout at crossings; lookout for persons on track; general; party on track in city; trespassers; employé on track; injuries to passenger; stock; the law in Tennessee. 287

Obligation of railroad company to employés as to fencing track; statutory duty to fence; liability in absence of statute. 820

Care required of railroad companies to prevent injuring small children upon the track:—(I.) duty of railroads to fence against children; (II.) duty to discover child on track; (III.) lookout for children; (IV.) negligence after discovery; (V.) failure to give signal; (VI.) speed; (VII.) city; (VIII.) foot caught; (IX.) sudden appearance of child; (X.) projecting timber or car; (XI.) gross negligence. 784

RECEIVERS. See also BANKS, 9; CONSPIRACY, 4; CORPORATIONS, 8; COSTS AND FEES; COURTS, 4, 5; ESTOPPEL, 4; GARNISHMENT, 2; INJUNCTION, 5-10.

1. A statute declaring that no receiver shall be appointed on petition of the owner of the property is but a legislative declaration of the rule of equity. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Gay (Tex.) 52

2. A person appointed receiver of a railroad by a court without jurisdiction, if permitted by the railroad company to take possession and operate the road, is merely the agent of the company, which is liable for his negligence. Id.

3. A railroad receiver appointed by collusion of the parties to the suit is no more than an agent or superintendent of the railroad company, for whose acts the company is liable, although the law would not have made the company liable for his acts if he had been lawfully appointed. Id.

4. An ancillary receiver may be appointed by the Michigan chancery court to aid the receiver appointed for a benefit society by the courts of the state of its residence, in collecting assessments located in Michigan and which belong to the order. Baldwin v. Hosmer (Mich.) 789

5. Local branches of a foreign benefit society which has become insolvent cannot refuse to turn over assessments in their hands to an ancillary receiver appointed to aid the foreign receiver in collecting in the assets, to be by him transmitted to the foreign receiver for distribution in the discretion of the court, if such disposition appears to be proper and consistent with affording due protection to the citizens of the state. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Receiver; right to property in hands of sheriff. 854

REFERENCE. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 6.

Long accounts in a counterclaim in an action on contract, where plaintiff's claim is disputed, will not justify compulsory reference, under the provision of the New York constitution for "trial by jury in all cases in which it has heretofore been used in the colony of New York," since the practice in the Colony permitted a set-off only with plea of payment, which admitted plaintiff's claim, and the provision in the colonial act of Dec. 31, 1768, for reference of an action involving a "long account either on one side or the other," was applicable to a counterclaim only when plaintiff's cause of action was not disputed. Steck v. Colorado Fuel & I. Co. (N. Y.) 67

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Reference; compulsory reference as denial of the constitutional right to trial by jury:—(I.) the United States Constitution; (II.) where the right existed prior to the state constitution; (III.) state statute no infringement of constitutional right; (IV.) equitable account; (V.) constitution violated; (VI.) action at law; (VII.) state constitution. 67

RELEASE. See PLEADING, 4.

REMAINDER. See ACTION OR SUIT, 4; TAXES, 10.
25 L. R. A.

REPLEVIN. See also ACTION OR SUIT, 1; ESTOPPEL, 5.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Replevin; barred by prior judgment in trover. 43

RES GESTÆ. See EVIDENCE, 9.

RESUME. For resumé of contents of book. see p. 863

REWARD.

An offer of reward for the detection of a criminal, although unlimited as to time and never withdrawn, is merely a proposal which if not accepted by performance within a reasonable time is conclusively presumed by law to be revoked. Mitchell v. Abbott (Me.) 503

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Reward; offer of. 504

ROOMS. See HOMESTEAD.

SALE. See CONTRACTS, 1; TIMBER.

SCHOOLS. See also CONTRACTS, 7.

1. A school commissioner whose authority is not confined to one school district, but extends to many of them, with power of superintendence and control, is to be classed with the town and county officers within a constitutional provision as to the election of officers restricting the franchise to male citizens. Re Gage (N. Y.) 781

2. The subsequent procurement of a certificate by a teacher who was not legally authorized to teach at the time of making a contract will not make the contract valid so as to entitle him to recover for breach of it by discharge. Hosmer v. Ransom County Sheldon School Dist. No. 2 (N. D.) 383

3. A school board has power to adopt reasonable health regulations for the benefit of pupils and the general public. Duffield v. Williamsport School Dist. (Pa.) 153

4. A school board has the right to exclude from the schools those who do not comply with a regulation of the city authorities and the school board requiring a certificate of vaccination as a condition of attendance. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Schools; competency of teacher. 383

Right to vote in school elections. 781

SET-OFF. See also REFERENCE.

The enhanced value given to logs cut wrongfully, but in good faith, by their removal to a place where the true owner recaptures them, belongs to him, and cannot be recouped against the damages assessed against the trespasser in an action for other logs cut with them, but not recaptured. Gaskins v. Davis (N. C.) 813

SOLICITATION. See ADULTERY; CRIMINAL LAW, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE

1. Specific performance is a matter of discretion in the court, which withholds or grants relief according to the circumstances of each particular case, where the general rules and principles governing the court do not furnish any exact measure of justice between the parties. Kofka v. Rosicky (Neb.) 207

2. Specific performance of a parol contract will be enforced by a court of equity where one party has wholly, and the other partly, performed it, and its nonfulfillment on the one hand would amount to a fraud on the party who has wholly performed it. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Specific performance; discretion as to granting; certainty of contract. 207

STANDPIPE. See HIGHWAYS, 2, 3.

STATE INSTITUTIONS. See INJUNCTION, 1.

STATUTES. See also INJUNCTION, 9.

1. Statutes should be so construed as to give effect to the intention of the legislature; and if a statute is plain and unambiguous there is no room for construction or interpretation. Shellenberger v. Ransom (Neb.) 564

2. A penal statute should not be construed strictly for the mere purpose of defeating it, when its intent is plain. State v. Stone (Mo.) 243

3. The known judicial construction of a statute by courts of another state is deemed to be adopted by the legislature when it adopts such statute. Matthews v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo.) 161

4. The title "An act to provide for constructing and maintaining drains" is sufficient to cover provisions for appointment of a commission, with specified powers, to provide for levying assessments for the cost of the drains, and the issuance of county bonds to meet expenses, and create a sinking fund to pay the bonds. Martin v. Tyler (N. D.) 838

5. The failure of a provision for compensation, in a statute creating a drain commission and providing for construction of drains, is fatal to the entire statute, where it appears that the remainder would be incapable of enforcement. Id.

6. A statute requiring voters to be sworn as to their inability to read English before allowing a person to mark their ballots for them is mandatory, and not merely directory, in respect to the oath. Ellis, Reynolds, v. May (Mich.) 325

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Statutes; how far statutes will be regarded as having abrogated the maxim that one cannot profit by his own wrong:—divorce statutes; statutes of limitation; statutes against foreign corporations; statute compelling railroad company to carry baggage free; statutes avoiding auction sales when duty unpaid; statute of frauds; (a) rule of construction; (b) prevention of reduction to writing; (c) fraudulent omission of part of the agreement; (d) preventing a will; (e) the rule at law; statute providing for discharge in bankruptcy; statute imposing liability for negligence; statutes giving dower; estoppel generally; Nebraska decisions. 564

25 L. R. A.

STREET RAILWAYS. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 7, 9; CONTRACTS, 11; CRIMINAL LAW, 3; TRIAL, 5-7.

1. It is not necessarily negligent for a cable car to follow after a buggy which is seen upon the track, when running slowly enough so that it can be stopped in time to avoid a collision. Hicks v. Citizens' R. Co. (Mo.) 508

2. The presumption that a person seen on a street-car track will leave it before a street car reaches him cannot be indulged in when a child of tender years is seen on the track. Wallace v. City & S. R. Co. (Or.) 663

3. The law demands greater vigilance and care in running an electric street-car over a public street-crossing which is much frequented by children going to and returning from school, at a time when they may reasonably be expected to be using the crossing, than is demanded at other places. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Street railways; duty imposed on street-railroad companies to avoid injuring children on the track:—(I.) care required of employes; (a) lookout; (b) speed; (II.) negligence defined; (a) lookout; (b) speed; (III.) negligence a question for the jury; (a) lookout; (b) speed. 663

Injuries by street-car collision with vehicles or horses:—horses or vehicles caught in dangerous places; injuries at street crossings; crossing the track at places other than streets; injury received in turning out; lookout; right of way. 508

STRIKE. See CONSPIRACY, 2; INJUNCTION, 7, 8, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

SUCCESSION TAX. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 14.

TAXES. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 14.

1. A statute commissioning a township board of education to levy a tax to pay a claim for which no legal or moral obligation exists is unconstitutional. Marion Twp. Bd. of Edu. v. State, Lindsey (Ohio) 770

2. A state cannot tax or regulate interstate commerce, or make the payment of a tax or the taking out of a license a condition precedent to carrying interstate or foreign commerce. Osborne v. State (Fla.) 120

3. The Federal Constitution will not invalidate a state tax imposed upon domestic corporations generally because it incidentally affects one that, under state authority, is engaging in interstate commerce. State, Lumberville Delaware Bridge Co. v. State Bd. of Assessors (N. J. Sup.) 134

4. A yearly license fee may be exacted by the state from which the right is derived, without reference to the nature of the business a corporation may be authorized to carry on, and is constitutional, even as against a domestic corporation created for the purpose of engaging in commerce with an adjoining state. Id.

5. The right of corporate existence is, in its nature, indivisible; and the fee therefor must necessarily be an entirety, no matter where the property of the company is situated or how its capital is invested or employed. State, Lumberville Delaware Bridge Co. v. State Bd. of Assessors (N. J. Sup.) 184

Succession tax.

6. A tax upon the right or privilege of taking property by will or descent under the law of the state is an excise or duty, and not a tax on property. State v. Hamlin (Me.) 682

7. A succession duty or tax on the transmission of decedents' estates is not within the scope of Me. Const. art. 9, §§ 7, 8, providing for the valuation of property and that it shall be "apportioned and assessed equally, according to the value thereof," as these sections contemplate only the general, constantly occurring assessment upon the same property, and do not include occasional exceptional and special subjects and modes of taxation. Id.

8. The constitutional requirement of uniformity is satisfied by a tax on the transmission of property by will or descent to strangers and collaterals, when it is uniform in its rate as to the entire class affected, although other classes or persons are exempted from the tax. Id.

9. The statute in force at a person's death governs the decision as to a collateral inheritance tax on his estate. Re Roosevelt's Estate (N. Y.) 695

10. A contingency affecting the value of a vested remainder under a will so long as it continues will prevent the charge of a collateral inheritance tax upon the remainder. Id.

11. Life annuities contingent on survivorship are not subject to a collateral inheritance tax until they vest by the termination of the life on which they are contingent. Id.

12. Each beneficiary is entitled to receive $500 free from tax, under a statute providing that all property which shall pass by will or the interstate laws, and any grantee under a conveyance to take effect after death of the grantor, shall be liable to a tax upon its value above $500. State v. Hamlin (Me.) 682

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Taxes; validity of statute ordering. 772

On franchise of corporations engaged in interstate commerce. 135

Succession tax on contingent estate. 696

TELEGRAPHS. See also EMINENT DOMAIN, 6.

The liability of a telegraph company for failure to send a message is not defeated by stipulations against liability beyond the sum paid for sending unless the message is repeated, or against liability in any case unless claim is presented within sixty days after filing the message for transmission, as such conditions are either inapplicable or unreasonable as applied to such a case. Francis v. Western U. Telog. Co. (Minn.) 406

TELEPHONES. See also EMINENT DOMAIN, 6.

TEST. See CONTRACTS, 1.

THEATRES. See INFANTS, 1. 25 L.R. A.

TIMBER. See also DAMAGES, 3, 4.

The sale of standing timber by a written instrument not acknowledged or recorded as a deed amounts only to an executory contract or revokable license, which is revoked by a subsequent conveyance of the land to another person. Fish v. Capwell (R. I.) 159

TOLLS. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 11, 12.

TRADEMARK.

1. Uninterrupted and innocent use without question for five years of the local geographical name "Blackstone," as the name of cigars, will not be judicially interfered with as an infringement in favor of one who may have first used the name for cigars, but whose use of it on cigars offered for sale has been intermittent with long lapses. Levy v. Waitt (C. C. App. 1st C.) 190

2. As against innocent parties who have through a period of years built up an extensive business in goods bearing a certain name, the fundamental basis of a right of action for violation of a trademark in the use of such name is a prior appropriation of the particular mark by occupying the market so that the public has been or will be defrauded by allowing another to use it; and the mere fact of a prior discovery or selection of the name is insufficient. Id.

TRADENAME. See also EQUITY, 1.

A contract by the owner of a ranch called "Millbrae," on division of business with a partner in the milk business who had no interest in the real estate, to furnish the latter a supply of milk from that ranch daily for at least one year, does not convey the exclusive right to the use of the name "Millbrae" in the milk business, so as to prevent the owner of the ranch from using the name after the other party has ceased to buy milk from that ranch. Millbrae Co. v. Taylor (Cal.) 193

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Tradename; protection of; sale of; infringement. 193

TRADE UNION. See CONSPIRACY, 3; INFUNCTION, 5.

TRAIN DISPATCHER. See MASTER AND SERVANT, 11-13.

TRIAL. See also CARRIERS, 11; REFERENCE, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

1. The relator in a quo warranto case to test title to an office has the opening and closing. Ellis, Reynolds, v. May (Mich.) 325

2. On a motion for a nonsuit, every intendment and every fair and legitimate inference which can arise from the evidence must be made in favor of the plaintiff, and the court must assume those facts as true which the jury could properly find under the evidence. Wallace v. City & S. R. Co. (Or.) 663

Questions of law or fact.

3. The question of negligence in leaving uninsulated joints of electric-light wires within 12 or 15 inches of a frame up which persons are required to go in performance of duties with respect to other electric wires is a question for the jury. Illingworth v. Boston Electric-Light Co. (Mass.) 552

4. The negligence of a lineman in going up a frame to which are attached electric-light wires, as well as those which he is looking after, is a question for the jury, where his piers catch on a wire, and in endeavoring to free them his hand comes in contact with uninsulated joints of electric-light wires within 12 or 15 inches of the frame. Id.

5. Whether a cable car was run closer to a buggy on the track than was prudent, and whether there was negligence in failing to stop it to allow the buggy to leave the track, are questions for the jury. Hicks v. Citizens' R. Co. (Mo.) 505

6. Whether a person driving on a street-car track could have left it more expeditiously than he did, and by so doing have avoided an injury received from the car, is a question for the jury. Id.

7. It is for the jury to judge whether the failure of a school child to look or listen before attempting to cross a street-car track shows a want of that degree of care which could reasonably have been expected of such a child. Wallace v. City & S. R. Co. (Or.) 668

8. Whether or not the unevenness of the ground at a point used by passengers in alighting from a car is such as to constitute negligence on the part of the carrier is a question for the jury. Pool v. Consolidated Street R. Co. (Mich.) 744

Instructions.

9. An instruction that a railroad engineer assumed the danger of a defective fence, if it was known to him "as well as to the company," is misleading, if there was no proof of his actual knowledge, since it might imply an obligation on his part to inspect and ascertain such defects. Dickson v. Omaha & St. L. R. Co. (Mo.) 820

10. An instruction that the master is liable for negligence in employing unfit trainmen, if an injury results from the incompetence of a brakeman, is erroneous as it is not limited to a case of negligence in the employment of the brakeman. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Hoover (Md.) 710

11. An instruction that the jury may consider, in estimating plaintiff's damages resulting from an injury, the past and prospective expenses of his sickness, is erroneous where the amount of the past expenses is not shown. Little Rock & M. R. Co. v. Barry, (Ark.) 886

12. A defendant is entitled to have its theory of the case presented to the jury in specific instructions, if such theory is supported by evidence and the instructions are properly requested. Pool v. Consolidated Street R. Co. (Mich.) 744

TROVER.

1. The title to the property is not transferred by the entry of judgment in favor of the plaintiff in trover, but remains in him until he has received actual satisfaction. Miller v. Hyde (Mass.) 42

2. The true owner is entitled to regain possession of a log cut and removed from his land by a good-faith trespasser, either by recapture or by any other remedy provided by law, and whatever additional value may have been imparted to it by transporting it to a better market, or by any improvement in its condition, short of actual alteration of species. Gaskins v. Davis (N. C.) 818

TRUSTS. See also BANKS, 7-9.

Certificates representing a pro rata interest in trust property, whether the trust is a technical statutory one or not, on which there is a blank form for transfer and a provision for issuing a new certificate to an assignee, are not, on a bona fide sale thereof, subject to any lien for expenses of litigation, beyond taxable costs, incurred by the trustees in successfully defending a suit by the owner, who has paid the judgment for costs before making transfer. Cassagne v. Marvin (N. Y.) 670

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trust; right to transfer certificates of. 671

VACCINATION. See also SCHOOLS, 4.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Vaccination; by compulsion. 152

VILLAGES. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 1, 2.

VOLUNTEERS. See MASTER AND SERVANT, 4.

VOTERS AND ELECTIONS. See also ATTAINDER; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 4; EQUITY, 2; HIGHWAYS, 1; INJUNCTION, 2; SCHOOLS, 1; STATUTES, 6.

1. All persons who are within the class designated by the constitution are entitled to vote for all officers elective by the people, whether the offices to be filled be created by the constitution or by legislation; and such class of voters cannot be diminished or enlarged by the legislature. State, Allison, v. Blake (N. J. Sup.) 480

2. It is not an unreasonable restriction of the right to vote to require an oath that a voter is unable to read English, before allowing another to mark his ballot on the ground of such inability. Ellis, Reynolds, v. May (Mich.) 825

3. Unidentified illegal votes should be taken away from the total vote proportionately according to the entire vote returned for each candidate. Id.

4. Deputy United States marshals have no right to mark ballots, or to see them marked, or to know for whom the electors are voting at a congressional election in a city having a secret ballot. Id.

5. The use, by mistake, of small ballots printed on colored paper, furnished to local officers in a separate package, instead of using the regular ballots printed on white paper, will not prevent the counting of the ballots cast, where the election was otherwise regular and all the voters of the township in which the mistake was made, without distinction of party, used the colored ballots. Boyd v. Mills (Kan.) 486

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Voters and elections; how far the right to vote is absolute:—constitutional right of suffrage; (a) as affected by acts of congress; (b) registration; (c) tax or property qualifications; (d) soldiers voting; (e) test oaths and disqualification for crime; (f) ballots and primaries; (g) other statutory conditions, restrictions, and qualifications. 480

Disfranchisement; conditions of voting. 487

Inhabitants of public institutions. 399

Statute as to marking ballots. 825

WASTE.

The unlawful removal of petroleum from the ground constitutes waste, which may be enjoined in a proper action. Williams v. Jones (W. Va.) 222

WATERS. See also EMINENT DOMAIN, 7; ICE; RAILROADS, 11, 12.

1. A riparian proprietor has no right to erect a levee or artificial bank along the margin of a stream, which will cause superabundant water in times of ordinary floods to flow upon the lands of the opposite riparian proprietor. Cairo, V. & C. R. Co. v. Brevoort (C. C. D. Ind.) 527

2. The flow of a river when swollen beyond the low-water mark of the dry seasons by the ordinary rains which fall in wet seasons, or by the melting of snows, does not constitute surface water which may be turned by embankments. Id.

3. The relative rights of shore owners on a small inland lake navigable for steamers, which is so large that the lines of the sections or subdivisions of the tracts held by such owners will, if extended, not include the whole of the lake, are to be determined without reference to the extension of such lines, but by the principles governing the rights of riparian proprietors, depending upon their frontage and the form, length, and breadth of the lake. Grand Rapids Ice & C. Co. v. South Grand Rapids Ice & C. Co. (Mich.) 815

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Waters; what is surface water:—distinguished from watercourse; (a) what is a water- 35 L. R. A.

course; (b) how far channel necessary or sufficient; (c) source of supply; (d) source and channel; (e) permanence of flow; (f) water which has joined a watercourse; distinguished from basins or marshes; definition of surface water; question for the jury; water overflowing river banks; (a) the right to build levees; (b) cases holding flood water to be surface water. 527

Relative rights in case of flowage. 499

Riparian rights in inland lakes. 815

WILLS. See also EVIDENCE, 24; EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, 1.

The acceptance of a devise which is accompanied with a direction to pay legacies makes the devisee personally liable therefor. Case v. Hall (Ohio) 766

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Wills; proof of execution; signature by other person. 702

Charge of legacy on devisee. 767

Validity of bequests for masses; secret trusts to use for masses. 360

WITNESSES. See also LIBEL AND SLANDER; WRIT AND PROCESS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Evidence of statements of a witness for the state made to third persons in the absence of defendant is not admissible to corroborate his evidence against defendant's mere denial of its truthfulness. Connor v. People (Colo.) 341

WOMEN. See SCHOOLS, 1.

WRIT AND PROCESS. See also JUDGMENT, 4.

A plaintiff in an attachment suit who comes from another state to testify therein is not privileged from service of summons while there, in an action for maliciously bringing the attachment suit. Mullen v. Sanborn (Md.) 721

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Writ and process; rights and privileges of nonresident witnesses from suit:—(I.) reason of the privilege; (II.) nature of the privilege; (III.) the extent and limit of the privilege; (IV.) parties as witnesses; (V.) witnesses in general; (VI.) the effect of fraud and deceit; (VII.) enforcement of the privilege; (VIII.) the question of waiver; (IX.) the question of deviation; (X.) English doctrine. 721

L. R. A. CASES AS AUTHORITIES.

---

CASES IN 25 L. R. A.

---

25 L. R. A. 33, MITCHELL v. MARKER, 10 C. C. A. 306, 22 U. S. App. 325, 62 Fed. 139.

Liability for injury to elevator passenger.

Cited in Springer v. Ford, 189 Ill. 434, 52 L. R. A. 931, 82 Am. St. Rep. 464, 59 N. E. 953; Riland v. Hirshler, 7 Pa. Super. Ct. 386; Southern Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Lawson, 97 Tenn. 371, 56 Am. St. Rep. 804, 37 S. W. 86; McGrell Buffalo Office Bldg. Co. 90 Hun, 34, 35 N. Y. Supp. 599; Luckel v. Century Bldg. Co. 177 Mo. 628, 76 S. W. 1035,—holding relation between owner of elevator and passenger similar to that between common carrier and passenger; Gibson v. International Trust Co. 177 Mass. 103, 52 L. R. A. 929, 58 N. E. 278, discussing question of liability of owner of elevator as common carrier; Russo v. Morris Bldg. & Land Improv. Asso. 104 La. 438, 29 So. 46, holding elevator owner liable for injury to passenger thrown off balance by starting of elevator.

Cited in footnotes to Griffen v. Manice, 52 L. R. A. 922, which holds only reasonable care required as to safety of machinery and appliances for moving elevator; Gibson v. International Trust Co. 52 L. R. A. 928, which denies liability for injury to passenger from involuntary starting by conductor grasping mechanism to prevent falling; Malloy v. New York Real Estate Asso. 41 L. R. A. 487, which denies owner's liability for injury to one falling into elevator shaft, insufficient railing for which has been left out of place by third person; Olson v. Schultz, 36 L. R. A. 790, which holds lessor liable for defects in elevator which he covenants to keep in repair, without notice of them.

When objection to testimony available.

Cited in North Chicago Street R. Co. v. St. John, 29 C. C. A. 635, 57 U. S. App. 366, 85 Fed. 807; Davis v. United States, 46 C. C. A. 624, 107 Fed. 757; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Hellenthal, 31 C. C. A. 417, 60 U. S. App. 156, 88 Fed. 119,—holding objection to evidence not distinctly indicating grounds, of no avail on appeal; Supreme Council C. K. of A. v. Fidelity & C. Co. 11 C. C. A. 105, 22 U. S. App. 439, 63 Fed. 57, holding objection to clerical error in declaration as to termination of bond should have pointed out error to render it available on appeal.

25 L. R. A. 37, SPRINGFIELD, F. & M. INS. CO. v. HULL, 51 Ohio St. 270, 46 Am. St. Rep. 571, 37 N. E. 1116.

Effect of duress.

Cited in Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Kirkpatrick, 111 Ala. 467, 20 So. 651, holding threats of imprisonment in order to induce settlement for loss under insurance policy avoid the settlement; Heaton v. Norton County State Bank, 59 Kan. 292, 52 Pac. 876, holding that transfer of bank stock by woman under threat to arrest husband is under duress, and void; Ohio Nat. Bank v. Hopkins, 8 App. D. C. 153, holding test as to enforceability of demand connected with illegal transaction is whether aid from that transaction is needed to establish case; McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Miller, 54 Neb. 646, 74 N. W. 1061, holding contract to compound crime illegal; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Goodholm, 61 Kan. 763, 60 Pac. 1066, holding action for personal injuries may be brought without restoring small amount paid for fraudulent settlement.

Cited in footnotes to Weber v. Shay, 37 L. R. A. 230, which holds contract by attorneys to prevent finding of indictment against accused person void; Titus v. Rochester German Ins. Co. 28 L. R. A. 478, which holds fraudulent representations inducing compromise through mistake as to legal rights ground for relief; Jones v. Dannenberg Co. 52 L. R. A. 271, which holds void, in hands of bona fide purchaser, note given to stop criminal prosecution; United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. Charles, 57 L. R. A. 212, which holds void, note to reimburse surety on fidelity bond given on condition of not prosecuting principal; William Deering & Co. v. Cunningham, 54 L. R. A. 410, which holds void, contract to withdraw opposition to granting of pardon.

Liability for total loss under statute.

Cited in Hubbard v. Winshel, 6 Ohio N. P. 252, and Schild v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 6 Ohio N. P. 135, holding value of buildings destroyed is immaterial where statute fixes liability for total loss; Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. v. Russell, 65 Ohio St. 256, 56 L. R. A. 161, 62 N. E. 338, holding act fixing liability for total loss, a part of all fire policies issued since its passage.

Rescission of contract of settlement.

Cited in Munzer v. Stern, 105 Mich. 527, 29 L. R. A. 861, 55 Am. St. Rep. 468, 63 N. W. 513, holding vendor not required to return goods surrendered by fraudulent vendee upon compromise of claim before bringing action to recover remainder; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Goodholm, 61 Kan. 763, 60 Pac. 1066, holding person injured in railway collision not obliged to return amount received in fraudulent settlement before bringing action.

Distinguished in Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Burke, 69 Ohio St. 309, 100 Am. St. Rep. 666, 70 N. E. 74, holding action not maintainable on insurance policy, after settlement effected through fraudulent representations of insurance company, without return or tender of amount received.

25 L. R. A. 42, MILLER v. HYDE, 161 Mass. 472, 42 Am. St. Rep. 424, 37 N. E. 760.

Effect of proceedings against wrongdoer on title to property.

Cited in Ledbetter v. Embree, 12 Ind. App. 619, 40 N. E. 928, and Gilman v. Gilby Twp. 8 N. D. 632, 73 Am. St. Rep. 791, 80 N. W. 889, holding judgment for conversion does not operate to vest title in goods without payment; Briggs v. McDonald, 166 Mass. 41, 43 N. E. 1003, sustaining right of officer, who is obligee in bond of indemnity in attachment to recover thereon without paying judgment for conversion against him; Aldrich v. Hodges, 164 Mass. 571, 42 N. E. 107, holding pendency of action by consignor against officer for conversion of goods taken on execution against one of consignees no defense to another action by the consignees for conversion; Rogers v. Barnes, 169 Mass. 185, 38 L. R. A. 148, 47 N. E. 602, holding mortgagor of land can recover full damages for wrongful execution of power of sale by mortgagee even if he cannot redeem from purchaser; Irving v. Ford, 179 Mass. 222, 60 N. E. 491, holding freedom acquired by runaway slave left only right of action in owner.

Cited in footnote to Bolton Mines Co. v. Stokes, 31 L. R. A. 789, which holds bringing of replevin suit discontinued before judgment no bar to claim for payment from assets of purchaser's estate.

¶¶¶

25 L. R. A. 48, MOYER v. EAST SHORE TERMINAL CO. 41 S. C. 300, 44 Am. St. Rep. 709, 19 S. E. 651.

Effect of by-laws on those dealing with corporation.

Cited in footnotes to Wells v. Black, 37 L. R. A. 619, which holds by-law of savings bank declaring waiver of stockholders' liability, void; Ackenhausen v. People's Sav. Bank, 33 L. R. A. 408, which requires by-law to be brought to depositor's notice to relieve savings bank from liability for paying forged order to one presenting pass book; Clark v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 43 L. R. A. 390, which holds constitution and by-laws of mutual insurance association binding on members, whether known or not; McLendon v. Sovereign Camp, W. W. 52 L. R. A. 444, which holds reasonable delay in delivering benefit certificate gives no right to recover on certificate delivered after death of insured.

Cited in notes (49 L. R. A. 473) on time for which contracts of employment may be made on behalf of corporation by its officers, directors, and agents; (32 L. R. A. 481) on liability of members of mutual fire insurance companies.

25 L. R. A. 52, TEXAS & P. R. CO. v. GAY, 86 Tex. 571, 26 S. W. 599.

Jurisdiction of foreign court.

Cited in Story v. Jones, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 61, 40 S. W. 417, refusing to declare null, after twenty-five years, deed made by order of court of another state, of land in this state.

Jurisdiction over receiver of corporation.

Cited in Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Northern P. R. Co. 69 Fed. 878, entertaining jurisdiction in action by railway to remove receiver appointed by state court, on ground of mismanagement and fraud; Ocean S. S. Co. v. Wilder, 107 Ga. 224, 33 S. E. 179, holding validity of order appointing receiver for want of jurisdiction in appointment can be called in question in collateral proceeding.

Authority of receiver appointed by another jurisdiction.

Cited in Howard v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 11 App. D. C. 335, holding decree of state court appointing receiver has no effect in District of Columbia; Trinity & S. R. Co. v. Brown, 91 Tex. 677, 45 S. W. 793, holding appointment by United States court of receiver over railway in several states and extended to railway operating in district of another state valid.

Liability for acts of receiver.

Cited in San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Adams, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 200, 32 S. W. 733, holding collusion in appointment of receiver of railway interested in the appointment, must involve the corporation, to make it responsible for acts of receiver; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Bath, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 708, 44 S. W. 595, holding purchaser of railway sold under foreclosure while being operated by receiver liable for loss of cotton shipped over road after its sale and before delivery; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. McFadden Bros. 89 Tex. 145, 33 S. W. 853, holding that railway company taking charge of its property after discharge of receiver is not by that fact made liable for breach of his contracts or for his torts; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Gay, 88 Tex. 115, 30 S. W. 543, holding railway liable for negligently killing fireman while operated by receiver appointed by collusion; Pool v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 7 Tex. Civ. App. 338, 27 S. W. 744, holding receiver appointed in one state over property in another cannot make certificates preference lien on such property.

Cited in footnote to Bartlett v. Cicero Light, Heat & P. Co. 42 L. R. A. 715, which holds fund in hands of corporation on discharge of receiver liable for injuries caused by receiver's negligence.

Statute of limitations.

Cited in Prichard v. McCord-Collins Co. 30 Tex. Civ. App. 583, 71 S. W. 303, holding mistake in naming defendant corporation in original petition may take case out of statute; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Watson, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 556, 36 S. W. 290, holding statute of limitations bar to action originally brought against receiver of railway and by amendment brought against railway; Armstrong v. Elliott, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 46, 48 S. W. 605, holding defendant must ask for submission to jury the question of bar of statute of limitations.

Cited in footnotes to Smith v. Blachley, 53 L. R. A. 849, which holds running of limitation against action to recover back money not prevented by fraud unless investigation prevented by affirmative efforts; Mereness v. First Nat. Bank, 51 L. R. A. 410, which holds running of limitations on demand certificate of deposit not interrupted by bank's misrepresentations in denial of liability.

When instruction to jury required.

Cited in Texas & P. R. Co. v. Black, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 123, 57 S. W. 330, holding mere omission in court's charge must be corrected by asking for special instruction.

25 L. R. A. 67, STECK v. COLORADO FUEL & IRON CO. 142 N. Y. 236, 58 N. Y. S. R. 765, 37 N. E. 1.

Reference of cases triable to jury.

Explained in Crawford v. Canary, 28 App. Div. 136, 50 N. Y. Supp. 874, holding affidavits may be considered by court to determine whether action referable.

Cited in Irving v. Irving, 90 Hun, 423, 35 N. Y. Supp. 744, holding answer can be looked at to determine whether long account involved making it referable; Importers & T. Nat. Bank v. Werner, 54 App. Div. 440, 66 N. Y. Supp. 996, refusing compulsory reference where long account is not immediately but only collaterally involved; Fisher v. Haines, 62 App. Div. 69, 70 N. Y. Supp. 787, allowing reference where it will be necessary to prove debts, liens, claims, taxes, judgments, and other encumbrances, and earnings of railway; Allentown Rolling Mills v. Dwyer, 26 App. Div. 101, 49 N. Y. Supp. 624, holding fact that many items go to make up alleged damages for breach of contract do not necessarily render cause referable; Haig v. Boyle, 20 Misc. 155, 45 N. Y. Supp. 816, referring action on promissory note founded on numerous items where answer sets up counterclaim with numerous items also; Jones v. Lester, 77 App. Div. 175, 78 N. Y.

Supp. 1000, holding reference of action for accounting as between partners, improper when partnership denied by answer, until fact determined; Sartorius v. Gottlieb, 80 App. Div. 114, 80 N. Y. Supp. 159, holding reference improper where money judgment demanded on account for single purchase and sale of stock, and interest charges advanced by broker; Kennedy v. Horikoshi, 82 App. Div. 416, 81 N. Y. Supp. 827, holding reference improper where complaint based on contract put in issue by answer and counterclaim requiring examination of long account; Malone v. Saints Peter & Paul's Church, 172 N. Y. 282, 64 N. E. 961 (dissenting opinion), majority reversing 69 App. Div. 422, 74 N. Y. Supp. 1005, and holding compulsory reference may be ordered in action by administrator to enforce common-law liability, if apparent trial will involve examination and auditing of long account; Ames v. French, 83 App. Div. 455, 82 N. Y. Supp. 452, holding action on account stated referable, where answer alleged that account was false and fraudulent, and trial would involve examination of long account; Malone v. Saints Peter & Paul's Church, 69 App. Div. 422, 74 N. Y. Supp. 1005, holding action by executor or administrator to enforce common-law cause not referable; Betcher v. Grant County, 9 S. D. 84, 68 N. W. 163, questioning, without deciding, whether anything but pleadings may be examined to determine whether examination of long account involved.

Cited in footnote to Ex parte Keeler, 31 L. R. A. 678, which holds summary proceeding for restraining order against carrying on nuisance not violation of right to jury trial.

Criticized in Guaranty Trust Co. v. Robinson, 31 Misc. 281, 64 N. Y. Supp. 366, referring action which answer discloses will require examination of long account.

25 L. R. A. 79, WOOLSEY v. CHICAGO, B. & Q. R. CO. 39 Neb. 798, 58 N. W. 444.

Liability for injury to passenger.

Cited in footnotes to Purple v. Union P. R. Co. 57 L. R. A. 700, which holds one riding on train prohibited from carrying passengers, a trespasser; Mendenhall v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 61 L. R. A. 120, which holds one riding on platform of baggage car at direction of brakeman, to whom money paid, not a passenger; Chattanooga Rapid Transit Co. v. Venable, 51 L. R. A. 886, which holds night watchman at depot, getting on train to announce readiness to resume duty, a passenger; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Weaver, 50 L. R. A. 381, which holds station agent riding on train without paying fare, several hours after work ended, a passenger; Brashear v. Houston C. A. & N. R. Co. 28 L. R. A. 811, which sustains right of recovery of passenger going on platform with intent to get off, when thrown off by sudden increase of speed; Jones v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 41 L. R. A. 490, which denies right of one attempting to enter car of mixed train at distance from station, to recover for injury from sudden jolting of car in coupling.

Contributory negligence of employee.

Cited in Fremont, E. & M. Valley R. Co. v. French, 48 Neb. 641, 67 N. W. 472, holding question of plaintiff's negligence in stepping from train, when evidence conflicting as to its being stationary, is for jury.

Cited in footnote to Distler v. Long Island R. Co. 35 L. R. A. 762, which holds stepping from station platform on slowly moving train not negligence per se.

Directing verdict.

Cited in Elliott v. Carter White-Lead Co. 53 Neb. 461, 73 N. W. 948, sustaining directed verdict, where employee was injured by accidental dropping of lead pig on his foot, due to unforeseen cause; Shiverick v. R. J. Gunning Co. 58 Neb. 32, 78 N. W. 460, sustaining directed verdict for obliterating sign painted on surface of party wall not belonging to defendant; Rogers v. Marriott, 59 Neb. 776, 82 N. W. 21, sustaining directed verdict for defendant sued on wagering contract.

25 L. R. A. 81, MEUER v. CHICAGO, M. & ST. P. R. CO. 5 S. D. 568, 49 Am. St. Rep. 898, 59 N. W. 945.

Presumption as to laws of another state.

Cited in Commercial Bank v. Jackson, 9 S. D. 607, 70 N. W. 846, Reaffirming on second appeal 7 S. D. 141, 63 N. W. 548, presuming law of another state to be same as that of forum as to liability of married women on their contracts; Morris v. Hubbard, 10 S. D. 262, 72 N. W. 894, holding laws of another state presumed to be similar to those of forum as to incompetency of oral evidence of clerk to contradict recitals of an execution; Woolacott v. Case, 63 Kan. 36, 64 Pac. 965, holding statutes of another state respecting sale of intoxicating liquors presumed to be same as law of forum.

Cited in footnotes to First Nat. Bank v. National Broadway Bank, 42 L. R. A. 140, which denies presumption that statutory restrictions on alienation of interests of cestui que trust are law of other state; Aslanian v. Dostumian, 47 L. R. A. 495, which denies presumption that law merchant as to protest of draft prevails in Asiatic Turkey.

Conflict of laws respecting carrier's contracts.

Cited in Southern R. Co. v. Harrison, 119 Ala. 545, 43 L. R. A. 387, 72 Am. St. Rep. 936, 24 So. 552, holding law of state where shipping contract made immaterial, when schedule of freight rates approved by Interstate Commerce Law have been published.

Cited in note (63 L. R. A. 527) on conflict of laws as to carrier's contracts.

Contracts exempting carrier from liability.

Cited in Heumphreus v. Fremont, E. & M. Valley R. Co. 8 S. D. 112, 65 N. W. 466, holding fact that person in charge had ridden in car with stock no evidence of waiver of stipulation to ride in caboose only.

Cited in footnotes to Crary v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 59 L. R. A. 815, which requires proof of negligence causing injury to passenger using excursion ticket by which passenger assumes risk of accident; Ullman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 56 L. R. A. 246, which sustains carrier's right to secure entire exemption from liability as insurer for loss not due to negligence or misfeasance; Payne v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. 56 L. R. A. 472, which sustains stipulation in pass releasing carrier from liability for negligence; Mears v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 56 L. R. A. 884, which authorizes carrier to stipulate for exemption from liability for wet; Tecumseh Mills v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 49 L. R. A. 557, which holds prohibition against carriers limiting liability inapplicable to contract by domestic corporation in other state for transportation entirely outside of state; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Beebe, 43 L. R. A. 210, which denies negligence of stock owner in remaining in stock car on train starting while he is attending to stock.

25 L. R. A. 87, QUERK v. MULLER, 14 Mont. 467, 43 Am. St. Rep. 647, 36 Pac. 1077.

Validity of contracts in relation to testimony.

Cited in Young v. Thomson, 14 Colo. App. 315, 59 Pac. 1030, holding contract to suppress evidence, against public policy.

Distinguished in Casserleigh v. Wood, 14 Colo. App. 279, 59 Pac. 1024, holding agreement to furnish evidence already procured, and necessary to establish claim, not against public policy.

25 L. R. A. 90, YALE GAS STOVE CO. v. WILCOX, 64 Conn. 101, 42 Am. St. Rep. 159, 29 Atl. 303.

Liability of promoters.

Cited in Hambleton v. Rhind, 84 Md. 488, 40 L. R. A. 231, 36 Atl. 597; Woodbury Heights Land Co. v. Loudenslager, 55 N. J. Eq. 92, 35 Atl. 436; Goodwin v. Wilbur, 104 Ill. App. 52,—holding that one who represents prospective purchaser of property, procures subscriptions to proposed corporation, gets up prospectus, does everything to start enterprise, is a promoter bound to reveal facts to intending subscribers; Seehorn v. Hall, 130 Mo. 261, 51 Am. St. Rep. 562, 32 S. W. 643, holding person associating with others to purchase property must account to others for any sum he received as commission unknown to them; Hayward v. Leeson, 176 Mass. 318, 49 L. R. A. 732, footnote p. 725, 57 N. E. 656, holding promoters of corporation liable to account for net profits received by them where they have had issued to them one third of capital stock without informing intending subscribers; Forest Land Co. v. Bjorkquist, 110 Wis. 552, 86 N. W. 183, refusing to enjoin action to enforce judgment for deficiency on foreclosure against stockholders of corporation which had purchased land of one employing agent to sell who had promoted company; Hutchinson v. Simpson, 92 App. Div. 424, 87 N. Y. Supp. 369 (dissenting opinion), majority holding stock subscription contract with promoters holding options on property, does not give corporation right of action to compel promoters to account for secret profit; Yeiser v. United States Board & Paper Co. 52 L. R. A. 729, footnote p. 724, 46 C. C. A. 576, 107 Fed. 348, sustaining right of corporation to secure cancelation of stock paid for out of secret profits, by subscribers, from sale of property to corporation.

Cited in footnotes to Milwaukee Cold Storage Co. v. Dexter, 40 L. R. A. 837, which denies promoter's liability for profit on transferring to corporation land purchased before formation of corporation commenced; Shields v. Clifton Hill Land Co. 26 L. R. A. 509, which holds no vested right of creditors to whom corporators had been personally liable violated by validating corporate charter; Hooper v. Central Trust Co. 29 L. R. A. 262, which denies enforcement of mortgage received by promoters on corporate property; St. Johns Mfg. Co. v. Munger, 29 L. R. A. 63, which holds fraud of promoters in inducing subscription no defense to assessment on stock.

Distinguished in Tompkins v. Sperry, 96 Md. 582, 54 Atl. 254, holding neither corporation nor its receiver has right of action against shareholders selling shares under false representations as to value of property.

25 L. R. A. 106, BLAKESLEE v. CARROLL, 64 Conn. 223, 29 Atl. 473.

Privilege of witness.

Cited in Dennehy v. O'Connell, 66 Conn. 181, 33 Atl. 920, holding petition to board of police commissioners maliciously charging officers with perjury, and requesting their removal, not privileged communication.

Cited in footnotes to Cooley v. Galyon, 60 L. R. A. 139, which holds words maliciously spoken by witness in judicial proceeding of stranger, absolutely privileged, if pertinent and responsive; Kubricht v. State, 58 L. R. A. 959, which holds clergyman entering on baptismal record, as reputed father of bastard child, name of person known to have been acquitted, guilty of libel; Shinglemeyer v. Wright, 50 L. R. A. 129, which holds information given to detectives as to larceny with reason for suspecting certain person as thief privileged.

25 L. R. A. 110, Re SIMS, 54 Kan. 1, 45 Am. St. Rep. 261, 37 Pac. 135.

Contempts.

Cited in Re Davis, 58 Kan. 377, 49 Pac. 160, holding committee of legislature investigating bribery charges cannot imprison witness for refusal to testify; Cook v. Wyatt, 60 Kan. 538, 57 Pac. 130, holding sheriff cannot appeal from discharge from illegal imprisonment of witness committed for contempt; Sharp v. State, 102 Tenn. 12, 43 L. R. A. 789, 73 Am. St. Rep. 851, 49 S. W. 752, holding pardoning power of governor extends to cases of contempt; Re Huron, 58 Kan. 159, 36 L. R. A. 825, 62 Am. St. Rep. 614, 48 Pac. 574 (dissenting opinion), majority holding notary public cannot punish for contempt.

Cited in footnote to Re Clark, 28 L. R. A. 242, which upholds right to summarily enforce answer by imprisoning witness.

Distinguished in Re Siebert, 61 Kan. 113, 58 Pac. 971, upholding statute permitting clerk of court to issue warrants of arrest and admit to bail during court vacation.

Delegation of power.

Cited in Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Myatt, 98 Fed. 350, holding statute conferring legislative as well as judicial functions on state court of visitation, unconstitutional; State ex rel. Godard v. Johnson, 61 Kan. 812, 49 L. R. A. 666, 60 Pac. 1068, holding all governmental powers cannot be delegated to single tribunal.

25 L. R. A. 114, STATE ex rel. AMBLER v. HOCKER, 34 Fla. 25, 15 So. 581.

Disqualification of one with judicial power.

Cited in Findley v. Smith, 42 W. Va. 305, 26 S. E. 370, limiting extent of power of disqualified judge to mere formal orders necessary to forward to proper tribunal.

Cited in footnotes to Jamieson v. Wiggin, 46 L. R. A. 317, which holds one not an attorney not eligible as judge; First Nat. Bank v. McGuire, 47 L. R. A. 413, which holds judge disqualified to try case in which plaintiff is corporation of which his wife is a shareholder; State ex rel. Barnard v. Board of Education, 40 L. R. A. 317, which holds school director disqualified to try charges against school superintendent towards whom he has personal enmity; State ex rel. Getchel v. Bradish, 37 L. R. A. 289, which holds disqualification of one member of town board to sit on rehearing for revocation of license makes revocation invalid.

Cited in note (31 L. R. A. 465) on competency of judge as witness in cause on trial before him.

25 L. R. A. 120, OSBORNE v. STATE, 33 Fla. 162, 39 Am. St. Rep. 99, 14 So. 588.

Taxation of corporate business.

Cited in Knoxville & O. R. Co. v. Harris, 99 Tenn. 712, 53 L. R. A. 931, 43 S. W. 115, holding tax imposed on business of railroad done within state valid; State v. Rocky Mountain Bell Teleph. Co. 27 Mont. 402, 71 Pac. 311, upholding validity of state statute imposing license tax upon each telephone used in local or state business.

Cited in footnotes to State v. State Assessors, 25 L. R. A. 134, which upholds state tax on domestic corporations generally, although incidentally affecting corporation engaged in interstate commerce; Littlefield v. State, 28 L. R. A. 588, which limits power to license sales of milk to regulation, and not raising of revenue.

Cited in notes (57 L. R. A. 63, 92) on taxation of corporate franchises in the United States; (60 L. R. A. 650, 679, 688) on corporate taxation and the commerce clause; (30 L. R. A. 419, 432, 433) on limit of amount of license fees.

Distinguished in State ex rel. Donovan v. District Court, 27 Mont. 424, 71 Pac. 401, holding occupation tax on general business of express company invalid, as regulation of interstate commerce.

25 L. R. A. 134, STATE, LUMBERVILLE DELAWARE BRIDGE CO., PROSECUTORS, v. STATE ASSESSORS, 55 N. J. L. 529, 26 Atl. 711.

Corporate taxation.

Cited in Knoxville & O. R. Co. v. Harris, 99 Tenn. 712, 53 L. R. A. 931, 43 S. W. 115, upholding tax laid on business of railroad done within state; State, Marsden Co., Prosecutor, v. State Assessors, 61 N. J. L. 463, 39 Atl. 638, holding tax laid on corporation, a license, and not property tax, and unaffected by fact that capital in part invested in patent rights.

Cited in notes (60 L. R. A. 675, 677) on corporate taxation and the commerce clause; (60 L. R. A. 339) on constitutional equality in the United States in relation to corporate taxation; (57 L. R. A. 35, 79, 80) on taxation of corporate franchises in the United States.

25 L. R. A. 139, CHAMBERLAIN v. NORTH EASTERN R. CO. 41 S. C. 399, 44 Am. St. Rep. 717, 19 S. E. 743, 996.

Title to marsh land.

Cited in Chisolm v. Caines, 67 Fed. 290, holding marsh lands in harbor and bays subject to grant by state to private parties.

Corporate rights to land.

Cited in footnotes to Wilson v. Leary, 38 L. R. A. 240, which holds resulting trust in favor of grantor not created by conveyance in fee to corporation with limited existence; Gurney v. Minneapolis Union Elevator Co. 30 L. R. A. 534, which holds erection of public warehouse on railroad land not abandonment of easement; Morrison v. St. Paul & N. P. R. Co. 30 L. R. A. 546, which holds lease of railroad for 999 years, not a sale.

25 L. R. A. 143, FLETCHER v. TUTTLE, 151 Ill. 41, 42 Am. St. Rep. 220, 37 N. E. 683.

Equity jurisdiction over political rights.

Cited in Morgan v. Nunn, 84 Fed. 554, refusing to enjoin removal of general clerk in office of internal revenue collector; Green v. Mills, 30 L. R. A. 94, footnote p. 90, 16 C. C. A. 523, 25 U. S. App. 383, 69 Fed. 858, refusing to enjoin performance of duties by supervisor of registration because right to vote might be interfered with; Marshall v. Illinois State Reformatory, 103 Ill. App. 70, denying jurisdiction of equity to restrain removal of party from office; Taylor v. Kercheval, 82 Fed. 500, refusing to restrain United States marshal from removing deputy; State ex rel. McCaffery v. Aloe, 152 Mo. 480, 47 L. R. A. 398, footnote p. 393, 54 S. W. 494, holding that person must go to court of law to obtain purely political rights; Weaver v. Toney, 107 Ky. 434, 50 L. R. A. 109, footnote p. 105, 54 S. W. 732, refusing mandatory injunction to enforce right to have inspector at polls, appointed by executive committee of political party; People ex rel. Malley v. Barrett, 203 Ill. 104, 96 Am. St. Rep. 296, 67 N. E. 742, holding chancery without jurisdiction to enjoin election board from producing, counting, and canvassing ballots pursuant to subpoena of proper tribunal; Anthony v. Burrow, 129 Fed. 790, holding equity without jurisdiction to enjoin issuance by state officers charged with duty, of certificate of nomination to candidate for Congress.

Cited in footnotes to State ex rel. Taylor v. Lord, 31 L. R. A. 473, which denies power of court to interfere with location by governor of site for public institution; Denny v. State, 31 L. R. A. 726, which denies right to create double districts so as to give counties having less than population for one senator or representative a voice in electing more than one; Davis v. Hambrick, 51 L. R. A. 671, which holds decision of state central committee between bodies claiming to be executive committee of county conclusive on courts; Phelps v. Piper, 33 L. R. A. 53, which holds question as to which faction of political party is true representative, political rather than judicial; Covington v. Buffett, 47 L. R. A. 622, which denies court's jurisdiction to determine existence of vacancy in office of senator; Fesler v. Brayton, 32 L. R. A. 578, which denies right to injunction against holding election under alleged unconstitutional statute; State ex rel. Cranmer v. Thorson, 33 L. R. A. 582, which denies right to enjoin certifying of proposed constitutional amendment.

Injunction in favor of state.

Cited in State ex rel. Taylor v. Lord, 28 Or. 508, 31 L. R. A. 476, 43 Pac. 471, holding state not exempt from rules of law applicable to individuals in asking injunction against public officers.

25 L. R. A. 149, ELLERBE v. FAUST, 119 Mo. 653, 25 S. W. 390.

Effect of by-laws on benefit society membership.

Cited in Loeffler v. Modern Woodmen, 100 Wis. 84, 75 N. W. 1012, holding member of benefit association bound by by-law which works forfeiture of his business, though adopted after he became member; Supreme Lodge K. of P. v. Trebbe, 179 Ill. 355, 70 Am. St. Rep. 120, 53 N. E. 730, holding member of benefit society amenable to suicide by-law adopted after he became member; Franta v. Bohemian Roman Catholic Central Union, 164 Mo. 314, 54 L. R. A. 726, 86 Am. St. Rep. 611, 63 S. W. 1100, holding fraternal benefit society may limit its membership to religious order and expel member for not observing rule of church and by-law of society; State ex rel. Schrempp v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 70 Mo. App. 467, holding benefit society not estopped to expel member for infraction of by-law because he was assessed for death losses after he was known to have infringed law.

Cited in note (46 L. R. A. 620) on charter restrictions on eligibility to become shareholder in corporation.

Distinguished in Sackberger v. National Grand Lodge I. O. T. L. 73 Mo. App. 42 (concurring opinion), as to power of benefit association to pass law affecting existing insurance of member without his assent.

Forfeiture of insurance contract.

Cited in Behling v. Northwestern Nat. L. Ins. Co. 117 Wis. 32, 93 N. W. 800, holding self-executing forfeiture clause in insurance contract, because of nonpayment of premium, enforceable.

25 L. R. A. 152, DUFFIELD v. WILLIAMSPORT SCHOOL DISTRICT, 162 Pa. 476, 29 Atl. 742.

Compulsory vaccination.

Cited in Morris v. Columbus, 102 Ga. 800, 42 L. R. A. 180, 66 Am. St. Rep. 243, 30 S. E. 850, sustaining compulsory vaccination within city limits when epidemic exists or is apprehended; Com. v. Pear, 183 Mass. 246, 66 N. E. 719, upholding constitutionality of statute imposing fine for violation of requirement of board of health that all inhabitants of city be vaccinated; Bissell v. Davison, 65 Conn. 192, 29 L. R. A. 254, footnote p. 251, 32 Atl. 348, upholding statute excluding unvaccinated children from public schools; Blue v. Beach, 155 Ind. 137, 50 L. R. A. 71, footnote p. 64, 80 Am. St. Rep. 195, 56 N. E. 89, holding local board of health may require vaccination as prerequisite to school attendance during threatened epidemic; Viemeister v. White, 88 App. Div. 51, 84 N. Y. Supp. 712, holding regulation excluding unvaccinated children from schools reasonable and constitutional, independent of specific menace of disease; Glover v. Board of Education, 14 S. D. 144, 84 N. W. 761, holding suspension of pupil, after reinstatement by court order, because it was then thought epidemic of smallpox threatened, not contempt of court; Mathews v. Kalamazoo Bd. of Edu. 127 Mich. 535, 54 L. R. A. 736, footnote p. 736, 86 N. W. 1036, denying right of school district to adopt continuing rule excluding all unvaccinated pupils when contagious disease not epidemic; Osborn v. Russell, 64 Kan. 509, 68 Pac. 60, holding statute excluding pupils infected with contagious disease from schools, no authority for exclusion until successfully vaccinated; Lawbaugh v. Board of Education, 66 Ill. App. 167, holding vaccination of pupils as qualification for admission to public schools reasonable regulation; Lyndall v. Board of Public Education, 25 Pa. Co. Ct. 647, Affirmed in 19 Pa. Super. Ct. 234, holding school directors may exclude teachers as well as pupils who have not been vaccinated; State ex rel. Freeman v. Zimmerman, 86 Minn. 358, 58 L. R. A. 80, footnote p. 78, 91 Am. St. Rep. 351, 90 N. W. 783; Gerhard v. Packer Twp. School District, 24 Pa. Co. Ct. 340, 9 Pa. Dist. R. 721, denying mandamus to compel admittance, to public school, of child without certificate of vaccination; Field v. Robinson, 198 Pa. 638, 48 Atl. 873, refusing mandamus to compel principal to admit unvaccinated pupils to public school; Nissley v. Hummelstown, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 734, 18 Pa. Co. Ct. 483, 2 Dauphin Co. Rep. 366, holding valid, requirement of certificate of successful vaccination as condition precedent to admission to public schools; State ex rel. Cox v. Board of Education, 21 Utah, 416, 60 Pac. 1013, holding reasonable option given pupils during epidemic to be vaccinated or stay away from school.

Cited in footnote to Re Smith, 28 L. R. A. 820, which denies authority to quarantine, for refusal to be vaccinated, one not shown to have been exposed to smallpox.

Cited in note (26 L. R. A. 728) on special powers and liabilities of municipalities in times of epidemic.

Distinguished in State ex rel. Adams v. Burdge, 95 Wis. 402, 37 L. R. A. 161, footnote p. 157, 60 Am. St. Rep. 123, 70 N. W. 347, and Potts v. Breen, 167 Ill. 77, 39 L. R. A. 155, footnote p. 152, 59 Am. St. Rep. 262, 47 N. E. 81, Affirming 60 Ill. App. 207, denying reasonableness of rule of state board of health, compelling vaccination as prerequisite to school attendance when epidemic is not prevailing or threatening.

Right to exclude child from school for parent's abuse of teacher.

Cited in Board of Education v. Purse, 101 Ga. 440, 41 L. R. A. 607, 65 Am. St. Rep. 312, 28 S. E. 896, holding board of education can exclude from school, children of parent abusing teacher in school during school hours.

25 L. R. A. 155, FORD v. FORSGARD, 87 Tex. 185, 27 S. W. 57.

Property exempt as homestead.

Cited in Brennan v. Fuller, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 511, 37 S. W. 641, holding business building, a portion of which occupied by owner as postoffice, a business homestead not subject to liens of his creditors; Smith v. Guckenheimer, 42 Fla. 49, 27 So. 900 (dissenting opinion), majority holding homestead exemption does not extend to improvements other than residence and business house of owner, and land on which situated.

25 L. R. A. 157, DOYLE v. FITCHBURG R. CO. 162 Mass. 66, 44 Am. St. Rep. 335, 37 N. E. 770.

Jurisdiction.

Cited in Boston & M. R. Co. v. Hurd, 56 L. R. A. 211, 47 C. C. A. 621, 108 Fed. 122, sustaining jurisdiction of Federal district court over action brought under statute of another state to recover for death by negligence.

When employee a passenger.

Cited in Simmons v. Oregon R. Co. 41 Or. 164, 69 Pac. 440, holding railway employee traveling gratuitously on his own business during lay-off, is passenger; Chattanooga Rapid Transit Co. v. Venable, 105 Tenn. 469, 51 L. R. A. 886, 58 S. W. 861, holding railroad employee carried from work as gratuity, a passenger; Dickinson v. West End Street R. Co. 177 Mass. 367, 52 L. R. A. 327, 83 Am. St. Rep. 284, 59 N. E. 60, holding street railway employee riding gratuitously while off duty a passenger; Doyle v. Fitchburg R. Co. 166 Mass. 494, 33 L. R. A. 846, footnote p. 844, 55 Am. St. Rep. 417, 44 N. E. 611, holding ticket given to employee, conceded to be passenger, not mere gratuity.

Cited in footnotes to McNulty v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 38 L. R. A. 376, which holds railroad employee working on bridge a passenger while riding home on train; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Weaver, 50 L. R. A. 381, which holds station agent riding on train without paying fare, several hours after work ended, a passenger.

Cited in note (31 L. R. A. 324) on railroad employees or officers as passengers

Who are fellow servants.

Cited in note (50 L. R. A. 462, 467) on what servants are deemed to be in same common employment, apart from statutes, where no questions as to vice principalship arise.

Distinguished in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Stuber, 54 L. R. A. 698, 48 C. C. A. 152, 108 Fed. 937, holding foreman of water supply on railroad traveling from station to station on pass in performance of duties, fellow servant of engineer; Dishon v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 126 Fed. 202, holding section hand caught between cars after working hours, fellow servant to employees operating cars.

Effect of settlement for wrongful act causing death.

Cited in Southern Bell Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Cassin, 111 Ga. 616, 50 L. R. A. 711, 36 S. E. 881, holding widow's right of action for wrongful act causing death of husband taken away by settlement made by husband before decease.

25 L. R. A. 159, FISH v. CAPWELL, 18 R. I. 667, 49 Am. St. Rep. 807, 29 Atl. 840.

Title to timber and logs.

Cited in footnotes to Yockey v. Norn, 26 L. R. A. 145, which holds title to timber does not pass until delivery on cars under unrecordable instrument requiring payment of balance when loaded on cars; Macomber v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. 32 L. R. A. 102, which holds title to logs not forfeited by failure to remove within time fixed by contract; Magnetic Ore Co. v. Marbury Lumber Co. 27 L. R. A. 434, which holds title of absolute grantee to timber not forfeited by failure to cut and remove within reasonable time.

25 L. R. A. 161, MATTHEWS v. ST. LOUIS & S. F. R. CO. 121 Mo. 298, 24 S. W. 591.

Absolute liability of railroads for loss of property.

Affirmed in 165 U. S. 1, 41 L. ed. 611, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 243, upholding statute making railroad company absolutely liable for property destroyed by fire.

Cited in Campbell v. Missouri P. R. Co. 121 Mo. 345, 25 L. R. A. 176, footnote p. 175, 42 Am. St. Rep. 530, 25 S. W. 936; Adams v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 138 Mo. 249, 28 S. W. 496; Choctaw O. & G. R. Co. v. Alexander, 7 Okla. 585, 52 Pac. 944; McFarland v. Missouri K. & T. R. Co. 94 Mo. App. 340, 68 S. W. 105; Blackmore v. Missouri P. R. Co. 162 Mo. 461, 62 S. W. 993; Walker Bros. v. Missouri P. R. Co. 68 Mo. App. 471,—upholding statute making railroad absolute insurer of property destroyed by it.

Cited in footnotes to Leavitt v. Canadian P. R. Co. 38 L. R. A. 152, which sustains statute limiting railroad's liability for fires to difference between amount of loss and amount of insurance; McCullem v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 49 L. R. A. 642, which sustains presumption of negligence from issuance of sparks from locomotive sufficient to kindle fire and destroy adjacent property; Johnson v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. 53 L. R. A. 744, which holds a railroad company liable for horse killed on unfenced track; Kirk v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 32 L. R. A. 416, which holds necessary use of salt to keep switches free from ice not render company liable for killing of cattle attracted thereby; Birmingham Mineral R. Co. v. Parsons, 27 L. R. A. 263, which holds invalid, act imposing absolute liability for stock killed on railroad track.

L. R. A. Au.—Vol. III.—49.

Contributory negligence.

Cited in Bowen v. Boston & A. R. Co. 179 Mass. 527, 61 N. E. 141; Wall v. Platt, 169 Mass. 405, 48 N. E. 270; Boston Excelsior Co. v. Bangor & A. R. Co. 93 Me. 65, 47 L. R. A. 85, footnote p. 82, 44 Atl. 138; Adams v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 138 Mo. 249, 28 S. W. 496; Walker Bros. v. Missouri P. R. Co. 68 Mo. App. 471,—holding under statute owner's negligence, short of fraud, no bar to recovery for loss by fire set by locomotive.

Cited in footnotes to Peter v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 46 L. R. A. 224, which holds contributory negligence no defense to railroad company's absolute liability for fires; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Zerneck, 55 L. R. A. 610, which sustains statute making carrier liable for injury to passengers not due to their criminal negligence or violation of express rule.

Cited in note (25 L. R. A. 572) on how far statutes will be regarded as having abrogated maxim that one cannot profit by his own wrong.

Abatement of damages.

Cited in Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Wabash R. Co. 74 Mo. App. 113, holding railroad cannot escape liability for loss by fire because owner first receives compensation from insurance company; Matthews v. Missouri P. R. Co. 142 Mo. 659, 44 S. W. 802, holding railroad cannot have damages for loss of barn by fire from its locomotive reduced by amount of insurance paid to owner; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Wabash R. Co. 74 Mo. App. 113, holding railroad liable to insurance company for damage by fire caused by it, where it has settled with owner after notice of insurance company's claim; Williams v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 123 Mo. 585, 27 S. W. 387, holding damages for personal injury cannot be abated by partial compensation from collateral source.

Liability for property not insurable.

Cited in Lumbermen's Mut. Ins. Co. v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 149 Mo. 173, 50 S. W. 281, and Adams v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 138 Mo. 249, 28 S. W. 496, holding damages for loss by fire by locomotive includes property not insurable.

Liability under insurance contract.

Cited in Wabash R. Co. v. Ordelheide, 88 Mo. App. 592, holding insurance contract in lease enforceable, although loss occasioned by negligence of assured.

25 L. R. A. 175, CAMPBELL v. MISSOURI P. R. CO. 121 Mo. 340, 42 Am. St. Rep. 530, 25 S. W. 936.

Construction of remedial statutes.

Cited in Cochran v. Thomas, 131 Mo. 273, 33 S. W. 6, holding remedial statute should be given such liberal construction as will advance remedy.

Cited in footnote to Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Zerneck, 55 L. R. A. 610, which sustains statute making carrier liable for injury to passengers not due to their criminal negligence or violation of express rule.

Liability of railroads for setting fires.

Cited in Blackmore v. Missouri P. R. Co. 162 Mo. 461, 62 S. W. 993; McFarland v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 90 Mo. App. 340, 68 S. W. 105; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Mathews, 165 U. S. 19, 41 L. ed. 618, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 243; Walker Bros. v. Missouri P. R. Co. 68 Mo. App. 471, upholding act making railway absolute insurer of property destroyed by its locomotives; Lumbermen's

Mut. Ins. Co. v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 149 Mo. 173, 50 S. W. 281, holding railroad liable for fire communicated to building not abutting its right of way.

Cited in footnotes to McCullen v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 49 L. R. A. 642, which sustains presumption of negligence from issuance of sparks from locomotive sufficient to kindle fire and destroy adjacent property; Peter v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 46 L. R. A. 224, which holds contributory negligence no defense to railroad company's absolute liability for fires.

Admissibility of evidence of other injury.

Cited in Matthews v. Missouri P. R. Co. 142 Mo. 657, 44 S. W. 802, admitting evidence of spark from an engine falling upon tent erected on site of barn subsequent to its destruction by fire; Dunning v. Maine C. R. Co. 91 Me. 101, 64 Am. St. Rep. 208, 39 Atl. 352, holding evidence of fires set by other locomotives at other places admissible on question whether any locomotive set the fire in question; Smart v. Kansas City, 91 Mo. App. 594, denying admissibility of evidence that other persons injured at point in sidewalk where accident occurred; Golden v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 84 Mo. App. 66, admitting evidence that particular engine set other fires on same trip; Lesser Cotton Co. v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 52 C. C. A. 99, 114 Fed. 137, and First Nat. Bank v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. 174 Ill. 42, 50 N. E. 1023, refusing to admit testimony that fires had been set by other engines when particular engine identified as setting fire in question.

Insurable interest.

Cited in Dean v. Charleston & W. Car R. Co. 55 S. C. 507, 33 S. E. 579, holding evidence that property destroyed by fire could not have been insured by railroad properly excluded.

Recovery notwithstanding allegations.

Cited in Fields v. Wabash R. Co. 80 Mo. App. 606; Sims v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 83 Mo. App. 250; Walker Bros. v. Missouri P. R. Co. 68 Mo. App. 474; Hartpence v. Rogers, 143 Mo. 633, 45 S. W. 650,—holding recovery not prevented because more was alleged in pleadings than was necessary to be proved; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Garrison, 66 Kan. 629, 72 Pac. 225 (dissenting opinion), majority holding allegation of negligence in use of engine from which fire escaped, not sufficient to support finding of negligence in use of defective spark arrester.

25 L. R. A. 178, RUHE v. BUCK, 124 Mo. 178, 46 Am. St. Rep. 439, 27 S. W. 412.

Conflict of laws.

Cited in F. B. Hauck Clothing Co. v. Sharpe, 83 Mo. App. 391, holding married woman's liability as accommodation maker of note governed by place of delivery; Robison v. Pease, 28 Ind. App. 611, 63 N. E. 479, holding married woman liable as surety on note executed in one state to make good default on bond on which she was surety in another state; Bowles v. Field, 78 Fed. 744, sustaining foreclosure of married woman's mortgage given to secure note with which she had taken up notes as surety though latter not valid in her domicile; Walling v. Christian & C. Grocery Co. 41 Fla. 489, 47 L. R. A. 612, footnote p. 608, 27 So. 46, holding law of one state as to married woman's contracts not applicable to conveyances of real property in another state; Smith v. Supreme Lodge, K. of P. 83 Mo. App. 522, holding contract of insurance made by benefit society with its member controlled by common law which prevails as to it in state where made.

Cited in footnotes to Freeman's Appeal, 37 L. R. A. 452, which holds guaranty by married woman invalid in state of residence not validated by delivery by agent in other state; Armstrong v. Best, 25 L. R. A. 188, which denies enforceability in North Carolina of contract by married woman, valid in other state where made; Thompson v. Taylor, 54 L. R. A. 585, which holds written promise of married woman, valid where made, enforceable in New Jersey, though void if made therein; Polson v. Stewart, 36 L. R. A. 771, which holds surrender by man of marital rights to land in other state in consideration of release of dower to land in same state governed by law of that state; Smith v. Ingram, 61 L. R. A. 878, which holds law of place where land located, governs as to privy examination of married woman; Williams v. Pope Mfg. Co. 50 L. R. A. 816, which sustains nonresident married woman's right to bring in own name, according to law of domicil, action for tort to her person; Gipps Brewing Co. v. De France, 28 L. R. A. 386, which holds agreement to return or pay for barrels, etc., in which beer shipped contrary to law, unenforceable.

Cited in note (57 L. R. A. 520, 521, 525) on conflict of laws as to capacity of married woman to contract.

Distinguished in Gates v. Tebbetts, 100 Mo. App. 596, 75 S. W. 169, upholding defense under foreign statute prohibiting action on notes for recovery of debt after foreclosure of mortgage.

25 L. R. A. 188, ARMSTRONG v. BEST, 112 N. C. 59, 34 Am. St. Rep. 473, 17 S. E. 14.

Conflict of laws.

Cited in Smith v. Ingram, 130 N. C. 104, 61 L. R. A. 881, 40 S. E. 984 (distinguished in dissenting opinion, p. 110, 61 L. R. A. 883), holding married woman's contract for conveyance of land in another state governed by law where land situated; Hanover Nat. Bank v. Howell, 118 N. C. 274, 23 S. E. 1005, holding contract of married woman valid when made can only be enforced at her domicil in another state if valid in that state; Brown v. Dalton, 105 Ky. 672, 88 Am. St. Rep. 325, 49 S. W. 443, refusing enforcement of wife's agreement to assume purchase-money note of husband, in consideration of conveyance of land situated in another state where contract valid; Robison v. Pease, 28 Ind. App. 611, 63 N. E. 479, holding defense of coverture under law of forum not available as defense to note given for default under bond enforceable in state where made; First Nat. Bank v. Shaw, 109 Tenn. 241, 59 L. R. A. 500, 97 Am. St. Rep. 840, 70 S. W. 807, holding note signed in Tennessee by married woman domiciled with husband in that state, but payable in Ohio, is contract of latter state; Young v. Hart, 101 Va. 484, 44 S. E. 703, holding contract of married woman valid where made and to be performed, will be enforced in manner provided by local laws; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Gardiner, 51 Neb. 78, 70 N. W. 508, holding limitation of carrier's liability under foreign statute unenforceable when against public policy.

Cited in note (57 L. R. A. 514, 518) on conflict of laws as to capacity of married woman to contract.

Distinguished in State v. Wernwag, 116 N. C. 1063, 28 L. R. A. 297, 47 Am. St. Rep. 873, 21 S. E. 683, holding dealer delivering meat on telephonic message to hotel within certain area affected by ordinance though place of business outside, liable to fine.

25 L. R. A. 190, LEVY v. WAITT, 10 C. C. A. 227, 21 U. S. App. 394, 61 Fed. 1008.

Exclusive use of trademark.

Cited in Atwater v. Castner, 32 C. C. A. 79, 50 U. S. App. 394, 88 Fed. 643, upholding preliminary injunction against infringement of geographical trade name where there was public acquiescence for twenty years and infringement enjoined by court of another circuit; Macmahan Pharmacal Co. v. Denver Chemical Mfg. Co. 51 C. C. A. 306, 113 Fed. 468, holding that common-law right to exclusive use of trademark depends upon such use as to identify goods in connection with which it is used, as those of particular manufacturer; Burt v. Tucker, 178 Mass. 501, 52 L. R. A. 115, footnote p. 112, 86 Am. St. Rep. 499, 59 N. E. 1111, holding that use of trademark may be resumed as against another who has acquired right to use it in good faith in interval of discontinuance; Heublein v. Adams, 125 Fed. 785, holding appropriation of word "club" applied to cocktails as trade name, shown by use that was long continued, notorious, and universally recognized.

Cited in footnotes to American Waltham Watch Co. v. United States Watch Co. 43 L. R. A. 826, which authorizes injunction against deceptive use of word "Waltham" by other manufacturer of watches at same place; Pillsbury-Washburn Flour Mills Co. v. Eagle, 41 L. R. A. 162, which authorizes injunction against use of geographical name on flour made elsewhere from wheat of different grade; Hoyt v. J. T. Lovett Co. 31 L. R. A. 44, which denies right to appropriate words "Green Mountain" as trademark.

25 L. R. A. 193, MILLBRAE CO. v. TAYLOR (Cal.) 37 Pac. 235.

25 L. R. A. 198, PALTROVITCH v. PHOENIX INS. CO. 143 N. Y. 73, 60 N. Y. S. R. 462, 37 N. E. 639.

Notice of loss under policy.

Cited in Matthews v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 154 N. Y. 457, 39 L. R. A. 436, 61 Am. St. Rep. 627, 48 N. E. 751, holding policy not void because of delay in notice of loss where fire occurred after death of insured and before appointment of administrator; Solomon v. Continental F. Ins. Co. 160 N. Y. 602, 46 L. R. A. 685, 73 Am. St. Rep. 707, 55 N. E. 279, holding service of notice of loss within reasonable time, if sent three days after actual knowledge by insured, though fifty days after fire; Smaldone v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 15 App. Div. 234, 44 N. Y. Supp. 201, holding insurance company estopped to deny liability when insured misled by agent as to procedure to prove loss; Partridge v. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. 13 App. Div. 526, 43 N. Y. Supp. 632, holding policy not canceled where local agent without returning premium sent to insured other policies to take its place, who received them day after fire; Messmer v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 24 App. Div. 246, 48 N. Y. Supp. 478, holding question of waiver of condition as to proof of loss should be submitted to jury when informal proof retained without objection; Davis v. Grand Rapids F. Ins. Co. 15 Misc. 265, 36

N. Y. Supp. 791, holding retention by company of proofs of loss for nearly a month without objection waiver of defects; Porter v. Traders' Ins. Co. 164 N. Y. 510, 52 L. R. A. 429, 58 N. E. 641, holding conditions and formalities for ascertaining extent of loss under policy, after loss has occurred, construed liberally in favor of insured; Poele v. Provident Fund Soc. 147 Ind. 552, 44 N. E. 661, holding notice by beneficiary within five days after coroner's finding of accidental death, though sixteen days after death, in time.

25 L. R. A. 200, ANDERSON v. GILL, 79 Md. 312, 47 Am. St. Rep. 402, 29 Atl. 527.

Liability of collecting bank to customer.

Cited in Kershaw v. Ladd, 34 Or. 381, 44 L. R. A. 239, 56 Pac. 402, holding receiving bank sending check same day by mail to drawee bank not negligent; Morris v. Eufaula Nat. Bank, 122 Ala. 592, 82 Am. St. Rep. 95, 25 So. 499, holding reasonable time to present check on bank in same place when it is drawn is till close of banking house in next secular day; Morris v. Eufaula Nat. Bank, 122 Ala. 591, 82 Am. St. Rep. 95, 25 So. 499, holding loss, brought about by failure of bank on which check drawn, falls on drawer of check, and not on collecting bank receiving it in payment of draft against accepting debtor; Comer v. Dufour, 95 Ga. 379, 30 L. R. A. 302, footnote p. 300, 51 Am. St. Rep. 89, 22 S. E. 543, holding first presentment of check for payment fixes rights of parties, and holder accepts check of drawee in lieu of money at his peril; Kirkham v. Bank of America, 26 App. Div. 121, 49 N. Y. Supp. 767, holding collecting bank bound to return draft to customer properly protested, or to pay him the money.

Cited in footnotes to First Nat. Bank v. Buckhannon Bank, 27 L. R. A. 332, which denies liability to drawer of worthless check by taking substituted check from drawee which is not presented with due diligence; Edminsten v. Herpelsheimer, 59 L. R. A. 934, which requires check to be presented not later than day after receipt to hold drawer; Pepperday v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 39 L. R. A. 529, which holds bank taking check on sale of stock for principal and crediting him with its amount liable if check proves worthless.

25 L. R. A. 207; KOFKA v. ROSICKY, 41 Neb. 328, 43 Am. St. Rep. 685, 59 N. W. 788.

Specific performance of oral contract to convey.

Cited in McCabe v. Healy, 138 Cal. 86, 70 Pac. 1008, enforcing trust against heirs of one persuading nephew to take charge of his business in consideration of promise to will him property; Wilson v. Heath, 23 Misc. 718, 53 N. Y. Supp. 166, holding oral promise to will all property to one consenting to be as daughter to promisor, if fully performed by promisee, enforceable against promisor's estate; Svanburg v. Fosseen, 75 Minn. 361, 43 L. R. A. 431, 74 Am. St. Rep. 490, 78 N. W. 4, decreeing specific performance of oral contract for conveyance of real estate in consideration of service not measurable in money; Owens v. McNally, 113 Cal. 449, 33 L. R. A. 372, footnote p. 369, 45 Pac. 710, refusing specific performance of contract between uncle and niece to leave her all his property at death, when promisor subsequently married woman who was ignorant of contract; Lothrop v. Marble, 12 S. D. 515, 76 Am. St. Rep. 626, 81 N. W. 885, enforcing agreement against estate of one promising to convey real estate in consideration of care during life, while suffering from disease; Lucas v. Lucas, 64 Neb. 192, 89 N. W. 769, decreeing specific performance where complete conveyance refused on account of misrepresentation as to account transferred by vendee as consideration; Davies v. Cheadle, 31 Wash. 173, 71 Pac. 728, quieting title in promisee in possession of land under testamentary oral agreement to will same, in consideration of services afterwards performed by promisee; Teske v. Dittberner, 65 Neb. 169, 101 Am. St. Rep. 614, 91 N. W. 181, charging grantee of promisor, under conveyance in violation of testamentary oral agreement, with trust in favor of promisee.

Cited in footnotes to Clancy v. Flusky, 52 L. R. A. 277, which authorizes specific performance of oral contract to convey land to son for taking care of father for life, as fully performed by son as possible, though father moved away before death; Bryson v. McShane, 49 L. R. A. 527, which holds specifically, enforceable executed oral contract to give entire property for support during life and burial after death; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Chicago & W. I. R. Co. 35 L. R. A. 167, which refuses to require payment of interest not provided for as condition of specific performance of contract.

Distinguished in Ferguson v. Herr, 64 Neb. 657, 90 N. W. 625, holding where agreement of adoption made, right of adopted child to inherit dependent upon terms of contract; Weeks v. Lund, 69 N. H. 83, 45 Atl. 249, holding performance by stranger of services susceptible of pecuniary estimation, in consideration of oral agreement to convey, not sufficient to take case out of statute of frauds.

25 L. R. A. 215, HEINBOKEL v. NATIONAL SAV. LOAN & BLDG. ASSO.
58 Minn. 340, 49 Am. St. Rep. 519, 59 N. W. 1050.

Building and loan associations; rights of withdrawing member.

Followed in Hoyt v. Interocean Bldg. Asso. 58 Minn. 345, 60 N. W. 678, without discussion.

Cited in Musial v. Kosciuszko Bldg. & L. Asso. 80 Ill. App. 466; Engelhardt v. Fifth Ward Permanent Dime Sav. & L. Asso. 148 N. Y. 288, 35 L. R. A. 303, 42 N. E. 710; Pawlick v. Homestead Loan Asso. 15 Misc. 431, 37 N. Y. Supp. 164; Domestic Bldg. Asso. v. Jourdain, 110 Ill. App. 200, — holding withdrawing member of loan association cannot bring action until funds in treasury applicable to payment of his claim; Daley v. People's Bldg. Loan & Sav. Asso. 172 Mass. 536, 52 N. E. 1090, holding provision of building association that shareholder entitled to receive par value of shares binds corporation only to extent of funds accumulated for that purpose; Denison v. Alpena Loan & Bldg. Asso. 117 Mich. 103, 75 N. W. 300, liability of withdrawing member for embezzlement by secretary cannot be litigated in action by member for amount due if necessary conditions exist for payment upon withdrawal notices; Andrews v. Roanoke Bldg. Asso. & Invest Co. 98 Va. 455, 49 L. R. A. 660, 36 S. E. 531, holding statute of limitations does not run against withdrawing member of building association until fund accumulated sufficient to meet his demands.

Cited in note (35 L. R. A. 301) on withdrawal from building and loan associations.

Association's right to alter by-laws.

Cited in Stilwell v. People's Bldg. Loan & Sav. Asso. 19 Utah, 267, 57 Pac. 14, holding membership in loan association subject to association's right to alter by-laws; Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Snyder, 98 Va. 719, 37 S. E. 293, holding building association may pass by-laws affecting remedies of its members after they have become members.

Members of association as creditors.

Cited in Cook v. Emmet Perpetual & Mut. Bldg. Asso. 90 Md. 291, 44 Atl. 1022, holding general creditors of loan association entitled to priority over withdrawing members in distribution of assets; Rabbitt v. Wilcoxon, 103 Iowa, 49, 38 L. R. A. 186, 64 Am. St. Rep. 152, 72 N. W. 306, holding shareholder of insolvent company giving notice of withdrawal, after withdrawal of entire amount permitted by by-laws, entitled to share only as general creditors; Re Youth's Temple of Honor, 73 Minn. 325, 76 N. W. 59, holding members of an endowment association undergoing dissolution are not creditors thereof.

Allegations necessary in actions by withdrawing member.

Cited in Huntington County Loan & Sav. Asso. v. Emerick, 23 Ind. App. 181, 55 N. E. 106, holding unnecessary, allegations of funds sufficient to meet claim of member; Stilwell v. People's Bldg. Loan & Sav. Asso. 19 Utah, 269, 57 Pac. 14, holding withdrawing member, in action against loan association, must allege and prove fund applicable to payment of his debt.

25 L. R. A. 217, LINN v. CHAMBERSBURG, 160 Pa. 511, 28 Atl. 842.

Power of municipality to maintain public service plants.

Cited in Mealey v. Hagerstown, 92 Md. 754, 48 Atl. 746, and Jacksonville Electric Light Co. v. Jacksonville, 36 Fla. 267, 30 L. R. A. 544, footnote p. 540, 51 Am. St. Rep. 24, 18 So. 677, holding city authorized to erect electric lighting plant for public and private use; O'Brien v. Erie City, 20 Pa. Co. Ct. 342, 7 Pa. Dist. R. 491, holding municipality may build conduit for electric wires; Mayo v. Washington, 122 N. C. 24, 40 L. R. A. 169, footnote p. 163, 29 S. E. 343 (dissenting opinion), majority holding that municipality cannot issue bonds for electric light plant without legislative authority.

Cited in footnote to Mitchell v. Negaunee, 38 L. R. A. 157, which sustains right of city to own electric light plant to furnish light to citizens.

Limitations upon municipal indebtedness.

Cited in Gaston v. Meadville Schools, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 550, 18 Pa. Co. Ct. 267, holding one claiming municipal indebtedness beyond constitutional limit must show it.

Cited in footnotes to South Bend v. Reynolds, 49 L. R. A. 795, which holds limitation of city debt not exceeded by contract for erection of city hall for which yearly rent to be paid, with option to purchase; Saleno v. Neosho, 27 L. R. A. 769, which holds contract by city to pay fixed price annually for water supply not a debt for aggregate amount; Kelly v. Minneapolis, 30 L. R. A. 281, which requires deduction of amount of sinking fund from total apparent debt to ascertain actual debt; McBean v. Fresno, 31 L. R. A. 794, which holds limitation of city indebtedness not violated by contract to pay annual sum for term of years if annual sum within limit; Indianapolis v. Wann, 31 L. R. A. 743, which holds contract for street lights for five years payable monthly void.

25 L. R. A. 222, WILLIAMSON v. JONES, 39 W. Va. 231, 19 S. E. 436.

Life tenant's rights in minerals, etc.

Cited in Williamson v. Jones, 43 W. Va. 565, 38 L. R. A. 697, footnote p.

694, 64 Am. St. Rep. 891, 27 S. E. 410, holding life tenant has no right to extract oil from land; Koen v. Bartlett, 41 W. Va. 566, 31 L. R. A. 130, footnote p. 128, 56 Am. St. Rep. 884, 23 S. E. 664, holding tenant of life estate has right to full enjoyment of land including oil and gas mines already opened or opened during life estate; Hook v. Garfield Coal Co. 112 Iowa, 219, 83 N. W. 963, holding that cotenant cannot use or sell coal found under entire tract where vein has not been already opened; Carter v. Tyler County Court, 45 W. Va. 810, 43 L. R. A. 726, footnote p. 725, 32 S. E. 216, holding prospective product of oil well cannot be taxed to lessee as personal property; Higgins Oil & Fuel Co. v. Snow, 51 C. C. A. 271, 113 Fed. 437, holding dowress in oil lands not bound by judgment in action to which she was not made party; Higgins Oil & Fuel Co. v. Snow, 51 C. C. A. 275, 113 Fed. 433, holding life tenant can work mines when already opened, but cannot open them; Wilson v. Youst, 43 W. Va. 839, 39 L. R. A. 296, 28 S. E. 781, holding court can direct sale of oil underlying land in possession of life tenant and apportion royalty among parties interested; Williamson v. Jones, 43 W. Va. 580, 38 L. R. A. 697, 64 Am. St. Rep. 891, 27 S. E. 410, holding equity has jurisdiction of suit by remainder man to enjoin removal of oil by life tenant; Haskell v. Sutton, 53 W. Va. 222, 44 S. E. 533 (dissenting opinion), majority holding equity will enjoin lessee from drilling wells and taking oil under void lease by widow.

Cited in footnotes to Marshall v. Mellon, 35 L. R. A. 816, which holds life tenant's right to operate for oil and gas limited to operations begun before life tenancy accrued; Gannon v. Peterson, 55 L. R. A. 701, which denies right of owners of expectancy to injunction against owner of determinable fee mining coal.

When oil and gas part of realty.

Cited in Wilson v. Youst, 43 W. Va. 835, 39 L. R. A. 296, 28 S. E. 781, and Haskell v. Sutton, 53 W. Va. 215, 44 S. E. 533, holding oil in crevices of rock is part of realty; Bettman v. Harness, 42 W. Va. 438, 36 L. R. A. 569, footnote p. 566, 26 S. E. 271, enjoining unlawful extraction of oil or gas from land, they being part of land; Lawson v. Kirchner, 50 W. Va. 347, 40 S. E. 344, holding lease of infant's land for oil and gas purposes is conditional contingent sale of oil and gas in place; Murray v. Allred, 100 Tenn. 115, 39 L. R. A. 252, footnote p. 249, 66 Am. St. Rep. 740, 43 S. W. 355, holding oil a mineral in reservation in deed of "all mines, minerals and metals in and under the land."

Cited in footnotes to Kelley v. Ohio Oil Co. 39 L. R. A. 765, which sustains right to drill oil well on own land near line of other person whose oil drawn out; Parish Fork Oil Co. v. Bridgewater Gas Co. 59 L. R. A. 566, which holds right to produce and take oil not vested in lessees by mere drilling of well and discovery of oil; Manufacturers' Gas & Oil Co. v. Indiana Natural Gas & Oil Co. 50 L. R. A. 768, which holds unlawful, pumping of natural gas to injury of other persons having wells supplied from same reservoir.

Cited in note (33 L. R. A. 847) on liability for rent on oil and gas lease.

Use of ex parte affidavits.

Cited in Shinn v. Board of Education, 39 W. Va. 509, 20 S. E. 604, discussing use of ex parte affidavits read without notice.

25 L. R. A. 238, NOBLE v. MITCHELL, 100 Ala. 519, 14 So. 581.

Divisibility of statute partly unconstitutional.

Affirmed in Noble v. Mitchell, 164 U. S. 369, 41 L. ed. 473, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110, holding decision of state court that unconstitutional provisions of statute are separable, is binding.

Cited in Spigener v. Rives, 104 Ala. 438, 16 So. 74, per Coleman, J., dissenting, holding constitutionality of particular sections of statute will not be determined, when separable from sections on which case based.

Actions against insurance agents.

Cited in Adler-Weinberger S. S. Co. v. Rothschild, 123 Fed. 149, holding compliance with provisions of policy as to proofs of loss not condition to right of action against agent acting for unlicensed company.

Cited in footnotes to Com. v. Reinæhl, 25 L. R. A. 247, which holds Guarantee Lloyds not a "company" within provision as to acting as agent for foreign company; State v. Stone, 25 L. R. A. 243, which holds agents of individuals within provision as to acting as insurance agent for principal without certificate of permission to do business.

Regulation of insurance.

Cited in Hoadley v. Purifoy, 107 Ala. 290, 30 L. R. A. 353, footnote p. 351, 18 So. 220, refusing mandamus to compel issuance of license to unincorporated foreign insurance company; Enterprise Lumber Co. v. Mundy, 62 N. J. L. 21, 55 L. R. A. 200, 42 Atl. 1063, holding valid a "Lloyds" contract of insurance; Daggs v. Orient Ins. Co. 136 Mo. 391, 35 L. R. A. 229, 38 S. W. 85, holding valid, statute requiring payment of full amount of insurance on total loss.

Cited in footnotes to Com. v. Vrooman, 25 L. R. A. 250, which upholds legislative power to confine insurance business to corporations; State ex rel. Hoadley v. Insurance Comrs. 33 L. R. A. 288, which holds unconstitutional, discrimination between residents and nonresidents as to conditions of doing insurance business.

Cited in note (24 L. R. A. 303) on restrictions on business of foreign insurance companies.

Argument to jury.

Cited in McNeill v. State, 102 Ala. 127, 48 Am. St. Rep. 17, 15 So. 352, holding proper, prosecuting attorney's statement to jury that defendant on charge of murder should not be imprisoned, but hung.

25 L. R. A. 243, STATE v. STONE, 118 Mo. 388, 24 S. W. 164.

Regulation of insurance.

Cited in State v. Beardsley, 88 Minn. 25, 92 N. W. 472, holding agent for nonresident partnership, doing insurance business within statute requiring agents of insurance companies to be licensed; State v. Phelan, 66 Mo. App. 558, holding individuals not debarred from doing business, but must comply with regulations; People v. Gay, 107 Mich. 425, 30 L. R. A. 465, 65 N. W. 292, holding act prohibiting solicitation of insurance by nonresident person valid; Cravens v. New York L. Ins. Co. 148 Mo. 604, 53 L. R. A. 311, 71 Am. St. Rep. 628, 50 S. W. 519, holding foreign insurance companies doing business must conform to laws; Enterprise Lumber Co. v. Mundy, 62 N. J. L. 21, 55 L. R. A. 201, 42 Atl. 1063, holding "Lloyds" policy valid in absence of prohibiting statute;

New York L. Ins. Co. v. Cravens, 178 U. S. 396, 44 L. ed. 1122, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 962, holding state may prescribe conditions upon which foreign insurance company may transact business.

Cited in footnote to Com. v. Reinöhl, 25 L. R. A. 247, which holds Guarantee Lloyds not a "company" within provision as acting as agent for foreign company.

Cited in notes (24 L. R. A. 303) on restrictions on business of foreign insurance companies; (25 L. R. A. 239) on restrictions on insurance by unincorporated associations and individuals; "Lloyds" associations.

25 L. R. A. 247, COM. v. REINÖHL, 163 Pa. 287, 29 Atl. 896.

Validity of "Lloyds" insurance.

Explained in Re Lloyd's Asso. 15 Pa. Co. Ct. 586, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 822 holding "Lloyds" company cannot issue policy of insurance in commonwealth without committing misdemeanor.

Cited in Enterprise Lumber Co. v. Mundy, 62 N. J. L. 21, 55 L. R. A. 201, 42 Atl. 1063, holding "Lloyds" contract of insurance valid in absence of prohibiting statute.

Liability of insurance agents.

Cited in Adler-Weinberger S. S. Co. v. Rothschild, 123 Fed. 146, holding agent negotiating policy with company not complying with laws, personally liable, though property insured not within state.

Cited in footnote to State v. Stone, 25 L. R. A. 243, which holds agents of individuals within provision as to acting as insurance agent for principal without certificate of permission to do business.

Cited in note (25 L. R. A. 239) on restrictions on insurance by unincorporated associations and individuals; "Lloyds" associations.

25 L. R. A. 250, COM. v. VROOMAN, 164 Pa. 306, 44 Am. St. Rep. 603, 30 Atl. 217.

Regulation of insurance.

Cited in Swing v. Munson, 191 Pa. 587, 58 L. R. A. 226, 71 Am. St. Rep. 772, 43 Atl. 342, and O'Neil v. American F. Ins. Co. 166 Pa. 78, 26 L. R. A. 717, 45 Am. St. Rep. 650, 30 Atl. 943, holding business of fire insurance proper subject of legislative control; Swing v. Munson, 191 Pa. 589, 58 L. R. A. 226, 71 Am. St. Rep. 772, 43 Atl. 342, holding member of mutual insurance company not complying with statute conditioning right to do business, cannot be assessed for debts of company after dissolution; Re Lloyd's Asso. 15 Pa. Co. Ct. 587, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 823, holding "Lloyds" contract of insurance invalid; Western Massachusetts Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Girard Point Storage Co. 19 Pa. Co. Ct. 116, 6 Pa. Dist. R. 56, holding foreign fire insurance company not complying with state acts cannot recover premiums; Re Insurance Co. Partnerships, 20 Pa. Co. Ct. 128, 6 Pa. Dist. R. 701, holding two fire insurance companies cannot issue joint policy under name of underwriters, because not incorporated; Weed v. Cuming, 23 Pa. Co. Ct. 28, 8 Pa. Dist. R. 321, holding member of "Lloyds" company which has received premium liable for loss under policy; Dugger v. Mechanics' & T. Ins. Co. 95 Tenn. 257, 28 L. R. A. 799, 32 S. W. 5, upholding constitutionality of statute making void all stipulations in policies which limit liability to less than full amount of loss, when same does not exceed amount of insurance; State ex rel. Hoadley v. Insurance Comrs. 37 Fla. 575, 33 L. R. A.

291, 20 So. 772, overruling motion to quash writ of mandamus to compel insurance commissioners to reissue to "Lloyds" association certificate to transact business; Enterprise Lumber Co. v. Mundy, 62 N. J. L. 21, 55 L. R. A. 201, 42 Atl. 1063, holding "Lloyd's" policy of insurance is valid in absence of statutes prohibiting it; People v. Loew, 23 Misc. 576, 52 N. Y. Supp. 799, restraining "Peoples Fire Lloyds" from transacting insurance business; Hoadley v. Purifoy, 107 Ala. 290, 30 L. R. A. 353, 18 So. 220, referring to business monopolized by corporations without discussing it.

Legislative regulation of business.

Cited in Haigh v. Bell, 41 W. Va. 24, 31 L. R. A. 132, 23 S. E. 666, sustaining act, as within police power, prohibiting owner from allowing hogs to run at large; Overshiner v. State, 156 Ind. 193, 51 L. R. A. 751, 83 Am. St. Rep. 187, 59 N. E. 468, upholding act permitting state dental association to appoint three members of board of dental examiners; Com. v. Beatty, 15 Pa. Super. Ct. 19, holding valid, act to regulate employment and provide for health and safety of workers.

Cited in footnote to Third Nat. Bank v. Divine Grocery Co. 34 L. R. A. 445, which denies right to prevent transfer of property in payment of debt while solvent.

Distinguished in Clark's Estate, 195 Pa. 528, 48 L. R. A. 595, 44 W. N. C. 471, 46 Atl. 127, Reversing 10 Pa. Super. Ct. 435, holding act authorizing persons acting in fiduciary capacity to include in compensation expenses for bond of surety company, invalid.

25 L. R. A. 257, JEFFERSON v. ASCH, 53 Minn. 446, 39 Am. St. Rep. 618, 55 N. W. 604.

When promise for benefit of third person enforceable.

Cited in Young Men's Christian Asso. v. Croft, 34 Or. 111, 75 Am. St. Rep. 568, 55 Pac. 439; Hicks v. Hamilton, 144 Mo. 490, 66 Am. St. Rep. 431, 46 S. W. 432; McKay v. Ward, 20 Utah, 183, 46 L. R. A. 633, footnote p. 623, 57 Pac. 1024, — holding assumption of mortgage by grantee will not make him personally liable unless grantor was liable; Stites v. Thompson, 98 Wis. 331, 73 N. W. 774, holding purchaser of mortgaged premises assuming to pay mortgage liable to mortgagee as principal debtor; Montgomery v. Riel, 15 Utah, 501, 50 Pac. 623, holding strangers to bond given to state by contractor for public building cannot sue on it for material furnished; Union R. Storage Co. v. McDermott, 53 Minn. 411, 55 N. W. 606, holding stranger cannot sue on bond given by contractor to United States to perform his contract although he furnished material to the contractor; Coleman v. Hiler, 85 Hun, 551, 33 N. Y. Supp. 357, holding third person cannot maintain action on promises for his benefit unless there is some liability in favor of beneficiary.

Cited in footnotes to Capital Traction Co. v. Offutt, 53 L. R. A. 390, which denies liability of street railway company for debts of other company whose property and franchises bought; Bain v. Atkins, 57 L. R. A. 791, which denies right of injured person to sue insurer against loss through liability for injuries after settlement with insured; Boston Ins. Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 55 L. R. A. 796, which denies right of action against railroad company carrying mail under contract with government, by sender of registered mail destroyed through negligence of its employees; Morgan v. Randolph-Clowes Co. 51 L. R.

A. 653, which denies right of firm creditor to sue corporation assuming firm debts; McCartney v. Ridgway, 32 L. R. A. 555, which holds court of equity will not aid mere volunteer to carry imperfect gift or trust into effect; Tweeddale v. Tweeddale, 61 L. R. A. 509, which sustains right of third person to enforce contract made for his benefit; Enos v. Sanger, 37 L. R. A. 862, and Hare v. Murphy, 29 L. R. A. 851, which sustains personal liability of purchaser assuming mortgage though grantor not liable; Knapp v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 40 L. R. A. 861, which upholds mortgagee's right to compel grantee to keep agreement to assume mortgage, by suit in equity; Buchanan v. Tilden, 44 L. R. A. 170, which sustains wife's right to sue on contract by third person with husband, to pay her part of proceeds of successful will contest; Baxter v. Camp, 42 L. R. A. 514, which holds contract to pay money to promisee's son if he survives parent not enforceable by son; Adams v. Union R. Co. 44 L. R. A. 273, which holds contract with town limiting street car fares available to passenger; Buckley v. Gray, 31 L. R. A. 862, which holds employment of attorney to draw will providing for one of testatrix's sons not contract for latter's benefit; Ferris v. American Brewing Co. 52 L. R. A. 305, which sustains right of action of one for whose benefit stipulation in lease against sale on premises of other person's beer, made.

Cited in note (64 L. R. A. 597) on who is real party in interest within meaning of statutes defining parties by whom action must be brought.

Criticized in Electric Appliance Co. v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. 110 Wis. 439, 53 L. R. A. 613, footnote p. 609, 85 N. W. 648, holding, to entitle third person to benefit of bond, there must be not only an interest to secure some benefit to that party, but also a legally enforceable promise.

25 L. R. A. 280, SMITH v. LIBRARY BOARD, 58 Minn. 108, 59 N. W. 979.

When bailee liable for loss.

Cited in footnote to Prince v. Alabama State Fair, 28 L. R. A. 716, which holds bailee of picture for competitive exhibition at fair liable for its loss.

25 L. R. A. 283, STATE v. AUSTIN, 114 N. C. 855, 41 Am. St. Rep. 817, 19 S. E. 919.

Police powers of municipalities.

Cited in State v. Taylor, 133 N. C. 758, 46 S. E. 5, holding town ordinance cannot make criminal, or prescribe punishment for, acts indictable at common law or by statute; State v. Ray, 131 N. C. 821, 60 L. R. A. 636, 92 Am. St. Rep. 795, 42 S. E. 960 (dissenting opinion), majority holding town ordinance requiring all stores selling merchandise to be closed after 7:30 P. M., invalid.

Cited in footnotes to Re Stegenga, 61 L. R. A. 763, which sustains city's authority to provide for punishment of loiterers in streets and bar-rooms; People v. Ewer, 25 L. R. A. 794, which holds valid, act prohibiting employment of girls under fourteen as dancers or in theatrical exhibitions.

25 L. R. A. 287, SMITH v. NORFOLK & S. R. CO. 114 N. C. 728, 19 S. E. 863, 923.

Liability where defendant might have avoided injury.

Cited in Fulp v. Roanoke & S. R. Co. 120 N. C. 529, 27 S. E. 74, holding erroneous a charge that plaintiff's contributory negligence in being drunk on track prevented recovery, where it was not left to jury to determine whether injury could not then have been avoided; Green v. Los Angeles Terminal R. Co. 143 Cal. 46, 101 Am. St. Rep. 68, 76 Pac. 724, holding locomotive engineer entitled to assume person in full possession of faculties approaching track will not attempt to cross before train in full view.

Cited in footnotes to Thompson v. Salt Lake Rapid-Transit Co. 40 L. R. A. 172, which holds one having last clear chance, solely responsible for injury; Becker v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 53 L. R. A. 268, which requires stopping to enable trespasser discovered on railroad bridge to escape; Western & A. R. Co. v. Ferguson, 54 L. R. A. 802, which holds duty to exercise care to avoid injury from other's negligence does not arise till negligence apprehendible; Tesch v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. 53 L. R. A. 618, which denies liability for injury to one guilty of contributory negligence, notwithstanding subsequent opportunity of other party to avoid injury; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Tartt, 49 L. R. A. 99, which denies duty towards trespassers on track before discovery.

Cited in notes (55 L. R. A. 419, 421, 423, 454-456) on doctrine of last clear chance; (25 L. R. A. 787) on care required of railroad companies to prevent injuring small children on track; (25 L. R. A. 163) on constitutionality of statutes making railroad companies absolutely liable for damage by fires set out by them or for stock killed by them irrespective of negligence.

Cited as overruled in Lloyd v. Albermarle & R. R. Co. 118 N. C. 1015. 54 Am. St. Rep. 764, 24 S. E. 805, holding negligence of one lying insensible from intoxication on railway track not concurrent if injury to him could have been prevented.

Railroads; duty to maintain lookout.

Explained in Pickett v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 117 N. C. 628, 30 L. R. A. 257, footnote p. 257, 53 Am. St. Rep. 611, 23 S. E. 264, holding engineer negligent in failing to keep lookout so as to see helpless person on track.

Cited in footnotes to Mason v. Southern R. Co. 53 L. R. A. 913, which holds company liable for death of child on track from failure to keep reasonable lookout; Gunn v. Ohio River R. Co. 36 L. R. A. 575, which holds it duty of engineer and fireman to keep lookout for persons on track.

Contributory negligence as proximate cause of injury.

Cited in Neal v. Carolina C. R. Co. 126 N. C. 638, 49 L. R. A. 686, footnote p. 684, 36 S. E. 117, denying liability for death of person on track by train running at excessive speed without ringing bell.

Cited in footnotes to Schreiner v. Great Northern R. Co. 58 L. R. A. 76, which holds failure to build fence not proximate cause of injury to one pushed on track by cow; Baltimore Consol. R. Co. v. Armstrong, 54 L. R. A. 424, which denies liability to one caught between two street cars by becoming confused after assenting to motorman's instructions as to reaching safe place.

Intoxication not excuse for negligence.

Cited in Fisher v. West Virginia & P. R. Co. 42 W. Va. 189, 33 L. R. A. 72, 24 S. E. 570, holding self-intoxication no excuse for negligence of remaining on platform of moving car after conductor's request to go inside; Bageard v. Consolidated Traction Co. 64 N. J. L. 322, 49 L. R. A. 427, 81 Am. St. Rep. 493, 45 Atl. 620, holding man cannot recover for injuries brought about by his intoxicated condition; Burke v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 108 Ill. App. 573, holding voluntary intoxication not excuse for failure to use degree of care reasonably expected of sober person.

Cited in footnote to Price v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 36 L. R. A. 213, which holds negligence of trespasser sitting down on railroad track not excused by drunkenness.

Cited in note (40 L. R. A. 131) on intoxication as affecting negligence.

25 L. R. A. 300, CHICAGO & N. W. R. CO. v. WEST CHICAGO PARK, 151 Ill. 204, 37 N. E. 1079.

Estoppel.

Cited in Chicago v. Union Stock Yards & Transit Co. 164 Ill. 232, 35 L. R. A. 285, 45 N. E. 430, declaring city estopped when it has recognized for twenty years right of railroad to cross street; West Chicago Park v. Sweet, 167 Ill. 335, 47 N. E. 728, holding objections to control of streets by park commissioners of no force after long acquiescence by city; Bass v. South Park, 171 Ill. 371, 49 N. E. 549, holding that, when proceedings show on their face that park commissioners had secured control of streets, it will be presumed it was done legally; Chicago v. Carpenter, 201 Ill. 408, 66 N. E. 362, holding city estopped to deny control of park commissioners over streets where improvements were made by them without interference by city; Soule v. People, 205 Ill. 623, 69 N. E. 22, holding validity of village organization cannot be attacked by information in nature of quo warranto to oust officers, where corporate functions exercised for over twenty years.

Reviewing error.

Cited in Glennon v. Britton, 155 Ill. 239, 40 N. E. 594, refusing to review error committed at party's own instance, contrary to his stipulation.

25 L. R. A. 305, CHIPMAN v. CARROLL, 53 Kan. 163, 35 Pac. 1109.

Mortgagee's right in fire policy.

Cited in Swearingen v. Hartford Ins. Co. 52 S. C. 316, 29 S. E. 722, refusing equitable lien of mortgagee upon proceeds of fire policy taken out by mortgagor in own name under invalid verbal agreement with mortgagee.

Cited in footnotes to Hocking v. Virginia F. & M. Ins. Co. 39 L. R. A. 148, which denies mortgagee's right to recover where mortgagor burns building; Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Penn Plate-Glass Co. 56 L. R. A. 710, which denies mortgagee's lien on proceeds of insurance on premises by grantee for own benefit; Shadgett v. Phillips & C. Co. 56 L. R. A. 401, which holds mortgagee not entitled to insurance procured by donee for own benefit, by latter's knowledge of mortgagor's failure to keep agreement to insure; Home Ins. Co. v. Koob, 58 L. R. A. 58, which holds policy to mortgagor not avoided by policy to mortgagee; Hardy v. Lancashire Ins. Co. 33 L. R. A. 241, which holds mortgagee's rights unaffected by additional insurance taken by mortgagor; Palmer Sav. Bank v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 32 L. R. A. 615, which sustains mortgagee's right to sue on policy in own name; Boyd v. Thuringia Ins. Co. 55 L. R. A. 165, which holds question of forfeiture of policy payable to mortgagee not determined by provisions as to mortgagor's acts; Pioneer Sav. & L. Co. v. Provi- dence Washington Ins. Co. 38 L. R. A. 397, which holds change of title by deed from mortgagor to mortgagee pending application for insurance not fatal to insurance; Harrison v. Pepper, 33 L. R. A. 239, which holds that, in absence of agreement to that effect, remainder man has no claim upon insurance carried by life tenant.

Annotation in 25 L. R. A. 305, referred to particularly in Lowry v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 75 Miss. 45, 37 L. R. A. 779, footnote p. 779, 46 Am. St. Rep. 587, 21 So. 664, authorizing suit by mortgagee in own name on policy payable to him.

Execution against interest in insurance policy.

Cited in footnote to Boisseau v. Penn, 57 L. R. A. 380, which holds execution not lien on interest of debtor in twenty-year distribution policy on his life which ceases on failure to pay premiums.

25 L. R. A. 309, KIMMEL v. DICKSON, 5 S. D. 221, 49 Am. St. Rep. 869, 58 N. W. 561.

When bank deposit impressed with trust.

Cited in Plano Mfg. Co. v. Auld, 14 S. D. 519, 86 Am. St. Rep. 769, 86 N. W. 21, sustaining action against receiver of bank, which had collected note and mingled proceeds with other funds, for balance due; State v. Foster, 5 Wyo. 216, 29 L. R. A. 251, 38 Pac. 926, holding commercial paper found in vaults of insolvent banker not impressed with trust of funds held in trust by it; Hoskins v. Dougherty, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 323, 69 S. W. 103, holding deposit in bank as forfeit to third party in event of nonperformance of contract, or payable as part of purchase money in case of performance is trust fund to be paid to account of contract; State v. Thum, 6 Idaho, 330, 55 Pac. 858, holding public moneys deposited by state treasurer become trust fund, which may be followed in hands of receiver.

Cited in footnote to Lincoln Sav. Bank & S. D. Co. v. Morrison, 57 L. R. A. 885, which holds cestui que trust entitled to preference, only to extent trustee's estate shown to have been increased by misappropriation of trust property.

Distinguished in McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Yankton Sav. Bank, 15 S. D. 202, 87 N. W. 974, holding sender of notes to bank for collection is mere creditor where it has been custom to credit the amounts collected.

25 L. R. A. 312, LIVERMORE v. WAITE, 102 Cal. 113, 36 Pac. 424.

Constitutional amendments.

Cited in Bott v. Wurts, 63 N. J. L. 297, 45 L. R. A. 255, 43 Atl. 744, maintaining jurisdiction to review by certiorari at instance of citizen determination of commission appointed to ascertain result of popular vote on constitutional amendment; People ex rel. Elder v. Sours, 31 Colo. 429, 74 Pac. 167 (dissenting opinion), majority holding legislature may propose amendment to Constitution by way of added article.

Cited in footnotes to State ex rel. Woods v. Tooker, 25 L. R. A. 560, which holds fatal to constitutional amendment, publication for two weeks only; State ex rel. Wineman v. Dahl, 34 L. R. A. 97, which holds submission to popular vote of proposal for constitutional convention properly made by legislature; Com. ex rel. Elkin v. Griest, 50 L. R. A. 568, which holds governor's approval of proposed constitutional amendment, unnecessary.

Criticized in Edwards v. Lesueur, 132 Mo. 436, 31 L. R. A. 820, footnote p. 815, 33 S. W. 1130, refusing to enjoin submission to people, of amendment to Constitution providing for change of seat of government of state because dependent on conditions.

25 L. R. A. 320, DICKSON v. OMAHA & ST. L. R. CO. 124 Mo. 140, 46 Am. St. Rep. 429, 27 S. W. 476.

Railroads; liability to employees.

Cited in Missouri P. R. Co. v. Columbia, 65 Kan. 397, 58 L. R. A. 403, 69 Pac. 338, holding locomotive fireman has right to assume that railway will not put grain doors in such position as to expose him to unnecessary danger.

Liability for injury resulting from unfenced track.

Cited in Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Williams, 172 Ill. 382, 64 Am. St. Rep. 44, 50 N. E. 116, holding railroad liable to employee injured through its failure to keep track fenced; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Williams, 69 Ill. App. 394, holding road liable for death of engineer whose engine collided with cattle on track not fenced; Mendizabal v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 89 App. Div. 388, 85 N. Y. Supp. 896, holding railroad liable for injury to workman carried on construction train derailed by running over cow on unfenced track; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Richmond, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 516, 67 S. W. 1029, holding railroad liable for killing animal straying upon premises of abutting landowner, and entering right of way through defective fence.

Cited in footnotes to Carper v. Kimball, 35 L. R. A. 135, which denies liability for injuries to railroad employee from failure to build fences; Barney v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 26 L. R. A. 847, which denies duty of railroad company to fence switch yards for protection of children; Rosse v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 37 L. R. A. 591, which holds railroad company liable for injury to young child from failure to keep track fenced; Kimball v. Carter, 38 L. R. A. 570, which holds inclosed lands through which right of way must be fenced those which have line of obstacle of any kind setting them off as private property.

Distinguished in Carper v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 35 L. R. A. 141, 23 C. C. A. 675, 42 U. S. App. 282, 78 Fed. 100, holding railroad owes no duty to its employees in keeping track fenced so as to make it liable for injury resulting from derailed train by collision with cattle.

Contributory negligence.

Cited in Baker v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 147 Mo. 167, 48 S. W. 838, which holds woman confused by first discovering approach of concealed cars, after going on tracks, not amenable to rule of stopping to look and listen; Oates v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 168 Mo. 548, 58 L. R. A. 451, 68 S. W. 906, declaring erroneous instruction that plaintiff cannot recover if his negligence "but contributes to the injury."

25 L. R. A. 325, ELLIS ex rel. REYNOLDS v. MAY, 99 Mich. 538, 58 N. W. 483.

Mandatory provisions of ballot laws.

Cited in Todd v. Election Comrs. 104 Mich. 482, 29 L. R. A. 334, 64 N. W. 496, upholding act against printing name of candidate more than once on official ballot; Tebbe v. Smith, 108 Cal. 108, 29 L. R. A. 676, footnote p. 673, L. R. A. AU.—VOL. III.—50.

49 Am. St. Rep. 68, 41 Pac. 454, refusing to declare ballots illegal because legal mark in legal place might serve to identify them; Cole v. Tucker, 164 Mass. 488, 29 L. R. A. 669, 41 N. E. 681, upholding statute making official ballot compulsory in election of city officers, and optional as to town officers; Re Contested Election, 3 Lack. Legal News, 78, holding ballot of voter who takes person into booth to see how he votes should be thrown out; Tebbe v. Smith, 108 Cal. 113, 29 L. R. A. 676, 49 Am. St. Rep. 68, 41 Pac. 454, discarding marked ballots where it appeared that only one person in precinct was lawfully assisted to mark his ballot; Van Winkle v. Crabtree, 34 Or. 471, 55 Pac. 931, holding mandatory, provisions as to space in which marking of ballot should be done.

Cited in footnotes to Stackpole v. Hallahan, 28 L. R. A. 502, which holds provisions of Australian ballot law not mandatory to extent that fair election invalidated; Taylor v. Beakley, 28 L. R. A. 683, which holds mandatory provision against counting ballot not marked as required by statute.

Distinguished in Horning v. Board of Canvassers, 119 Mich. 53, 77 N. W. 446, declaring provision that inspector's initials shall appear at one place only on back of ballot, directory merely.

25 L. R. A. 338, AMERICAN WATERWORKS CO. v. FARMERS LOAN & T. CO. 20 Colo. 203, 46 Am. St. Rep. 285, 37 Pac. 269.

Extraterritorial effect of statutes.

Cited in House of Mercy v. Davidson, 90 Tex. 533, 39 S. W. 924, holding provisions of general law of state under which company incorporated controlling as to possession of land in another state.

25 L. R. A. 341, CONNOR v. PEOPLE, 18 Colo. 373, 36 Am. St. Rep. 295, 33 Pac. 159.

Conspiracy to commit crime.

Cited in Miller v. People, 22 Colo. 533, 45 Pac. 408, holding there can be no conspiracy to do an act not in itself unlawful; Lipschitz v. People, 25 Colo. 265, 53 Pac. 1111, holding malicious and wilful burning, but not wilful and malicious conspiracy to burn, is unlawful; Short v. People, 27 Colo. 184, 60 Pac. 350, holding harmless, error to instruct that conspiracy is doing lawful act in unlawful manner, when indictment charges burglary.

Effect of instigation or consent to criminal act.

Cited in Strait v. State, 77 Miss. 697, 27 So. 617, holding burglary is not committed when would-be burglar is let into the office by decoy or detective; Newman v. People, 23 Colo. 305, 47 Pac. 278, holding it immaterial whether briber or bribed makes first advance; State v. Hull, 33 Or. 63, 72 Am. St. Rep. 694, 54 Pac. 159, holding cattle are not stolen when taken with consent and active aid of owner through agent; State v. West, 157 Mo. 322, 57 S. W. 1071, holding that superintendent of railroad does not consent to conspiracy to rob train because he takes steps to apprehend robber after being informed of intention.

Cited in footnotes to State v. Abley, 46 L. R. A. 862, which sustains liability for burglary though clerk, without employer's knowledge, loans key at officer's request to have duplicate made for burglar's use; Com. v. Hollister, 25

L. R. A. 349, which holds conviction not prevented because supposed confederate acted for purpose of detecting guilty parties; Love v. People, 32 L. R. A. 139, which holds no crime committed against one encouraging others to commit the act.

Distinguished in State v. Chappell, 179 Mo. 331, 78 S. W. 585, holding instruction to acquit defendant of larceny of goods from railroad car, if scheme was suggested by decoy, properly refused in absence of evidence to support; Porter v. People, 31 Colo. 516, 74 Pac. 879, holding detective arranging with defendant to ship his own cattle with those latter might steal in order to fill car, not accomplice, requiring corroborative evidence to convict.

Evidence.

Cited in Kipp v. Silverman, 25 Mont. 302, 64 Pac. 884, holding hearsay statements not under oath add nothing to confirmation of what witness says under oath.

Contempt of court.

Cited in People ex rel. Connor v. Stapleton, 18 Colo. 579, 23 L. R. A. 791, 33 Pac. 167, holding contempt of court shown by newspaper publication alleging in effect that court was influenced in its decision in particular case.

25 L. R. A. 349, COM. v. HOLLISTER, 157 Pa. 13, 27 Atl. 386.

Participation in crime.

Cited in State v. Torphy, 78 Mo. App. 208, holding person entering gambling place and engaging in game for sole purpose of enabling him to secure evidence to convict not punishable; Wright v. Stewart, 130 Fed. 914, holding bank corporation receiving and enjoying benefits of fraudulent scheme to extort money, with knowledge of fraud, chargeable as conspirator.

Cited in footnote to State v. Abley, 46 L. R. A. 862, which sustains liability for burglary though clerk, without employer's knowledge, loans key at officer's request to have duplicate made for burglar's use.

Cited in note (25 L. R. A. 341) on instigation or consent to crime for the purpose of detecting criminal, as a defense to prosecution.

25 L. R. A. 354, STATE ex rel. HUNT v. SUPERIOR COURT, 8 Wash. 210, 35 Pac. 1087.

Right of possession to property under lien.

Followed in State ex rel. Shelly v. Superior Court, 8 Wash. 659, 35 Pac. 1092, and State ex rel. Perkins v. Graham, 9 Wash. 528, 36 Pac. 1085, without discussion.

Cited in Sanders v. Main, 9 Wash. 47, 36 Pac. 1049, holding rightful possession under mortgage lien not affected by subsequent assignment for benefit of creditors; Cherry v. Western Washington Industrial Exposition Co. 11 Wash. 590, 40 Pac. 136, holding appointment of receiver before sale and after proceedings under execution will not affect right of purchaser thereunder; State ex rel. Baum v. Superior Court, 14 Wash. 328, 44 Pac. 542, holding assignee of insolvent debtor has title, but not right of possession, to property rightfully levied on by sheriff; Smith v. Sioux City Nursery & Seed Co. 109 Iowa, 55, 79 N. W. 457, holding receiver takes subject to payment of all valid prior liens.

Distinguished in State ex rel. Schwabacher Bros. & Co. v. Superior Court, 11 Wash. 65, 39 Pac. 244, upholding injunction against execution sale, and ordering property turned over to receiver.

25 L. R. A. 360, FESTORAZZI v. ST. JOSEPH ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, 104 Ala. 327, 53 Am. St. Rep. 48, 18 So. 394.

Validity of charitable trusts.

Cited in McHugh v. McCole, 97 Wis. 181, 40 L. R. A. 729, 72 N. W. 631, holding invalid a bequest "to be used and applied . . . for masses for the repose of" the soul of testator and other persons named, and referring particularly to annotation in 25 L. R. A. 360; Harrington v. Pier, 105 Wis. 513, 50 L. R. A. 319, 76 Am. St. Rep. 922, 82 N. W. 345, holding bequest for promotion of temperance work in city named, being public trust, is not invalid for indefiniteness of beneficiary.

Cited in footnote to Webster v. Sughrow, 48 L. R. A. 100, which sustains trust for saying of masses.

Cited in note (40 L. R. A. 717, 721) on validity of bequests for masses.

Distinguished in Sherman v. Baker, 20 R. I. 448, 40 L. R. A. 719, 40 Atl. 11, holding bequest to parish priest to say mass for testator is valid gift to priest himself for services; Moran v. Moran, 104 Iowa, 226, 39 L. R. A. 208, footnote p. 204, 65 Am. St. Rep. 443, 73 N. W. 617, holding bequest to pastor of church "that masses may be said for me," is valid private trust.

Disapproved in Hoeffler v. Clogan, 171 Ill. 472, 40 L. R. A. 763, 63 Am. St. Rep. 241, 49 N. E. 527, holding devise to church in trust for saying masses for souls of persons named, is valid charitable gift.

25 L. R. A. 363, FLAGG v. SCHOOL DIST. NO. 70, 4 N. D. 30, 58 N. W. 499.

Negotiability of promissory note.

Cited in Nicely v. Winnebago Nat. Bank, 18 Ind. App. 37, 47 N. E. 476; Culbertson v. Nelson, 93 Iowa, 190, 27 L. R. A. 226, 57 Am. St. Rep. 266, 61 N. W. 854; Nicely v. Commercial Bank, 15 Ind. App. 566, 57 Am. St. Rep. 245, 44 N. E. 572; Tronson v. Colby University, 9 N. D. 562, 84 N. W. 474; Folsom v. Kilbourne, 5 N. D. 403, 67 N. W. 291, — holding provision in note for exchange on New York renders it non-negotiable.

Cited in note (27 L. R. A. 224) on provision for exchange as affecting negotiability.

Disapproved in Haslack v. Wolf, 60 L. R. A. 435, holding promissory note not rendered non-negotiable by agreement to pay exchange at point other than place where note is payable.

Rights of purchasers of municipal bonds.

Explained in Flagg v. School Dist. No. 70, 5 N. D. 192, 65 N. W. 674, holding fact that warrants had not been audited and surrendered could be proved to show want of consideration for issue of bonds.

Cited in footnotes to Wilkes County v. Call, 44 L. R. A. 252, which denies possibility of bona fide holder of county bonds issued under unconstitutional statute; Independent School District v. Rew, 55 L. R. A. 364, which holds municipal corporation estopped to deny truth of recitals in bonds held by innocent purchaser; People's Bank v. School Dist. No. 52, 28 L. R. A. 642, which holds invalidity of municipal bonds leaves original liability of municipality unaffected.

25 L. R. A. 377, CUTTER v. POLLOCK, 4 N. D. 205, 50 Am. St. Rep. 644, 50 N. W. 1062.

Transfer of partnership property as security.

Cited in Smith v. Baker, 5 Okla. 335, 49 Pac. 61, and Dyson v. St. Paul Nat. Bank, 74 Minn. 447, 73 Am. St. Rep. 358, 77 N. W. 236, holding members of copartnership can transfer whole of copartnership assets, in good faith, to secure a debt of partnership, though insolvent.

How receiver's compensation determined.

Cited in Patterson v. Ward, 6 N. D. 613, 72 N. W. 1013, holding compensation of receiver is matter for judicial determination; Cutter v. Pollock, 7 N. D. 632, 76 N. W. 235, holding proper for court to adjudge three fifths of amount deducted for fees and expenses of receivership from property in which defendants held liens.

Unlawful preferences.

Cited in footnote to Re Fixen, 50 L. R. A. 605, which holds payment of money by insolvent to unsecured creditor in ordinary course of business, an unlawful preference.

25 L. R. A. 383, HOSMER v. SHELDON SCHOOL DIST. NO. 2, 4 N. D. 197, 50 Am. St. Rep. 639, 59 N. W. 1035.

Teacher's contract.

Cited in Bryan v. Fractional School Dist. No. 1, 111 Mich. 70, 69 N. W. 74, holding contract made with teacher not legal certificate of qualification, being prohibited by law, cannot be made basis of recovery.

Cited in footnote to Mayor v. Cayce, 30 L. R. A. 697, which holds valid, contract giving school teacher right to charge extra from pupils taking special studies.

Distinguished in Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Partlow, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 602, 71 S. W. 584, holding person without certificate prevented from making contract to teach because of neglect to deliver telegraph message may recover damages, if certificate obtained before school year began.

25 L. R. A. 386, LITTLE ROCK & M. R. CO. v. BARRY, 58 Ark. 198, 23 S. W. 1097.

Who are fellow servants.

Cited in Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Elliott, 42 C. C. A. 201, 102 Fed. 108, Affirming 2 Ind. Terr. 421, 51 S. W. 1067; Clyde v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 69 Fed. 678; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Camp, 13 C. C. A. 240, 31 U. S. App. 213, 65 Fed. 960, holding train despatcher not fellow servant with train hands; Wallace v. Boston & M. R. Co. 72 N. H. 517, 57 Atl. 913, holding train despatcher having direction of trains not fellow servant of brakeman injured through improper issuance of orders.

Cited in footnote to Hankins v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 25 L. R. A. 396, which holds train despatcher and fireman not fellow servants.

Cited in notes (54 L. R. A. 38, 91) on vice principalship as determined with reference to character of act which caused the injury; (25 L. R. A. 387, 389) on train despatcher and telegraph operator as fellow servants of trainmen.

Master's duty in respect to rules.

Cited in footnote to Sprague v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 37 L. R. A. 633, which holds railroad company's duty to employees not performed per se by preparing time-table and printed rules for running of trains on regular time.

Cited in note (43 L. R. A. 347) on duties of master and servant as to rules promulgated for safe conduct of business.

Measure of damages.

Cited in St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Sweet, 63 Ark. 569, 40 S. W. 463, and Foster v. Pitts, 63 Ark. 395, 38 S. W. 1114, holding instruction as to damages which introduces elements not in evidence, erroneous.

25 L. R. A. 396, HANKINS v. NEW YORK, L. E. & W. R. CO. 142 N. Y. 416, 59 N. Y. S. R. 802, 40 Am. St. Rep. 616, 37 N. E. 466.

Who are fellow servants.

Cited in Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Heck, 151 Ind. 314, 50 N. E. 988; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Elliott, 42 C. C. A. 200, 102 Fed. 96; Clyde v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 69 Fed. 678; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Camp, 13 C. C. A. 240, 31 U. S. App. 213, 65 Fed. 952, — holding train despatcher not fellow servant of trainmen; Nord Deutscher Lloyd S. S. Co. v. Ingebregsten, 57 N. J. L. 402, 51 Am. St. Rep. 604, 31 Atl. 619, holding agent selected to keep machinery and appliances in repair not fellow servant with those using them unless also using them; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Houchins, 95 Va. 411, 46 L. R. A. 367, 64 Am. St. Rep. 791, 28 S. E. 578, holding conductor of train not necessarily superior of rest of crew because he has work of operating or moving train; Jackson v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 43 W. Va. 395, 46 L. R. A. 350, 27 S. E. 278, holding conductor and brakeman of freight train are fellow servants; Sutter v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 79 App. Div. 367, 79 N. Y. Supp. 1106, holding locomotive engineer inspecting engine not fellow servant of conductor of train to which engine is attached; Meehan v. Judson, 43 App. Div. 51, 59 N. Y. Supp. 578, holding superintendent of street railway vice principal as to duty of furnishing suitable machinery and keeping it in repair; Gann v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 101 Tenn. 384, 70 Am. St. Rep. 687, 47 S. W. 493, holding section boss operating brake of hand car is fellow servant to section hand injured by negligent operation of brake; Bryant v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 81 Hun, 168, 30 N. Y. Supp. 737, holding railroad not liable for injury to engineer by collision because train despatcher had not sent order where rules of company, if observed by engineer of other train would have prevented collision; Vitto v. Keogan, 15 App. Div. 332, 44 N. Y. Supp. 1, holding foreman fellow servant with workman whom he had sent to clear out of hole unexploded charge of dynamite; Miller v. Thomas, 15 App. Div. 108, 44 N. Y. Supp. 277, holding foreman of gang in which injured man working his fellow servant; Kimmer v. Weber, 151 N. Y. 423, 45 N. E. 860, holding error of judgment by foreman and workmen as to safety of scaffold erected by them, did not render master liable for injury due to its instability; Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Harrell, 161 Ind. 699, 63 L. R. A. 466, 68 N. E. 262, holding foreman of railway-bridge gang not vice principal in directing operation of derrick; Bagley v. Consolidated Gas. Co. 5 App. Div. 438, 39 N. Y. Supp. 302, Reversing 13 Misc. 7, 34 N. Y. Supp. 187 (dissenting opinion), majority holding foreman fellow servant with employee injured by loose plank thrown from scaffold against which tank, being raised, struck; Sweeney v. Vacuum Oil Co. 3 App. Div. 616, 38 N. Y. Supp. 96 (dissenting opinion), majority holding negligence of superintendent by which injury occurred, that of coemployee; Northern P. R. Co. v. Dixon, 194 U. S. 351, 48 L. ed. 1012, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 683 (dissenting opinion), majority holding that telegraph operator furnishing misinformation to train despatcher as to movement of trains is fellow servant to fireman on train.

Cited in notes (50 L. R. A. 429) on what servants are deemed to be in same common employment apart from statutes, where no questions as to vice principalship arise; (25 L. R. A. 387) on train despatcher and telegraph operator as fellow servants of trainmen; (51 L. R. A. 590, 594) on vice principalship considered with reference to superior rank of negligent servant; (54 L. R. A. 39, 42, 90, 93, 94, 106) on vice principalship as determined with reference to character of act which caused injury.

Distinguished in Savage v. Nassau Electric R. Co. 42 App. Div. 244, 59 N. Y. Supp. 225, holding negligence of conductor in taking car out on wrong track on densely foggy morning imputable to motorman whose fellow servant he was.

Duties of master not subject to delegation.

Cited in Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Buch, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 287, 65 S. W. 681, and Franck v. American Tartar Co. 91 App. Div. 576, 87 N. Y. Supp. 219, holding master cannot absolve himself from duty of inspection by providing for inspection by servants generally competent; Hoes v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 73 App. Div. 368, 77 N. Y. Supp. 117, and Wallace v. Boston & M. R. Co. 72 N. H. 515, 57 Atl. 913, holding negligence of train despatcher in giving erroneous orders to trains, resulting in injury to locomotive engineer, is that of master; Rollings v. Levering, 18 App. Div. 228, 45 N. Y. Supp. 942, holding duty of master to provide safe appliances cannot be delegated; Yaw v. Whitmore, 37 App. Div. 102, 55 N. Y. Supp. 1091, holding master, furnishing cable reasonably proper for work, is not liable for break due to manner in which it was used; Joyce v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 92 Hun, 110, 36 N. Y. Supp. 731, holding question whether railroad was guilty of negligence on account of condition of drawheads of cars being coupled is for jury; Tully v. New York & T. S. S. Co. 10 App. Div. 468, 42 N. Y. Supp. 29, which holds for jury question of master's negligence where there is no evidence of any rules or regulations or any directions required to be given employees temporarily working on steamships of precautionary means for their safety; Byrne v. Eastmans Co. 163 N. Y. 465, 57 N. E. 738, holding proper inspection of appliances is question for jury; McGuire v. Bell Teleph. Co. 167 N. Y. 212, 52 L. R. A. 438, 60 N. E. 433, holding telephone company using poles under license not relieved of duty of inspection; Denenfeld v. Baumann, 40 App. Div. 505, 58 N. Y. Supp. 110, holding master not liable for manner in which safe freight elevator loaded; Hatton v. Hilton Bridge Constr. Co. 42 App. Div. 400, 59 N. Y. Supp. 272, holding master should provide clamps properly adjusted to prevent rod slipping on girder; Larkin v. Washington Mills Co. 45 App. Div. 9, 61 N. Y. Supp. 93, holding notice to shipping clerk in charge of employee and directing use of elevator of a defective spring out of order for some weeks is notice to employer; Scherer v. Holly Mfg. Co. 86 Hun, 41, 33 N. Y. Supp. 205, holding master responsible for injury due to faulty ladle which it was duty of another employee to keep in proper order.

Cited in note (43 L. R. A. 342, 347) on duties of master and servants as to rules promulgated as to safe conduct of business.

Distinguished in Ryan v. Third Ave. R. Co. 92 App. Div. 312, 86 N. Y. Supp. 1070, holding that cable railway company, having provided competent foreman to warn oiler in "pot-hole" of approach of car, is not responsible for foreman's negligence in performance of that duty; Galvin v. Pierce. 72 N. H. 83. 54 Atl. 1014, holding master not liable for injury to servant from improper direction of foreman respecting detail of service, which is subject of delegation; Dittman v. Edison Electric Illuminating Co. 87 App. Div. 70, 83 N. Y. Supp. 1078, questioning, without deciding, whether master liable for failure of servant to discover defect in common appliance like leather belt, when same might have been discovered had inspection been performed with greater care.

25 L. R. A. 399, PEOPLE v. CADY, 143 N. Y. 100, 60 N. Y. S. R. 474, 37 N. E. 673.

Right of inmates of public institution to vote.

Cited in People ex rel. McShane v. Hagen, 48 App. Div. 205, 62 N. Y. Supp. 816, holding unpaid helpers in public hospital not residents entitled to vote; Powell v. Spackman, 7 Idaho, 703, 54 L. R. A. 382, 65 Pac. 503, holding inmates of soldier's home cannot acquire right to vote in county where home is located.

25 L. R. A. 402, LYON v. MANHATTAN R. CO. 142 N. Y. 298, 31 Abb. N. C. 356, 52 N. Y. S. R. 860, 37 N. E. 113.

Physical examination before trial.

Cited in Easler v. Southern R. Co. 60 S. C. 120, 38 S. E. 258, holding plaintiff cannot be compelled to be physically examined by physician selected by opponent; McGovern v. Hope, 63 N. J. L. 80, 42 Atl. 830, upholding act providing for physical examination before trial; Camden & Suburban R. Co. v. Stetson, 177 U. S. 176, 44 L. ed. 722, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 617, holding circuit court of United States can order surgical examination of plaintiff before trial under state statute authorizing it; Chicago, R. I. & T. R. Co. v. Langston, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 578, 47 S. W. 1027 (dissenting opinion), majority holding railway entitled to have experts of its own selection in physical examination of plaintiff, who exposed her injuries to jury; Re Davies, 168 N. Y. 89, 56 L. R. A. 862, 61 N. E. 118, holding effect of physical examination is simply to qualify physicians to testify upon trial; Lawrence v. Samuels, 20 Misc. 280, 45 N. Y. Supp. 743, Affirming 20 Misc. 16, 44 N. Y. Supp. 602, denying right of counsel and referee to be present at physical examination of female plaintiff by female physician; Lawrence v. Samuels, 17 Misc. 559, 40 N. Y. Supp. 686, holding female plaintiff entitled of right to be examined physically by female instead of male physician; Neill v. Brooklyn Elev. R. Co. 13 Misc. 404, 34 N. Y. Supp. 1144, refusing to compel plaintiff to exhibit his knee to jury; People ex rel. Mosher v. Roosa, 43 App. Div. 612, 60 N. Y. Supp. 244, holding one who has obtained mandamus to determine right to become chief of police need not submit to physical examination; Campbell v. Joseph H. Bauland Co. 41 App. Div. 477, 58 N. Y. Supp. 984, holding plaintiff, though nonresident, should submit to physical examination which law authorizes; Green v. Middlesex Valley R. Co. 31 App. Div. 417, 53 N. Y. Supp. 500, holding depositions of physicians making physical examinations of injured plaintiff before action cannot be read in evidence when witnesses can be produced; Whitaker v. Staten Island Midland R. Co. 76 App. Div. 354, 78 N. Y. Supp. 410, holding statute giving right to physical examination before trial does not entitle defendant to second examination upon retrial.

Cited in footnotes to Wanek v. Winona, 46 L. R. A. 448, which sustains court's power to order physical examination of plaintiff under penalty of dismissal of action; Bagwell v. Atlanta Consol. Street R. Co. 47 L. R. A. 486, which holds action for injury to minor daughter should not be dismissed for her refusal, after attaining majority, to submit to physical examination; Stack v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 52 L. R. A. 328, and Austin & N. W. R. Co. v. Cluck, 64 L. R. A. 494, which denies power of court to order physical examination of plaintiff by physician, in action for personal injury, in absence of express legislative authority; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Huddleston, 36 L. R. A. 681, which holds production of plaintiff's urine for examination should be required where claim of disease of urine made; O'Brien v. La Crosse, 40 L. R. A. 831, which denies power of court to order examination as to condition of plaintiff's bladder under evidence that it might be dangerous; Lane v. Spokane Falls & N. R. Co. 46 L. R. A. 153, which sustains power of court to order physical examination of woman by experts in action for personal injuries; State v. Height, 59 L. R. A. 438, which holds unlawful, disclosures by physicians of knowledge as to venereal disease obtained by examination against his will of one accused of rape; Hall v. Manson, 34 L. R. A. 207, which denies right to reject measurement in jury's presence of woman's foot and leg 6 inches above ankle in suit for injuries; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Palmore, 64 L. R. A. 90, which holds that, in physical examination of plaintiff's eyes by defendant's physician, drugs may be used to dilate pupils, if not attended with serious discomfort or deleterious consequences.

Distinguished in Green v. Middlesex R. Co. 10 Misc. 474, 32 N. Y. Supp. 177, holding that where it is made to appear that defendant is ignorant of nature and extent of injuries, he has shown enough to entitle him to physical examination of plaintiff.

Deposition before trial.

Cited in Hanks Dental Asso. v. International Tooth Crown Co. 194 U. S. 310, 48 L. ed. 991, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 700, holding circuit court of United States without authority to order deposition of party to cause to be taken before trial.

Construction of statute.

Cited in Morgan v. Hedstrom, 164 N. Y. 230, 58 N. E. 26, holding statute and all its amendments must be read together as one act passed at same time; Gillin v. Canary, 19 Misc. 596, 44 N. Y. Supp. 313, holding that single section cannot be separated from provisions regulating jurisdiction of city court, as though such section contained everything necessary as independent enactment.

25 L. R. A. 406, FRANCIS v. WESTERN U. TELEG. CO. 58 Minn. 252, 49 Am. St. Rep. 507, 59 N. W. 1078.

Recovery for mental anguish because of failure to deliver telegram.

Cited in Peay v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 64 Ark. 543, 39 L. R. A. 466, footnote p. 463, 43 S. W. 965; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Ferguson, 157 Ind. 73, 54 L. R.

Å. 849, footnote p. 846, 60 N. E. 674; Connelly v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 100 Va. 60, 56 L. R. A. 668, 93 Am. St. Rep. 919, 40 S. E. 618, — holding that damages for mental suffering merely, caused by delay or nondelivery of telegram, cannot be recovered; Curtin v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 13 App. Div. 255, 42 N. Y. Supp. 1109, denying recovery for mental distress, due to failure to deliver telegram announcing brother's death; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Ferguson, 26 Ind. App. 218, 59 N. E. 416, transferring to supreme court, action in which recovery was asked for mental suffering due to failure to deliver telegram, and asking court to reverse rule; Cowan v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 64 L. R. A. 550, footnote p. 546, holding mental anguish and suffering resulting from failure to transmit telegraph message will support action for damages.

Cited in footnotes to Morton v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 32 L. R. A. 735, which denies sendee's right to recover for mental suffering alone, from failure to deliver telegram; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Crocker, 59 L. R. A. 398, which sustains recovery for mental anguish for failure to promptly deliver telegram announcing serious illness of grandchild.

Disapproved in Mentzer v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 93 Iowa, 756, 28 L. R. A. 73, footnote p. 72, 57 Am. St. Rep. 294, 62 N. W. 1. holding recovery may be had for mental suffering caused by nondelivery of telegram.

Liability of telegraph companies in general.

Cited in footnotes to Birkett v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 33 L. R. A. 404, which holds valid, condition against liability beyond amount paid for sending unrepeated message; Reed v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 34 L. R. A. 492, which holds void stipulation limiting liability for mistakes in transmitting unrepeated telegrams; Shaw v. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. 56 L. R. A. 487, which denies power to enforce in other state liability for mistakes in transmitting cipher telegram, without payment of additional fee required to insure against mistake; Simmons v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 57 L. R. A. 607, which sustains statute rendering telegraph companies liable for delay in delivering messages; Coit v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 53 L. R. A. 678, which holds transmission of telegram while wires working badly not gross negligence if wires working well when actually sent.

25 L. R. A. 414, ARTHUR v. OAKES, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 744, 11 C. C. A. 209, 24 U. S. App. 239, 63 Fed. 310.

Equitable jurisdiction; injunction to prevent employee quitting service.

Cited in Clemmitt v. Watson, 14 Ind. App. 42, 42 N. E. 367, declaring employee will not be compelled to specifically perform contract of service; Chain Belt Co. v. Von Spreckelsen, 117 Wis. 121, 94 N. W. 78, refusing preliminary injunction against workman quitting service, contrary to contract, where answer denied having acquired peculiar skill or knowledge in plaintiff's business; Longshore Printing Co. v. Howell, 26 Or. 542, 28 L. R. A. 472, 46 Am. St. Rep. 640, 38 Pac. 547, holding general strike inaugurated by labor union not unlawful, if purpose and means used to uphold it not illegal; Wabash R. Co. v. Hannahan, 121 Fed. 567, upholding right of employees, either singly or as labor organization, to impose conditions upon continuance to labor, unless restrained by contract obligations, or to quit work if conditions not complied with.

Cited in note (28 L. R. A. 470) on injunction against strikes.

Distinguished in Southern R. Co. v. Machinist's Local Union No. 14, 111

Fed. 56, holding that, while equity will not compel performance of employee's contract for personal services, it will enjoin others from enticing him to break contract.

— Injunction against "picketing."

Cited in Union P. R. Co. v. Ruef, 120 Fed. 125, upholding jurisdiction of equity to enjoin members of labor organization engaged in "picketing" if accompanied by acts of violence and intimidation; American Steel & Wire Co. v. Wire Drawers' & Die Makers' Unions Nos. 1 & 3, 90 Fed. 615, enjoining strikers from patrolling streets adjoining premises of corporation to dissuade others from taking employment; Beck v. Railway Teamsters' Protective Union, 118 Mich. 518, 42 L. R. A. 415, 74 Am. St. Rep. 421, 77 N. W. 13, enjoining maintenance of pickets and distribution of boycott circulars with intention to destroy business; Davis v. Zimmerman, 91 Hun, 493, 36 N. Y. Supp. 303, enjoining conspiracy to induce employees to leave service, and to prevent others from entering it, by means of intimidation; Southern R. Co. v. Machinists' Local Union No. 14, 111 Fed. 56, holding state statute making it unlawful to decoy or entice away any one under contract of employment strengthens common-law right of injunction.

— Injunction to prevent injury to business or property.

Cited in United States v. Elliott, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 154, 64 Fed. 32, holding equity may interfere to preserve rights of property, against threatened injury by strikers, in advance of its molestation and appropriation; Elder v. Whitesides, 72 Fed. 724, enjoining conspiracy to prevent loading or unloading of vessel except by labor acceptable to conspirators, although no overt act committed; Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. McConnell, 82 Fed. 80, holding ticket scalping may be enjoined to prevent injury to business of railroads; Wabash R. Co. v. Hannahan, 121 Fed. 565, holding bill alleging malicious conspiracy of officers of labor organizations to force recognition of union, to compel discharge of non-union men, and to interfere with operation of plaintiff's trains, the performance of its contracts, and the transportation of the mails,—sufficient to warrant temporary injunction; Oxley Stave Co. v. Coopers' International Union, 72 Fed. 698, holding combination and conspiracy to boycott goods of particular manufacturer is unlawful; Hopkins v. Oxley Stave Co. 28 C. C. A. 104, 49 U. S. App. 709, 83 Fed. 917, enjoining labor organizations from executing boycott against barrel manufacturer because of use of machine for hooping same; Matthews v. Shankland, 25 Misc. 614, 56 N. Y. Supp. 123, holding conspiracy on part of labor unions to boycott business of newspaper will be enjoined when irreparable injury probable.

Distinguished in Longshore Printing Co. v. Howell, 26 Or. 549, 28 L. R. A. 474, 46 Am. St. Rep. 640, 38 Pac. 547, refusing to enjoin boycott, where irreparable injury not apparent, although loss of business shown.

— Sufficiency of remedy at law.

Cited in Elder v. Whitesides, 72 Fed. 725, holding equitable jurisdiction to prevent interference with loading or unloading of vessel not taken away because threatened act is criminal; Vegelahn v. Guntner, 167 Mass. 99, 35 L. R. A. 724, 57 Am. St. Rep. 443, 44 N. E. 1077, holding that criminal nature of act of patrolling street in front of place of business, to intimidate others from entering employment of proprietor, not ground for refusing injunction; Storm v. Ben- nett, 91 Hun, 303, 36 N. Y. Supp. 290, canceling deed where destruction of trust in which plaintiff has contingent interest is averred, although no allegation that trustee insolvent.

Validity of combinations against personal or property rights.

Cited in Clemmitt v. Watson, 14 Ind. App. 42, 42 N. E. 367, holding agreement of employees to quit work unless another employee is discharged not actionable conspiracy; People v. McFarlin, 43 Misc. 600, 89 N. Y. Supp. 527, holding members of labor union may lawfully quit work, if demands not complied with, and persuade others to withdraw, but not threaten destruction of employer's business by malicious use of boycott; United States v. Cassidy, 67 Fed 764, holding combination of employees to quit work in order to injure business or property of third party having business relation with employer unlawful; Ferd Heim Brewing Co. v. Belinder, 97 Mo. App. 72, 71 S. W. 691, holding agreement between brewers not to sell beer to one indebted to either of them, unlawful combination.

Cited in footnote to United States v. Workingmen's Amalgamated Council, 26 L. R. A. 158, which holds stopping of transportation between states by strike in certain city unlawful restraint of commerce.

Distinguished in United States v. Debs, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 223, 64 Fed. 763, holding right of workmen to strike does not warrant conspiracy to do unlawful thing, and advise strike in accomplishment of such purpose.

Right to discharge employee.

Cited in Platt v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 65 Fed. 663, holding equity will not interfere to prevent discharge of employee upon ground that he is member of labor union; State ex rel. Zillmer v. Kreutzberg, 114 Wis. 535, 58 L. R. A. 751, 91 Am. St. Rep. 934, 90 N. W. 1098, refusing to sustain statute forbidding discharge of employee because member of union.

Jurisdiction of Federal courts.

Cited in Elder v. Whitesides, 72 Fed. 725, holding Federal court has jurisdiction of suit by alien to enjoin conspiracy by citizens of United States to prevent loading or unloading of vessel.

25 L. R. A. 414, note FARMERS' LOAN & T. CO. v. NORTHERN P. R. CO. 60 Fed. 803.

Conspiracy to injure business of another.

Modified in 25 L. R. A. 414, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 744, 11 C. C. A. 209, 24 U. S. App. 239, 63 Fed. 310.

Cited in Davis v. Zimmerman, 91 Hun, 492, restraining conspiracy formed with intent to intimidate people from seeking employment and to destroy business; American Steel & Wire Co. v. Wire Drawers' & Die Makers' Union Nos. 1 & 3, 90 Fed. 615, denying right of union to patrol street for purpose of forcibly preventing men seeking work to gain access to works of manufacturer; State ex rel. Durner v. Huegin, 110 Wis. 259, 62 L. R. A. 745, 85 N. W. 1046, holding executed conspiracy to inflict malicious injury is actionable; Union P. R. Co. v. Ruef, 120 Fed. 105, upholding jurisdiction of equity to enjoin members of labor organization engaged in "picketing" if accompanied by acts of violence and intimidation; State ex rel. Durner v. Huegin, 110 Wis. 189, 62 L. R. A. 745, 85 N. W. 1046, holding that a combination of newspaper proprietors to compel another newspaper to reduce its rates for advertising or lose customers, is within a statute punishing conspiracy to maliciously injure the business of another.

Relief to employees against acts of receiver.

Cited in Thomas v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 62 Fed. 18, holding employees may apply to court for relief from reduction in wages by receiver of railroad.

Cited in note (28 L. R. A. 468) on injunction against strikes.

25 L. R. A. 434, STATE v. BUTLER, 8 Wash. 194, 40 Am. St. Rep. 900, 35 Pac. 1093.

When attempt to commit crime indictable.

Cited in Cornwell v. Fraternal Acci. Asso. 6 N. D. 203, 40 L. R. A. 439, 69 N. W. 191, holding that one who has started to hunt prairie chickens with loaded gun, at unlawful season, has not committed offense of attempting to kill prairie chickens; Com. v. Hutchinson, 6 Pa. Super. Ct. 408, 42 W. N. C. 141, holding incitement to incendiarism an indictable offense; United States v. Dietrich, 126 Fed. 667, holding agreement of member of Congress to accept money from candidate for postmaster, in consideration of influence in securing appointment, and agreement of candidate to pay same, not conspiracy.

Cited in footnotes to Groves v. State, 59 L. R. A. 598, which holds mere preparatory acts for commission of crime not an attempt; People v. Youngs, 47 L. R. A. 108, which holds preparation for committing burglary prevented by arrest while proceeding towards house not an attempt.

Annotation in 25 L. R. A. 434 referred to with approval in Reed v. Maley, 115 Ky. 827, 62 L. R. A. 904, 74 S. W. 1079 (dissenting opinion), majority denying right of action to woman for mere solicitation to sexual intercourse.

25 L. R. A. 441, WEST PUB. CO. v. LAWYERS' CO-OP. PUB. CO. 64 Fed. 360.

Reversed in 35 L. R. A. 400, 25 C. C. A. 648, 51 U. S. App. 216, 79 Fed. 761.

25 L. R. A. 449, STATE v. BEHRMAN, 114 N. C. 797, 19 S. E. 220.

Opinion evidence.

Cited in Sherrill v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 117 N. C. 363, 23 S. E. 277, permitting evidence of appearance of mental anguish by one in whose home the one so suffering lived and constantly associated.

Proof of laws of foreign state.

Cited in footnotes to Jackson v. Jackson, 34 L. R. A. 773, which allows lawyer of other state claiming to be familiar with its law as to marriage to prove the same; Goodwin v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. 32 L. R. A. 473, which holds volume of laws of foreign state not purporting to have been published under authority of legislature, nor shown to be commonly admitted in evidence in such state, not evidence.

Cited in note (40 L. R. A. 574) on law books as evidence.

Right of accused to confront witnesses.

Cited in State v. Mitchell, 119 N. C. 786, 25 S. E. 783, holding right to be confronted by presence of accuser waived in objection to testimony of prosecutrix taken on previous trial is not based on that ground.

Cited in footnote to People v. Elliott, 60 L. R. A. 318, which sustains right to read on second trial testimony of witness dying after first trial.

25 L. R. A. 470, CANADIAN P. R. CO. v. JOHNSTON, 9 C. C. A. 587, 26 U. S. App. 85, 61 Fed. 738.

Who are fellow servants.

Cited in notes (46 L. R. A. 352) on when conductor is deemed to be coservant of other railroad employees; (51 L. R. A. 579, 591) on vice principalship considered with reference to superior rank of negligent servant.

Statute of limitations.

Cited in Hobbs v. National Bank of Commerce, 37 C. C. A. 514, 96 Fed. 397, holding statute of limitations of state applies to action against stockholder of corporation of that state but resident of another state.

Cited in note (48 L. R. A. 638) as to when statute of limitation will govern action in another state or country.

25 L. R. A. 477, Re PICKENS, 163 Pa. 14, 29 Atl. 875.

Presumption as to legitimacy.

Cited in Eddy's Estate, 8 Pa. Dist. R. 701, and Leaming's Estate, 25 Pa. Co. Ct. 441, holding that to repel presumption, evidence must be strong, satisfactory, and conclusive; Wile's Estate, 6 Pa. Super. Ct. 442, 41 W. N. C. 575, holding presumption that married relation exists may be overcome by reputation and by presumption of legitimacy of issue of second marriage; Staiger's Estate, 7 Pa. Dist. R. 354, holding presumption as to legitimacy is almost conclusive where parents for many years maintained family relation under general reputation of being husband and wife.

Proof of identity.

Cited in Arnold v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 68, holding that information obtained from mother-in-law of person's son, competent to prove identity; Re Charles, 33 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 222, holding pedigree and relationship of decedent may be shown by testimony of witness to family tradition and declarations of relatives.

Cited in footnotes to Young v. State, 47 L. R. A. 548, which holds man's declarations as to own history and pedigree provable after his death for purpose of identification; Re Hurlburt, 35 L. R. A. 794, which holds general reputation in family as to death of member, not derived from deceased members of family, inadmissible.

Cited in note (41 L. R. A. 449) on entries in family Bible or other religious books as evidence.

Right of participation in estate of decedent.

Cited in Re Peterson, 34 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 299, holding right to participate in distribution may be raised upon audit or adjudication of account of executor or administrator.

25 L. R. A. 480, STATE ex rel. ALLISON v. BLAKE, 57 N. J. L. 6, 29 Atl. 417.

Restrictions upon elective franchise.

Followed in Allison v. Englewood Twp. 58 N. J. L. 141, 32 Atl. 688. and Allison

v. Corker, 67 N. J. L. 596, 60 L. R. A. 567, 52 Atl. 362, holding public roads and parks act of 1893, limiting right to vote for road commissioners to freeholders of district, unconstitutional.

Cited in State ex rel. Kimball v. Hendee, 57 N. J. L. 308, 30 Atl. 894, holding women cannot vote for school trustees; McArdle v. Jersey City, 66 N. J. L. 596, 88 Am. St. Rep. 496, 49 Atl. 1013, holding provision of statute that no ballot shall contain name of more than one person for excise commissioner, where two are to be voted for, in conflict with constitutional provision giving right to vote for all elective officers; Eagle County v. Love, 26 Colo. 305, 57 Pac. 1080, holding general assembly impliedly prohibited from adding other or different qualifications to legal voters at election for removal of county seat.

Cited in footnotes to Taylor v. Bleakley, 28 L. R. A. 683, which upholds legislative power to adopt reasonable restrictions on exercise of elective franchise; Boyd v. Mills, 25 L. R. A. 486, which holds valid, act disfranchising all persons bearing arms against United States; State v. Old, 31 L. R. A. 837, which holds valid, act making it a crime to vote without proof of payment of poll-tax.

Distinguished in Harris v. Burr, 32 Or. 360, 39 L. R. A. 771, 52 Pac. 17, holding women may vote for director of school district at school meeting.

Legislative discretion as to political subdivisions of state.

Cited in footnote to State ex rel. Guerguin v. McAllister, 28 L. R. A. 523, which upholds statute authorizing each city ward to elect one alderman.

Distinguished in Allison v. Corker, 67 N. J. L. 596, 60 L. R. A. 570, 52 Atl. 362, upholding constitutionality of statute giving power of local township government to road and lamp districts thereby created.

Regulation of elections.

Cited in footnotes to Moyer v. Van de Vanter, 29 L. R. A. 670, which authorizes counting of ballots cast in good faith with official stamp or election officers' initials omitted; Cole v. Tucker, 29 L. R. A. 668, which sustains statute making official ballot compulsory in city elections and optional in town elections; Jones v. Skinner, 40 L. R. A. 752, which denies purser's power by living on boat to change voting residence to other district of same city.

25 L. R. A. 486, BOYD v. MILLS, 53 Kan. 594, 42 Am. St. Rep. 306, 37 Pac. 16.

Effect of ballot laws on rights of voters.

Cited in Lynip v. Buckner, 22 Nev. 439, 30 L. R. A. 357, 41 Pac. 762, holding valid, ballots from which inspectors unintentionally omitted to take strips containing numbers; Taylor v. Bleakley, 55 Kan. 11, 28 L. R. A. 687, 49 Am. St. Rep. 233, 39 Pac. 1045, holding ballots not marked with cross upon proper place should not be counted; Slaymaker v. Phillips, 5 Wyo. 466, 47 L. R. A. 847, 40 Pac. 971, holding official stamp with name or initials of a judge of election must appear on exterior of ballot when folded; Hope v. Flentge, 140 Mo. 413, 47 L. R. A. 828, 41 S. W. 1002 (dissenting opinion), majority holding mandatory, provision of ballot law requiring voter to cross out the groups of officers he does not wish to vote; Stackpole v. Hallahan, 16 Mont. 56, 28 L. R. A. 508, 40 Pac. 80, refusing to disfranchise voters because of defects in nominating certificate, provisions of which were not made mandatory by statute; Jones v. State, 153 Ind. 451, 55 N. E. 229, sustaining election where absence of party emblem at head of ticket could not have deceived voters; Nall v. Tinsley, 107 Ky. 460, 54 S. W. 187 (dissenting opinion), majority holding local option election valid, notwithstanding ballots too thin.

Cited in note (25 L. R. A. 483) on how far right to vote is absolute.

Ex post facto law.

Cited in footnote to People ex rel. Chandler v. McDonald, 29 L. R. A. 334, which holds statute not ex post facto for abrogating provision for change of magistrate or of venue for prejudice.

25 L. R. A. 491, ROGERS v. KENNEBEC S. B. CO. 86 Me. 261, 29 Atl. 1069.

Stipulations exempting carrier from liability for negligence to passenger.

Cited in Doyle v. Fitchburg R. Co. 166 Mass. 495, 33 L. R. A. 846, 55 Am. St. Rep. 417, 44 N. E. 611, holding railroad cannot relieve itself from liability to employee riding on ticket with stipulation relieving it, where ticket given to one living in one part of line and working in another; Payne v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. 157 Ind. 619, 56 L. R. A. 474, footnote p. 472, 62 N. E. 472, holding stipulation in pass releasing carrier from liability for negligence, valid; Duncan v. Maine C. R. Co. 113 Fed. 509, holding one riding on pass usually bound to perform conditions on which it was granted; Northern P. R. Co. v. Adams, 192 U. S. 452, 48 L. ed. 517, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 408, holding condition in gratuitous pass exempting carrier from liability for negligence, not against public policy.

Cited in footnote to Crary v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 59 L. R. A. 815, which requires proof of negligence causing injury to passenger using excursion ticket by which passenger assumes risk of accident.

Who are passengers.

Cited in Citizens Street R. Co. v. Jolly, 161 Ind. 88, 67 N. E. 935, holding person stepping upon step of rear platform of car, which has stopped to take on passengers, with intention to take passage thereon, is passenger; Haselton v. Portsmouth, K. & Y. Street R. Co. 71 N. H. 591, 53 Atl. 1016, holding physical contact with car unnecessary to constitute one a passenger.

25 L. R. A. 499, WRIGHT v. WOODCOCK, 86 Me. 113, 29 Atl. 953.

Right to cut and remove ice.

Cited in footnotes to Eidemiller Ice Co. v. Guthrie, 28 L. R. A. 581, which holds right to take ice from pond in non-navigable stream, in owner of land as against owner of pond with right of flowage; Becker v. Hall, 56 L. R. A. 573, which holds marking, staking, or cleaning ice not thick enough for harvesting, insufficient appropriation; Sanborn v. People's Ice Co. 51 L. R. A. 829, which holds taking of ice in large quantities from public lake not exercise of common right in its waters.

Liability for damming water.

Cited in note (59 L. R. A. 853) on liability for damming back water of stream.

25 L. R. A. 502, KINGSLEY v. GOULDSBORO LAND IMPROV. CO. 86 Me. 279, 29 Atl. 1074.

When way by necessity exists.

Followed in Hildreth v. Googins, 91 Me. 228, 39 Atl. 550, denying right of way by necessity over land of grantor when grantee's property borders on sea.

Cited in Burlew v. Hunter, 41 App. Div. 152, 58 N. Y. Supp. 453, discussing right of way by necessity where land bordered on navigable lake.

Cited in footnotes to Ellis v. Blue Mountain Forest Asso. 42 L. R. A. 570, which denies right of way by necessity for tract entirely surrounded by other person's land in absence of unity of ownership; Ritchey v. Welsh, 40 L. R. A. 105, which holds way by necessity created by partition on lands in same manner as if parcel sold by ancestor; Lebus v. Boston, 47 L. R. A. 79, which holds parol evidence that grantor agreed he should have no passway over land conveyed admissible to rebut implied reservation of way of necessity.

Distinguished in Grammar School v. Jeffrey's Neck Pasture, 174 Mass. 574, 55 N. E. 462, sustaining way of necessity over land bordering on navigable water, where it appears that for two hundred and fifty years the land had been used for pasturage.

25 L. R. A. 503, MITCHELL v. ABBOTT, 86 Me. 338, 41 Am. St. Rep. 559, 29 Atl. 1118.

When performance must be in reasonable time.

Cited in Donworth v. Sawyer, 94 Me. 251, 47 Atl. 521, holding right of selection of certain number of acres in deed to tenant in common, no time being fixed, must be made within reasonable time, or it is lost.

Distinguished in Wheeler v. Harrison, 94 Md. 156, 50 Atl. 523, holding agreement to pay for obtaining release of obligation to pay subscription to stock not mere offer which lapsed before release obtained at end of seven years.

Reward for detection of criminal.

Cited in footnote to Haskell v. Davidson, 42 L. R. A. 155, which holds person informing proper person of facts necessary to secure arrest and conviction of unknown perpetrator of crime entitled to reward for his "arrest and conviction."

25 L. R. A. 504, STATE v. EDWARDS, 86 Me. 102, 41 Am. St. Rep. 528, 29 Atl. 947.

Waiver of rights.

Cited in Latimer v. Equitable Loan & Invest. Co. 81 Fed. 781, holding statutory right to withdraw from loan association cannot be waived; Dennis v. Moses, 18 Wash. 588, 40 L. R. A. 313, 52 Pac. 333 (dissenting opinion), majority holding stipulation in mortgage waiving statutory right of possession during time for redemption, of no effect.

Regulation of matters of public use.

Cited in Briggs v. Hunton, 87 Me. 151, 47 Am. St. Rep. 318, 32 Atl. 794, holding price for service of stallion may be recovered, though animal not registered, when not kept for public use.

Cited in note (33 L. R. A. 182) on legislative power to fix tolls, rates, or prices.

25 L. R. A. 506, WILLIAMSON v. LACEY, 86 Me. 80, 29 Atl. 943.

Immunity for official acts.

Cited in Raymond v. Lowe, 87 Me. 329, 32 Atl. 964, holding justice protected from suit for injury resulting to party arrested and brought before him judicially, for honest error of judgment; Webb v. Fisher, 109 Tenn. 709, 60 L. R.

A. 793, 97 Am. St. Rep. 863, 72 S. W. 110, holding judge not liable in damages to attorney against whom he has maliciously entered decree of disbarment.

Cited in footnotes to Tillman v. Beard, 46 L. R. A. 215, which denies liability of village president for procuring arrest for violating void ordinance; Webb v. Fisher, 60 L. R. A. 791, which holds judge not subject to private action for corruptly entering decree disbarring attorney; Scott v. Fishplate, 30 L. R. A. 696, which denies liability of mayor to civil action for imprisonment for contempt.

25 L. R. A. 508, HICKS v. CITIZENS' R. CO. 124 Mo. 115, 27 S. W. 542.

When negligence question for jury.

Cited in Montgomery v. Lansing City Electric R. Co. 103 Mich. 55, 29 L. R. A. 290, 61 N. W. 543, holding proximate cause of injury for jury where gripman of street car saw persons in dangerous situation; Citizens' Street R. Co. v. Albright, 14 Ind. App. 438, 42 N. E. 238, holding contributory negligence of one driving across track is for jury, when evidence is that motorman could have seen driver about to cross track, and did not attempt to prevent collision; Robinson v. Louisville R. Co. 50 C. C. A. 359, 112 Fed. 486, holding that jury should determine whether motorman could have prevented collision with plaintiff's wagon trying to turn out of track; Citizens' Rapid Transit Co. v. Seigrist, 96 Tenn. 124, 33 S. W. 920, holding negligence and contributory negligence for jury where one driving across track of street railway at street crossing thought he had time to cross ahead of approaching car; Ames v. Waterloo & C. F. Rapid Transit Co. 120 Iowa, 662, 95 N. W. 161 (dissenting opinion), majority holding directed verdict for defendant proper, in action for death, where deceased in full possession of senses, and with unobstructed view, stepped in front of street car running at unlawful speed.

Duty of persons crossing railway track.

Cited in Bunyan v. Citizens' R. Co. 127 Mo. 18, 29 S. W. 842, holding that it is duty of pedestrian approaching street car track to ascertain if cars are approaching, and avoid injury therefrom; Hays v. Tacoma R. & Power Co. 106 Fed. 48, holding pedestrian crossing street railway track not negligent in assuming, from observations, that collision will not occur if car running at lawful speed.

Cited in footnotes to Johnson v. St. Paul City R. Co. 36 L. R. A. 586, which holds failure of aged person riding with another to look or listen for street car not negligence; Citizens' R. Co. v. Ford, 46 L. R. A. 457, which holds ordinance requiring person "riding or driving" to check up or halt at crossing not applicable to electric car; Garrity v. Detroit Citizens' Street R. Co. 37 L. R. A. 529, which holds driving fire truck at speed preventing stopping before collision with street car at crossing negligence.

Care required of street railways as to persons on or near track.

Cited in Bunyan v. Citizens' R. Co. 127 Mo. 19, 29 S. W. 842, holding that it is duty of gripman of street car to keep lookout for persons on, or approaching track, and avoid injuring them, if in danger.

Cited in footnotes to Everett v. Los Angeles Consol. Electric R. Co. 34 L. R. A. 350, which sustains motorman's right to assume that bicyclists in front of car will get out of danger; Montgomery v. Lansing City Electric R. Co. 29 L. R. A. 287, which holds negligent, motorman running with lever in next the fastest notch until within a few feet of band parading street; Richmond R. & Electric Co. v. Garthright, 32 L. R. A. 220, which holds company liable for accident resulting from overloading and unlawful speed of street car; Cincinnati Street R. Co. v. Wright, 32 L. R. A. 340, which holds boy catching ride on private vehicle not chargeable with driver's negligence, so as to prevent recovery for injury due to negligence of street railway company.

Distinguished in Consolidated Traction Co. v. Haight, 59 N. J. L. 579, 37 Atl. 135, holding it duty of motorman to keep car in control when approaching truck traveling ahead of it in track; Moore v. Kansas City & I. Rapid Transit R. Co. 126 Mo. 273, 29 S. W. 9, holding that greater care is needed on part of street railways in more thickly populated portion of city than where thinly settled.

25 L. R. A. 514, GIRARD v. ST. LOUIS CAR-WHEEL CO. 123 Mo. 358, 45 Am. St. Rep. 556, 27 S. W. 648.

Tender back of amount received under settlement before action.

Cited in Dwyer v. Wabash R. Co. 66 Mo. App. 337, holding where fraud, or deception charged in execution of settlement contract with railroad for personal injury, return or tender of amount received not required; Sanford v. Royal Ins. Co. 11 Wash. 666, 40 Pac. 609, holding that return of amount received on settlement of loss under fire insurance policy need not be tendered where it is evident that it would be rejected; Sanford v. Royal Ins. Co. 11 Wash. 661, 40 Pac. 609, sustaining action on fire insurance policies without requiring cancelation in equity of release of liability signed by insured; Winter v. Kansas City Cable R. Co. 160 Mo. 190, 61 S. W. 606, Affirming 73 Mo. App. 203, setting aside compromise of judgment against railway company in favor of infant ordered by court on misstatement of facts without offer to return amount paid under it; Smith v. Kander, 85 Mo. App. 36, holding rescission of settlement of judgment, obtained without fraud, not warranted without return or offer to return amount received.

Criticized in Lyons v. Allen, 11 App. D. C. 551, holding laborer cannot sue contractor for injuries while in his employ without offering to return amount received on settlement therefor.

Sufficiency of tender.

Cited in Steckel v. Standley, 107 Iowa, 700, 77 N. W. 489, holding tender on mortgage valid though not in hand, where one making it could have got money in gold in a few minutes if he had not been assured by owner it would not be received.

When fraud in contract no defense to action at law.

Cited in Dwyer v. Wabash R. Co. 66 Mo. App. 337, holding that question of fraud in execution of lease to railway for personal injury, may be determined in action for injury.

Distinguished in Koffman v. Southwest Missouri Electric R. Co. 95 Mo. App. 472, 68 S. W. 212, holding that in action at law on verbal agreement to furnish continued medical attendance, evidence is not admissible to show that substituted written agreement signed by injured party was procured through fraud; Och v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 130 Mo. 41, 36 L. R. A. 446, 31 S. W. 962 (Approved in dissenting opinion), Dwyer v. Wabash R. Co. 66 Mo. App. 337, holding that fraud in inducing injured woman to sign release to railway cannot be tried in action at law for damages for such injury.

Objections not available on appeal.

Cited in Kelly v. Thuey, 143 Mo. 437, 45 S. W. 300, holding that objection to insufficiency of answer not objected to or in any way raised at trial cannot be availed of for first time on appeal.

25 L. R. A. 523, AKIN v. JONES, 93 Tenn. 353, 42 Am. St. Rep. 921, 27 S. W. 669.

When trust impressed on property of insolvent estate.

Cited in Hallam v. Tillinghast, 19 Wash. 27, 52 Pac. 329, holding trust not created by collection of draft by bank, without request that specific money be set aside; Sayles v. Cox, 95 Tenn. 582, 32 L. R. A. 723, 49 Am. St. Rep. 940, 32 S. W. 626, holding insolvent bank receiving note and mortgage for collection, and collecting same, before general assignment, not trustee; Friberg v. Cox, 97 Tenn. 553, 37 S. W. 283, and Williams v. Cox, 97 Tenn. 559, 37 S. W. 282, holding that where check is received by insolvent bank and credited as cash, the relation of debtor and creditor arises, and depositor loses right of reclamation; Williams v. Cox, 97 Tenn. 559, 37 S. W. 282, holding that where credit is given for proceeds of check, and paying bank fails same day, the presumption is that it was given before failure; Showalter v. Cox, 97 Tenn. 549, 37 S. W. 286, holding that where check is sent to insolvent bank for collection, and by bank examiner forwarded, proceeds received by receiver of bank belonged to owner; Bruner v. First Nat. Bank, 97 Tenn. 543, 34 L. R. A. 534, 37 S. W. 286, and Klepper v. Cox, 97 Tenn. 537, 34 L. R. A. 537, 56 Am. St. Rep. 823, 37 S. W. 284, holding that proceeds of check mingled with funds of bank before its failure cannot be identified and reclaimed; Union Nat. Bank v. Citizens Bank, 153 Ind. 54, 54 N. E. 97, holding that relation of trustee is not created by bank collecting note, and sending remittance by draft, which is not paid before failure; Arbuckle Bros. v. Kirkpatrick, 98 Tenn. 230, 36 L. R. A. 288, 60 Am. St. Rep. 854, 39 S. W. 3, holding trust in favor of consignors of goods sold by agents cannot be impressed on funds in hands of assignee of agents.

Cited in note (32 L. R. A. 718) on trust in proceeds of collection made by bank when insolvent.

Effect of check.

Cited in footnotes to Cincinnati H. & D. R. Co. v. Metropolitan Nat. Bank, 31 L. R. A. 653, which holds acceptance of check necessary to give holder right of action against bank for refusal to pay; Raesser v. National Exch. Bank, 56 L. R. A. 174, which holds bank's authority to pay check working assignment pro tanto of fund, not revoked by depositor's death.

25 L. R. A. 527, CAIRO, V. & C. R. CO. v. BREVOORT, 62 Fed. 129.

Liability for diversion of surface water.

Cited in Brandenberg v. Zeigler, 62 S. C. 20, 55 L. R. A. 416, 89 Am. St. Rep. 887, 39 S. E. 790, holding that water collected in basin surrounded by hills, depending entirely on rain, and sometimes completely dry, not stream, but surface water which cannot be drained onto land of neighboring owner; Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. v. Smith, 72 Miss. 683, 27 L. R. A. 763, footnote p. 762, 48 Am. St. Rep. 579, 17 So. 78, holding railroad not liable for damage to growing crop by maintenance of embankment where flood occurred through natural causes, and referring particularly to annotation in 25 L. R. A. 527.

Cited in footnotes to Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Davis, 32 L. R. A. 262, which holds railroad company liable for increased overflow of surface water by embankment; Brandenberg v. Zeigler, 55 L. R. A. 414, which denies owner's right to drain surface water from pond on neighbor's land, by cutting through natural rim of basin.

Disapproved in effect in New York, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Speelman, 12 Ind. App. 379, 40 N. E. 541, holding that water escaping from channel of stream in flood time is mere surface water and that railroad is not liable for obstructing same by its embankments.

Injunction against interference with easement.

Cited in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith, 63 C. C. A. 3, 123 Fed. 3, holding that equity has jurisdiction to prevent, by injunction, interference with easement of railroad company in right of way; Sullivan v. Dooley, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 591, 73 S. W. 82, holding that filling of low places in stream, and construction of levee which will cause stream to unnaturally overflow lands of riparian owner, may be enjoined.

25 L. R. A. 535, BARROWS v. SYCAMORE, 150 Ill. 588, 41 Am. St. Rep. 400, 37 N. E. 1096.

Power of city over use of streets.

Cited in Cicero Lumber Co. v. Cicero, 176 Ill. 25, 42 L. R. A. 703, 68 Am. St. Rep. 155, 51 N. E. 758, holding that municipality may exclude traffic from street intended to be pleasure driveway, but cannot make it discretionary with board of trustees; Doyle v. Sycamore, 193 Ill. 505, 61 N. E. 1117, Affirming 81 Ill. App. 594, refusing to sustain action for damage to property by erection of stand-pipe, against which statute of limitation had run; Pennsylvania Co. v. Chicago, 181 Ill. 296, 53 L. R. A. 226, 54 N. E. 825, holding that city cannot grant exclusive use of streets to any private person for private purpose; McWethy v. Aurora Electric Light & P. Co. 202 Ill. 225, 67 N. E. 9, holding that municipality may lawfully authorize erection of electric lighting poles in streets by private corporation or individual.

Cited in footnote to Eddy v. Granger, 28 L. R. A. 517, which denies power of city to give vested right to maintain private drain in highway.

Cited in note (61 L. R. A. 77) on right of public to use of highway.

When special damage must be shown.

Cited in Cicero Lumber Co. v. Cicero, 176 Ill. 29, 42 L. R. A. 705, 68 Am. St. Rep. 155, 51 N. E. 758, holding that one whose business requires use of certain street suffers special damage when excluded from its use for traffic teams; Chicago General R. Co. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 181 Ill. 610, 54 N. E. 1026, refusing to enjoin building abutments in street which would not interfere with running of plaintiff's cars.

25 L. R. A. 538, WILMINGTON v. VANDEGRIFT, 1 Marv. (Del.) 5, 65 Am. St. Rep. 256, 29 Atl. 1047.

Jurisdiction of municipal courts.

Cited in Zuchowski v. State, 3 Penn. (Del.) 340, 51 Atl. 877, and State ex rel. Ward v. Churchman, 3 Penn. (Del.) 177, 49 Atl. 381, holding that municipal court of city of Wilmington is inferior court within scope of constitutional provision as to establishment of such courts.

Liability of city for injury from acts permitted.

Cited in Jones v. Williamsburg, 97 Va. 727, 47 L. R. A. 302, 34 S. E. 883, denying recovery against city for injury to pedestrian by bicycle ridden on sidewalk; Landau v. New York, 90 App. Div. 55, 85 N. Y. Supp. 616, holding city not liable in damages for injury from explosion of fireworks.

Relation of municipal agents to state.

Cited in State ex rel. Ward v. Churchman, 3 Penn. (Del.) 373, 51 Atl. 49, holding municipal agencies are agents of state as well.

25 L. R. A. 543, SULLIVAN v. SULLIVAN TIMBER CO. 103 Ala. 371, 15 So. 941.

Jurisdiction.

Cited in Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Harrison, 122 Ala. 154, 82 Am. St. Rep. 68, 25 So. 697, holding court without jurisdiction in attachment for tort in another state; Smith v. State, 103 Ala. 69, 15 So. 866, holding city court has jurisdiction of action for injuries occurring within limits designated in statute, although outside of city.

When corporation is doing business in state.

Cited in International Cotton Seed Oil Co. v. Wheelock, 124 Ala. 370, 27 So. 517, holding that continuity of business may be inferred, giving jurisdiction of action against corporation, from course of business before and after suit brought; International Cotton Seed Oil Co. v. Wheelock, 124 Ala. 370, 27 So. 517, holding that business is not done by agent when everything to consummate sale except transmission of mutual propositions is independent of agent; State v. Anniston Rolling Mills, 125 Ala. 123, 27 So. 921, holding that manufacturing company is not doing business as corporation subjecting it to license tax when all that is done are mere incidents to preservation of property; Denson v. Chattanooga Nat. Bldg. & L. Asso. 46 C. C. A. 637, 107 Fed. 780, holding that foreign loan association is doing business in state when it lends money to residents and takes real-estate mortgages as collateral; Chattanooga Nat. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Denson, 189 U. S. 414, 47 L. ed. 874, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 630, holding that building and loan association of another state taking mortgage on real estate in Alabama is doing business in latter state, although contract drawn in other state, and made payable there.

25 L. R. A. 546, ELMIRA SAV. BANK v. DAVIS, 142 N. Y. 590, 37 N. E. 646. Reversed in 161 U. S. 275, 40 L. ed. 700, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 502.

Illegal preference by insolvent corporation.

Approved in Miller v. Miller Knitting Co. 23 Misc. 408, 52 N. Y. Supp. 184, upholding mortgage given after insolvency to secure debt incurred before, under agreement at that time to secure debt.

Distinguished in Mathews v. Hardt, 79 App. Div. 579, 80 N. Y. Supp. 462, holding that agreement by corporation that seller of goods to it should at all times have lien on all corporate assets gives seller unlawful preference as to property taken thereunder within four months before it is adjudicated a bankrupt.

— By insolvent bank.

Cited in O'Brien v. Grant, 146 N. Y. 176, 28 L. R. A. 365, footnote p. 361, 40 N. E. 871, holding payment of checks on insolvent bank by member of clearing house in accordance with previous contract, not illegal preference; Stone v. Jenison, 111 Mich. 604, 36 L. R. A. 680, 70 N. W. 149, holding payments to depositor on morning of day bank was compelled to close, not preference.

Cited in footnotes to Chemical Nat. Bank v. Armstrong, 28 L. R. A. 231, which denies right to deduct credit for collections from collateral made after declared insolvency of national bank; James Clark Co. v. Colton, 49 L. R. A. 698, which holds void, payment by insolvent bank of check of company in which bank president chief stockholder and of note on which directors are indorsers; Standard Oil Co. v. Hawkins, 33 L. R. A. 739, which holds proving claim as general creditor against bank receiver not conclusive election against following fund fraudulently obtained; O'Brien v. East River Bridge Co. 48 L. R. A. 122, which upholds notice by insolvent bank director to corporation of which he is president on signing of check for withdrawal of notes deposited; Woodhouse v. Crandall, 58 L. R. A. 385, which requires entire balance in insolvent bank, to be turned over to beneficiary of trust fund exceeding such balance.

Bank's liability to depositors.

Cited in Capital Nat. Bank v. Coldwater Nat. Bank, 49 Neb. 789, 59 Am. St. Rep. 572, 69 N. W. 115, holding proceeds of note received by bank for collection only cannot be mingled with its funds to defeat claim of owner against receiver.

Cited in footnote to State Sav. Bank v. Foster, 42 L. R. A. 404, which holds bank holding certificate of deposit of other bank for amount of which it has given credit on its own books not within statute making stockholders liable to depositors.

Distinguished in Davis v. Knipp, 92 Hun, 301, 36 N. Y. Supp. 705, denying right to set off against holder of note of defendant claim purchased subsequent to insolvency of holder and before appointment of receiver for it.

Clearing house business.

Cited in note (25 L. R. A. 831) on clearing house business.

25 L. R. A. 552, ILLINGSWORTH v. BOSTON ELECTRIC LIGHT CO. 161 Mass. 583, 37 N. E. 778.

Care due licensees and others from electric company.

Cited in Barker v. Boston Electric Light Co. 178 Mass. 510, 60 N. E. 2, holding electric lighting company bound to use reasonable care for protection of members of fire alarm department using its poles under license to city; Perham v. Portland Electric Co. 33 Or. 476, 40 L. R. A. 809, 72 Am. St. Rep. 730, 53 Pac. 14, holding that workman repairing bridge over which electric wires strung has right to assume that they are properly protected; Wagner v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. 69 App. Div. 350, 74 N. Y. Supp. 809, holding lineman of city police department repairing city wire carried over structure of elevated railroad for hire, entitled to recover for injury from uninsulated trolley wire belonging to defendant; Knowlton v. Des Moines Edison Light Co. 117 Iowa. 456, 90 N. W. 818, holding electric lighting company having wires supported on poles which support other electrical wires, negligent if it fails to use proper insulation to protect linemen of other companies; Geismann v. Missouri-Edison Electric Co. 173 Mo. 678, 73 S. W. 654, holding it duty of electric lighting company to use every protection reasonably accessible to insulate its wires, to use utmost care to keep them so, and that death of sign hanger through contact with wire defectively insulated conclusive proof of negligence; Fitzgerald v. Edison Electric Light Co. 19 Lanc. L. Rev. 339, holding lighting company permitting electric wire strung 13 inches above roof of building to become uninsulated, liable for injury to painter; Riley v. New England Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 184 Mass. 155, 68 N. E. 17, by Lathrop, J., dissenting, who holds that statute imposing liability upon proprietors of telegraph poles and wires for injuries caused thereby, not applicable to injuries from poles of telephone, electric light, or power companies.

Cited in footnotes to Hector v. Boston Electric Light Co. 25 L. R. A. 554, which holds no duties assumed by electric light company to employees of telegraph company allowed to use former's support for wires; Mitchell v. Raleigh Electric Co. 55 L. R. A. 398, which sustains telephone company employee's right to presume that electric light wires properly insulated; Giraudi v. Electric Improv. Co. 28 L. R. A. 596, which holds failure to raise electric light wires on roof of hotel high enough to prevent shock, negligence.

Cited in notes (46 L. R. A. 99) on right of servant to recover damages from persons other than his master for injuries received in performance of duties; (32 L. R. A. 402) on negligence as to electric wires on or in buildings.

Distinguished in Huber v. La Crosse City R. Co. 92 Wis. 649, 31 L. R. A. 588, 53 Am. St. Rep. 940, 66 N. W. 708, holding negligence of defendant not proximate cause of accident, where injured person engaged in changing location of hanging street lamps came in contact with charged span wire in way company could not have foreseen.

When negligence for jury.

Cited in Griffin v. United Electric Light Co. 164 Mass. 493, 32 L. R. A. 403, 49 Am. St. Rep. 477, 41 N. E. 675, holding for jury question of due care of tinsmith injured by electric wire where it was shown that he was not an expert; Reagan v. Boston Electric Light Co. 167 Mass. 413, 45 N. E. 743, holding that jury should determine question of contributory negligence of roofer receiving injuries by coming in contact with electric wires; Reagan v. Boston Electric Light Co. 167 Mass. 413, 45 N. E. 743, holding that contributory negligence of man working on roof of building in taking hold of imperfectly insulated wire, question for jury.

Cited in footnotes to Block v. Milwaukee Street R. Co. 27 L. R. A. 365, which holds question for jury as to trolley company's liability for injury by contact with broken telephone wire lying across trolley wire; Neeley v. Southwestern Cotton Seed Oil Co. 64 L. R. A. 146, which holds negligence question for jury, where evidence such that fair-minded men may draw different conclusions.

Assumption of risk.

Cited in Warren v. Boston & M. R. Co. 163 Mass. 488, 40 N. E. 895, holding that, in action between injured person and railway, plaintiff must have appreciated danger and voluntarily put himself in way of it to be said to have assumed risk; Carver v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 120 Iowa, 351, 94 N. W. 862, holding risk of injury from throwing mail bags from moving train so as to fall on platform in front of station, not assumed by carrier accustomed to stand at point removed from such spot.

Cited in note (47 L. R. A. 165) on volenti non fit injuria, as defense to actions by injured servants.

25 L. R. A. 554, HECTOR v. BOSTON ELECTRIC LIGHT CO. 161 Mass. 558, 37 N. E. 773.

Care due licensees and others from electric company.

Followed on second appeal in 174 Mass. 213, 75 Am. St. Rep. 300, 54 N. E. 539, holding lineman injured by contact with electric wires of another company bound to show that he was invited or licensed by that company to go where injury occurred.

Cited in Illingsworth v. Boston Electric Light Co. 161 Mass. 585, 25 L. R. A. 552, 37 N. E. 778, denying liability of electric light company for injuries from posts, wires, or other apparatus, under statute, in absence of evidence of defect in insulation; Griffin v. United Electric Light Co. 164 Mass. 494, 32 L. R. A. 403, 49 Am. St. Rep. 477, 41 N. E. 675, holding that electric light company owed duty of keeping wires properly insulated to all persons rightfully on premises; Jackson & Suburban Street R. Co. v. Simmons, 107 Tenn. 406, 64 S. W. 705, holding that lineman whose duty was to inspect wires had no right to assume their sufficient insulation; Riley v. New England Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 184 Mass. 155, 68 N. E. 17, by Lathrop, J., dissenting, who holds that statute imposing liability upon proprietors of telegraph poles and wires for injuries caused thereby, not applicable to injuries from poles of telephone, electric light, or power companies.

Cited in footnotes to Giraudi v. Electric Improv. Co. 28 L. R. A. 596, which holds failure to raise electric light wires on roof of hotel high enough to prevent shock, negligence; Mitchell v. Raleigh Electric Co. 55 L. R. A. 398, which sustains telephone company employee's right to presume that electric light wires properly insulated.

Cited in notes (46 L. R. A. 100) on right of servant to recover damages from persons other than his master for injuries received in performance of duties; (32 L. R. A. 402) on negligence as to electric wires on or in building.

Distinguished in Perham v. Portland Electric Co. 33 Or. 478, 40 L. R. A. 810, 72 Am. St. Rep. 730, 53 Pac. 14, holding that workman rightfully repairing bridge over which electric wires strung has right to assume them properly insulated.

25 L. R. A. 560, STATE ex rel. WOODS v. TOOKER, 15 Mont. 8, 37 Pac. 840.
Construction of constitutional provisions.

Cited in State v. Mitchell, 17 Mont. 77, 42 Pac. 100; State v. Camp Sing, 18 Mont. 137, 32 L. R. A. 638, 56 Am. St. Rep. 551, 44 Pac. 516; Palmer v. Helena, 19 Mont. 68, 47 Pac. 209, — advocating decision against validity of legislative act rather than establish precedent for nullification of Constitution by loose and questionable interpretations; Durfee v. Harper, 22 Mont. 363, 56 Pac. 582, holding provisions of Constitution prescribing legislative proceedings for submission of proposed amendment to Constitution mandatory.

Cited in footnotes to State ex rel. Wineman v. Dahl, 34 L. R. A. 97, which holds submission to popular vote of proposal for constitutional convention properly made by legislature; Com. ex rel. Elkin v. Griest, 50 L. R. A. 568, which holds governor's approval of proposed constitutional amendment unnecessary.

Time for mandamus.

Cited in State ex rel. Lloyd v. Rotwitt, 15 Mont. 38, 37 Pac. 845, holding where officer refuses performance of ministerial duty in advance of time fixed by law, mandamus will at once lie to compel performance at proper time.

25 L. R. A. 564, SHELLENBERGER v. RANSOM, 41 Neb. 631, 59 N. W. 935.

Murderer as beneficiary of deceased.

Cited in Carpenter's Estate, 170 Pa. 210, 29 L. R. A. 149, footnote p. 145, 50 Am. St. Rep. 765, 32 Atl. 637, holding son inherits from father whom he has killed; Re Fleming, 16 Misc. 444, 38 N. Y. Supp. 611, holding remainderman under will has no right to possession of fund while under indictment for murder of tenant for life; Holdom v. Ancient Order of U. W. 159 Ill. 625, 31 L. R. A. 70, footnote p. 67, 50 Am. St. Rep. 183, 43 N. E. 772, holding insane beneficiary can recover under policy on insured whom he has murdered; Lauier v. Box, 64 L. R. A. 463, holding murderer of wife not entitled to common-law right of succession to wife's property.

Cited in footnote to New York L. Ins. Co. v. Davis, 44 L. R. A. 305, which holds only assignee's interest in policy forfeited by his murder of insured.

Distinguished in Schmidt v. Northern Life Asso. 112 Iowa, 45, 51 L. R. A. 144, 84 Am. St. Rep. 323, 83 N. W. 800, holding beneficiary who murders assured forfeits amount of policy.

Rights of descent.

Cited in Johnson v. Colby, 52 Neb. 331, 72 N. W. 313, holding intestate's estate vests in heirs though it may be defeated by proceedings for sale to pay debts; Douglas v. Cameron, 47 Neb. 361, 66 N. W. 430, holding effect must be given statutes of descent regardless of consequences; Lewon v. Heath, 53 Neb. 709, 74 N. W. 274, holding ejectment can be maintained by heirs of intestate against all except such as claim under administrator.

Cited as overruled in Veeder v. McKinley-Lanning Loan & T. Co. 61 Neb. 912, 86 N. W. 982, holding survivor of two children of intestate took real estate subject only to life estate of father as tenant by curtesy.

Rights of wrongdoers under statute.

Cited in note (28 L. R. A. 749) on whether wrongdoer may take advantage of general statutory imposition of damages for negligent injuries.

Statute of limitations.

Cited in footnotes to Lewey v. H. C. Frick Coke Co. 28 L. R. A. 283, which holds limitation of action for removal of coal by wrongfully extending mine under land of others does not run till discovery or reasonable possibility of same; Smith v. Blachley, 53 L. R. A. 849, which holds running of limitation against action to recover back money not prevented by fraud unless investigation prevented by affirmative efforts; Sanborn v. Gale, 26 L. R. A. 864, which holds running of limitation against action for alienation of wife's affections not prevented by agreement of parties to adultery known to husband to deny same.

Annotation in 25 L. R. A. 564, particularly referred to in Mereness v. First

Nat. Bank, 112 Iowa, 14, 51 L. R. A. 411, footnote p. 410, 84 Am. St. Rep. 318, 83 N. W. 410, holding running of limitations on demand certificate of deposit, not interrupted by bank's misrepresentations in denial of liability.

25 L. R. A. 577, Re LANAUX, 46 La. Ann. 1036, 15 So. 708.

Requisites of pledge.

Cited in Cameron v. Orleans & J. R. Co. 108 La. 105, 32 So. 208, holding delivery of bills of lading to members of company purchasing goods does not constitute pledge in favor of bank advancing price.

Cited in footnote to First Nat. Bank v. Harkness, 32 L. R. A. 408, which holds oil in tank effectively pledged by written order to owner's agent to hold for pledgees.

25 L. R. A. 591, STATE v. TAYLOR, 46 La. Ann. 1332, 49 Am. St. Rep. 351, 16 So. 190.

Forgery by false assumption of agency.

Cited in note (31 L. R. A. 831) on forgery by false assumption of authority in signing another's name as agent for him.

25 L. R. A. 598, Re FOSS, 102 Cal. 347, 41 Am. St. Rep. 182, 36 Pac. 669.

25 L. R. A. 598, WHITING v. ADAMS, 66 Vt. 679, 44 Am. St. Rep. 875, 30 Atl. 32.

Measure of damages for conversion.

Cited in Anderson v. Besser, 131 Mich. 486, 91 N. W. 737, holding in trover for timber unlawfully cut and sold by defendant, but in good faith, measure of damage is value of logs at place of sale, less cost of cutting and hauling.

Cited in footnotes to Keys v. Pittsburg & W. Coal Co. 41 L. R. A. 681, which holds damages for unauthorized mining of coal by tenant in good faith value of coal in place; Keystone Lumber Co. v. Kolman, 34 L. R. A. 821, which requires licensee to repay trespasser enhanced value of timber before recovering.

25 L. R. A. 602, DOWNS v. HARPER HOSPITAL, 101 Mich. 555, 45 Am. St. Rep. 427, 60 N. W. 42.

Liability for negligent acts of employee or agent.

Cited in footnote to Hannon v. Siegel-Cooper Co. 52 L. R. A. 429, which holds department store estopped to deny responsibility for malpractice of dentist.

— Of institutions for treatment of sick or injured.

Cited in Hearns v. Waterbury Hospital, 66 Conn. 121, 31 L. R. A. 231, footnote p. 224, 33 Atl. 595, holding charitable hospital not liable for alleged negligence in gratuitous operation when it has exercised due care in selection of surgeon; Powers v. Massachusetts Homeopathic Hospital, 47 C. C. A. 128, 109 Fed. 300, holding charitable hospital not liable to paying patient for negligent act of nurse; Collins v. New York Post Graduate Medical School, 59 App. Div. 68, 69 N. Y. Supp. 106, holding charitable hospital not liable for alleged negligence in gratuitous surgical operation upon patient paying for board and other attendance; McAndrews v. Hamilton County, 105 Tenn. 406, 58 S. W. 483, holding county institution not liable for negligence of its servant who tied its mule so close to railway that it became frightened, ran away and caused injury complained of.

Cited in footnotes to Eighmy v. Union P. R. Co. 27 L. R. A. 296, which holds railroad company not liable for negligence of physicians in hospitals voluntarily maintained for injured employees.

Distinguished in Pepke v. Grace Hospital, 130 Mich. 496, 90 N. W. 278, holding trustees of hospital not negligent in employing surgeon upon recommendation of board of twenty-five physicians; Brown v. La Société Française De Bienfaisance Mutuelle, 138 Cal. 476, 71 Pac. 516, holding society established on basis of mutuality for treatment of sick members, and for others for compensation, liable to paying patient for negligence of surgeon; Haggerty v. St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co. 100 Mo. App. 443, 74 S. W. 456, holding railroad relief department not to be deemed charitable institution so as to exempt railroad from liability for negligence in selecting physician to treat injured employee.

Disapproved in Ward v. St. Vincent's Hospital, 78 App. Div. 320, 79 N. Y. Supp. 1004, holding authority of sister of charity in charge of hospital to bind institution by contract to furnish skilled nurse, question for jury.

Operation of hospital enjoined.

Cited in Deaconess Home & Hospital v. Bontjes, 104 Ill. App. 492, restraining as nuisance operation of hospital built within 3 feet of private residence.

25 L. R. A. 605, BULLARD v. THORPE, 66 Vt. 599, 44 Am. St. Rep. 867, 30 Atl. 36.

When prohibition lies.

Cited in Eastham v. Holt, 43 W. Va. 619, 27 S. E. 883, holding writ of prohibition will not lie to stop proceedings on indictment found by one grand jury after another has refused bill and been discharged by judge; State ex rel. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & S. Min. Co. v. Second Judicial Dist. Court, 22 Mont. 232, 56 Pac. 219, refusing writ of prohibition to arrest proceedings in appointment of receiver pendente lite in suit alleging unlawful taking of ore of one company to use of another.

Cited in note (51 L. R. A. 35, 36, 101, 108) on superintending control and supervisory jurisdiction of the superior over the inferior or subordinate tribunal.

Distinguished in Wilkins v. Stiles, 75 Vt. 45, 98 Am. St. Rep. 804, 52 Atl. 1048, holding writ will not lie to restrain proceedings on erroneous judgment by justice of peace having jurisdiction.

25 L. R. A. 608, COWHICK v. SHINGLE, 5 Wyo. 87, 63 Am. St. Rep. 17, 37 Pac. 689.

Limitation of actions.

Followed in Bergman v. Bly, 66 Fed. 41, 13 C. C. A. 321, 27 U. S. App. 650, holding payment by one of joint makers of note does not prevent running of statute against others.

Cited in Oleson v. Wilson, 20 Mont. 550, 63 Am. St. Rep. 639, 52 Pac. 372, and First Nat. Bank v. Bullard, 20 Mont. 122, 49 Pac. 658, holding part payment on past-due note by one joint maker does not stop running of statute of limitations as to other maker; Stubblefield v. McAuliff, 20 Wash. 446, 55 Pac. 637, holding part payment by maker of note, secured by mortgage upon property held in common with wife, does not prevent running of statute as to wife's interest.

When decision of state court not binding on Federal court.

Cited in Hale v. Wharton, 73 Fed. 749, holding service of process on person, exempt from service at time, invalid, notwithstanding contrary ruling of state court; Marks v. Uinta County, 11 Wyo. 493, 72 Pac. 894, holding statute of limitations not available on demurrer, unless petition shows affirmatively statutory period had elapsed before commencement of suit.

25 L. R. A. 613, BARNARD v. TAGGART, 66 N. H. 362, 29 Atl. 1027.

Effect of award by arbitrators.

Cited in Horne v. Hutchins, 71 N. H. 132, 51 Atl. 651, holding award of arbitrators binds parties to proceedings and persons claiming under them.

When vacancy occurs in public office.

Cited in footnotes to Ijams v. Duvall, 36 L. R. A. 127, which holds vacancy not created by decision in contested election case that judge commissioned was not elected and order for new election; State ex rel. Sadler v. La Grave, 35 L. R. A. 233, which sustains right of lieutenant governor to governor's salary while acting as governor after governor's death; People ex rel. Lynch v. Budd, 34 L. R. A. 46, which denies right of election to fill vacancy in office of lieutenant governor; State, Clifford, Prosecutor, v. Heller, 57 L. R. A. 312, which denies right of president of senate to act, after resignation, as governor in place of governor resigning office.

Jurisdiction in mandamus.

Cited in note (58 L. R. A. 834-836, 862, 867) on original jurisdiction of court of last resort in mandamus case.

25 L. R. A. 618, GREGORY v. LEE, 64 Conn. 407, 30 Atl. 53.

Minor's contracts.

Cited in footnotes to Peacock v. Linton, 53 L. R. A. 192, which denies father's liability for tutoring of minor son during vacation, without his knowledge; Goodman v. Alexander, 55 L. R. A. 781, which authorizes recovery against infant for food and lodging without alleging that defendant an orphan.

25 L. R. A. 621, SIOUX FALLS v. KIRBY, 6 S. D. 62, 60 N. W. 156.

When action on city ordinance civil.

Cited in Lead v. Klatt, 11 S. D. 111, 75 N. W. 896, holding trial in police court for violating health ordinance not criminal action making rules of criminal pleading applicable; Lead v. Klatt, 13 S. D. 143, 82 N. W. 391, denying arrest of judgment in action in police court for failure to demur to complaint charging violation of ordinance; Madison v. Horner, 15 S. D. 360, 89 N. W. 474, vacating writ of error from judgment in action in police court for violation of ordinance, since appeal is proper way to review civil action.

Validity of ordinance affecting erection of buildings.

Cited in footnote to Bostock v. Sams, 59 L. R. A. 282, which holds unauthorized, ordinance permitting refusal of permits for erecting buildings not conforming in size, appearance, etc., to existing buildings.

Distinguished in Fischer v. St. Louis, 194 U. S. 372, 48 L. ed. 1024, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 673, sustaining validity of ordinance prohibiting erection of dairy or cow stable within city limits without permission of municipal assembly.

25 L. R. A. 625, PHELPS v. PHELPS, 143 N. Y. 197, 62 N. Y. S. R. 156, 38 N. E. 280.

Married woman's right in husband's realty.

Cited in Nichols v. Park, 78 App. Div. 97, 79 N. Y. Supp. 547, denying right of dower in property purchased by husband, but which he caused to be conveyed to brother; Poillon v. Poillon, 90 App. Div. 75, 85 N. Y. Supp. 689, holding wife without inchoate right of dower in real estate held by corporation, in which husband holds practically all the stock.

Cited in footnotes to Walker v. Walker, 27 L. R. A. 799, which holds fraudulent, transfer of corporate stock to defeat wife's distributive share; Smith v. Smith, 34 L. R. A. 49, which holds delivery by husband just before death, of deed of all realty made years before, fraudulent as to wife; Stroup v. Stroup, 27 L. R. A. 523, which holds dower right attaches to land paid for by husband but conveyed by invalid trust to another for his benefit.

Distinguished in Starbuck v. Starbuck, 62 App. Div. 450, 71 N. Y. Supp. 104, holding divorce procured by wife in one state for cruelty does not deprive her of dower in real estate in another state, where absolute divorce only granted for adultery, though property in name of third party under naked trust; Brownell v. Briggs, 173 Mass. 532, 54 N. E. 251, holding void, conveyance of husband to third party without consideration for purpose of cutting off dower of wife from whom he had been separated.

Disapproved in Redmond v. Redmond, 112 Ky. 766, 66 S. W. 745, holding widow entitled to dower in land conveyed by husband before his decease to son for purpose of defeating dower right.

25 L. R. A. 627, HEINLEIN v. IMPERIAL L. INS. CO. 101 Mich. 250, 45 Am. St. Rep. 409, 59 N. W. 615.

Insurable interest.

Cited in Ashford v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 80 Mo. App. 642, holding policy valid which is procured by insured on his own life for benefit of one who has no insurable interest; Clement v. New York L. Ins. Co. 101 Tenn. 36, 42 L. R. A. 251, 70 Am. St. Rep. 650, 46 S. W. 561, holding policy issued to assured payable to his executors, but under agreement with others having no insurable interest, to pay premiums, a wagering contract; Taylor v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 15 Tex. Civ. App. 255, 39 S. W. 185, holding woman has insurable interest in life of fiancé; Foster v. Preferred Acci. Ins. Co. 125 Fed. 539, holding in suit on policy taken by insured on own life, in which "friend" named as beneficiary, insurer cannot set up beneficiary's want of insurable interest.

Cited in footnotes to Union Fraternal League v. Walton, 46 L. R. A. 424, which sustains right to take insurance on own life making policy payable to one without insurable interest; Exchange Bank v. Loh, 44 L. R. A. 372, which holds creditor's insurable interest limited to amount of indebtedness; Adams v. Reed, 35 L. R. A. 692, which holds woman has insurable interest in life of son-in-law.

Cited in note (54 L. R. A. 229) on insurable interest in life of parent or child or other relative by blood.

Forfeiture of policy.

Cited in footnotes to Johnson v. New York L. Ins. Co. 50 L. R. A. 99, which holds necessity of giving notice before forfeiting policy for nonpayment of premium dispensed with by converting life policy into nonforfeitable policy for fixed term of years; McQuillan v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 56 L. R. A. 233, which holds forfeiture of policy waived by retaining payment made after default without notice of any condition affixed; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Hill, 49 L. R. A. 127, which requires notice of accrual of premium before forfeiting policy for nonpayment.

Equitable jurisdiction of suit for fraud.

Cited in footnotes to John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Dick, 43 L. R. A. 566, which holds suit for cancelation of receipt renewing lapsed life policy obtained by fraud within jurisdiction of equity; Titus v. Rochester German Ins. Co. 28 L. R. A. 478, which holds fraudulent representations inducing compromise through mistake as to legal rights ground for relief.

25 L. R. A. 632, STATE v. HAMLIN, 86 Me. 495, 41 Am. St. Rep. 569, 30 Atl. 76.

Validity of inheritance tax laws in general.

Cited in Knowlton v. Moore, 9 Pa. Dist. R. 308; Re Inheritance Tax, 23 Colo. 493, 48 Pac. 535; Re Wilmerding, 117 Cal. 284, 49 Pac. 181; Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 55, 44 L. ed. 975, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 747,—holding Congress can levy succession tax; State v. Alston, 94 Tenn. 681, 28 L. R. A. 180, 30 S. W. 750, holding right to tax inheritance is reasonable since right of inheritance depends on statute; Black v. State, 113 Wis. 216, 90 Am. St. Rep. 853, 89 N. W. 522, holding reasonable succession taxes unobjectionable if Constitution not violated; State ex rel. Fath v. Henderson, 160 Mo. 218, 60 S. W. 1093, holding succession tax as to collateral kindred, and exempting lineal descendants, not unlawful and arbitrary classification.

Cited in footnotes to Ferry v. Campbell, 50 L. R. A. 92, which holds succession tax void for want of notice of proceedings to fix amount of tax; Minot v. Winthrop, 26 L. R. A. 259, which upholds reasonable, succession tax on transmission of decedents' property.

Validity of tax as respects uniformity.

Approved in State ex rel. Fath v. Henderson, 160 Mo. 218, 60 S. W. 1093, holding uniformity is satisfied when tax uniform as to entire class affected.

Cited in State ex rel. Garth v. Switzler, 143 Mo. 333, 40 L. R. A. 290, footnote p. 280, 65 Am. St. Rep. 653, 45 S. W. 245, holding succession tax invalid because classification not uniform; State v. Alston, 94 Tenn. 683, 28 L. R. A. 180, footnote p. 178, 30 S. W. 750, holding inheritance tax act not invalid because of discrimination between direct descendants and collateral kindred and strangers; Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 288, 42 L. ed. 1041, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594, sustaining collateral inheritance tax act which operates uniformly on all persons in same degree of relationship; State v. Clark, 30 Wash. 446, 71 Pac. 20, holding statute imposing proportional inheritance tax not violation of constitutional provision requiring uniformity of taxation; Dixon v. Ricketts, 26 Utah, 218, 72 Pac. 947, holding inheritance tax upon all estates of decedents above $10,000, after payment of debts, not unconstitutional for want of uniformity.

Cited in footnotes to Drew v. Tift, 47 L. R. A. 525, which requires uniformity and equal application in exemption from inheritance tax; State ex rel. Gelsthorpe v. Furnell, 39 L. R. A. 170, which sustains exemption from succession tax of estate less than $7,500; Billings v. People, 59 L. R. A. 807, which sustains transfer tax on lineal descendants to whom life estate given with remainder to lineal descendants, but exempting lineal descendants taking fee; State ex rel. Schwartz v. Ferris, 30 L. R. A. 218, which holds void for lack of uniformity exempting estates less than $20,000 in value.

Cited in note (60 L. R. A. 340) on power of legislature to classify taxpayers.

Distinguished in Herriott v. Bacon, 110 Iowa, 346, 81 N. W. 701, holding collateral heir not exempt from inheritance tax to extent of $1,000.

Upon what tax is imposed.

Cited in Gelsthorpe v. Furnell, 20 Mont. 304, 39 L. R. A. 173, 51 Pac. 267, and Union Trust Co. v. Wayne Probate Judge, 125 Mich. 492, 84 N. W. 1101, holding succession tax imposed on privilege to inherit, and not on property.

Distinguished in Eidman v. Martinez, 184 U. S. 591, 46 L. ed. 704, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 515, holding United States inheritance tax law does not apply to property passing either by will executed in foreign country or by intestate laws of that country.

25 L. R. A. 637, FORWARD v. CONTINENTAL INS. CO. 142 N. Y. 382, 59 N. Y. S. R. 777, 37 N. E. 615.

Insurance; waiver of conditions in policy.

Cited in Thebaud v. Great Western Ins. Co. 155 N. Y. 522, 50 N. E. 284, holding implied seaworthiness of insured vessel waived where company knew that fact on issuing policy; Stewart v. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. 155 N. Y. 269, 42 L. R. A. 152, 49 N. E. 876, holding forfeiture of policy for nonpayment of premium may be waived by general manager of foreign corporation extending time of payment of premium note; McElwain v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 50 App. Div. 66, 63 N. Y. Supp. 293, denying recovery of amount of premiums paid on irregularly issued life policy, the irregularity of which had been waived; Roblee v. Masonic Life Asso. 38 Misc. 482, 77 N. Y. Supp. 1098, forfeiting policy issued to applicant after his death when application required policy to be delivered to him in life; Stage v. Home Ins. Co. 76 App. Div. 511, 78 N. Y. Supp. 555, and Lewis v. Guardian Fire & Life Assur. Co. 93 App. Div. 160, 87 N. Y. Supp. 525, holding provision in policy against other insurance may be waived by local agent receiving application for insurance.

Distinguished in Roblee v. Masonic L. Asso. 38 Misc. 482, 77 N. Y. Supp. 1098, holding rule that general agent of insurance company may waive conditional clauses in policy, not applicable to membership in benefit association where insured died before issue of certificate.

When forfeiture effected by want of ownership.

Cited in Neafie v. Woodcock, 15 App. Div. 621, 44 N. Y. Supp. 768, holding undelivered chattel mortgage on insured property has no legal inception to work forfeiture; Wood v. American F. Ins. Co. 149 N. Y. 386, 52 Am. St. Rep. 733, 44 N. E. 80, holding sale under execution does not work forfeiture of policy for breach of condition of change of ownership; Franklin Ins. Co. v. Feist, 31 Ind. App. 396, 68 N. E. 188, holding recorded deed not otherwise delivered, and intended to take effect only upon death of grantor, who remained in possession, not breach of condition of sole ownership of assured.

Cited in footnotes to Arkansas F. Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 48 L. R. A. 510, which holds policy not affected by mere agreement to buy premises, definite only as to price; Farmers' & M. Ins. Co. v. Jensen, 44 L. R. A. 861, which holds policy void by conveyance to wife of insured through third person.

Distinguished in Rosenstein v. Traders' Ins. Co. 79 App. Div. 483, 79 N. Y. Supp. 736, holding deed by insured to son, to hinder judgment creditor, is "change of title" avoiding policy.

Effect of notice to agent.

Cited in Robbins v. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. 149 N. Y. 484, 44 N. E. 159, holding insurance company barred from claiming policy void because of incumbrance, where its agent was informed of its existence upon issuance of policy; Weber v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 16 App. Div. 600, 44 N. Y. Supp. 976, holding notice to agent, when negotiating insurance, of unpaid property on instalment plan notice to company; McGuire v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 7 App. Div. 584, 40 N. Y. Supp. 300, holding company estopped to deny liability under policy issued to illiterate man by agent, with authority, on unfulfilled promise to indorse waiver of condition as to chattel mortgage; Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. Goode, 95 Va. 756, 30 S. E. 366, sustaining estoppel on company whose soliciting agent, informed of lien, stated it to be too small to be noted, and dictated in application that there was no encumbrance; Strause v. Palatine Ins. Co. 128 N. C. 65, 38 S. E. 256, holding company estopped to set up want of "unconditional ownership" by knowledge of soliciting agent that goods bought on credit; Ames v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. 40 App. Div. 467, 58 N. Y. Supp. 244, holding knowledge by company's agent when he delivered policy and accepted premium, of bad health of insured, waived condition as to issuing policy only "during good health" of insured; Koenig v. United L. Ins. Asso. 16 Misc. 534, 38 N. Y. Supp. 506, holding life policy not vitiated by false statement as to refusal by other insurers, when knowledge brought home to company through its medical examiner; Will v. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. 3 App. Div. 26, 37 N. Y. Supp. 933, holding messenger boy asking, waiting for, and receiving telegram in answer to another, agent of company, and not of sender.

Distinguished in Traders Ins. Co. v. Cassell, 24 Ind. App. 242, 56 N. E. 259, holding policy void because of chattel mortgage though known to local agent, but concealed from adjuster; Gray v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 155 N. Y. 184, 49 N. E. 675, holding knowledge of insurance company's agents of intention to procure other insurance after valid policy issued not waiver of condition in policy as to other insurance; Dimick v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 69 N. J. L. 403, 62 L. R. A. 783, 55 Atl. 291, holding warranty in application cannot be avoided on ground that insurer's agent knew facts, and incorrectly entered them in application where latter contains express limitation upon powers of agent.

Sufficiency of pleading.

Cited in Hickey v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 92 Hun, 194, 36 N. Y. Supp. 329, holding complaint sufficient to recover for loss by fire, which alleged contract of insurance, destruction by fire, offer of proofs of loss and their refusal on ground that policy was canceled.

25 L. R. A. 640, EELS v. AMERICAN TELEPH. & TELEG. CO. 143 N. Y. 133, 38 N. E. 202.

What constitutes additional servitude on street.

Followed in Kester v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 108 Fed. 926, holding that Federal statute permitting construction of telegraph lines along post roads of United States does not affect right of owner to claim damages for additional burden on fee.

Cited in Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Bruen, 39 N. Y. Supp. 221; Andrews v. Delhi & S. Teleph. Co. 36 Misc. 26, 72 N. Y. Supp. 50; Krueger v. Wisconsin Teleph. Co. 106 Wis. 108, 50 L. R. A. 304, 81 N. W. 1041; Bronson v. Albion Teleph. Co. (Neb.) 60 L. R. A. 428, 93 N. W. 201; Donovan v. Allert, 11 N. D. 295, 58 L. R. A. 779, 95 Am. St. Rep. 720, 91 N. W. 441,—holding telephone poles impose additional servitude on street use; Castle v. Bell Teleph. Co. 49 App. Div. 442, 63 N. Y. Supp. 482, and Halleran v. Bell Teleph. Co. 64 App. Div. 43, 71 N. Y. Supp. 685, denying right of abutting owner, without title to center of highway, to compel removal of telephone poles; Utica v. Utica Teleph. Co. 24 App. Div. 364, 48 N. Y. Supp. 916, holding legislature may authorize use of city streets for any purpose not inconsistent with public use; Johnson v. New York & P. Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 76 App. Div. 564, 78 N. Y. Supp. 598, holding village street may be used for erection of telephone poles and wires, with permission of municipality, without consent of abutting proprietors; Gray v. York State Teleph. Co. 41 Misc. 110, 83 N. Y. Supp. 920, Affirmed on appeal, 92 App. Div. 90, 86 N. Y. Supp. 771, holding state franchise does not give right to erect telephone poles and wires along suburban highway without compensation to abutting proprietors; Myers v. Bell Teleph. Co. 83 App. Div. 624, 82 N. Y. Supp. 83, holding owner under deed reserving highway entitled to maintain ejectment against telephone company, to compel removal of poles erected without right along country highway; Hodges v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 133 N. C. 232, 45 S. E. 572, holding owner of land entitled to compensation for use of railroad right of way for telegraph poles, erected with consent of railroad company; Weeks v. New York & N. J. Teleph. Co. 86 App. Div. 258, 83 N. Y. Supp. 678, questioning, without deciding, right of telephone company to erect poles in rural part of city street, without condemnation or consent of abutting proprietor; Jayne v. Cortland Waterworks Co. 42 Misc. 265, 86 N. Y. Supp. 571, holding village without authority to grant permission to construct water main in street which had never been accepted, without compensation to abutting owners; Cater v. Northwestern Teleph. Exch. Co. 60 Minn. 550, 28 L. R. A. 315, footnote p. 310, 63 N. W. 111 (dissenting opinion), majority holding erection of telephone poles does not impose additional servitude; Re Grade Crossing, 6 App. Div. 339, 40 N. Y. Supp. 520 (concurring opinion), majority holding owner of land taken for street crossing also entitled to compensation for injury to remnant of land; Weed v. McKeg, 37 Misc. 113, 74 N. Y. Supp. 250, holding servient estate, over which right of way passes, cannot be made to yield to use of way, by a building over it not contemplated in original grant; Peck v. Schenectady R. Co. 170 N. Y. 306, 63 N. E. 357, and Jaynes v. Omaha Street R. Co. 53 Neb. 649, 39 L. R. A. 757, 74 N. W. 67, holding poles and wires of electric railway in street impose an additional burden upon street entitling abutting owner to damages; Coatsworth v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 156 N. Y. 457, 51 N. E. 301, Affirming 24 App. Div. 278, 48 N. Y. Supp. 511, holding owner of land, on which was public street, in which railroad maintained abutment for bridge, entitled to have such erection removed; Sun Printing & Pub. Asso. v. New York, 8 App. Div. 283, 40 N. Y. Supp. 607 (dissenting opinion), majority holding rapid transit act affecting city only is valid as for city purpose.

Cited in footnote to Coburn v. New Teleph. Co. 52 L. R. A. 672, which holds occupation of sidewalk with trench and pipes for conduit for telephone wires not additional burden.

Distinguished in Magee v. Overshiner, 150 Ind. 139, 40 L. R. A. 374, 65 Am. St. Rep. 358, 49 N. E. 951, holding reasonable use of street for telephone poles and wires not additional servitude; Palmer v. Larchmont Electric Co. 158 N. Y. 234, 43 L. R. A. 674, 52 N. E. 1092, Reversing 6 App. Div. 12, 39 N. Y. Supp. 522, holding electric light pole in country highway not additional burden.

Effect of long acquiescence in act.

Cited in Wilcox v. American Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 73 App. Div. 615, 76 N. Y. Supp. 1037, Spring, J., dissenting, who holds right to maintain ejectment to compel removal of telephone poles erected on plaintiff's lands without his knowledge not lost by acquiescence; Rathbone v. Wirth, 6 App. Div. 307, 40 N. Y. Supp. 535, denying validity of act intended to equally divide police board of city between political parties without reference to majority, although act uniform and acquiesced in for long time.

25 L. R. A. 645, JAFFRAY v. JENNINGS, 101 Mich. 515, 60 N. W. 52.

When attachment will not lie.

Cited in Cottrell v. Hatheway, 108 Mich. 623, 66 N. W. 596, holding attachment will not lie for several acts of joint debtors unless so alleged in affidavit.

Cited in footnote to Davis v. Dodson, 29 L. R. A. 496, which denies right to attach property of one member of law firm for copartner's failure to account for money collected.

25 L. R. A. 649, BYERS v. SCHLUPE, 51 Ohio St. 300, 38 N. E. 117.

Jurisdiction in attachment.

Cited in Halliday Hay Co. v. Cline, 9 Ohio C. C. 283, holding justice may acquire jurisdiction in attachment proceeding against firm by publication.

Cited in footnote to State use of Burt v. Allen, 50 L. R. A. 284, which holds nonresidence, preventing claim of exemption, determinable as of date of sale of property.

25 L. R. A. 654, MONTGOMERY v. SANTA ANA & W. R. CO. 104 Cal. 186, 43 Am. St. Rep. 89, 37 Pac. 786.

Use of street for railroad.

Questioned in O'Connor v. Southern P. R. Co. 122 Cal. 684, 55 Pac. 688, sustaining injunction against construction of railroad in public street in front of plaintiff's premises.

Disapproved in Rische v. Texas Transp. Co. 27 Tex. Civ. App. 37, 66 S. W. 324, holding street railway for transportation of freight additional servitude entitling abutting owner to damages not suffered in common.

Ejectment for land dedicated for street.

Cited in footnote to San Francisco v. Grote, 41 L. R. A. 335, which sustains city's right of ejectment for land dedicated for street.

What is a railway.

Cited in footnote to Freiday v. Sioux City Rapid Transit Co. 26 L. R. A. 240, which holds elevated railroad a "railway."

25 L. R. A. 658, O'DONNELL v. MAINE C. R. CO. 86 Me. 552, 30 Atl. 116.

Who are volunteers.

Cited in Ryan v. O'Brien Boiler Works, 68 Mo. App. 151, holding servant of shipper injured while assisting railway employees to load car so as to facilitate his own work not volunteer; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Ward, 98 Tenn. 127, 60 Am. St. Rep. 848, 38 S. W. 727, holding employee of shipper of potatoes, assisting in moving car for his own convenience in loading not volunteer.

Cited in footnotes to Cincinnati N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Finnell, 57 L. R. A. 266, which denies liability to one helping brakemen at their request to load piano; Cleveland Terminal & Valley R. Co. v. Marsh, 52 L. R. A. 142, which denies liability for injury to small boy, employed by station agent to put up switch light, from explosion of torpedo found by him on track.

Measure of damages for causing death.

Cited in Ramsdell v. Grady, 97 Me. 322, 54 Atl. 763, holding, in case of malpractice resulting in death, physician liable to estate only for loss sustained by deceased in his lifetime.

Cited in footnote to Smith v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 28 L. R. A. 573, which holds only pecuniary damages recoverable for causing death.

When master liable.

Cited in footnote to Mitchell-Tranter Co. v. Ehmet, 55 L. R. A. 710, which authorizes recovery for injury during noon intermission to servant removing broken timbers at superior's direction.

Cited in note (26 L. R. A. 527) on liability to employees of contractor for unsafe appliances or place of labor.

25 L. R. A. 663, WALLACE v. CITY & SUBURBAN R. CO. 26 Or. 174, 37 Pac. 477.

When nonsuit warranted.

Cited in Perkins v. McCullough, 36 Or. 148, 59 Pac. 182, and Barr v. Rader, 33 Or. 376, 54 Pac. 210, holding nonsuit will not be granted unless evidence for plaintiff will not authorize finding of jury or would require setting aside verdict for want of evidence; Haines v. McKinnon, 35 Or. 582, 57 Pac. 903 (dissenting opinion), majority holding nonsuit cannot be sustained where there was enough evidence to go to jury upon bona fides of sale of property; First Nat. Bank v. Fire Asso. 33 Or. 188 53 Pac. 8, refusing to set aside verdict that fire was of incendiary origin, when competent evidence before jury from which it might have drawn such inference; Lowe v. Salt Lake City, 13 Utah, 98, 57 Am. St. Rep. 708, 44 Pac. 1050, holding if facts are such that reasonable men may differ it is for jury to decide; Mayes v. Stephens, 38 Or. 521, 64 Pac. 319, refusing nonsuit where jury might have inferred that lien of mortgage still subsisted.

Contributory negligence of children.

Cited in Chicago City R. Co. v. Tuohy, 196 Ill. 426, 58 L. R. A. 275, 63 N. E. 997, holding it will not be presumed that child of tender years, who had to cross tracks to reach school near by, ran some risk as at another point; Frauenthal v. Laclede Gaslight Co. 67 Mo. App. 6, holding child contributed directly to his death where he took hold of live wire while watching others trying to avoid contact with it; Citizens Street R. Co. v. Hamer, 29 Ind. App. 434, 62 N. E. 661, holding infant's negligence in going upon track in front of approaching street car, when attention attracted in opposite direction, question for jury; Schleiger v. Northern Terminal Co. 43 Or. 15, 72 Pac. 324, holding whether child of tender years stepping in front of moving train, approaching with little noise, guilty of contributory negligence, question for jury.

Cited in footnote to Cincinnati Street R. Co. v. Wright, 32 L. R. A. 340, which holds boy catching ride on private vehicle not chargeable with driver's negligence.

Negligence of railway employees.

Cited in Citizens Street R. Co. v. Hamer, 29 Ind. App. 431, 62 N. E. 661, holding that presumption that person will leave street railway track upon seeing approaching car, does not relieve motorman from exercising care required by circumstances.

Cited in footnotes to Montgomery v. Lansing City Electric R. Co. 29 L. R. A. 287, which holds negligent, motorman running with lever in next the fastest notch until within a few feet of band parading street; Roberts v. Spokane Street R. Co. 54 L. R. A. 184, which holds street car company not free from negligence per se in having cars meet at busy street crossing while running at rate of 2½ miles an hour; Smith v. Union Trunk Line, 45 L. R. A. 169, which holds running two cable cars past each other at much frequented crossing without signal, gross negligence; Consolidated Traction Co. v. Scott, 33 L. R. A. 122, which holds negligence of motorman and boy injured on street car track for jury under evidence; Sample v. Consolidated Light & R. Co. 57 L. R. A. 186, which requires high degree of care from motorman to prevent injury to small children; Chicago City R. Co. v. Tuohy, 58 L. R. A. 270, which denies right to run electric car at speed incompatible with lawful and customary use of street by others; Rack v. Chicago City R. Co. 44 L. R. A. 127, which denies negligence of gripman in failing to slacken speed of car on seeing boys standing in front of car 12 feet from track; Citizens' R. Co. v. Ford, 46 L. R. A. 457, which holds ordinance requiring person "riding or driving" to check up or halt at crossing to avoid injury to pedestrian, not applicable to electric car; Bamberger v. Citizens' Street R. Co. 28 L. R. A. 486, which holds instruction as to motorman's negligence in not stopping car not erroneous under circumstances.

Cited in note (25 L. R. A. 292) on duty to maintain lookout on railroad train.

25 L. R. A. 667, NEGUS v. BECKER, 143 N. Y. 303, 62 N. Y. S. R. 313, 42 Am. St. Rep. 724, 38 N. E. 20.

Liability for negligence of independent contractor.

Cited in Burke v. Ireland, 166 N. Y. 314, 59 N. E. 914, holding owner of building being erected not liable to employee of subcontractor for architectural defect when competent architect had been employed.

Cited in footnotes to Sanford v. Pawtucket Street R. Co. 33 L. R. A. 564, which denies liability of street railway company for negligence of contractor building road; Boomer v. Wilbur, 53 L. R. A. 172, which denies owner's liability for injury by fall of bricks through negligence of independent contractor repairing chimney; Hoff v. Shockley, 64 L. R. A. 538, which holds assent of owner's agent to independent contractor's placing sand in street in front of premises, does not render owner liable for injury resulting therefrom; Peerless Mfg. Co. v. Bagley, 53 L. R. A. 285, which holds landlord liable for independent contractor's negligence in putting in automatic fire extinguisher; Leavitt v. Bangor & A. R. Co. 36 L. R. A. 382, which denies liability of railroad company for contractor's negligence in communicating fire from cooking car while cutting wood for railroad company; Thompson v. Lowell, I. & H. Street R. Co. 40 L. R. A. 345, which holds street railway company liable for injury to spectator at free exhibition of marksmanship given by independent contractor on company's grounds; Bonaparte v. Wiseman, 44 L. R. A. 482, which requires one employing independent contractor to excavate near neighbor's house to notify neighbor or see that contractor exercises due care; Wertheimer v. Saunders, 37 L. R. A. 146, which holds landlord liable for independent contractor's negligence in putting new roof on building.

Rights in party wall.

Cited in Pearsall v. Westcott, 30 App. Div. 105, 51 N. Y. Supp. 663, holding party wall can be used by party without title if use not detrimental to other; Batt v. Kelly, 75 App. Div. 322, 78 N. Y. Supp. 142, enjoining use by owner of party wall of flues built into it for exclusive use of other though extending 2 inches beyond center; Moeller v. Wolkenberg, 67 App. Div. 492, 73 N. Y. Supp. 890 (dissenting opinion), majority refusing to cancel lis pendens in action to enjoin defendant from so constructing addition to party wall as to weaken plaintiff's house.

Cited in footnote to Barry v. Edlavitch, 33 L. R. A. 294, which holds easement acquired by possession in party wall appurtenant to estate.

25 L. R. A. 670, CASSGNE v. MARVIN, 143 N. Y. 292, 38 N. E. 265.

25 L. R. A. 674, LOUGH v. OUTERBRIDGE, 143 N. Y. 271, 62 N. Y. S. R. 324. 42 Am. St. Rep. 712, 38 N. E. 292.

Motion for reargument granted in 144 N. Y. 642, 39 N. E. 494.

Reaffirmed on reargument in 145 N. Y. 602, 65 N. Y. S. R. 866, 40 N. E. 164.

Combinations in restraint of trade.

Cited in John D. Park & Sons Co. v. National Wholesale Druggists' Asso. 54 App. Div. 227, 66 N. Y. Supp. 615, Affirming 30 Misc. 679, 64 N. Y. Supp. 276, holding manufacturers may combine for purpose of enforcing contracts made in sale of goods to jobbers and retailers; Kellogg v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 61 App. Div. 39, 70 N. Y. Supp. 237, holding complaint charging conspiracy to injure plaintiff's business and refusal of defendant railroads to carry grain shipped through his elevator, sufficient to make case of unlawful combination; Walsh v. Dwight, 40 App. Div. 518, 58 N. Y. Supp. 91, holding contract between manufacturer and jobbers and retailers to deal exclusively in his goods with advantage of lower price than to others legal; Reynolds v. Plumbers' Material Protective Asso. 30 Misc. 717, 63 N. Y. Supp. 303, holding advice to members of a plumber's association not to sell goods to debtor until he has settled for goods already purchased is not unlawful interference with trade.

Discrimination by public corporations.

Cited in Gould v. Edison Electric Illuminating Co. 29 Misc. 243, 60 N. Y.

Supp. 559, holding reasonableness and uniformity of charges of quasi-public corporation subject to inquiry by court; Sanford v. American Dist. Teleg. Co. 13 Misc. 91, 34 N. Y. Supp. 144, holding district telegraph company having "call" instrument in bank, liable for loss of property which it undertook to carry for bank's employee, who used instrument to call messenger.

Cited in footnotes to Griffin v. Goldsboro Water Co. 41 L. R. A. 240, which holds discrimination in rates charged consumers for water, unlawful; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Call Pub. Co. 27 L. R. A. 622, which authorizes difference in telegraph rates to morning and evening paper; State v. Southern R. Co. 41 L. R. A. 246, which denies carrier's right to discriminate in favor of high official, larger shipper, or powerful politician.

What constitutes common carrier.

Cited in Faucher v. Wilson, 68 N. H. 339, 39 L. R. A. 432, 38 Atl. 1002, holding truckman, whose business is limited to trucking for special customers, not common carrier so as to make him insurer of goods carried; Jackson Architectural Iron Works v. Hurlbut, 158 N. Y. 38, 70 Am. St. Rep. 432, 52 N. E. 665, holding general truckmen are common carriers.

Effect of motive upon validity of action.

Cited in note (62 L. R. A. 706) on effect of bad motive to make actionable what would otherwise not be.

Limited in People v. Duke, 19 Misc. 297, 44 N. Y. Supp. 336, holding officers and agents of trading corporation may become criminally liable for conspiracy to secure monopoly by threats and menaces against competitors.

Waiver of jury trial.

Cited in Hawkins v. Mapes-Reeve Constr. Co. 82 App. Div. 78, 81 N. Y. Supp. 794, holding jury trial waived in suit for foreclosure of mechanics' lien if not asked for after parties had notice personal judgment could be recovered, though lien denied.

Waiver of defense of adequate remedy at law.

Cited in Stuyvesant v. Weil, 26 Misc. 448, 57 N. Y. Supp. 592, holding defense of adequate remedy at law waived if not taken by answer; Wakeman v. Wilbur, 147 N. Y. 664, 42 N. E. 341; Nickerson v. Canton Marble Co. 35 App. Div. 114, 54 N. Y. Supp. 705; Stiefel v. New York Novelty Co. 14 App. Div. 373, 43 N. Y. Supp. 1012; Reilly v. Freeman, 1 App. Div. 564, 37 N. Y. Supp. 570,—holding that defense of adequate remedy at law cannot be first set up on appeal.

Distinguished in Weller v. Bartlett, 79 N. Y. S. R. 627, 45 N. Y. Supp. 626, rescinding contract which proof shows not to have been intentionally fraudulent where objection that action was at law not raised at beginning of trial; Everett v. De Fontaine, 78 App. Div. 223, 79 N. Y. Supp. 692, holding the want of remedy at law, being essential to plaintiff's case, need not be pleaded; Vincent v. Moriarty, 31 App. Div. 494, 52 N. Y. Supp. 519, holding equitable action cannot be changed into legal action with money judgment where contract denied and no opportunity offered for trial by jury; Erste Sokolower Congregation v. First United Royatiner Sokolower Verein, 32 Misc. 270, 66 N. Y. Supp. 356, holding defense of adequate remedy at law available where its nonexistence is alleged in complaint and denied in answer; McCann v. Hazard, 36 Misc. 11, 72

N. Y. Supp. 45, holding answer to complaint by administrators of partner for accounting, that plaintiffs have adequate remedy at law, not demurrable.

25 L. R. A. 679, PHENIX INS. CO. v. OMAHA LOAN & T. CO. 41 Neb. 834, 60 N. W. 133.

Rights of mortgagee under insurance policy to mortgagor.

Reaffirmed in Hanover F. Ins. Co. v. Bohn, 48 Neb. 747, 58 Am. St. Rep. 719, 67 N. W. 774, holding sale by mortgagor subsequent to insurance, without written consent of company, does not invalidate mortgagee's interest Cited in Oakland Home Ins. Co. v. Bank of Commerce, 47 Neb. 724, 36 L. R. A. 674, footnote p. 673, 53 Am. St. Rep. 663, 66 N. W. 646, holding provisions of policy not made applicable to mortgagee's interest by rider attached, do not affect that interest; State Ins. Co. v. New Hampshire Trust Co. 47 Neb. 70, 66 N. W. 1106, holding mortgagee may recover notwithstanding omission to state in application existence of another mortgage or use of building for other purpose than livery barn; Farmers & M. Ins. Co. v. Newman, 58 Neb. 507, 78 N. W. 933, holding action to foreclose mortgage in which stay after judgment obtained does not involve the property in litigation to defeat mortgagee's interest; Baldwin v. German Ins. Co. 105 Iowa, 385, 75 N. W. 326, holding that attaching of mortgage clause to void policies does revive them or create valid contracts; Lowry v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 75 Miss. 46, 37 L. R. A. 779, 46 Am. St. Rep. 587, 21 So. 664, discussing right of mortgagee to maintain action on policy when it does not appear that mortgage debt is unpaid; Oakland Home Ins. Co. v. Bank of Commerce, 47 Neb. 724, 36 L. R. A. 674, footnote p. 673, 53 Am. St. Rep. 663, 66 N. W. 646, holding policy not avoided as to mortgagee's interest by insured's violation of provision against transfer of property without consent; Key ex rel. Heaton v. Continental Ins. Co. 101 Mo. App. 356, 74 S. W. 162, holding indorsement of mortgage note, and deposit of policy of insurance as collateral security, gives indorser sufficient interest to maintain action on policy.

Cited in footnotes to Hocking v. Virginia F. & M. Ins. Co. 39 L. R. A. 148, which denies mortgagee's right to recover where mortgagor burns building; Syndicate Ins. Co. v. Bohn, 27 L. R. A. 614, which holds mortgagee's rights under mortgage clause in policy not affected by mortgagor's false statements; Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Penn Plate-Glass Co. 56 L. R. A. 710, which denies mortgagee's lien on proceeds of insurance on premises by grantee for own benefit; Shadgett v. Phillips & C. Co. 56 L. R. A. 461, which holds mortgagee not entitled to insurance procured by donee for own benefit, by latter's knowledge of mortgagor's failure to keep agreement to insure; Pioneer Sav. & L. Co. v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co. 38 L. R. A. 397, which holds change of title by deed from mortgagor to mortgagee pending application for insurance not fatal to insurance; Whiting v. Burkhardt, 52 L. R. A. 788, which holds mortgagee's rights in policy not affected by conveyance of mortgagor's interest in property; Southern Home Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Home Ins. Co. 27 L. R. A. 844, which holds standard mortgage clause not relieve mortgagee from necessity of proof of loss; Boyd v. Thuringia Ins. Co. 55 L. R. A. 165, which holds question of forfeiture of policy payable to mortgagee not determined by provisions as to mortgagor's acts; Eddy v. London Assur. Corp. 25 L. R. A. 686, which construes provision against mortgagee's interest in policy being "invalidated" by owner's acts, as preventing reduction for other insurance taken without his knowledge; Delaware Ins. Co.

v. Greer, 61 L. R. A. 137, which holds mortgagee's indemnity placed at risk of every act and omission of mortgagor which would avoid latter's interest.

Cited in note (30 L. R. A. 636) on effect of riders or slips attached to insurance policies.

Distinguished in Jaskulski v. Citizens' Mut. F. Ins. Co. 131 Mich. 605, 92 N. W. 98, holding that under ordinary mortgage rider on policy issued to mortgagor, mortgagee is bound by condition making policy void on transfer of property without consent of insurer.

25 L. R. A. 686, EDDY v. LONDON ASSUR. CORP. 143 N. Y. 311, 62 N. Y. S. R. 316, 38 N. E. 307.

Followed in Eddy v. Williamsburgh City F. Ins. Co. 143 N. Y. 656, 38 N. E. 307, without discussion.

Effect of mortgagor's acts on mortgagee's interest under policy.

Cited in Genesee Falls Permanent Sav. & L. Asso. v. United States F. Ins. Co. 16 App. Div. 588, 44 N. Y. Supp. 979, holding mortgagor's failure to state correctly interest in insured's premises, not within mortgagee clause that policy shall not be invalidated by "act or neglect of mortgagor;" Hardy v. Lancashire Ins. Co. 166 Mass. 214, 33 L. R. A. 244, 55 Am. St. Rep. 395, 44 N. E. 209, holding mortgagee's right to full payment of loss under mortgagee clause not affected by mortgagor's taking other insurance, though former policy contains pro rata provision; Baldwin v. German Ins. Co. 105 Iowa, 385, 75 N. W. 326, holding attaching mortgage clauses to void policies does not revive them or create valid contracts.

Cited in footnotes to Syndicate Ins. Co. v. Bohn, 27 L. R. A. 614, which holds mortgagee's rights under mortgage clause in policy not affected by mortgagor's false statements; Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Penn Plate-Glass Co. 56 L. R. A. 710, which denies mortgagee's lien on proceeds of insurance on premises by grantee for own benefit; Oakland Home Ins. Co. v. Bank of Commerce, 36 L. R. A. 673, which holds policy not avoided as to mortgagee's interest by insured's violation of provision against transfer of property without consent; Delaware Ins. Co. v. Greer, 61 L. R. A. 137, which holds mortgagee's indemnity placed at risk of every act and omission of mortgagor which would avoid latter's interest; Boyd v. Thuringia Ins. Co. 55 L. R. A. 165, which holds question of forfeiture of policy payable to mortgagee not determined by provisions as to mortgagor's acts.

Distinguished in Queen Ins. Co. v. Dearborn Sav. Loan & Bldg. Asso. 75 Ill. App. 377, holding parts of policy indicated therein as applicable to contract with mortgagee makes complete contract to exclusion of remainder of policy; Sun Ins. Office v. Varble, 103 Ky. 768, 41 L. R. A. 794, 46 S. W. 486, holding fire insurance company bound to pay loss sustained by lessor under policy issued to her, notwithstanding payment of portion of loss contracted for under policies to lessees, where lessee not required to rebuild.

Trustee's liability for misapplied insurance money.

Cited in Re Olmstead, 52 App. Div. 518, 66 N. Y. Supp. 212, holding trustee liable for amount of insurance directed by him to be paid to person in possession on mere verbal understanding that it be used in repair of building.

25 L. R. A. 691, McGRAW v. DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, 3 App. D. C. 405.

Liability for safety of bathers.

Cited in footnote to Brotherton v. Manhattan Beach Improv. Co. 33 L. R. A. 598, which requires keeper of bathing resort to take proper precautions for safety of bathers.

25 L. R. A. 694, WOOSTER v. MULLINS, 64 Conn. 340, 30 Atl. 144.

Right to give casting vote.

Cited in footnotes to State ex rel. Morris v. McFarland, 39 L. R. A. 282, which holds auditor's right to give casting vote on tie vote by township trustees not limited to vote by ballot; Cate v. Martin, 48 L. R. A. 613, which denies mayor's power to veto action by aldermen in passing on election for member of board; State ex rel. Young v. Yates, 37 L. R. A. 205, which holds mayor's right to casting vote in case of tie not restricted by provision requiring majority vote of all members of council; Brown v. Foster, 31 L. R. A. 116, which authorizes mayor to vote only to break tie.

Record of ayes and nays.

Cited in footnote to Board of Education v. Best, 27 L. R. A. 78, which holds mandatory, provision for requiring ayes and nays on motion to employ teacher.

25 L. R. A. 695, Re ROOSEVELT, 143 N. Y. 120, 62 N. Y. S. R. 130, 38 N. E. 281.

What law governs taxable transfers.

Cited in State ex rel. Garth v. Switzler, 143 Mo. 327, 40 L. R. A. 280, 65 Am. St. Rep. 653, 45 S. W. 245, holding collateral succession tax is governed by law in force at death of testator; Re Meyer, 83 App. Div. 384, 82 N. Y. Supp. 329, holding vested remainder of uncertain value taxable according to law in force at death of testator.

Interests subject to succession tax.

Cited in Talmadge v. Seaman, 85 Hun, 246, 32 N. Y. Supp. 906, holding contingent estate in remainder subject to succession tax under statute existing upon termination of life estate, though statute enacted subsequent to will creating it; Re Westurn, 152 N. Y. 100, 46 N. E. 315, holding transfer tax cannot be fixed until finally determined whether will valid or property passes under interstate laws; Re Sloane, 154 N. Y. 114, 47 N. E. 978, holding transfer tax assessable on value of legacy, dependent on widowhood or widow's death, after deducting value of widow's estate during widowhood; Re Hoffman, 143 N. Y. 334, 38 N. E. 311, holding collateral inheritance tax is assessable only on present ownership or absolute right of future enjoyment; Coxe's Estate, 193 Pa. 111, 44 Atl. 256, holding under statute laying transfer tax upon value of estate when right of possession accrues, remainder taxable only on value of property when possession acquired; Re Vanderbilt, 68 App. Div. 33, 74 N. Y. Supp. 450, and Billings v. People, 189 Ill. 472, 59 L. R. A. 814, 59 N. E. 798, holding future contingent remainders not taxable at death of testator; Re Plum, 37 Misc. 471, 75 N. Y. Supp. 940, holding remainders, under will of property to trustees to invest and divide upon contingencies happening to life tenant, not presently taxable; Re Babcock, 37 Misc. 446, 75 N. Y. Supp. 926, holding taxation of remainders when life tenant has power to reduce principal postponed until value determined; Re Eldridge, 29 Misc. 738, 62 N. Y. Supp. 1026, holding legacies to remainder men dependent upon survival at death of life tenant not taxable until determinable; Billings v. People, 189 Ill. 487, 59 L. R. A. 814, 59 N. E. 798, holding transfer tax cannot be assessed on remainder until life estate terminates; People v. McCormick, 208 Ill. 445, 64 L. R. A. 779, 70 N. E. 350, holding estate in remainder, if subject to defeasance, is not liable to inheritance tax until it becomes indefeasible; Lick's Estate, 28 Pa. Co. Ct. 122, holding payment of inheritance tax by executor within three months after death of testator, erroneous, where payment of bequests postponed by trust created by will; Re Vanderbilt, 172 N. Y. 77, 64 N. E. 782 (dissenting opinion), majority holding trust estate, with remainder to beneficiary contingent only upon his surviving stated period, immediately taxable; Re Pell, 171 N. Y. 54, 57 L. R. A. 543, 89 Am. St. Rep. 791, 63 N. E. 789, Reversing 60 App. Div. 290, 70 N. Y. Supp. 196, holding remainder, vesting prior to act, but not in possession until subsequent thereto, not taxable; State ex rel. Garth v. Switzler, 143 Mo. 329, 40 L. R. A. 288, 65 Am. St. Rep. 653, 45 S. W. 245, holding tax upon whole estate of deceased payable by personal representatives of estate, not succession tax, but one upon property; Re Dows, 52 L. R. A. 433, which holds real property subject to power of appointment, converted into personalty, subject to transfer tax on personalty.

Distinguished in Re Dows, 167 N. Y. 234, 52 L. R. A. 436, 88 Am. St. Rep. 509, 60 N. E. 439, holding absolute remainders alienable, devisable, and descendible, are taxable.

Validity of succession tax.

Cited in footnote to Minot v. Winthrop, 26 L. R. A. 259, which upholds reasonable succession tax on transmission of decedent's property.

Exemption from succession tax.

Cited in Stellwagen v. Wayne Probate Judge, 130 Mich. 171, 89 N. W. 728 (dissenting opinion), majority holding exemption of $5,000 from tax is to be taken from estate as a whole.

Penalty for nonpayment of tax.

Cited in Re Davis, 91 Hun, 64, 36 N. Y. Supp. 822, holding per-cent penalty for nonpayment of transfer tax on personal property, of which remainderman cannot get possession until death of life tenant, does not begin to run until death of life tenant.

25 L. R. A. 697, HARDIE v. HARDIE, 162 Pa. 227, 29 Atl. 886.

Grounds for divorce.

Cited in Mendenhall v. Mendenhall, 12 Pa. Super. Ct. 296, holding desertion not justified on ground of cruel and barbarous treatment, where there was only short struggle resulting in slight physical injury; Roth v. Roth, 15 Pa. Super. Ct. 202, holding annoyance by husband coming to house and rapping on door and window of house where wife lived apart is not sufficient indignity to support action for divorce.

Cited in footnotes to Tirrell v. Tirrell, 47 L. R. A. 750, which holds mere payment of allowance to abandoned wife under order of court will not prevent divorce for desertion; Maddox v. Maddox, 52 L. R. A. 628, which denies right to divorce for cruelty from failure to provide suitable dwelling house, clothing, and food.

25 L. R. A. 699, PRICE v. SCHAEFFER, 161 Pa. 530, 29 Atl. 279.

When foreign judgments may be impeached.

Cited in Jones v. Quaker City Mut. F. Ins. Co. 23 Pa. Co. Ct. 531, 9 Pa. Dist. R. 214, holding judgment of another state can be impeached to show want of jurisdiction through failure to serve process; Wilmer v. Lewis. 24 Pa. Co. Ct. 616, holding judgments entered solely on authenticated transcripts of judgments of another state void ab initio; Com. v. Bolich, 18 Pa. Co. Ct. 403, holding judgment of divorce in another state, void because process not served, unavailing elsewhere; Levison v. Blumenthal, 10 Kulp, 256, holding judgment of another state will not be given "faith and credit" when cause of action had ceased to exist before judgment rendered; Levison v. Blumenthal, 8 Northampton Co. Rep. 38, holding judgment rendered in favor of defendant in one state good defense to action on judgment subsequently obtained by plaintiff on same cause of action in another state.

Distinguished in Schnader v. Bender, 8 Northampton Co. Rep. 262, 19 Lanc. L. Rev. 198, holding personal judgment against nonresident in action in rem not subject to attack in action thereon in another state, where defendant submitted himself to jurisdiction of court.

25 L. R. A. 701, WALTON v. KENDRICK, 122 Mo. 504, 27 S. W. 872.

Proof of execution of will.

Cited in Schierbaum v. Schemme, 157 Mo. 16, 80 Am. St. Rep. 604, 57 S. W. 526, and Gordon v. Burris, 141 Mo. 613, 43 S. W. 642, holding declarations of testatrix made subsequent to execution of will, inadmissible; Throckmorton v. Holt, 180 U. S. 571, 45 L. ed. 673, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 474, holding declarations of deceased, and letters written after execution of will, inadmissible upon question of its having been forged; Ortt v. Leonhardt, 102 Mo. App. 43, 74 S. W. 423 (concurring opinion), holding witnesses attesting testator's signature must know instrument is "last will," and be able to so testify upon proof of will.

Distinguished in Mendenhall's Will, 43 Or. 557, 73 Pac. 1033, holding recitals in attestation clause cannot prevail against positive and convincing proof that will was not signed when witnessed.

25 L. R. A. 710, NORFOLK & W. R. CO. v. HOOVER, 79 Md. 253, 47 Am. St. Rep. 392, 29 Atl. 994.

Who are fellow servants.

Cited in Hearn v. Quillen, 94 Md. 45, 50 Atl. 402, holding operating sawmill is not same general business as that of erecting shed roof over mill; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Lyons, 54 Neb. 640, 75 N. W. 13, holding each member of two switching crews, switching same cars under general supervision of yardmaster, fellow servants, although each crew with different foreman; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Elliott, 42 C. C. A. 204, 102 Fed. 111, holding superior servant is fellow servant of those under him unless he has entire management of business; Maryland Clay Co. v. Goodnow, 95 Md. 355, 51 Atl. 292 (dissenting opinion), majority holding superintendent of company is fellow servant with laborers engaged by another employee to do work.

Cited in notes (50 L. R. A. 429) on what servants are deemed to be in same common employment, apart from statutes, where no questions as to vice prinprincipalship arise; (51 L. R. A. 515, 567, 578, 584, 612) on vice principalship considered with reference to superior rank of negligent servant; (54 L. R. A. 95) on vice principalship as determined with reference to character of act which caused injury; (25 L. R. A. 387, 392) on train despatcher and telegraph operator as fellow servants of trainmen.

Disapproved in Wallace v. Boston & M. R. Co. 72 N. H. 517, 57 Atl. 913, holding train despatcher causing collision through erroneous orders not fellow servant of brakeman injured thereby.

Knowledge as element of master's liability.

Cited in Weeks v. Scharer, 49 C. C. A. 377, 111 Fed. 335, holding notice of incompetence to shift boss without authority to discharge men not notice to master.

Cited in notes (41 L. R. A. 47, 97, 98) on knowledge as element of employer's liability to injured servants; (40 L. R. A. 146) on intoxication as affecting negligence.

Master's duty as to rules and employment of servants.

Cited in notes (43 L. R. A. 347) on duty of master and servant as to rules promulgated for safe conduct of business; (48 L. R. A. 390) on duty of master as to employment of servants.

Disapproved in Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Henthorne, 19 C. C. A. 629, 43 U. S. App. 113, 73 Fed. 640, holding officer entitled to suspend servant temporarily is one authorized to receive notice for company of his incompetency.

Evidence of incompetence of servants.

Cited in Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Henthorne, 19 C. C. A. 627, 43 U. S. App. 113, 73 Fed. 638; Stoll v. Daly Min. Co. 19 Utah, 284, 57 Pac. 295; Park v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 85 Hun, 186, 32 N. Y. Supp. 482, — holding evidence of reputation as to care and prudence of brakeman admissible on subject of notice to master before employment; Gier v. Los Angeles Consol. Electric R. Co. 108 Cal. 134, 41 Pac. 22, holding servant's reputation for carelessness not proof of, but admissible upon, question of actual unfitness; Green v. Western American Co. 30 Wash. 116, 70 Pac. 310, holding, in action for personal injury to coal miner from fall of roof, evidence of specific acts of incompetence of pit boss is competent.

25 L. R. A. 719, DEYO v. HAMMOND, 102 Mich. 122, 60 N. W. 455.

Merger of conversation in written contract.

Cited in Leffel v. Piatt, 126 Mich. 453, 86 N. W. 65, holding prior conversation as to testing machinery merged in written contract of sale, under which purchaser was to accept or return machinery within thirty days.

25 L. R. A. 721, MULLEN v. SANBORN, 79 Md. 364, 47 Am. St. Rep. 421, 29 Atl. 522.

Immunity of nonresident suitor or witness.

Cited in Cooper v. Wyman, 122 N. C. 785, 65 Am. St. Rep. 731, 29 S. E. 947, holding process in another action cannot be served on nonresident coming into state solely as suitor or witness; Monroe v. St. Clair Circuit Judge, 125 Mich. 285, 52 L. R. A. 190, footnote p. 189, 84 N. W. 305, holding vendor of libeled vessel coming into state, at request of purchaser, to procure release, not exempt from arrest in another suit brought by such purchaser; Guynn v. McDanel, 4 Idaho, 610, 95 Am. St. Rep. 158, 43 Pac. 74, holding nonresident attending term of Federal court as plaintiff in action, not exempt from service of summons in action in state court, brought by defendant in former suit; Murray v. Wilcox, 122 Iowa, 192, 64 L. R. A. 537, 101 Am. St. Rep. 263, 97 N. W. 1087, holding nonresident defendant in criminal proceeding brought into state on extradition, not subject to service of original notice in civil action, and referring with approved to annotation in 25 L. R. A. 721.

Annotation in 25 L. R. A. 721, referred to approvingly in Greenleaf v. People's Bank, 133 N. C. 299, 63 L. R. A. 503, 98 Am. St. Rep. 709, 45 S. E. 638, holding nonresident attorney not exempt from service of process when coming into state to transact business before courts for client.

25 L. R. A. 739, BALDWIN v. HOSMER, 101 Mich. 119, 59 N. W. 432.

Right to assets of insolvent corporation in hands of receiver.

Cited in Wheeler v. Dime Sav. Bank, 116 Mich. 271, 72 Am. St. Rep. 521, 74 N. W. 496, holding member of benevolent association of another state, over which receiver appointed in that state, cannot by garnishment in this state obtain advantage over other members; Baldwin v. Hosmer, 101 Mich. 436, 59 N. W. 669, holding injunction petitioned by ancillary receiver of foreign benevolent association against garnishment proceedings by local creditor to subject fund held within jurisdiction, properly refused; Sands v. E. S. Greeley & Co. 31 C. C. A. 425, 59 U. S. App. 610, 88 Fed. 132, holding that appropriation of local assets to claims of local creditors to prejudice of title of foreign receiver is matter of judicial discretion, and refusal to make such appropriation will not be disturbed on appeal where claims of creditors of equal validity and equity; MacMurray v. Sidwell, 155 Ind. 566, 80 Am. St. Rep. 255, 58 N. E. 722, holding local receiver of foreign building association should not pay local creditors in full, but turn over net proceeds of fund to general receiver appointed in foreign state, for general distribution, but under conditions protecting rights of local creditors; Smith v. Taggart, 30 C. C. A. 567, 57 U. S. App. 493, 87 Fed. 98, holding that ancillary receivers of benevolent association should transmit to receiver appointed in state where association was incorporated, all funds in their hands belonging to supreme lodge; Hale v. Bugg, 82 Fed. 37, refusing upon petition for appointment of ancillary receiver for foreign corporation to interfere with sheriff's possession of property under previous attachment proceedings in state court.

Cited in footnotes to Failey v. Fee, 32 L. R. A. 311, which requires payment of established debts before sending assets to receiver at domicil of foreign insolvent corporation; Castleman v. Templeman, 41 L. R. A. 367, which denies receiver's power to consent to decree in other state for payment of assessments by stockholders to creditors.

Cited in notes (34 L. R. A. 740) on right to enforce stockholder's liability outside of state of incorporation; (38 L. R. A. 98) on distribution of assets of insolvent insurance company.

Right of foreign receiver to sue.

Cited in Gray v. Josselyn, 117 Mich. 24, 75 N. W. 96, referring to, without deciding, the question whether foreign receiver will be permitted to sue for debt due estate in contravention of rights of local creditors.

25 L. R. A. 744, POOLE v. CONSOLIDATED STREET R. CO. 100 Mich. 379, 59 N. W. 390.

Contributory negligence of injured passenger.

Cited in Fillingham v. St. Louis Transit Co. 102 Mo. App. 589, 77 S. W. 314, holding passenger on street car not negligent in alighting at dangerous place, when invited to do so by conductor; Richard v. Detroit, R. R. & L. O. R. Co. 129 Mich. 462, 89 N. W. 52, holding street car passenger alighting upon erroneous call of stopping point by conductor, and injured by sudden starting of car, not negligent.

Jury trial.

Cited in Hennig v. Globe Foundry Co. 112 Mich. 618, 71 N. W. 156, holding defendant has right to have his theory of case presented to jury by judge.

25 L. R. A. 746, WARREN v. FIRST NAT. BANK, 149 Ill. 9, 38 N. E. 122.

Preferences by insolvent corporation.

Cited in State Nat. Bank v. Union Nat. Bank, 168 Ill. 526, 48 N. E. 82, holding insolvency does not deprive corporation of power to mortgage corporate property to bona fide creditor, although mortgagee thereby secure preference to other creditors; O'Donnell v. Illinois Steel Co. 53 Ill. App. 332, holding deed made by corporation to trustee to secure indebtedness upon which the directors were liable should be set aside; Blair v. Illinois Steel Co. 159 Ill. 362, 31 L. R. A. 274, 42 N. E. 895, holding insolvent corporation may bona fide prefer a creditor, though she be aunt of three of its directors; Illinois Steel Co. v. O'Donnell, 156 Ill. 630, 31 L. R. A. 266, 47 Am. St. Rep. 245, 41 N. E. 185, and Gottlieb v. Miller, 154 Ill. 52, 39 N. E. 992, holding that insolvent corporation may prefer creditors subject to same conditions as individuals; J. W. Butler Paper Co. v. Robbins, 151 Ill. 621, 38 N. E. 153, holding president of corporation may not prefer his wife as creditor in pursuance of plan to exchange her holdings of stock into demand judgment notes; Peterson v. Brabrook Tailoring Co. 150 Ill. 295, 37 N. E. 242, holding entry of judgment by confession of corporation and issue of execution thereon is not of itself a diversion or misappropriation of a trust fund.

Cited in footnote to Adams & W. Co. v. Deyette, 31 L. R. A. 497, which denies right to prefer debt for money borrowed by corporation to purchase its own stock.

Extraterritorial effect of laws and decisions.

Cited in Nathan v. Lee, 152 Ind. 239, 43 L. R. A. 824, 52 N. E. 987, upholding mortgage on local real estate given by insolvent foreign corporation to preferred creditors, notwithstanding decision of court of corporation's residence that disposition of property must be for equal benefit of all creditors.

Assignment of fund not yet in existence.

Cited in Smith v. Bates Mach. Co. 182 Ill. 169, 55 N. E. 69, Affirming 79 Ill. App. 526, and Young v. Jones, 180 Ill. 220, 54 N. E. 235, holding equitable assignment of part of fund valid though fund only potentially in existence; Brewer v. Griesheimer, 104 Ill. App. 331, holding unearned wages or salary assignable.

Sufficiency of transcript.

Cited in Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Gaulter, 165 Ill. 235, 46 N. E. 256, holding transcript sufficient which contains true and complete transcript of the record.

25 L. R. A. 755, STATE ex rel. CHILDS v. MINNETONKA, 57 Minn. 526, 59 N. W. 972.

Incorporation of villages.

Followed in State ex rel. Childs v. Fridley Park, 61 Minn. 146, 63 N. W. 613, and State ex rel. Douglas v. Holloway, 90 Minn. 272, 96 N. W. 40, holding inclusion of large tracts of agricultural land not suburban in character, nor having unity of interest with platted lands having compact nucleus of population, illegal.

Cited in State ex rel. Hammond v. Dimond, 44 Neb. 160, 62 N. W. 498, holding under statute permitting incorporation of sections, or parts thereof, platted into blocks and lots and adjacent territory, only such lands as have a nucleus of population and those really suburban in character can be included; State ex rel. Railroad & W. Comrs. v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 76 Minn. 474, 79 N. W. 510, holding statute requiring building of stations and stopping trains at village refers to incorporated villages; St. Paul Gaslight Co. v. Sandstone, 73 Minn. 231, 75 N. W. 1050, holding valid, statute delegating to thirty petitioners the initiative in organizing village from certain lands; State ex rel. Holland v. Lammers, 113 Wis. 414, 89 N. W. 501, holding power to incorporate village limited to such land as has a reasonably compact center or nucleus of population, and is not merely agricultural.

Cited in note (35 L. R. A. 397) on what constitutes a village.

Proper remedy to oust municipal corporation.

Cited in State ex rel. Childs v. Crow Wing County, 66 Minn. 529, 35 L. R. A. 746, 69 N. W. 925, holding quo warranto will lie to oust municipal corporation from specific territory over which it wrongfully exercises jurisdiction.

What forum must determine legality of municipal incorporation.

Cited in State ex rel. Holland v. Lammers, 113 Wis. 415, 89 N. W. 501, holding question of legality of attempted incorporation of village, judicial, and not legislative.

25 L. R. A. 759, STATE v. HOSKINS, 58 Minn. 35, 59 N. W. 545.

Class legislation.

Cited in State v. Sherod, 80 Minn. 450, 50 L. R. A. 663, 81 Am. St. Rep. 268, 83 N. W. 417, declaring valid, exercise of police power to regulate manufacture and sale of baking powder; State v. Whitaker, 160 Mo. 71, 60 S. W. 1068, holding act requiring screens to protect electric motormen from weather not class legislation.

Cited in footnotes to State v. Nelson, 26 L. R. A. 317, which holds valid, requirement of glass or other material to protect motormen on electric cars; Indianapolis Union R. Co. v. Houlihan, 54 L. R. A. 787, which sustains statute making railroad company liable to employees for injuries by negligence of specified servants; People ex rel. Nechameus v. City Prison, 27 L. R. A. 718, which upholds act requiring examination and certificate from employing or master plumbers; Re Morgan, 47 L. R. A. 52, which holds void, eight-hour law applying to smelters.

Cited in notes (32 L. R. A. 853) on police power to protect health of employees; (31 L. R. A. 804, 805) on police regulation of electric companies.

Impairing obligation of contract.

Cited in note (50 L. R. A. 145) on privilege of using streets as a contract within constitutional provision against impairing obligation of contracts.

Cruel or unusual punishments.

Cited in note (35 L. R. A. 577) on cruel and unusual punishments.

25 L. R. A. 761, AVERELL v. SECOND NAT. BANK, 2 App. D. C. 470.

25 L. R. A. 766, CASE v. HALL, 52 Ohio St. 24, 38 N. E. 618.

Merger of mortgage in title.

Cited in Hulshoff v. Bowman, 19 Ohio C. C. 558, holding that merger of mortgage in deed may be prevented by agreement.

25 L. R. A. 770, BOARD OF EDUCATION v. STATE, 51 Ohio St. 531, 46 Am. St. Rep. 588, 38 N. E. 614.

Taxing power of legislature.

Cited in Caldwell v. Cuyahoga County, 15 Ohio C. C. 171 (Affirming 5 Ohio N. P. 162), holding unconstitutional, statute fixing amount recoverable for injuries from mob violence without regard to damages sustained; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Cuyahoga County, 45 C. C. A. 241, 106 Fed. 131, Reversing 99 Fed. 852, holding act authorizing commissioners of county to issue bonds in payment of property obtained through unconstitutional legislation valid.

Cited in footnotes to Ingram v. Colgan, 28 L. R. A. 187, which upholds bounty for killing coyotes; State ex rel. Sayre v. Moore, 25 L. R. A. 774, which authorizes appropriation to reimburse county for expenses of murder trial.

What is judicial inquiry.

Cited in New York L. Ins. Co. v. Cuyahoga County, 99 Fed. 856, declaring determination of question of equitable or moral obligation to pay public indebtedness is judicial, and not legislative.

25 L. R. A. 774, STATE ex rel. SAYRE v. MOORE, 40 Neb. 854, 59 N. W. 755.

Attorney's lien.

Cited in footnote to Loofbourow v. Hicks, 55 L. R. A. 874, which holds lien for attorney's fees allowed by judgment of foreclosure enforceable against land bid in by mortgagee or assignee.

What is appropriation.

Cited in footnotes to Board of Education v. State, 25 L. R. A. 770, which holds unconstitutional, act authorizing board of education to levy tax to pay claim for which no obligation exists; Ingram v. Colgan, 28 L. R. A. 187, which upholds bounty for killing coyotes.

Cited in note (42 L. R. A. 37, 49) on what claims constitute valid demands against a state.

Distinguished in State ex rel. Norfolk Beet-Sugar Co. v. Moore, 50 Neb. 99, 61 Am. St. Rep. 538, 69 N. W. 373, holding act providing for beet-sugar bounties not an appropriation because not specific or limited.

When mandamus will issue.

Cited in State ex rel. Simons v. Cornell, 51 Neb. 555, 71 N. W. 300, denying L. R. A. AU.—VOL. III.—53.

mandamus to compel auditor to pay salary of public officer who has failed to swear to or affirm his claim; State ex rel. Society of Home for Friendless v. Cornell, 54 Neb. 160, 74 N. W. 398, refusing mandamus to compel auditor to issue warrant for claim disallowed by him; State ex rel. New Orleans Canal & Bkg. Co. v. Heard, 47 La. Ann. 1693, 47 L. R. A. 523, 18 So. 746, compelling state auditor to pay claim against state in pursuance of resolution of legislature; State ex rel. Butler County Agri. Soc. v. Coufal, 1 Herdman (Neb.) 132, 95 N. W. 362, holding allowance by county supervisors of statutory sum due county agricultural society may be compelled by mandamus.

Cited in notes (58 L. R. A. 843) on original jurisdiction of court of last resort in mandamus case; (47 L. R. A. 516) on unconstitutionality of statute as defense against mandamus to compel its enforcement.

Distinguished in Burton v. Furman, 115 N. C. 172, 20 S. E. 443, holding that mandamus will not lie against state officers to compel them to audit and pay from statutory fund, claim of attorney for services rendered to state.

Contracts to procure legislation.

Cited in Richardson v. Scott's Bluff County, 59 Neb. 406, 48 L. R. A. 297, 30 Am. St. Rep. 682, 81 N. W. 309, declaring void an agreement to compensate lobbyist for procuring passage of act to reimburse county for expense of murder trial.

Appointment of police board by governor.

Cited in State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Moores, 55 Neb. 523, 41 L. R. A. 638, 76 N. W. 175 (dissenting opinion), majority holding act granting governor power to appoint metropolitan police board invalid.

25 L. R. A. 781, Re GAGE, 141 N. Y. 112, 56 N. Y. S. R. 662, 35 N. E. 1094.

Legislative power over elections and removals from office.

Cited in Spitzer v. Fulton, 33 Misc. 266, 68 N. Y. Supp. 660, holding legislature may determine persons qualified to vote for village officers and as to such officers constitutional provisions as to elections do not apply; People ex rel. Goring v. Wappingers Falls, 83 Hun, 135, 31 N. Y. Supp. 758, holding office of justice of peace, having been determined by legislature to be elective, came under constitutional provisions as to election by the people; Harris v. Burr, 32 Or. 362, 39 L. R. A. 771, footnote p. 768, 52 Pac. 17, holding women may vote at school meeting for director notwithstanding constitutional provision limiting right to "vote at all elections authorized by law" to male citizens; People ex rel. Coffey v. Democratic General Committee, 164 N. Y. 348, 51 L. R. A. 679, 58 N. E. 124 (dissenting opinion), majority denying power of county committee of political party to remove one of its members; People v. Dooley, 171 N. Y. 82, 63 N. E. 815, holding legislature cannot provide for election of local magistrates in one division of city borough and for appointment of same class of magistrates in another division.

Cited in footnote to Gougar v. Timberlake, 37 L. R. A. 644, which denies right of women to vote under provision giving right to "male" citizens.

25 L. R. A. 784, BOTTOMS v. SEABOARD & R. R. CO. 114 N. C. 699, 41 Am. St. Rep. 799, 19 S. E. 730.

Imputable negligence.

Cited in Warren v. Manchester Street R. Co. 70 N. H. 362, 47 Atl. 735, refusing to impute to infant of three years negligence of parent in permitting it to go unattended upon street through which street railway ran; South Covington & C. Street R. Co. v. Herrklotz, 104 Ky. 414, 47 S. W. 265, holding negligence of father not imputable to child under four years whose arm was crushed by street car; Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. Kowalski, 34 C. C. A. 4, 92 Fed. 312, refusing to impute to infant of three months the negligence of father and mother with whom it was riding; Berry v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. 70 Fed. 683, refusing to impute mother's negligence to child of seven years crossing railroad; Evansville v. Senhenn, 151 Ind. 54, 41 L. R. A. 732, footnote p. 728, 68 Am. St. Rep. 218. 47 N. E. 634, refusing to impute negligence of parent to child of five years crippled by fall of pile of lumber in street; Bradley v. Ohio River R. Co. 126 N. C. 742, 36 S. E. 181, upholding instruction to jury that deceased killed by cars backing onto stage not responsible for conduct of driver unless she assumed to direct or control him; Duval v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 134 N. C. 349, 65 L. R. A. 729, 101 Am. St. Rep. 830, 46 S. E. 750, holding negligence of driver of buggy not imputable to daughter riding with him.

Cited in footnotes to Ploof v. Burlington Traction Co. 43 L. R. A. 108, which holds parent's negligence in permitting ten-year old boy in street not proximate cause of accident from his attempt to cross street in front of street car; Ives v. Welden, 54 L. R. A. 854, which holds child injured by explosion of unlabeled gasoline, not affected by father's negligence; Nashville R. Co. v. Howard, 64 L. R. A. 437, which holds negligence of mother not imputable to child four years old thrown from street car by jolting.

Duty of railroad to trespasser.

Explained in Jeffries v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 129 N. C. 240, 39 S. E. 836 holding railroad liable if engineer by looking ahead could have seen child on track in time to avoid striking it.

Cited in Mason v. Southern R. Co. 58 S. C. 81, 53 L. R. A. 918, footnote p. 913. 79 Am. St. Rep. 826, 36 S. E. 440, holding railroad company liable for death of child on track from failure to keep reasonable lookout; Gunn v. Ohio River R. Co. 42 W. Va. 681, 36 L. R. A. 578, 36 S. E. 546, holding engineer's duty to try to avoid injuring child seen on railroad; Smith v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. 114 N. C. 749, 25 L. R. A. 296, 19 S. E. 863, holding railroad liable for neglect of engineer to exercise due care in discovering and avoiding injuries to helpless persons on track.

Cited in footnotes to Gunn v. Ohio River R. Co. 36 L. R. A. 575, which holds it duty of engineer and fireman to keep lookout for persons on track; Ashworth v. Southern R. Co. 59 L. R. A. 592, which holds company liable for injury to young child while riding on running board of engine according to known custom of children; Trudell v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 53 L. R. A. 271, which holds engineer justified in believing good-sized boy will leave track in time to avoid injury; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Tartt, 49 L. R. A. 99, which denies duty towards trespassers on track before discovery; Barney v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 26 L. R. A. 847, which denies duty of railroad company to fence switch yards for protection of children; Kramer v. Southern R. Co. 52 L. R. A. 359, which denies railroad company's liability for death of child by fall of pile of cross-ties in unused portion of street.

Cited in notes (25 L. R. A. 287) on duty to maintain lookout on railroad train; (55 L. R. A. 456) on doctrine of last clear chance.

Contributory negligence of children.

Cited in Gunn v. Ohio River R. Co. 42 W. Va. 680, 36 L. R. A. 578, 26 S. E. 546, holding child under five killed on railroad track not guilty of contributory negligence; Citizens Street R. Co. v. Hamer, 29 Ind. App. 434, 62 N. E. 658, holding question for jury, whether contributory negligence imputable to child crossing street in front of approaching car.

Cited in footnote to Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Mackey, 29 L. R. A. 757, which holds negligence of nine-year old child climbing over coupling of car standing on crossing for jury.

Action for death of child due to parent's negligence.

Cited in Bamberger v. Citizens' Street R. Co. 95 Tenn. 28, 28 L. R. A. 490, footnote p. 486, 49 Am. St. Rep. 909, 31 S. W. 163, holding father of child killed on street railway cannot maintain action as administrator when he is sole beneficiary and death due to his contributory negligence.

Action by child for personal injury on coming of age.

Cited in Scarlett v. Norwood, 115 N. C. 286, 20 S. E. 459, discussing question whether seduced minor, after action by parent, can, on arriving of age, bring another action herself.

25 L. R. A. 794, PEOPLE v. EWER, 141 N. Y. 129, 56 N. Y. S. R. 668, 38 Am. St. Rep. 788, 36 N. E. 4.

Police power.

Cited in People ex rel. Nechameus v. City Prison, 144 N. Y. 536, 27 L. R. A. 721, 39 N. E. 686, sustaining validity of act requiring certificate of state examining board before engaging as master plumber; Grannan v. Westchester Racing Asso. 153 N. Y. 461, 47 N. E. 896, holding racing association organized for public purpose subject to authority of legislature to determine conditions upon which it should exercise rights; People ex rel. Tyroler v. City Prison, 157 N. Y. 147, 43 L. R. A. 276, 68 Am. St. Rep. 763, 51 N. E. 1006 (dissenting opinion), majority holding act invalid making it a penal offense to sell passage tickets on vessels and railroads except by specially authorized agents; People v. Havnor, 149 N. Y. 201, 31 L. R. A. 691, 52 Am. St. Rep. 707, 43 N. E. 541, upholding act prohibiting barber from carrying on business on Sunday, as it tends to promote public health; People ex rel. Zeese v. Masten, 79 Hun, 583, 29 N. Y. Supp. 891, holding commitment of child for commission of crime to a house of refuge was for "general comfort, health, and prosperity of the state;" People ex rel. Ordway v. St. Saviour's Sanitarium, 34 App. Div. 372, 56 N. Y. Supp. 431, releasing female committed to inebriate asylum on ground she was without notice of proceedings; People v. Buffalo Fish Co. 164 N. Y. 111, 52 L. R. A. 810, 79 Am. St. Rep. 622, 50 N. E. 34 (dissenting opinion), majority holding fish dealer cannot be indicted for having in his possession fish imported under revenue laws of United States during close season; State v. Bailey, 157 Ind. 330, 59 L. R. A. 437, footnote p. 435, 61 N. E. 730, holding compulsory education law not an unauthorized invasion of parental rights; State v. Theriault, 70 Vt. 627, 43 L. R. A. 294, 67 Am. St. Rep. 695, 41 Atl. 1030, upholding act restraining owner of stream from fishing in it for a certain period; People v. Lochner, 177 N. Y. 152, 101 Am. St. Rep. 773, 69 N. E. 373, Affirming 73 App. Div. 124, 76 N. Y. Supp. 396, upholding validity of provision of labor law restricting time of employment of bakers to sixty hours per week, Reversed in 197 U. S. —, 49 L. ed. —, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539; State v. Cantwell, 179 Mo. 272, 78 S. W. 569, upholding validity of statute prohibiting employment of laborers under ground longer than eight hours a day; New York v. Chelsea Jute Mills, 43 Misc. 269, 88 N. Y. Supp. 1085, upholding validity of statute prohibiting employment of child under fourteen years of age during school year; Viemeister v. White, 88 App. Div. 50, 84 N. Y. Supp. 712, upholding validity of statute prohibiting unvaccinated children from attending school; Whiteley v. Terry, 83 App. Div. 200, 82 N. Y. Supp. 89, upholding validity of statute making it misdemeanor in cities of first and second class to offer real estate for sale without written authority of owner.

Cited in footnote to Collins v. State, 35 L. R. A. 501, which holds boy almost as large as father not "child" within laws preventing cruelty to children.

Cited in notes (49 L. R. A. 114) on constitutionality of discrimination against women in police regulations; (32 L. R. A. 953) on police power to protect health of employees.

25 L. R. A. 798, Re REISS, 46 La. Ann. 347, 15 So. 151.

Custody of infants.

Cited in footnote to Re Young, 36 L. R. A. 224, which upholds grandparents' right to custody of children to exclusion of father's sister appointed guardian by his will.

25 L. R. A. 800, RIDGELY v. RIDGELY, 19 Md. 298, 29 Atl. 597.

Jurisdiction of action to annul marriage.

Cited in Henneger v. Lomas, 145 Ind. 299, 32 L. R. A. 852, footnote p. 848, 44 N. E. 462, holding courts have jurisdiction of marriages procured by fraud independently of divorce law.

Cited in footnote to Kelley v. Kelley, 25 L. R. A. 806, which denies authority of court of chancery to annul marriage without statutory authority.

Cited in note (37 L. R. A. 786) on whether court of equity can protect personal rights.

25 L. R. A. 806, KELLEY v. KELLEY, 161 Mass. 111, 42 Am. St. Rep. 389, 36 N. E. 837.

Presumption as to laws of another state.

Cited in McMahon v. Eagle Life Asso. 169 Mass. 541, 61 Am. St. Rep. 306, 48 N. E. 339, holding court of general jurisdiction of another state presumed to have jurisdiction in action at law to enforce contract; Dickey v. Pocomoke City Nat. Bank, 89 Md. 298, 43 Atl. 33, holding statute law of one state altering common law not presumed to have been adopted in another state.

Cited in footnotes to First Nat. Bank v. National Broadway Bank, 42 L. R. A. 140, which denies presumption that statutory restrictions on alienation of interests of cestui que trust are law of other state; Aslanian v. Dostumian, 47 L. R. A. 495, which denies presumption that law merchant as to protest of draft prevails in Asiatic Turkey.

Cited in note (25 L. R. A. 800) on jurisdiction of chancery to decree nullity or dissolution of marriage.

Presumption as to jurisdiction.

Cited in American Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Mason, 159 Ind. 19, 64 N. E. 525, holding court of another state having judge, clerk, and seal, presumed to be one of general jurisdiction, and that proceedings leading to judgment were regular.

Credit due judgments of another state.

Cited in American Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Mason, 159 Ind. 18, 64 N. E. 525, holding judgment of court having jurisdiction of subject-matter and of parties conclusive on merits in other states.

Cited in footnotes to Arrington v. Arrington, 52 L. R. A. 201, which holds foreign decree for alimony after defendant's appearance entitled to full faith and credit; Trowbridge v. Spinning, 54 L. R. A. 204, which holds judgment for alimony though subject to alteration final for enforcement in other state; Felt v. Felt, 47 L. R. A. 546, which holds divorce on substituted service in other state where complainant domiciled entitled to recognition by interstate comity.

25 L. R. A. 810, STATE v. GORHAM, 115 N. C. 721, 44 Am. St. Rep. 494, 20 S. E. 179.

Regulation of interstate commerce.

Cited in Collier v. Burgin, 130 N. C. 635, 41 S. E. 874, holding sales of books by foreign corporation through canvassers, to be paid for by instalments, title remaining in seller till paid for, makes seller peddler subject to license tax.

Cited in footnotes to South Bend v. Martin, 29 L. R. A. 531, which holds ordinance imposing license on peddlers not interference with commerce as to the peddling of chairs imported before employment begun; Racine Iron Co. v. McCommons, 51 L. R. A. 134, which holds traveling agent taking orders and distributing contents of original package among customers, not engaged in interstate commerce; Croy v. Epperson, 51 L. R. A. 254, which holds one taking orders in own name for articles manufactured in other state, and delivering separate articles to customers, not engaged in interstate commerce; French v. State, 52 L. R. A. 160, which holds agent of nonresident company selling organ taken with him, or taking orders for others to be delivered by him, engaged in interstate commerce; State v. Willingham, 52 L. R. A. 198, which holds interstate commerce, delivery of portraits and frames by agent previously taking order for nonresident manufacturer; Re Wilson, 48 L. R. A. 417, which holds void as applied to sale of original packages territorial statute requiring license for sale of coal oil; Smith v. Jackson, 47 L. R. A. 416, which holds agent collecting garments and sending them to laundry outside of state and redelivering to owners, not engaged in commerce; State v. Coop, 41 L. R. A. 501, which holds purchase of frame for portrait in accordance with option included in order for making portrait in other state not within statute against peddling.

Distinguished in Wrought Iron Range Co. v. Campen, 135 N. C. 519, 47 S. E. 658, holding license tax on itinerant persons peddling ranges unconstitutional as interference with interstate commerce, in respect to goods brought from another state, and sold in original packages.

Police power.

Cited in footnotes to Brownback v. North Wales, 49 L. R. A. 446, which holds valid as to residents, ordinance requiring license for sale of goods on street or by soliciting orders from house to house; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Wright, 35 L. R. A. 497, which sustains state statute requiring every company selling sewing machines in state to pay license tax; Burrows v. Delta Transp. Co. 29 L. R. A. 468, which sustains validity of state statute requiring fire screens on vessels burning wood.

25 L. R. A. 813, GASKINS v. DAVIS, 115 N. C. 85, 44 Am. St. Rep. 439, 20 S. E. 188.

Right of action for cutting timber.

Cited in footnotes to Alliance Trust Co. v. Nettleton Hardware Co. 36 L. R. A. 155, which authorizes trover or trespass by true owner after re-entry for value of trees cut during disseisin; Keystone Lumber Co. v. Kolman, 34 L. R. A. 821, which requires licensee to repay trespasser enhanced value of timber before recovering.

25 L. R. A. 815, GRAND RAPIDS ICE & COAL CO. v. SOUTH GRAND RAPIDS ICE & COAL CO. 102 Mich. 227, 47 Am. St. Rep. 516, 60 N. W. 681.

Rights of riparian owners.

Cited in Pittsburgh & L. A. Iron Co. v. Lake Superior Iron Co. 118 Mich. 124, 76 N. W. 395, holding party to contract fixing boundary in lake cannot have apportionment on other lines because of alleged reliance on mistake in decision subsequently overruled; Oliver v. Olmstead, 112 Mich. 484, 70 N. W. 1036, holding riparian owners entitled to ice formed on surface of river; Kean v. Calumet Canal & Improv. Co. 190 U. S. 489, 47 L. ed. 1149, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651 (dissenting opinion), majority holding patent to state under swamp land act conveying certain fractional sections bordering on non-navigable lake gave title to lands under water.

Cited in footnotes to Fuller v. Shedd, 33 L. R. A. 146, which holds grant of meandered lake goes only to water's edge; Noyes v. Collins, 26 L. R. A. 609, which holds unnavigable lake not to belong to riparian owners.

Distinguished in Edinger v. Woodke, 127 Mich. 44, 86 N. W. 397, holding "east half" and "west half" in a deed of lands by government survey have reference to dividing line running to lake according to act of Congress, and not to equal quantities.

Knowledge of law presumed.

Cited in Pittsburgh & L. A. Iron Co. v. Cleveland Iron Min. Co. 178 U. S. 276, 44 L. ed. 1067, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 931, appeal dismissed because no Federal question involved and because state court decided there was laches on part of plaintiff; Pittsburgh & L. A. Iron Co. v. Lake Superior Iron Co. 118 Mich. 132, 76 N. W. 395, holding everyone is presumed to know law and is guilty of laches in keeping silent when he should speak.

;

25 L. R. A. 819, COIT & CO. v. SUTTON, 102 Mich. 324, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 768, 60 N. W. 690.

State control of foreign corporations.

Cited in M. I. Wilcox Cordage & Supply Co. v. Mosher, 114 Mich. 66, 72 N. W. 117, holding debt to foreign corporation incurred for goods sold by its itinerant salesman collectable although corporation had not paid fee for doing business in state; Toledo Commercial Co. v. Glen Mfg. Co. 55 Ohio St. 222, 45 N. E. 197, holding that foreign corporation is not required to obtain certificate "to do business in state" in order to sell and deliver goods manufactured out of state; Aultman, M. & Co. v. Holder, 68 Fed. 471, holding act imposing tax upon foreign corporation for privilege of selling wares in state invalid under interstate commerce act; Oakland Sugar Mill Co. v. Fred W. Wolf Co. 55 C. C. A. 97, 118

Fed. 243, holding franchise tax upon foreign corporation doing business in state is upon the occupation of the corporation in state; Havens & G. Co. v. Diamond, 93 Ill. App. 565, holding act requiring foreign corporations, before doing business in state, to do certain things, does not apply to orders solicited by drummers; Vaughn Mach. Co. v. Lighthouse, 64 App. Div. 142, 71 N. Y. Supp. 799, holding procuring of orders to be filled by foreign corporation in another state is not doing business in state requiring certificate; Blakeslee Mfg. Co. v. Hilton, 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 191, holding act requiring foreign corporation doing business in state to have office and agents does not apply to sales by order or samples.

Cited in notes (57 L. R. A. 92) on taxation of corporate franchises in the United States; (60 L. R. A. 680) on corporate taxation and the commerce clause.

Distinguished in Moline Plow Co. v. Wilkinson, 105 Mich. 60, 62 N. W. 1119, upholding act requiring foreign corporation doing business in state to pay same franchise fee as domestic corporation.

Construction of statutes.

Cited in People v. Smith, 108 Mich. 534, 32 L. R. A. 857, 66 N. W. 382, holding statute should always be so construed as to bring it within constitution, if can be reasonably done.

25 L. R. A. 821, CRIPPEN v. ROGERS, 67 N. H. 207, 30 Atl. 346.

Action by foreign receiver against resident shareholder.

Cited in Tompkins v. Blakey, 70 N. H. 587, 49 Atl. 111, holding receiver of foreign corporation, appointed in another state, may maintain action in this state for assessment against resident shareholder.

25 L. R. A. 824, YARDLEY v. PHILLER, 62 Fed. 645, 10 C. C. A. 562, 17 U. S. App. 647.

Reversed in 167 U. S. 344, 42 L. ed. 192, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 835.

Preferences by insolvent banks.

Cited in footnotes to O'Brien v. Grant, 28 L. R. A. 361, which holds payment of checks on insolvent bank by member of clearing house in accordance with previous contract not illegal preference; Voltz v. National Bank, 30 L. R. A. 155, which sustains right of guaranteeing bank to recover against drawers of certified check paid according to guaranty.

Cited in note (25 L. R. A. 548) on exceptions to prohibition of preferences by insolvent national banks.

Distinguished in Crane, P. & Co. v. Fourth Street Nat. Bank, 38 W. N. C. 114, Affirming 16 Pa. Co. Ct. 275, 4 Pa. Dist. R. 133, holding bank, member of clearing-house association, liable to customer for proceeds of draft, deposited with association by such bank to offset indebtedness due from another and insolvent debtor to association.

Sufficiency of notice of withdrawal of deposit.

Cited in footnote to O'Brien v. East River Bridge Co. 48 L. R. A. 122, which upholds notice by insolvent bank director to corporation of which he is president on signing of check for withdrawal of notes deposited.

Who estopped from denying genuineness of drawer's signature.

Cited in footnote to First Nat. Bank v. Northwestern Nat. Bank, 26 L. R. A.

289, which holds both collecting bank and drawee bank estopped to deny genuineness of drawer's signature.

25 L. R. A. 833, ST. LOUIS, I. M. & S. R. CO. v. NEEDHAM, 63 Fed. 107, 11 C. C. A. 56, 27 U. S. App. 227.

Who are fellow servants.

Followed in Northern P. R. Co. v. Mase, 11 C. C. A. 64, 27 U. S. App. 238, 63 Fed. 115, holding conductor of railroad train through whose negligence in leaving open switch employee of another train injured is fellow servant of such employee.

Cited in Parker v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 18 R. I. 775, 30 Atl. 849, and Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Sipes, 23 Colo. 229, 47 Pac. 287, holding yard conductor neglecting to close switch, fellow servant of locomotive fireman injured thereby; Southern P. Co. v. Schoer, 57 L. R. A. 709, 52 C. C. A. 271, 114 Fed. 469, holding engineer running second section of train into the first at yard limits, fellow servant of train employee, notwithstanding state statute making him vice principal; Brady v. Chicago & G. W. R. Co. 57 L. R. A. 715, 52 C. C. A. 51, 114 Fed. 103, holding engineer running train through yard at night with caboose forward, fellow servant of switchman, whose death was caused thereby; Jackson v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 43 W. Va. 400, 46 L. R. A. 355, 31 S. E. 258, holding conductor of train fellow servant of brakeman crushed between cars through negligence of former in ordering engineer to back train; Donnelly v. San Francisco Bridge Co. 117 Cal. 424, 49 Pac. 559, holding superintendent calling to workman throwing down blocks to other workmen, that all was clear, acts as fellow servant of workmen; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Lyons, 54 Neb. 640, 75 N. W. 13, holding members of two switching crews of same railway under sole control of same yardmaster and switching cars in same yard are fellow servants; Martin v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 65 Fed. 385, holding train master giving order to take out cars from train, fellow servant of brakeman caught between switch engine and car while coupling; Pennsylvania Co. v. Fishack, 59 C. C. A. 273, 123 Fed. 469, holding yardmaster directing train to take track which he represented as clear, fellow servant of fireman injured by collision with cars standing on track.

Cited in notes (50 L. R. A. 432) on what servants are deemed to be in same common employment apart from statutes, where no questions as to vice principalship arise; (46 L. R. A. 358) on when conductor is deemed to be a co-servant of other railroad employees.

When employee vice principal.

Cited in Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Harrell, 161 Ind. 699, 63 L. R. A. 466, 68 N. E. 262, holding foreman of bridge construction gang not representative of master, who negligently directed raising stone by derrick when train passing, causing injury to employee; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Elliott, 42 C. C. A. 203, 102 Fed. 110 (dissenting opinion), majority holding train despatcher vice principal.

Cited in note (54 L. R. A. 112, 114, 129) on vice principalship as determined with reference to character of act which caused injury.

Assumption of risk.

Cited in Sofield v. Guggenheim Smelting Co. 64 N. J. L. 613, 50 L. R. A. 431, 46 Atl. 711, holding neglect of fellow workman to cover pit of hot water with planks furnished by master part of risk assumed by employee falling therein: Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Jackson, 12 C. C. A. 509, 27 U. S. App. 519, 65 Fed. 50, holding sectionman took increased hazard in the work of dismantling old track and laying new one.

Proximate cause.

Cited in St Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Needham, 16 C. C. A. 457, 32 U. S. App. 635, 69 Fed. 824, holding for jury to determine whether absence of target on switch proximate cause of injury to employee on derailed train.

When general verdict not sustained.

Cited in Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. McGreevy, 55 C. C. A. 547, 118 Fed. 419, refusing to sustain general verdict with several issues submitted to jury one of which erroneous; Lyon, P. & Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 29 C. C. A. 50, 55 U. S. App. 747, 85 Fed. 125, refusing to sustain general verdict when a false issue was submitted to jury, since it may have been based on this issue; Durant Min. Co. v. Percy Consol. Min. Co. 35 C. C. A. 256, 93 Fed. 170, refusing to sustain general verdict which might have been based upon instruction which, on one theory, was harmless, but on another, erroneous.

Appeal; erroneous admission of evidence.

Cited in United States v. Honolulu Plantation Co. 58 C. C. A. 231, 122 Fed. 583, holding admission of evidence, in condemnation proceeding, as to value of improvements on part of land not taken, reversible error, where land taken will not affect remainder.

25 L. R. A. 838, MARTIN v. TYLER, 4 N. D. 278, 60 N. W. 392.

Validity of drainage statutes.

Followed in Birchall v. Griggs, 4 N. D. 305, 50 Am. St. Rep. 654, 60 N. W. 842, holding county commissioners may be enjoined at suit of taxpayer from issuing bonds to defray costs of drain constructed under invalid statute.

Cited in Aldrich v. Paine, 106 Iowa, 467, 76 N. W. 812, holding appropriation of land, without compensation, cannot be made for purpose of constructing drains to promote public health; Redmon v. Chacey, 7 N. D. 233, 73 N. W. 1081, holding warrants drawn by drainage commissioners against fund to be raised by special tax create no liability against municipality.

Cited in note (60 L. R. A. 175, 201, 227) on procedure for the establishment of drains and sewers.

Eminent domain; sufficiency of payment.

Cited in footnotes to Steinhart v. Superior Court, 59 L. R. A. 404, which holds payment into court of sufficient to compensate landowner, not payment authorizing giving possession of land sought to be condemned; Harrisburg, C. & C. Turnp. Road Co. v. Harrisburg & M. Electric R. Co. 34 L. R. A. 439, which holds payment into court of award appealed from in eminent domain case insufficient.

When subject expressed in title.

Cited in State ex rel. Carey v. Cornell, 50 Neb. 531, 70 N. W. 56, holding provision for payment of stenographer germane to act providing for "courts;" Re Monk, 16 Utah, 103, 50 Pac. 810, holding title of act "providing for the manner of locating and recording" mining claims, includes means of locating and recording and, therefore, the instrumentality for recording.

Presumption as to validity of statute.

Cited in State ex rel. Comstock v. Stewart, 52 Neb. 251, 71 N. W. 998, holding no presumption of validity in favor of remaining portions of statute, a part of which has been declared invalid; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Austin, 67 Kan. 213, 72 Pac. 850, holding presumption in favor of constitutionality of statute not indulged, when already adjudged unconstitutional in part, and legislative intent that remainder should stand not apparent.

Limitation to legislative power.

Cited in McDermont v. Dinnie, 6 N. D. 284, 69 N. W. 294, holding legislature cannot abolish police courts established by Constitution.

25 L. R. A. 848, CONSOLIDATED COAL & MIN. CO. v. FLOYD, 51 Ohio St. 542, 38 N. E. 610.

Followed in Coal & Min. Co. v. Devault, 52 Ohio St. 605, 44 N. E. 1133, without discussion.

Duty to furnish safe place for employees.

Cited in Petaja v. Aurora Iron Min. Co. 106 Mich. 468, 32 L. R. A. 438, footnote p. 435, 66 N. W. 951, holding the timbering up a stope with lagging for purpose of temporarily supporting roof of mine to enable miners to continue work not under rule of "safe place" required by owner; Callan v. Bull, 113 Cal. 604, 45 Pac. 1017, holding building of appliance as part of the construction of a jetty does not come under rule; Carolan v. Southern P. Co. 84 Fed. 87, holding railroad not liable for injuries to laborer falling from pile of boxes of tea he was loading into cars; Kelly Island Lime & Transport Co. v. Pachuta, 69 Ohio St. 471, 100 Am. St. Rep. 706, 69 N. E. 988, holding rule not applicable where place becomes unsafe through negligence of fellow servant during progress of common employment.

Cited in footnotes to Finn v. Cassidy, 53 L. R. A. 877, which holds safety of place question for jury where contractor sent employee to work in trench near foundation of chimney, with the knowledge that the undisturbed earth was saturated with water; Victor Coal Co. v. Muir, 26 L. R. A. 435, which holds mine owner's nonobservance of statutory regulation as to safety of place will not support action for injury due to laborer's own neglect to attend to propping of roof with materials furnished; Tradewater Coal Co. v. Johnson, 61 L. R. A. 161, which holds master liable for failure of loaders to remove loose coal hanging in mine rendering it unsafe for other employees; Ellsworth v. Metheney, 51 L. R. A. 389, which holds mine owner required to properly guard electric wire in passage way where miners accustomed to go; Beesley v. F. W. Wheeler & Co. 27 L. R. A. 266, which denies ship builders' liability for negligence of carpenters in preparing scaffold for other workmen.

Distinguished in Corson v. Coal Hill Coal Co. 101 Iowa, 230, 70 N. W. 185, holding inapplicable, act making it misdemeanor for miner or mining employee to neglect or refuse to prop entry to mine, if entry is not under his control; Hanley v. California Bridge & Constr. Co. 127 Cal. 238, 47 L. R. A. 600, footnote p. 597, 59 Pac. 577, holding that portion of tunnel which has been completed must be kept in reasonably safe condition for workmen employed in extending it; Wellston Coal Co. v. Smith, 65 Ohio St. 75, 55 L. R. A. 101, 87 Am. St. Rep. 547, 61 N. E. 143, holding entry in mine furnished by company, through mine boss, must be kept in reasonably safe condition by boss.

Duty of master to employ competent men.

Cited in Binder v. Cincinnati, P. & V. R. Co. 16 Ohio C. C. 268, holding lack of averment of knowledge on part of master of incompetence of fellow servant of injured party demurrable.

Cited in footnote to Indianapolis Union R. Co. v. Houlihan, 54 L. R. A. 787, which sustains statute making railroad company liable to employees for injuries by negligence of specified servants.

Cited in notes (25 L. R. A. 713) on master's liability for injuries caused to one servant by incompetency of fellow servant; (54 L. R. A. 111, 138) on vice principalship as determined with reference to character of act which caused injury.

Validity of statutory regulations for protection of employees.

Cited in footnotes to Durkin v. Kingston Coal Co. 29 L. R. A. 808, which holds void, imposition of liability on mine owner for certified foreman's failure to perform duty; Chicago, W. & V. Coal Co. v. People, 48 L. R. A. 554, which sustains statute for inspection of mines at cost of mine owners; Consolidated Coal Co. v. People, 56 L. R. A. 266, which sustains statute for inspection of coal mines as often as inspector deems necessary at owner's expense; Mapel v. John, 32 L. R. A. 800, which upholds act prohibiting mine owners from digging within 5 feet of division line without adjoining owner's consent; Re Morgan, 47 L. R. A. 52, which holds void, eight-hour law applying to smelters.

Cited in note (32 L. R. A. 854) on police power to protect health of employees.

Contributory negligence of employee.

Cited in note (49 L. R. A. 46, 47) on contributory negligence in entering or remaining in employment.

25 L. R. A. 856, CRAFT REFRIGERATING MACH. CO. v. QUINNIPIAC BREWING CO. 63 Conn. 551, 29 Atl. 76.

Operation of practice act.

Cited in Greenthal v. Lincoln, 67 Conn. 377, 35 Atl. 266, holding practice act abandoned aim of common law to bring controversy to a single, certain, and material point.

Sufficiency of complaint.

Cited in Baxter v. Camp, 71 Conn. 251, 42 L. R. A. 517, 71 Am. St. Rep. 169, 41 Atl. 803, holding cause of action arising out of single transaction should not be separated into two or more counts; Dawson v. Marsh, 74 Conn. 500, 51 Atl. 529, holding complaint of tenant against landlord for dispossessing her, detaining part of furniture, and removing remainder into street, should be set forth in one count; Morehouse v. Throckmorton, 72 Conn. 451, 44 Atl. 747, holding complaint alleging performance of services, their value, acceptance of service by defendant, death of plaintiff, appointment of administratrix, and nonpayment of indebtedness by defendant states cause of action under practice act; Goodrich v. Stanton, 71 Conn. 424, 42 Atl. 74, holding single transaction resulting in indorsement of two notes cannot be set forth in six counts of complaint; Palmer v. Hartford Dredging Co. 73 Conn. 187, 47 Atl. 125, holding that single cause of action should be stated in a single count; Metropolis Mfg. Co. v. Lynch, 68 Conn. 471, 36 Atl. 832, holding if facts alleged and proved show cause of action for breach of contract, plaintiff is entitled to judgment, although he treated action as one in trover; Dunnett v. Thornton, 73 Conn. 5, 46 Atl. 158, holding only rule as to pleading is plain and concise statement of facts.

Joinder of causes of action.

Cited in Maisenbacker v. Society Concordia, 71 Conn. 376, 71 Am. St. Rep. 213, 42 Atl. 67, holding question whether two causes of action are improperly joined in one count is waived by failure to demur to complaint; Knapp v. Walker, 73 Conn. 461, 47 Atl. 655, holding that causes of action for breach of contract for personal property, and for fraud in inducing party to part with his property on false representations may be united if growing out of same transaction; Plumb v. Curtis, 66 Conn. 174, 33 Atl. 998, holding separate count founded on estoppel cannot be added to complaint founded on original liability; Swenson v. Colvin, 130 Fed. 627, holding cause of action for deceit, based on misrepresentations inducing written contract, cannot be united with action for breach of such contract; Knapp v. Walker, 73 Conn. 461, 47 Atl. 655, holding damages for breach of contract may be recovered under complaint setting forth such cause of action, and also one for fraud, in single count, although no fraud found.

How defense should be pleaded.

Cited in Botsford v. Wallace, 72 Conn. 200, 44 Atl. 10, holding that answer to single cause of action or one founded on transaction with several causes of action not distinguishable from each other, should be single and only divided into paragraphs.

Effect of noncompliance with order of trial court.

Distinguished in Dunnett v. Thornton, 73 Conn. 17, 46 Atl. 158, reversing judgment for material error though nonsuit granted for disobedience of order to file bill of particulars.

25 L. R. A. 862, STATE ex rel. TAYLOR v. PENNOYER, 26 Or. 205, 37 Pac. 906, 41 Pac. 1104.

Suit by private individual to restrain acts of public officials.

Reaffirmed on subsequent appeal in 28 Or. 498, 31 L. R. A. 473, 43 Pac. 471.

Cited in Burness v. Multnomah County, 37 Or. 468, 60 Pac. 1005, holding individual taxpayer may maintain suit to prevent carrying out of contract between county officials and individual for collection of taxes; Brownfield v. Houser, 30 Or. 537, 49 Pac. 843, holding taxpayer may bring action, in his own name, to have county clerk restrained from issuing to sheriff order for services performed by such officer.

Suit by state to prevent official action.

Distinguished in State ex rel. McCain v. Metschan, 32 Or. 383, 41 L. R. A. 694, footnote p. 692, 46 Pac. 791, holding that action can be maintained by state, without showing special injury to restrain state treasurer from paying warrant issued without authority for purchase of land for insane asylum.

3 6105 063 243 963

